15 Lafayette, accompanied by his son, M. Auguste Le Vaseur, and one servant, arrives on this day (Sunday) in the ship "Cadmus." He landed at Staten Island and passed the day at the home of Vice-Pres. Tompkins. There he was visited by the common council and "crowds of our citizens."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ag 16, 1824. Josiah Quincy, writing in 1892, said: "The intelligence of the arrival of Lafayette in the harbor of New York, on the morning of the 15th of August, 1824, spread through that city with a rapidity which our present methods of electrical communication could scarcely have increased. Multitudes poured into the street, in expectation of instantly beholding him. But, at the request of the city authorities, he landed at Staten Island, and waited at the house of the Vice-President till arrangements could be made for his public reception. . . ."—From "Lafayette in Boston," in Figures of the Past, by Josiah Quincy (1892), 102–3. See also James Fenimore Cooper's account, in Notions of the Americans: Picked up by a Travelling Bachelor (London, 1828), I: 29 et seq.; Goodrich, Picture of N. Y. (1828). Lafayette came up to the city on Aug. 16 (q. v.).

16 Lafayette, on board the "Chancellor Livingston," is escorted from Staten Island to the Battery by the "Robert Fulton" and other steamboats and merchant vessels. Amid salutes from the harbour forts and outbursts of enthusiam from "nearly 50,000 persons," he landed at Castle Garden. "The ringing of bells, the roar of cannon, the display of the national standard at all the public places, the decorations of the steam boats and shipping with the flags of every nation, the martial strains of music, and the shouts of the multitude, proclaimed that it was a jubilee which could not fail to be enjoyed by every true friend of liberty." Escorted by the militia and the Cincinnati, the marquis proceeded to the city hall where he was welcomed by Mayor Paulding and introduced to the members of the common council. The portrait-room was placed at his disposal during his residence in the city. After this reception he retired to his apartments in the City Hotel, and dined there with the corporation. In the evening, buildings were illuminated, and the theatres, public gardens, etc. displayed transparencies and fireworks.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ag 17 and 18, 1824; M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIV: 24–26; Goodrich, Picture of N. Y. (1828). See also Butler, The Tour of Gen. La Fayette (1825), 223–30; Notions of the Americans: Picked up by a Travelling Bachelor (London, 1828), I: 29 et seq.; and Memoirs of the Life and Character of the Rev. Matthias Bruen (N. Y., 1831), 182–84; Mag. Am. Hist. (1881), VI: 321 et seq. For views showing Lafayette's landing at Castle Garden, see Pls. 94-a and b, Vol. III. The New York Historical Society owns a large punch bowl which bears two similar views of this scene. On Oct. 11, the common council thanked the various steamboat owners, the navy, the troops, etc. for their part in the reception.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIV: 97–98.

Aug. 16 Sometime before this date, the octagonal pavilion around the flagstaff (see 1819) was removed, as there is no trace of it in the views showing the landing of Lafayette at Castle Garden on this day (see Pls. 94-a and b, Vol. III). See also descrip. of Pl. 59, I: 435.

18 Gen. Lafayette makes a tour of the Brooklyn Navy Yard, and on his return is waited upon at the city hall by the Cincinnati and other societies, the clergy, and a number of private citizens.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ag 19, 1824. He and his son were also made members of the Historical Society at the New York Institution. In the evening, he gave a dinner to Capt. Rodgers and the naval officers here.—Butler, The Tour of Gen. La Fayette (1825), 232–35; N. Y. Eve. Post, Ag 31, 1824.

" The common council accepts a portrait of Marquis de Lafayette from Capt. Francis Allyn, commander of the ship "Cadmus."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIV: 28.

" The common council requests the Marquis de Lafayette to sit for his portrait, and votes the freedom of the city in a gold box to George Washington de Lafayette, his son. It also resolves that "the proceedings of this Board in relation to Gen[l] De La Fayette, together with the address of the Mayor to him, and his Answer with his signature in his own proper hand writing, and the signatures of the Mayor, Recorder, and the Members of the Common Council, be handsomely engrossed on Vellum, One Copy thereof to be presented to the General, and One Copy to be placed among the Archives of the Common Council."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIV: 38–39. See Ag 16 and O 11. The latter is now in the archives of the N. Y. Hist. Soc.

" A complaint is made to the common council of the "great resort of idle Visitors to the Convicts placed on the Tread Mill."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIV: 27. On Aug. 30, the board resolved that no one should be allowed to visit the tread-mill at Bellevue without a written permission from the mayor, or the recorder, or one of the common council members, or a commissioner of the almshouse. —Ibid., XIV: 44–45. On Sept. 27, the board directed that, for the convenience of those who have power to grant them, blank permits be printed for persons wishing to visit the "stepping-mill." —Ibid., XIV: 86. See Ja 20, 1823; 1824; and O 30, 1826.

20 Lafayette and his suite leave New York for Boston.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ag 20, 1824; Butler, The Tour of Gen. La Fayette (1825), 238–39. They returned on Sept. 5 (q. v.).

21 It is reported that 500 or 600 new mercantile establishments have been opened in New York this season, and that more than 3,000 buildings have been commenced and are nearly completed within the city limits, most of them being of brick.—Com. Adv., Ag 21, 1824. See also N. Y. Eve. Post, Ag 25, 1824.

25 At Shakespeare Tavern, on the south-west corner of Fulton and Nassau Sts., officers of the infantry battalion of the 11th Regiment form an independent organization, which they call the "National Guard," the name being prompted by Lafayette's connection with the National Guard of Paris.—Lossing, Hist. of N. Y. City, I: 321–22. The name "National Guard" was applied at first only to this new organization, which was subsequently named the 27th and later the 7th Regiment. On April 23, 1862 (q. v.), the legislature of New York adopted the name "National Guard" as a suitable title for the entire militia of this state.—Clark, Hist. of the Seventh Regt. (1890), I: 105.

This so-called "tavern" remained the headquarters of the 11th and 27th Regiments until the building was demolished in 1836 (q. v.). "It was not a tavern—a place for the entertainment 1824 Aug. 25 of travellers—in the American sense of that term, but was a place of resort of some of the better class of city residents. It was a sort of club-house, where choice wines and quiet, excellent suppers might be obtained. It was originally built after the model of an English alehouse. . . ."—Lossing, op. cit., I: 322, footnote. See, further, 1836.

27 "We understand that the company who have been employed for several weeks in raising the British frigate Hussar, which ran on the rocks in Hurl Gate, and sunk, during the revolutionary war, have succeeded in raising about forty feet of the stern of the ship.—after placing the chains under her and moving her from her bed, she broke in two from the keel up through the quarter-deck, and therefore part of the ship slipped from the slings and settled down again on the rocks. The timber of such part of the ship as was embedded in the mud is perfectly sound. The remainder is completely worm-eaten and rotten. A number of cannon and shot were brought up with the hull, but nothing more valuable that we can learn."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ag 27, 1824. See Ap 29, 1823.

" Rembrandt Peale's portrait of Washington is being exhibited at the New York Institution before its removal to Independence Hall in Philadelphia.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ag 27, 1824. See also ibid., Ag 28, for numerous favourable comments on the picture.

" "We are much pleased to learn that the enterprizing managers of the Park Theatre have, during the recess, been actively engaged in embellishing the Theatre, and in making such additions to the theatrical corps as will render it a place of general attraction. . . ."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ag 27, 1824. The theatre opened for the season on Aug. 30.—Ibid., S 1, 1824; N. Y. Mirror, II: 39, 46.

30 A committee of militia officers and citizens petitions the common council "that it, being intended to give a Fête to Gen[l] La Fayette at the Castle Garden they requested permission for Carriages on that Occasion to drive on the Battery to the Bridge leading to the Castle." Referred to a committee with power.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIV: 44. See S 4 and 14.

" Both John Vanderlyn and J. W. Jarvis petition the common council to be employed to paint the portrait of Gen. Lafayette. Referred to committee of arrangements with power.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIV: 53. On Nov. 8, James Herring made a similar petition.—Ibid., XIV: 123. All these petitions were evidently rejected; for the portrait of Lafayette, made for the city in 1824 and now in the city hall, was painted by Samuel F. B. Morse.

Sept. — At about this time, James Fenimore Cooper wrote from New York to Baron von Kemperfelt: "The time has not yet come for the formation of massive, permanent quays in the harbour of New York. Wood is still too cheap, and labour too dear, for so heavy an investment of capital. All the wharves of New York are of very simple construction.—A frame-work of hewn logs is filled with loose stone, and covered with a surface of trodden earth. . . . The Americans . . . are daily constructing great ranges of these wooden piers, in order to meet the increasing demands of their trade, while the whole of the seven miles of water which fronts the city, is lined with similar constructions, if we except the public mall, called 'the Battery,' which is protected from the waves of the bay by a wall of stone. . . .

"The wharfs of New York form a succession of little basins, which are sometimes large enough to admit thirty or forty sail, though often much smaller. These irregular docks have obtained the name of 'slips.' . . .

"In construction, New York embraces every variety of house, between that of the second-rate English town residence, and those temporary wooden tenements that are seen in the skirts of most large cities. I do not think, however, that those absolutely miserable, filthy abodes which are often seen in Europe, abound here. . . . I have been told, and I think it probable, that there are not five hundred buildings in New York, that can date further back than the peace of '83. A few old Dutch dwellings yet remain, and can easily be distinguished by their little bricks, their gables to the street, and those steps on their battlement walls, which your countrymen are said to have invented, in order to ascend to regulate the iron weathercocks at every variation of the fickle winds. . . .

"The principal edifice is the City Hall, a building in which the courts are held, the city authorities assemble, and the public offices are kept. This building is oddly enough composed of two sorts of stone, which impairs its simplicity, and gives it a patched and party-coloured appearance. Neither is its façade in good taste, being too much in detail. . . . Notwithstanding these glaring defects, by aid of its material, a clear white marble, and the admirable atmosphere, it at first strikes one more agreeably than many a better edifice. Its rear is of a deep red, dullish free-stone, and in a far better taste. . . . Sept. —

"New York is rich in churches, if number alone be considered. I saw more than a dozen in the process of construction, and there is scarce a street of any magnitude that does not possess one. There must be at least a hundred, and there may be many more. . . . Most of the churches in New York are of brick, and constructed internally, with direct reference to the comfort of the congregations. . . . There are, however, some churches in this city that would make a creditable appearance any where among similar modern constructions; but it is the number, rather than in the elegance of these buildings, that the Americans have reason to pride themselves. . . ."—Notions of the Americans: Picked up by a Travelling Bachelor (London, 1828), I: 147–78.

4 "Great preparations are making for the splendid fete at Castle Garden [see Ag 30], which, judging from present appearances, will be crowded to overflow. . . . We have just seen the head of La Fayette, in miniature, engraved by Durand, and an admirable likeness, stamped on watch ribbons, ladies' belts, gloves, &c., which, it is understood, will be worn by most of the company."—N. Y. Eve. Post, S 4, 1824. The fete was held on Sept. 14 (q.v.).

5 Lafayette returns to New York in the ship "Oliver Ellsworth" from his eastern tour.—N. Y. Eve. Post, S 6, 1824; Butler, The Tour of Gen. La Fayette (1825), 317. See S 6.

6 The Society of the Cincinnati entertains Gen. Lafayette on his sixty-seventh birthday with a dinner at Washington Hall "The decorations of the room surpassed anything of the kind got up in this city, and the illuminations were splendid."—N. Y. Eve. Post, S 7, 8 and 9, 1824.

7 Gen. Lafayette visits Columbia College.—Butler, The Tour of Gen. La Fayette (1825), 319.

8 Lafayette visits the fortifications at the Narrows, dines at Fort Lafayette, and in the evening attends the Park Theatre. The latter was elaborately decorated in his honour.—N. Y. Eve. Post, S 9, 1824.

9 Gen. Lafayette is the guest of honour at a grand oratorio given by the New York Choral Society in St. Paul's Chapel. In addition to sacred music the choir sang "See the Conquering Hero Comes" and "La Marseillaise." After the oratorio he reviewed a parade of the fire department in the Park and inspected the engines and other apparatus.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIV: 53–54; N. Y. Eve. Post, S 9 and 10, 1824; Butler, The Tour of Gen. La Fayette (1825), 321; Kemp, Old St. Paul's Chapel, 18; Dix, Hist. Recollections of St. Paul's, 37–40.

10 This afternoon, Lafayette was presented with an "elegant sword" by the Ninth Regiment, and in the evening he went to Vauxhall Gardens.—N. Y. Eve. Post, S 9, 11, and 13, 1824; Butler, The Tour of Gen. La Fayette, 322.

11 Lafayette receives "the several degrees of masonry" at St. John's Hall, and an elaborate dinner is held at Washington Hall in his honour by the French residents of the city.—N. Y. Eve. Post, S 11 and 13, 1824.

13 The common council receives a letter from Hon. Smith Thompson, one of the judges of the U. S. supreme court, saying that a "very extraordinary attempt having been lately made to change the place of holding the Circuit Court of the United States from the City Hall to Tammany Hall" (see Ap 10), he wishes to inquire whether there ever has been, or is now, any objection to the sitting of the court in the city hall.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIV: 58–59. On Oct. 25, the committee appointed on the subject reported that, if the court had been incommoded in holding sessions in the city hall, it had been done without the order or knowledge of the common council. The room which had been set apart for this purpose since 1811, when the city hall was completed, was still at the disposal of the court and ready for occupation.—Ibid., XIV: 110–12. See also N. Y. Eve. Post, O 28, 1824.

14 After two postponements on account of bad weather, the grand popular reception and subscription ball planned in honour of Gen. Lafayette takes place at Castle Garden. James Fenimore Cooper, writing of the affair, describes in detail the decorations of the 1824 Sept. 14 building. The area within the walls of the structure was covered by a vast awning made "of the sails of a ship-of-the-line," and this was draped with flags "in such a manner as to give a soft airy finish to the wide vault." Mr. Cooper was much impressed by the orderliness of the assemblage, writing that "there were six thousand guests, a number that is rarely exceeded at any European entertainment," citing this as "proof that established orders in society are not at all necessary, at least, for the tranquility of its ordinary intercourse." He tells of the arrival of Lafayette on the scene. "The music changed to a national air, the gay sets dissolved as by a charm and the dancers . . . formed a lane whose sides were composed of masses that might have contained two thousand eager faces each. Through this gay multitude the old man slowly passed, giving and receiving the most cordial and affectionate salutations at every step . . . To me he appeared some venerable and much respected head of a vast family who had come to pass an hour amid their innocent and gay revels. He was like a father among his children."—Notions of the Americans: Picked up by a Travelling Batchelor (London, 1828), I: 240–46. At two o'clock in the morning of the 15th, Lafayette, his son, and his suite retired from the ball, went immediately on board the steamboat "James Kent," and sailed up the Hudson to visit Albany and other towns along the river.—Butler, The Tour of Gen. La Fayette (1825), 323–26. See also N. Y. Eve. Post, S 11, 13, and 15, 1824; N. Y. Mirror, II: 71; and Goodrich, Picture of N. Y. (1828). The general returned to New York on Sept. 20 (q.v.).

16 Louis XVIII dies and is succeeded by his brother, Charles X. —Dyer, Hist. of Modern Europe, IV: 578.

20 Lafayette returns to New York and is entertained with a dinner at Washington Hall given in his honour by the Masonic lodge of the state. The hall was elaborately decorated with temples, transparences, oil paintings, variegated lights, etc. In the evening he visited the Park Theatre, which was brilliantly illuminated.—N. Y. Eve. Post, S 21, 1824. See S 22.

22 Lafayette dines with Mayor Paulding. He also called on Col. Rutgers and Col. Willett and spent the evening with Cadwallader Colden.—N. Y. Eve. Post, S 23, 1824. See S 23.

23 Gen. Lafayette leaves New York on a visit to the south. He is escorted to the steamboat wharf at Cortlandt St. by the mayor, the corporation, the Cincinnati, and cavalry and infantry, and on his departure is saluted by a discharge of artillery.—N. Y. Eve. Post, S 23, 1824.

27 The common council refers to a committee a memorial of Du Puis de la Rue proposing to erect at the Battery a national monument in honour of American worthies, together with a plan for same.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIV: 71. See also O 25.

" The common council passes resolutions to open the following streets: Mott St. from Roosevelt line to Bleecker St.; Thompson St. from Amity Lane to Art St.; Fifth Ave. (see Ja 26) from its commencement (at Art St.) to 13th St.; Eighth St. from the Bowery to Sixth Ave.; Garden St. and Slote Lane from William St. to Pearl St.; First St. from First Ave. to North St.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIV: 75.

" The common council adopts the following resolution: "Whereas great inconvenience is experienced by persons walking in the business parts of this City in passing each other on the Side walks—Therefore Resolved, that it be earnestly recommended to all persons passing the Streets upon the Side Walks in this City to take the right hand Side."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIV: 86.

Oct. 3 A treaty of peace, amity, navigation, and commerce, between the U. S. and Colombia is signed.—Winsor, VII: 504.

11 "With some regret we learn, that the model of the fine equestrian statue of Washington, executed by Mr. Causici, and which has for some time been exhibiting in Elm-street, is about to be removed to Rome and placed in the Vatican, in consequence of that gentleman's not having received patronage from the committee appointed in this city to devise the means of erecting a statue to the memory of the 'Father of our Country.' Mr. C. has been about twenty months employed under the sanction of our authorities, in preparing his models, during which he has expended upwards of $3000., and is now in such reduced circumstances that, in order to raise money to carry him home, he has found it necessary to execute a small model of Washington, adapted for the hall of public buildings and dwelling houses, which he sells at about $40. One of these has been placed in the Society of Arts, and is highly spoken of by judges of sculptural art. . . . It will be sufficiently humiliating that another city shall have the honor of possessing a work executed by a disciple of Canova, expressly as a public ornament, and under the sanction of those to whom the management of our affairs are entrusted, without having occasion to lament that we allowed him to carry it away unindemnified, for his great labour and expense."—N. Y. Eve. Post, O 11, 1824. See N 18.

" The common council refers to a committee the resolution that "a place be set apart for a Pound to impound the Cat[t]le trespassing on the Park."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIV: 99.

" The common council votes an appropriation of $500 to the Orphan Asylum Society.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIV: 100–1.

12 The provisional government of Greece is set up.—Haydn's Dict. of Dates, 453.

25 The common council refers to a committee a letter from Richard Wilcox stating that he has invented an "Analytical Airmeter which is susceptible of escertaining with the greatest precision the State of the Air we breathe announcing the approach of Contagious diseases."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIV: 104.

" The common council refers to a committee a proposal from "Monsieur Dupin Delarue" (cf. S 27) to establish an institution for the instruction of the blind upon the plan of the one at Paris.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIV: 105; N. Y. Eve. Post, O 26, 1824. The need was supplied in 1833 (q.v., Jl 4) by the N. Y. Institution for the Blind, which was founded in 1830 (see Ap 21, 1831).

Nov. 2 At the presidential election held on this day, there are four candidates for president: Andrew Jackson, Democrat; J. Quincy Adams, Coalition; Wm. H. Crawford, Democrat; Henry Clay, Republican; there was only one candidate for vice-president, John C. Calhoun. Jackson received the largest popular vote, but when the electoral votes were counted on Feb. 9, 1825, neither he nor any other candidate had a majority, and the election was thrown into the house of representatives. On the first ballot, Adams received the votes of 13 states, Jackson those of seven, and Crawford those of four. Adams was therefore declared elected. —McKee, National Conventions and Elections, 20–24.

8 The gift of a plaster of Paris bust of Marquis de Lafayette done by N. Gevelot is presented to the common council by the artist. The board accepts this with thanks, and directs that it be placed in a conspicuous situation in the gallery of paintings.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIV: 123; N. Y. Eve. Post, N 9, 1824. See also ibid., N 25, 1824.

" The common council resolves that there shall be constructed in the penitentiary 60 cells—12 cells in a tier, 5 tiers high—in order that the prisoners may be lodged separately. The cost is estimated at $2,000.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIV: 126–27. See Ap 30, 1821, and F 11, 1828.

10 "While in this city, our guest [Lafayette], at the solicitation of the Academy of Fine Arts, permitted Mr. Frazee, our distinguished sculptor, to take a cast in plaster from his face, from which Mr. Frazee has prepared a model that is really admirable for the perfect fidelity with which it renders the features and expression of La Fayette. . . ."—N. Y. Eve. Post, N 10, 1824.

12 Mr. Stevens, "the celebrated Dwarf, only 37 inches high," makes his first appearance on the stage at the Park Theatre, in the burletta "Tom Thumb."—N. Y. Eve. Post, N 12, 1824.

18 Announcement is made that committees will start taking up collections in the various wards on Nov. 20 for erecting a public statue of Washington.—N. Y. Eve. Post, N 19, 1824.

19 It is provided by act of legislature that the "commissioners of school money" (see Mr 12, 1813) shall hereafter be ten in number, one from each ward, "who shall hold their offices for three years." The institutions or schools to which moneys shall be distributed in the future are to be designated by the common council "from time to time, and once at least in three years."—Laws of N. Y. (1824), chap. 276. See Ap 28, 1825.

Dec. 1 A plan of the New York state prison, showing buildings and property, from Barnum to Perry St., and from Washington St. to Hudson River, bears this date.—See original filed as map No. 233 in topographical bureau, borough president's office.

6 John Vanderlyn, and others who subscribed to the erection of the Rotunda, petition the common council to extend the lease of that building to Mr. Vanderlyn (M. C. C., 1784–1831, XIV: 163);

1824 Dec. 6 but the board decides that it is inexpedient to do so at present.—Ibid., XIV: 195. For further petitions in reference to the Rotunda and Vanderlyn's financial difficulties therewith, see ibid., XV: 154–55, 216.

7 "It is now certain that the Gas Light Company in this city will be able to furnish a supply of gas early in January. Besides having laid about 6 miles of pipes in the principal streets, the apparatus at the manufactory is in that advanced state which gives an assurance that light will be furnished at the period mentioned. A tank and gasometer have been completed, which will contain ten thousand barrels, or 300,000 gallons, and every other part of the establishment is on a similar extensive scale. Upwards of 300 dwelling houses, stores, &c. have engaged the light; among which is the Chatham Garden Theatre; all of which it is calculated will be supplied in the month of January. We also learn, that the Trustees of the Merchants Exchange have decided on illuminating that building with gas, and that they are to place a splendid light on the top of the cupulo, sufficiently large to serve as a beacon to vessels coming into our port. Castle Garden, likewise, is to be fitted up against its opening in the spring."—N. Y. Eve. Post, D 7, 1824.

9 A four-mile rowing-match for $1,000, between boatmen of the British frigate "Hussar" and Whitehall boatmen, is held over a course between the Battery and North Battery. The British boat, the "Dart," is defeated by the "American Star."—N. Y. Eve. Post, D 9 and 10, 1824. See also Hist. Mag., 2d ser., III: 172.

Y. P. L. (MSS. Div.). For the company's incorporation, see Ap 12, 1825.

11 An extract from a letter from Washington Irving to Henry Brevoort, speaking of New York, says: ". . . there is a Charm about that little spot of earth, that beautiful city and its environs, that has a perfect spell over my imagination. The bay; the rivers and their wild and woody shores; the haunts of my boyhood, both on land and water, absolutely have a witchery over my mind. . ."—Hellman, Letters of Washington Irving to Henry Brevoort, II: 183.

" A news item reads: "For the first time in twenty-seven years, the debtor's prison in this city is entirely empty. Not one solitary prisoner is now confined within the dreary walls—to the eternal honour of New-York be it mentioned."—N. Y. Mirror, D 11, 1824.

13 The New York Athenaeum is inaugurated, its first public meeting being at the City Hotel. Its object is to furnish opportunity for the highest culture, and to advance science, art, and literature. It consists of resident and honorary members, the former being associates, patrons, governors or subscribers; the funds are to be derived from the contributions of these four classes, $200 constituting a patron, $100 a governor, and lesser sums associates and subscribers. Its library is to comprise, when complete, all the standard elementary works of science and literature of every age and nation. Monthly lectures are open to both ladies and gentlemen.—N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., D 15 and 18, 1824; M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIV: 164. A pamphlet containing the address delivered by Henry Wheaton is in N. Y. P. L. The Athenaeum, after performing a work of immense value in the growing city, was merged, in 1838, into the New York Society Library.—Keep, Hist. of the Society Library, 313–62; Lamb, *Hist. " In conformity with a recommendation of the market committee, the common council directs the superintendent of repairs to erect "a Suitable fish market over the head of the Slip, in the rear of the Washington Country Market."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIV: 196–97; De Voe, Market Book, 427. See Jl 22, 1822.

20 The committee on the city burial-ground reports to the common council that the ground selected is most eligible, being on the Middle Road or Fifth Ave., between 40th and 42d Sts. (cf. Je 9, 1823), about 3 miles from the city hall; that it is a part of the Common Lands belonging to the corporation, and comprises about 10 acres, nearly square. The work is almost completed. So far, the expense is $8,449.91, of which the cost of the "handsome" fence (see Je 23, 1823) has been no small item. This consists of a stone wall topped with a strong mortised fence of locust posts and best Georgia pine. Much money has been saved by employing convicts in blasting and digging. Fifth Ave. has been improved by the removal of rocks. The whole ground is to be surrounded by two rows of weeping willows and elms.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIV: 209–12; N. Y. Eve. Post, D 22, 1824. The burial-ground was in use until the Croton reservoir was built on the site. Dec. 20

The common council appoints a committee to cause a "trunk of Timber and plank of sufficient dimensions to convey the waters of the Minetto Brook" to be constructed from the present tunnel at 4th St. to Fifth Ave. at 6th St.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIV: 219. "

The committee on the jail and bridewell submits to the common council outlines of a plan to erect a new city prison, to enlarge the public promenade grounds of the Park, to remove the present jail and bridewell from the places which they now occupy, and to sell certain real property to pay the expense. The present jail has become old, is in a state of decay (see O 25), and is unnecessarily large for the small number of debtors usually confined there; generally there are not more than 6 or 8, and at present there is but 1; while, for the past two days, the prison has been entirely empty, "a circumstance which perhaps has never occured before." From the present policy of the legislature on the subject of imprisonment for debt, it is probable that the number of debtors confined in the jail will diminish, and consequently a few rooms in the wing of the city prison to be erected will answer every purpose. It would be well to place the prison somewhere on the edge of the North or East River. The common council resolves, when such site has been found, to have the present jail taken down and the materials converted into the building of a new city prison.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIV: 219–23. See Mr 1, 1824, and Mr 21, 1826. "

The common council adopts a resolution to straighten the line and widen Chatham St. on the westerly side, and orders that a line be run from "the north end of the iron railing or fence in front of the Jail to the Corner of Tryon Row and Chatham Street —stopping at the Free School and the strip of ground contained between said line, and the street be thrown into Chatham St. in order to widen and straighten the same."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIV: 223. For the removal of Free School No. 1, see 1831.

24 A petition of Jacobus Dyckman and others respecting the bridge over "Harleam Creek," called the "Free Bridge," is reported upon by the road committee to the common council: "The Bridge which the petitioners pray to be repaired connects the island of New York with that part of West Chester County lying on Harleam river called the 'Manor of Fordam,' and is a short distance from the Mouth of 'Spyt den Duyvel' creek, through which the waters of said river flow into the Hudson.

"This Bridge was erected about Sixty years ago by individual subscription, to avoid the unjust exactions of the proprietors of Kings Bridge—But during our struggle for independence it was destroyed by the enemy, to prevent the passage of the American Army across the river, the passage of the other bridge being defended by a redoubt. Ten or twelve years since however, the inhabitants in its vicinity raised another subscription and rebuilt it, at an expence . . . of about One thousand dollars, and have kept it in repair at their own cost. . . . It is now in such a state of decay that it cannot be passed without great danger. . . . It is virtually the property of the Corporation, as the sovereignty of that Body over Harleam river to low water mark on the Northern or west Chester side of it, has never been disputed. . . . There is considerable travelling over this bridge . . . with produce for our Market. . . . This Bridge is the only one over which our citizens can pass from the island without paying tribute to the monopolizers of Legislative . . . [liberality]." The board agrees to appropriate $280 toward rebuilding and keeping the bridge in repair.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIV: 227–29. See also L. M. R. K., III: 925.

— About 1825, baled hay was introduced in New York. It was stored under Duane St. Market.—De Voe, Market Book, 392.

1825 The census of this year shows New York City's population to have been 166,086. For fuller details, see Hardie, Descrip. of the City of N. Y. (1827), 151–57; Goodrich, The Picture of New York (1828). This census cost the city $2,610.—Journal D, 24, in comptroller's office. Cf. D 10.

— In this year, the value of the real and personal estate in New York County was $101,160,046. Albany County was next highest in the state with $10,260,815.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ja 23, 1826.

— In this year, the Princeton Review, a bi-monthly, was established in New York City.—North, The Newspaper and Periodical Press, (1884), 62.

— In this year, a second reprint (see 1818) of Blunt's guide (see 1817), was made by A. T. Goodrich. There is a copy in the N. Y. Pub. Library. It contains a view of the city, engraved by Hooker, with marginal views below.

— In this year, a military officer in the service of the king of The Netherlands visited New York in a private capacity, and published in this country the story of his travels. His observations respecting New York include the following:

". . . West of the battery, in the Hudson river, is a fort, called Castle Clinton, communicating with the battery by a wooden bridge, ninety paces long. This fort forms a semicircle; on the diameter are the former barracks, and behind the walls, which form the semicircle, a battery of twenty-four guns, under casemates. North of this fort, on the same shore, in front of the city, are two other forts of the same description, called North Battery and Fort Gansevoort; being of no use they are abandoned. Castle Clinton is now a public pleasure house. In the barrack is a coffee-house; boxes for parties are arranged within the battery, and on the platform are amphitheatrical seats, because the yard of the fort is used for fireworks, and other exhibitions."

He refers to "the numerous stores, which are kept open till a late hour, and are very splendidly lighted with gas."

Speaking of a visit to the "newly-erected lunatic asylum," the author says: "This is five miles from the city, on a hill, in a very healthy situation, not far from the Hudson River: The road lies between country-seats and handsome gardens, and it is one of the most pleasant places I have seen in America.

"The asylum is built of sand-stone, is three stories high, and surrounded by a garden; it was built mostly by subscription, but is likewise supported by the state government. . . .; they were about to enlarge it by two other wings. . . . On the roof of the house is a platform, from which we had a very pleasant and extensive view. . . .

"It is a difficult matter to ride in a carriage through the streets on Sunday, because there are chains stretched across in front of the churches, to prevent their passage during service. The land of liberty has also its chains!"

Commenting on the customs of the New Yorkers, the author says: "I observed that the families I visited were richly furnished with silver, China, and glass; the fine arts also contributed to the ornament of their apartments. At the evening parties we commonly had music and dancing. . . . Liveries are not to be seen; the male servants wear frock coats. . . . There are public schools established for the instruction of coloured children, and I was told that these little ape-like creatures do sometimes learn very well. . . .

". . . On one of the wharves there was a frigate on the stocks, of sixty-four guns, intended for the Greeks; . . . At another wharf lay a frigate of sixty-eight guns, with an elliptic stern; she was built for the republic of Colombia, and is nearly ready for sea; . . . There were also two other men of war on the stocks, of smaller dimensions, which are also said to be intended for Colombia. . . .

". . . the population has so rapidly increased, that Greenwich is united with New York, and three sides of the prison are surrounded with rows of houses; the fourth faces the Hudson river. [See also Ja 18.]

". . . Ladies of the first fashion do not go often to the theatre. In the pit persons pulled off their coats, in order to be cool. . . . The visitors of the theatre are entirely unrestrained; the gentlemen keep on their hats in the boxes, and in the pit they make themselves in every respect comfortable.

"On the afternoon of the third of October, there was a great procession of negroes, some of them well dressed, parading through the streets, two by two, preceded by music and a flag. An African club, called the Wilberforce Society, thus celebrated the anniversary of the abolition of slavery in New York, and concluded the day by a dinner and ball. The coloured people of New York, belonging to this society, have a fund of their own, raised by weekly subscription, which is employed in assisting sick and unfortunate blacks. This fund, contained in a sky-blue box, was carried in the procession; the treasurer holding in his hand a large gilt key; the rest of the officers wore ribands of several colours, and badges like the officers of free masons; marshals with long staves walked outside of the procession. During a quarter of an hour, scarcely any but black faces were to be seen in Broadway. . . ."—Travels through No. Am., during the Years 1825 and 1826, by Bernhard, Duke of Saxe-Weimar Eisenach (Phila., 1828), I: 119–33. In this year, a Friends' meeting-house, of wood, 25 by 35 ft., was built in Manhattanville.—Goodrich, op. cit. (1828), 227. —

In this year, the Roman Catholic Orphan Asylum was founded, the outgrowth of the older Roman Catholic Benevolent Society, which received its charter in 1817, and had its home in Prince St.—King's Handbook (1893), 430. See, further, N 20, 1826; Ag 1, 1846. —

In this year, the National Hotel, at 112 Broadway, cor. of Cedar St., was finished.—Man. Com. Coun. (1865), 544. —

In 1825–6, N. Prime erected in Wall St., opposite the exchange, a marble business building to house the private bank of Prime, Ward, King & Co.—Goodrich, op. cit. (1828), 259. —

In this year, an assessment was levied to build a sewer in Canal St. from Collect St. to the Hudson River.—Index to Assessment Rolls, Vol. I. See N 18, 1826. —

In this year was published, in Paris, A Series of Picturesque Views in North America, drawn on stone by J. Milbert, and lithographed by Melle Formentin. Fourteen in number, these views, all of which are of places in or near New York, are listed in the descrip. of Pl. 87-b, III: 568. —

In this year, E. W. Bridges made a map of The Battery, Market-field St., and Whitehall St. to Hudson River. The original map (No. 239) is in bureau of topography, borough president's office, Municipal Bldg. —

The Branch of the Bank of the U. S., on the north side of Wall St. (see My 23, 1823; Ap 14, 1824), is shown, at the time of its completion, in a drawing by A. J. Davis, reproduced from a lithograph, in Vol. III, A. Pl. 12-b. See also item No. 11274, Emmet collection, N. Y. P. L. —

In this year, the proprietors of Castle Garden, Jonathan Rathbone & Francis B. Fitch, issued a metallic business token or admission check, an oval, measuring 51 by 23 meters, having a view of the edifice on one side.—See cat. of numismatic collection of the late W. W. C. Wilson, of Montreal, sold at The Anderson Galleries, Nov. 14, 1925. —

In this year, the N. Y. Hist. Soc., when in need of funds, resolved to sell, either in whole or in part, the property of the society in order to pay its debts. Some of the collections were disposed of at that time. Occasionally, in later years, items have been purchased back by the society containing the original seal stamped on the title-page.—Information supplied by Mr. A. J. Wall, librarian. —

"Anthony Imbert, proprietor of the first lithographic establishment in New York, was originally a French naval officer. He acquired the art of drawing during a long captivity in England as prisoner of war, and came to the United States probably about 1825, as in that year we find him located at 79 Murray Street, New York City, exercising his talents for the first time here in — 1825 the production of lithographic drawings for Colden's 'Memoir . . . presented . . . at the completion of the New York Canals' published in that year."—Dunlap, Hist. of the Arts of Design (Goodspeed ed.), III: 310. See N 4.

— In the spring of this year, Thomas Cole came to New York from Philadelphia. Here, the merit of his work was discerned by Col. Trumbull, who introduced him to Dunlap and Durand, all of whom bought his canvases. For the development of his career as an artist, see Isham's Hist. of Am. Painting (1905), 218–231.

— At this time, Robt. W. Weir, of New York, was beginning a successful career as a painter. His painting of "Red Jacket" was made when this famous Indian chieftain was in this city in 1828. —Dunlap (Goodspeed ed.), III: 176–93.

1 " The managers of the Soc. for the Reformation of Juvenile Delinquents (appointed Dec. 19, 1823), having raised about $15,000 by subscription and donation, and having secured from the city "the ground and buildings held by the general government as an Arsenal, near the head of Broadway and the Bowery," and obtained the government's relinquishment of them, the arsenal building is opened as a "House of Refuge." There is a high wall around the premises, and there is sufficient ground space for an extension of the building. Nine juvenile convicts compose the inmates.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIV: 238; N. Y. Spectator, Ja 7, 1825; N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., D 31, 1824; Docs. Relative to the House of Refuge, instituted by the Soc. for the Ref. of Juvenile Delinquents (1832), 37–40; *Man. Com. 3 The common council receives a report from Rev. John Stanford (see Je, 1813) on "Religious Services Performed at the Almshouse, Penitentiary, Debtor's Prison and Bridewell."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIV: 242. A printed copy of the report is preserved in the N. Y. P. L.

" In his annual report, the comptroller suggests to the common council that the annual tax of $25,000 for the Battery might be diminished, if not wholly dispensed with, "unless some further improvements embracing a large expenditure are contemplated." Among items of expense is one of $3,980.49 for "Castle Clinton, repairing foundation and making reef around it;" another of $29,610.83 for "Battery, making Wall & reef & filling in, paving Walks, fencing &c;" and another of $4,504 for enclosing the city burying-ground. Exclusive of payments on bonds, the largest item of expense is $191,864.31 for opening, widening, improving, regulating, and paving streets, including sewers.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIV: 245–50.

" The common council refers to the street com'r a resolution that posts be placed "near the Curb Stone on the East side of the park for the drivers of Carriages on the Stand to fasten their Horses to."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIV: 253.

7 Books are opened at the Tontine Coffee House for subscription to the stock of the Delaware & Hudson Canal Co. (see Ap 23, 1823). The authorised capital stock is $1,500,000.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ja 8, 1825. See, further, Ap 20.

17 The board adopts a resolution to widen Pearl St. at Coenties Lane.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIV: 271. See, further, My 5, 1826.

" The common council rejects a petition that street names be painted on the glass of the public lamps, because "the Letters would cover nearly the whole of the Glass," and darken the streets. —M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIV: 272–73.

" The city inspector reports to the common council that the small-pox, which commenced its ravages in Nov., 1823, has not yet been arrested; that 394 persons have died during the past year, of whom 113 were coloured.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIV: 283–84. See Ja. 19, 1824.

" The common council directs the water committee to inquire into the expediency of vesting in the corporation the exclusive right of introducing into the city pure and wholesome water.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIV: 288. On Feb. 14, the committee reported that an application was before the legislature to incorporate a private company for this purpose. Where great and vital interests of the city may be affected by powers conferred on private corporations, the committee believed that too much caution could not be employed, and recommended that the request be sent to the legislature to adopt such measures only as would most effectually guard and protect the corporate rights of the city. This recommendation was adopted.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIV: 326–27. Mayor Paulding's letter to the speaker of the assembly, dated Feb. 17, is in Emmet coll., No. 11380. See Ja 26, 1824, and Mr 27, 1826.

" ". . . Greenwich is now no longer a country village. Such has been the growth of our city that the building of one block more will completely connect the two places; and in three years time, at the rate buildings have been erected the last season, Greenwich will be known only as a part of the city, and the suburbs will be beyond it. . . ."—From editorial in Com. Adv., Ja 18, 1825.

The common council resolves that the offices of counsel and attorney to the board be united in one person, and that no one shall hold this office who has not been "of the degree of a Counsellor of the Supreme Court" for at least two years.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIV: 302–3.

" The committee on lands and places, to whom the question was referred on Aug. 30, 1824 (see M. C. C., 1784–1831, XIV: 54, 94), reports that the time has arrived when interments should cease "in a part of Our City so rapidly improving as that in the vicinity of the present Pottersfield" (between 4th St. and Greenwich Lane—ibid., XIII: 472—the later site of Washington Square). The committee has "fixed on a piece of Ground belonging to this Corporation, every way suited both as to soil and distance, for a public Cemetary or Pottersfield—the ground has been lately improved by the Commissioners of the Alms-house and is enclosed by a strong Stone Wall, the distance from the City Hall not exceeding three and a half miles, and not more than One and an half miles from the Alms House or the State prison—it is of easy access, being situate between the third and fourth Avenues, and between the 48th & 50th Streets, . . . and will require no [other] preparation for its immediate occupancy than that of a small tenement as a residence for the Keeper."

The board adopts the recommendation, and orders "that all interments shall cease to be made in the present Pottersfield from and after the first day of May next," and "that the grounds now occupied as a Pottersfield be filled up and regulated as soon as interments shall cease to be made therein."—Ibid., XIV: 306–7.

The following description of Wall St. appears under the title, "A visit from a resident of Broadway and Bowery:" ". . . Pitt's Statue is taken away, the old city hall is pulled down; . . . the Ludlows, Verplancks and Jaunceys are all brought out there; . . . almost every house is a bank or insurance company, and the cellars filled with brokers instead of potatoes, cabbages and old wine. . . ."—N. Y. Nat'l Advocate, F 8, 1825.

"The buildings already commenced and going up in this city, and the preparations which are making to commence pulling down on May-day, old decayed wooden tenements and to erect in their places stately brick buildings, are far greater than in any former year. Real estate and rents have advanced in price beyond all calculations and many a good speculation has been made by many of our friends. So great is the demand for brick now, that they readily command ten dollars a thousand."—N. Y. Eve. Post, F 10, 1825.

" ". . . great and repeated efforts have been made to raise a fund for the purpose of erecting, and placing in our Park, a marble monument to the memory of Washington, and one that should do honor to the taste and magnificence of the city of New-York; . . . hitherto they have all failed . . . The desire remains as great as ever; but still no one has suggested any practical scheme that bids fair to compass the understanding, until the present time. It is stated in the Statesman of last evening that a number of enterprizing individuals have petitioned for a charter for a bank, with the offer of a bonus as it is called, of $40,000, the sum necessary for erecting and completing a suitable monument to the Father of his Country, and which is to be appropriated to that purpose. . . ." —*N. The common council resolves to open and extend Sixth Ave. from 13th St. to Love Lane.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIV: 325.

1825 Feb. 14 The common council passes a resolution to open Sixth St. from Broadway to Christopher St.; and to close that part of Art St. and Greenwich Lane lying between Broadway and Sixth Ave.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIV: 329–30.

" The common council resolves "That the Street lately opened from the junction of Beekman & Pearl Street to the East river be called & known by the name of Beekman Street," and "That the Superintendent of Repairs be directed to number the Houses and Lots of Ground in Beekman Street in the usual manner from the Park to the East River."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIV: 332–33.

23 In pursuance of a royal order of this date, A. E. Tromp, "sub-constructor" of the Royal Marine in the Dept. of the Schelde (Holland), made a voyage to the United States, and in his report (in Dutch) described steamboat navigation on the Hudson, N. Y. City horse-boats, ferries, etc.—See extracts from this report, in the N. Y. P. L. (MSS. Div.).

24 The city acquires, by condemnation proceedings, the land comprised in Grand St. Park, at Grand and Scammel Sts. and East Broadway (0.63 acre).—Prendergast, Record of Real Estate; L. M. R. K., III: 969.

28 The common council resolves that the court for the trial of impeachments and correction of errors, of the state of New York, be invited to hold its next extra session in this city.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIV: 341–42. On March 28, a committee was appointed to select a suitable room for the court of errors, "which will hold its Session in this City on the first Monday of June."—Ibid., XIV: 417.

" The common council adopts a plan, as submitted in the form of a map, for laying out the streets, as well as the permanent line of the shore of the East River, from Corlears Hook to 14th St.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIV: 343–45. The proceedings of the board, regarding the opening of that section of the city from the Bowery to the East River, bet. North and 14th St., was published as a separate pamphlet in 1826.—See copy at the N. Y. Hist. Soc.

" The common council authorises the superintendent of the almshouse "to procure the likeness of the Rev^{d} M^{r} Stanford to be placed in the Alms House at Bellevue."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIV: 350. The portrait of the venerable chaplain was executed by Samuel F. B. Morse, and "deposited in the dining-room at Bellevue."—Sommers, Memoir of John Stanford, 268. The expense of portrait and frame was $2.50.—M. C. C. (1784-1831), XV: 142. Morse exhibited it in 1826.—Ibid., XV: 390. The portrait still hangs, one hundred years later (Feb., 1925), in the main office and reception-room at Bellevue.

Mar. 1 The first private high-school for boys, combining instruction for all grades from the youngest to college preparatory, is opened by John Griscom, LL. D., and David H. Barnes, A. M., with more than 200 pupils, in a brick building, 50 by 75 feet, three storeys high, costing $17,000, and just completed for the purpose on four lots on Crosby St., above Grand St. The "Trustees of the High School Society, in the City of New York," were incorporated April 4, 1825 (Laws of N. Y., 1825, chap. 75; ibid., 1826, chap. 32). In May the attendance had increased to 650.

A high-school for girls was soon organized by the trustees, who purchased a lot, 72 by 100 feet, in Crosby St., near Spring St., on which they erected a brick building, 44 by 60 feet, three storeys high, at a cost of $18,000, including ground, building, and furniture. The Female High-School was to open Feb. 1, 1826. The "Boys High-School" and the "Female High-School" were together known as "The New York High School." They soon had about 1,000 pupils.—First Ann. Report of the Trustees of the High-School Society (Nov., 1825), 4, 10; Griscom, Memoir of John Griscom; Goodrich, Picture of N. Y. (1828), 334–35.

The boys' building was sold early in 1832 to the Society of Mechanics and Tradesmen, and the girls' school property was soon after sold at considerable loss.—Griscom, Memoir; Annals of the Gen. Soc. of Mechanics and Tradesmen (1882), 82–83, with view of boys' building, 30 to 36 Crosby St., on p. 79.

4 John Quincy Adams is inaugurated president. His followers constituted the National Republican party, and those of Andrew Jackson the Democratic Republican party.—Winsor, Nar. & Crit. Hist. of Am., VII: 282, 346; N. Y. Spectator, Mr 8, 1825.

7 As the ordinance against flying kites is not observed, and the safety of the inhabitants is endangered, the common council orders that the street inspectors cause all violations to be reported for prosecution.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIV: 363.

Mar. 11 The "property belonging to the estate of the late Henry A. Coster, Esq. situated on William st. and Slote lane, in the rear of the contemplated Exchange," is sold at auction to Joel Post for $93,000. "The property has a front on William street of fifty two feet six inches; a front on Slote lane of seventy six feet—the rear of most of this ground is open to the Exchange."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Mr 12, 1825, citing N. Y. Gaz.

14 The common council refers to a committee a resolution to prohibit the continuation of cow-stables in the settled parts of the city.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIV: 388, 714.

21 A public dinner is held at the City Hotel to celebrate the victory of Bolivar on the plains of Guamanquilla, and the "final triumph of the Patriot arms in South America; a triumph which has restored to liberty and independence the brave people of that country." Gen. Swift, Judge Van Ness, Judge Duer, Commodore Chauncey, and other Americans, are present, besides representatives from Great Britain, Mexico, and Guamanquilla. Letters from Gen. Jackson and John C. Calhoun are read.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Mr 22 and 23, 1825.

" "Yesterday [March 21], there was a Turn Out, for higher wages of the class of workmen employed at the wharves in loading and discharging vessels, including the riggers, lumpers, and other labourers both white and colored persons. The turn out was pretty general along the East River wharves; about noon a body to the number of 800 to 1000 had assembled. In their march they forced many quiet persons to join them, and committed some other excesses. The police officers were soon on the alert, and after they had arrested a few of the ringleaders, the remainder dispersed."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Mr 22, 1825, citing Merc. Adv.

" The common council passes a law prohibiting the sale of game in the public markets at improper seasons of the year.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIV: 397–98. This action was praised in the N. Y. Eve. Post of March 25.

24 The legislature incorporates the New York Water-Works Co., for the purpose of supplying the city with pure water through pipes or conduits of iron or other metal. The capital stock is limited to $2,000,000, at $50 a share. The city may subscribe one-fourth. The act shall cease if the supply of water shall not be supplied before Jan. 1, 1832.—Laws of N. Y. (1825), chap. 46; N. Y. Eve. Post, Mr 15, 21, 28, 1825. See Ap 18.

" "The scandalous condition of our streets, calls loudly upon the citizens to adopt some efficient plan for having them swept and the dirt removed. To rely any longer upon the corporation to have this work performed is worse than idle. We are continually ancle deep in mud, or smothered with clouds of dust. A stranger . . . would scarcely believe that the city was peopled by civilized beings. What a standing reproach to us are the streets of Boston, and not in this particular alone? Not a hog is seen abroad, and the dangerous practice of flying kites is unknown there."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Mr 24, 1825. See also ibid., Ap 16, 1825.

28 The common council resolves that the general index of maps and lists of streets, made by James McMurray, be placed in the office of the register for the city and county of New York, to be examined free of expense by all persons. A warrant for $80 is directed to be reported in favour of Mr. McMurray for his services.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIV: 411: 12.

" The common council passes an ordinance for completing West St. from Cedar St. to Dey St., and from Hubert St. to Canal St.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIX: 415.

29 A prospectus of a new morning paper to be called "The New-York Merchant, and Friend of Commerce" is issued by James Bennett.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Mr 29, 1825.

Apr. 1 "No less than thirty steam boats are stated to have been built or placed on the stocks, in the ship yards of this city, within these twelve months; some of them for the neighboring states, some for South America, but the greater part for navigating our own waters. Besides these, a number of other vessels of large size have been launched during the same period, and others are in considerable forwardness."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ap 1, 1825. See also ibid., Ap 2, 1825.

2 Castle Garden, "after having undergone various additional improvements, is again open for the reception of company."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ap 2, 1825.

" "The carpenters and masons are now busily engaged in tearing down and clearing away the buildings in Wall-street, to make room for the Exchange, which is to be a building of uncommon beauty

1825 and convenience."—N. Y. Mirror, II: 287. The foundation stone
Apr. was laid in this month.—Goodrich, Picture of N. Y. (1828), 206.
2 The building was occupied on May 1, 1827 (q.v.). See also descrip. of Pls. 115 and 116, III: 618 and 623.

" The editor of the Mirror calls attention to the crumbling condition of the Capt. Lawrence monument in Trinity churchyard, a broken column erected by the common council, and suggests that a new monument should be erected.—N. Y. Mirror, II: 287. See Ja 30 and Ap 10, 1826.

4 An act is passed to incorporate the "High School of New-York."—Laws of N. Y. (1825), chap. 75. See summary under Mr 1.

" The common council refers to the committee on lands and places a petition from the lessees of Castle Garden "for permission to erect a Telagraph room at that place," as recommended by a committee of merchants.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIV: 419.

" The common council resolves to send a remonstrance to the legislature against the removal of the sessions of the supreme court from this city to Albany.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIV: 419–20. A public meeting to protest against the removal was held at the Tontine Coffee House on April 5.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ap 5, 1825. See F 28, 1828.

5 "We observe a project in the American of last evening for erecting a Rail Road from New York to Albany, accompanied with a request that the editors of the newspapers in this city would copy it; we would readily do so at once, but really on better thoughts we feel inclined to wait and see if the projector will not himself relinquish the plan as visionary and impracticable."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ap 5, 1825.

7 "Equestrian Statue of Washington.—We have received a letter from Mr. Causici, dated at Washington, March 28th, in which this ingenious and celebrated sculptor, states that he has bestowed two years of constant and unwearied exertions on this statue, by the advice and encouragement of gentlemen of wealth and influence in this city; that the expense of living all this time upon his own means, has at length exhausted them, and left him in a state of pecuniary embarrassment; that subscriptions were opened to raise a fund to remunerate him for his labor, and to enable to complete the work he has begun and almost completed, but of which he has heard nothing for a long time, and that thus situated he hopes it will not be thought unreasonable or presumptious by any generous or honourable minded man, that he should appeal to his humane and just consideration, and pray him to reflect upon the case of a stranger in a strange land, and extend to him the hand of benevolent relief, by adding his name to the subscription list."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ap 7, 1825. See, further, Je 22, 1826.

12 The legislature incorporates the New York Dry Dock Co. (see D 10, 1824), with power and authority to construct "dry and wet docks" anywhere in the city and county of New York or the county of Kings. This is not an exclusive privilege, however.—Laws of N. Y. (1825), chap. 114. See My 5, and 1826. On April 29, 1829, the act of incorporation was amended.—Ibid. (1829), chap. 295.

13 "We are now gratified to learn that there are now upwards of 300 dwelling houses and stores, lighted up in this city with gas, and that in every instance where it has been fairly tested, it has given the utmost satisfaction. . . ."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ap 13, 1825. See, further, S 3.

15 The common council secures the passage of an act permitting them, on account of a severe epidemic of fever in the penitentiary, to remove to the fever hospital such prisoners as can be securely kept there.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIV: 451–52; XV: 50; Laws of N. Y. (1825), chap. 179.

16 By act of legislature, the Eleventh and Twelfth Wards are created, and added to the ten existing wards. The two new wards are separated by 14th St., the Twelfth comprising "all the residue of the said city" north of 14th St.

It is further provided in the act that "after the last Monday in December next, not less than the mayor or recorder of the said city, and seven aldermen and seven assistants, shall be a quorum of the common council."—Laws of N. Y. (1825), chap. 195; M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIV: 393–95, 485. For description of the several wards, see The Metropolitan City of Am. (1853), 215.

18 "New State Prison.—We understand that the commissioners appointed to locate a site for the new State Prison, have fixed it in the town of Mount Pleasant, Westchester co. on the banks of the Hudson, intermediate between the villages of Sing Sing and Sparta, about a mile from each."—Com. Adv., Ap 18, 1825, citing the Apr.
"Alb. Adv." It was completed in 1828 (q.v., D 16). 18

The subscription books of the N. Y. Water Works Co. (see Mr 24) are opened at the Franklin Bank. By 3 o'clock, more than $9,000,000 are subscribed. The capital of the company is only $2,000,000.—N. Y. Mirror, II: 310. See also N. Y. Eve. Post, Ap 18 and 20, 1825. See, further, Je 20. "

Mrs. Banyer, writing from New York to her father, John Jay, 19 says: "Mr. P. Stuyvesant has long wished to dispose of his place and has lately sold it to a Company who are to give him $100,000 for the Mansion house, 200 house lots and the water right, still leaving him a large estate . . . Mr. Rutherford took us yesterday to see Peale's likeness of Genl. Washington, said by many of the General's old friends to be the best ever taken."—Corresp. and Pub. Papers of John Jay, IV: 474.

The Delaware & Hudson Canal Co. (see Ja 7) is chartered for 20 the purpose of making a canal from the Hudson River to Honesdale, Pa., and with banking privileges.—Laws of N. Y. (1825), chap. 220; N. Y. As It Is, In 1833, 93.

The legislature passes an act "to provide for the Survey of a "
Land Communication between Lake Erie and the Hudson River."—Laws of N. Y. (1825), chap. 279. This led eventually to the building of the N. Y., Lake Erie & Western R. R.—See Ja 2 and Ap 24, 1832.

The legislature passes a militia act requiring, among other 21 things, "That the infantry of the city and county of New-York shall parade three times in each year, once by companies, and twice by regiments; that one of the said parades shall be ordered by the brigadier-general for review and inspection, and the remaining parades by the commandants of the respective regiments, at such times as they may think proper."—Laws of N. Y. (1825), chap. 290.

The corner-stone of the Presbyterian Church in Bleecker St. near 26
Broadway (see Ja 19) is laid.—N. Y. Spectator, Ap 29; N. Y. Eve. Post, Ap 27, 1825. The building was completed in 1826.—Greenleaf, Hist. of the Churches, 157. With "brown-stone pillars, of the Corinthian order, and a handsome pediment," it had "a very classical front."—Goodrich (1828), 221; L. M. R. K., III: 930.

By authority vested in them by act of legislature (see N 19, 28 1824), the common council designates the Free School Society, the Mechanics Society, the Orphan Asylum Society, and the African Free School, as the institutions to which school moneys shall be distributed.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIV: 498–99. Three of these were institutions that had been designated previously by the state (see Mr 12, 1813). In rendering such a decision petitions for a share of the moneys from the trustees of St. Patrick's Cathedral and St. Peter's Church were refused, and an amendment was defeated decisively, providing shares for "incorporated religious societies" which "support or shall establish Charity Schools."—Ibid., XIV: 468, 498, 499.

In this decision the common council virtually accepted the recommendation of its "Committee on Laws," which had submitted a report on Apr. 11. The report was deemed so important that 300 copies were ordered to be printed "for the use of the Members;" the committee confessed its predisposition "that the well-organized churches and religious societies in our city, might be permitted to continue in the reception of a part of this fund as heretofore. But the weight of the argument, as urged before them, . . . and the established constitutional and political doctrines which have a bearing on this question, and the habits and modes of thinking of the constituents at large of this board, require, in the opinion of your Committee, that the Common School Fund should be distributed for civil purposes only, as contra-distinguished from those of a religious or sectarian description."—Ibid., XIV: 424; Report of the Committee on Laws on the Distribution of the Common School Fund (1825), in N. Y. P. L.

In this month, the operations of a "Society for the Encourage- May ment of Faithful Domestic Servants" began. Later (see Je 20, — 1825; Je 5, 1826), it obtained the use of the room in the basement of the N. Y. Institution formerly occupied by the Bank for Savings. It aided gratuitously in finding employment for servants out of work. The number of servants in New York at this time was supposed to be about 30,000.—Goodrich, Picture of N. Y. (1828), 364–66. Cf. Je 20. See also N. Y. Eve. Post, My 16 and 17, 1825.

1825 and Garden Sts. to No. 11 Garden St., directly opposite the Church.

4 The anniversary of the first commencement at Columbia College is celebrated by the alumni with exercises in the college chapel. Clement C. Moore delivers the address. In the afternoon, a dinner was held at Washington Hall.—N. Y. Eve. Post, My 6, 1825. The first commencement of King's College was held on June 21, 1758. The first commencement of the college under its new name was held on April 11, 1786.—Hist. of Columbia Univ. (1904), 23, 66.

" The common council resolves to cause all the wood-work around the old flagstaff on the Battery to be taken down.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIV: 513. On May 11, the "N. Y. Nautical Institution and Shipmasters Society" recommended that the flagstaff be used as an observatory.—Ibid., XIV: 516. On Jan. 3, 1826, the board received a petition that the "Stone Building on the Battery called the Flag Staff" may be removed (ibid., XV: 131), and, on Jan. 16 (q.v.), resolved to take it down.—Ibid., XV: 159.

10 The American Tract Society is founded.—Goodrich, Picture of N. Y. (1828), 323; Man. Com. Coun. (1858), 620. For other tract societies of this time, including the N. Y. Religious Tract Society, the N. Y. Methodist Tract Society, the P. E. Tract Society, the Female Tract Society, etc., see Goodrich, 324–25.

" "New York never saw such days as the present since it was a city—All kinds of active business prospers, except law business, which, if we may believe the loud and general complaint of the profession, with scarcely a dissentient, languishes. Such has been the tide of population, which has, during the past and the present year, set towards this city, that habitations cannot be had; shops and stores command double rents to what they did the last season, and still the demand cannot be supplied; the streets are so obstructed by the great number of buildings going up and pulling down, that they have become almost impassable, and a scene of bustle, noise and confusion prevails that no pen can describe, nor any but an eye witness imagine."—N. Y. Eve. Post, My 10, 1825.

11 The common council adopts a resolution of patriotic praise for Gen. Lafayette, and the draft of an invitation for him to join with the corporation of the city in celebrating the 4th of July (q.v.), and partaking of a public dinner with them in the city hall. The resolution invites him, further, to be the city's guest whenever "he can disengage himself from the caresses of our Fellow Citizens in other parts of the Union."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIV: 530–31. See O 11, 1824; D 5, 1825.

" Samuel Leggett, president of the N. Y. Gas Light Co., reports to the common council "that the Pipes for conducting the Gas light are laid and the Company are ready to supply and light the Public Lamps in Broadway from the Battery to Grand Street according to the terms of the Agreements of the 12th May 1823." The communication is referred to the lamp committee.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIV: 517. See Mr 26, My 12, 1823; Ap 22, Je 11, Jl 16, D 7, 1824; see, further, N 21, 1825.

" The common council adopts a resolution to open a new street, 100 ft. wide, from Jones to Art St., to be called Lafayette Place. —M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIV: 520, 528; see also descrip. of Pl. 103-b, III: 605. On April 18, 1831, the street commissioner, "to whom was referred the Petition of Seth Geer and others for permission to inclose a Court of fifteen feet wide in front of the Buildings to be erected fronting on Lafayette Place," reported that this would be in keeping with the "understanding of all the owners of the ground through which that Street was opened in 1826 with the then Corporation and was the principal inducement in opening it 100 feet wide, that they might have elegant and spacious Courts in front of their buildings leaving the unobstructed width of the Street 70 feet."—Ibid., XIX: 654. In 1826, Lafayette Place was opened, 100 ft. wide, through Vauxhall Garden.—Goodrich, Picture of N. Y. and Strangers Guide (1828), 134. For the later history of this street, see "A Neglected Corner of the Metropolis," by Mrs. Lamb, in Mag. of Am. Hist. (1886), XVI: 1–29. See also L. M. R. K., III: 1003–4.

13 "Mr. Scudder, of the Museum, is preparing a large building near the square, in Chatham-street, to open an establishment, that he has had some time in comtemplation, the title of which will be the New York Spectaculum. . . . The subject is entirely new, having no specimens of natural history, but simply such things as will have a tendency to please. We also understand, that Mr. Scudder has a large upright piano, an additional keyed finger organ, both of which are to be placed in the halls for the gratuitous use of visitors."—N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., My 13, 1825; N. Y. Eve. Post, My 17, 1825. See also ibid., My 30, 1825. The Spectaculum opened on July 1.—Ibid., Jl 1, 1825. May 13

The Colombian frigate "Venezuela" arrives at New York, "having on board Dr. Francesco Lopez, bearer of a treaty of commerce with the United States, and an arrangement for the suppression of the slave trade." The ship came up to the city on May 22, and fired a salute which was answered by Castle Williams. It is "the first frigate which has visited us, belonging to one of the most advanced and consistent Republics of South America."—N. Y. Eve. Post, My 23, 1825. 21

The New York Hotel, at 162 Greenwich St., is opened.—N. Y. Eve. Post, My 23, 1825, citing N. Y. Gaz. "

The common council passes a law to prohibit the use of "flying horses" and "the like dangerous and improper devices for public amusement" in this city.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIV: 564. June 6

Following a very voluminous committee report (of 57 printed pages), the common council recommends to the churches in the city that they extend their places of interment as far as possible beyond the lines of Grand St.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIV: 576–634; N. Y. Eve. Post, Je 6, 7, 9, 10, 11, 13, and 14, 1825. The report was published by Mahlon Day. See also Ag 3, 1822. 9

Lafayette is present at the laying of the corner-stone of the Bunker Hill monument, on the site of the battle. The monument was built by voluntary subscription, and completed on July 23, 1824 (q.v.).—N. Y. Eve. Post, Je 17, 18, and 21, 1825; Mem. Hist. of Boston, IV: 116, 403. 17

The absence of seats on the Battery leads to the suspicion that this condition is permitted by the city corporation in the interest of the proprietors of Castle Garden, who derive benefit from admission fees. The N. Y. Mirror, II: 375, makes indignant protest. See, further, ibid., II: 383; III: 391, 406–7, 415; IV: 15, 247. See, however, Jl 18, 1825; and Mr 18, 1826. 18

"We are gratified to learn, that the Water Works Company [see Mr 24 and Ap 18] are adopting the most efficient measures to supply the city with an abundance of pure and wholesome water. They have engaged two of the most experienced engineers in the country, Messrs. [Benjamin] Wright, and [Canvas] White, to complete the surveys, and to superintend the work. . . ."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Je 20, 1825. See N 26. 20

The executors of John Scudder petition the common council for a 10-years extension of the lease of the American Museum in the N. Y. Institution.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIV: 639. On July 1, the finance committee reported against so long an extension, "because the board may hereafter consider it expedient to remove the building in question, together with the Bridewell and Goal." An extension was allowed until May 1, 1827.—Ibid., XIV: 663. See also ibid., XIV: 767. "

The common council grants to the "Society for improving the character & usefulness of Domestic Servants" (see My, 1825) the use of a room in the New York Institution.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIV: 646–47. Cf. ibid., XV: 449. "

"A Marylander," who is visiting New York, writes to Editor Coleman regarding the city: ". . . I was passing down Broadway on Sunday last, at 10 o'clock in the morning . . . when suddenly I heard the sound of the hammer and the axe. I stopped and found myself against a very large building now erecting, and which is directly opposite to your splendid City Hall: . . . I soon found that there were actually masons engaged in laying brick, and carpenters in setting up partitions and putting down floors. While attentively observing this, my ears were saluted with the soft dulcet sounds of the Kent Bugle, which proceeded from the apartments of a house close in the vicinity. On expressing my surprise at this to some of the bye-standers, . . . they informed me that the good people of Broadway were regularly serenaded every Sunday morning from the same quarter on their way to church. These things . . . have staggered me very much. . . ."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Je 22, 1825. 22

1825 June 30 The steamboat "Commerce" and the barge "Lady Clinton" have just been completed and are intended for the navigation of the North River.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Je 30, 1825.

July 1 As a tribute to Bolivar, "our Corporation has caused his portrait to be placed between those of General Washington and Governor Clinton in the room of the City Hall in which the anniversary of Independence is to be celebrated."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Jl 1, 1825.

" Residents near "the Circus in Broadway" complain to the common council of "scenes of riot and disgraceful excesses" which are "constantly occuring in the Street opposite the Circus which are in their opinion occasioned by that Establishment." Their petition is referred to the police magistrates.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIV: 656.

4 The celebration of this Fourth of July is particularly memorable because of the presence of Lafayette. Received at 10 a. m. in the governor's room of the city hall by a committee of the common council, he is conducted to the "council chamber" where he receives an address by Lieut.-Gov. Talmadge on behalf of the senate and the people of the state. In front of the city hall he received the "marching salute" of a military and firemen's parade. He listened to an oration by the Rev. Dr. Cummings in the Middle Dutch Church, and in the afternoon visited the Society of the Cincinnati, to walk with them at 5 o'clock to partake of the corporation dinner in "the banqueting room of the City Hall." The news report gives an interesting description of this and the other events of the day. In the evening, attended by a committee of revolutionary officers and citizens, he visited the Park Theatre, and at 10 o'clock repaired to Castle Garden, where 8,000 persons greeted him, and witnessed a display of fireworks.—N. Y. Spectator, Jl 6 and 8, 1825; M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIV: 640, 669; Journal D, 117, comptroller's office. See Jl 14.

" The Lafayette Circus in Laurens St. is opened for the first time.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Jl 2 and 5, 1825. It was on the west side of Laurens St., 100 feet north of Canal St., extending from Laurens St. (now West Broadway) to Thompson St.—Brown, I: 99; L. M. R. K., III: 984.

9 Eugene Robertson, the aeronaut, ascends in a balloon from the Battery, the cord being cut by Lafayette.—N. Y. Spectator, Jl 12, 1825. He made another ascent on Sept. 5.—Ibid., S 9, 1825.

" "So numerous of late have become the amusements throughout our city, the greater part of which are of the most trifling nature; and so filled are our public papers with puffs, magnifying their importance, and thus gulling the public, that the scene has become absolutely disgusting. To distant readers, it would appear that a relish for egregious puerilities had taken the lead, and that we are no longer a busy, industrious, and enterprising people.—Such, however, is not the fact; for the truth is, if a monkey, or an elephant, or a mummy, is brought to town for a show, or a man undertakes the Herculanean task of swimming across either of our rivers, due care is taken to have it announced a day or two before hand, in a neat editorial paragraph, as something wonderful and new under the sun. Near by where these same sights are to be seen, or these miraculous performances are to take place, you will be sure to find some public Hotel or Garden in the vicinity, affording oceans of Brandy and water; and every thing palatable, may be had at a moment's notice. We mean not to discourage spectacles or amusements which are calculated to improve the mind, or even to afford innocent recreation, but to protest against the paltry artifices which are made use of to play Jeremy Didler with our citizens, and draw off apprentices, journeymen, and laborers from their work, to witness mountebank shows and tumbler's tricks, at the expense of the pockets of the star-gazing multitude, & particularly of strangers who always at this season of the year, fill our Boarding-Houses to overflow, and who are eager to witness everything bordering on the marvellous, in this our marvellous city of Gotham" —N. Y. Eve. Post, Jl 9, 1825.

14 Lafayette leaves New York by way of New Jersey for a Southern tour.—N. Y. Spectator, Jl 15, 1825.

18 The common council receives a petition from an inhabitant of Second Ave. complaining of the running at large of swine in his neighbourhood as highly dangerous because, being fed on garbage from the slaughter-house there, they become "extreemely ferocious and dangerous to children."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIV: 674.

" The common council accepts an invitation from John Vanderlyn to see the panoramic painting of the city of Athens at the Rotunda. —M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIV: 677.

July 18 The common council passes a resolution to extend Ludlow, Essex, Norfolk, Suffolk, and Arundle Sts. from the line of "Delancys farm" to North St.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIV: 681.

" A resolution is referred to the committee on repairs "to place a row of seats for the accomodation of the Public around the outside Walks of the Battery."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIV: 690.

28 The corner-stone of the General Theological Seminary at Greenwich is laid. The ground was presented by Prof. Clement C. Moore, and consisted of a lot of about five acres fronting between Ninth and Tenth Aves., and running back to North River, below 21st St.—Daily Adv., Jl 30, 1825. The first building was completed in the spring of 1827.—Goodrich, Picture of N. Y. (1828), 235; Perry, Hist. of the Am. Episcopal Church, II: 506–534; L. M. R. K., III: 940. See My 1, 1918.

30 Editor Coleman writes: "Is it not a reproach to the public authorities of New York, that neither are the great majority of houses, designated by numbers, nor one in ten of the streets pointed out by name, to the passing stranger? Scarcely is there to be found a single number upon a house in the whole length of Broadway. Really, we are inclined to think the good people of this city, would be quite as much pleased at seeing a vote that these two measures of convenience be adopted, as the one lately for turning what ought to be a part of the Park, into a public pound for cows and calves. As to hogs they are permitted to roam at large, particularly on Sundays."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Jl 30, 1825.

Aug. 1 The common council orders that the lower market house at Catharine Slip, a mere shed in a ruinous condition, be removed and a new one erected. Catharine Market supplies a large proportion of the inhabitants of the eastern and northern sections of the city, and pays the city more, in proportion to its cost, than any other market.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIV: 704; De Voe, Market Book, 354–55; L. M. R. K., III: 958.

29 The common council orders that 20th St. be opened from Third Ave. to the Bloomingdale Road.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIV: 738.

Sept. — About this time, hog-carts were introduced to rid the streets of a nuisance through the employment of negro hog-catchers.—De Voe, Market Book, 481–82, citing the Eve. Post of Sept.

1 "The city is endangered almost every night, by boys sending up paper balloons in almost every direction. After ascending in the air some distance, they take fire and down they tumble on to the roofs of houses and stables. . . . Is there no remedy for this alarming practice? Let us pray the Corporation to interfere, and put a stop to it at once."—N. Y. Eve. Post, S 1, 1825.

3 "Notwithstanding the interested opposition of certain individuals to the introduction of Gas Lights into our city, we learn that the Company has already fixed upwards of 1700 burners in different stores, dwelling houses and other buildings, and that the orders are so numerous they find it impracticable to execute them with all the workmen that can be obtained. . . . We understand there is 1825 S 3 every prospect of our streets being lighted up with gas, before the long and dark nights set in."—N. Y. Eve. Post, S 3, 1825.

7 Lafayette leaves Washington on board the frigate "Brandywine" for France. He receives an address of farewell from President Adams, to which he replies.—N. Y. Spectator, S 13, 16, 20, 1825. See also D 5.

12 The common council receives a communication from William Bayard, Cadwallader D. Colden, and John Pintard, stating that, at a meeting of merchants and citizens in the Chamber of Commerce at the Tontine Coffee House, it was resolved that it would be proper to celebrate the completion of the Erie Canal, by which "benefits of immense importance" would be "secured to this State and especially to the City of New York;" stating also that a committee of fifteen had been appointed "to take measures in Relation thereto;" that this committee met on Sept. 9, and the present memorialists were delegated to request the common council to appoint a committee to confer with the citizens' committee. The board at once appoints such committee.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIV: 765.

This committee reported on Sept. 26 that it had held its first conference with the citizens' committee, who desired that they request that the common council appoint a committee, "with powers," so that "an event so great and so memorable as the Connecting the Waters of the Great Lakes with the Ocean, may be commemorated under the Auspices and Direction of the Corporation and in a manner suited to the Character of our City." The same committee, of which the recorder, Richard Riker, was chairman, was so empowered.—Ibid., XIV: 777–78. See O 4.

" In a petition to the common council the statement is made that, by an act of the legislature, trustees had been appointed to sell and dispose of the "Trust of Land known as the Harleam Commons," and to see that the proceeds are appropriated to the Harlem Library, and to certain schools.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIV: 751.

" The Society of Friends is permitted by the common council to remove the remains of bodies now in the graveyard in Liberty St. to its present cemetery before March 1, 1826.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIV: 752.

" The common council authorises the purchase, from John P. Roome, of the portrait of Charles Thompson, who was secretary to the first congress, at not over $75, and directs that it be "fitted up and placed in the Gallery of Portraits."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIV: 765.

14 A weekly publication, entitled The New York Literary Gazette and Phi Beta Kappa Repository and conducted by James G. Brooks, "has just made its debut in this city."—N. Y. Eve. Post, S 14, 1825.

18 The new Harlem Reformed Dutch Church is to be opened on this day.—N. Y. Eve. Post, S 15, 1825. It was on the north side of 121 St., west of Third Ave., and was the third building erected by the congregation.—L. M. R. K., III: 935.

26 The common council receives a petition from John L. Norton, who states that he is owner in fee simple of an estate known as the "Hermitage," which he has divided into building lots on 39th, 40th, 41st, 42d, 43d, 44th, 45th, 46th, and 47th Sts., Seventh, Eighth, Ninth, Tenth, and Eleventh Aves. He means to dispose of the lots, but the title to the streets and avenues will still be his, and he begs the corporation to accept them, with the exception of 47th St. to Eleventh Ave.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIV: 768–69. On Nov. 21, the deed of cession was presented, and accepted by the board.—Ibid., XV: 37.

27 President Adams arrives at New York from Philadelphia, on his way to visit Quincy, Mass.—N. Y. Eve. Post, S 27, 1825.

It is stated that "servant's wages are in New York, higher than any where else, and plenty of demand."—N. Y. Eve. Post, O 11, 1825. 11

"A more scandalous disregard of the laws and ordinances of any city in the world is not to be named, than is daily witnessed in the public streets of New York. I mean the often repeated fact, so often, that one is ashamed to mention it again, of swine of all sizes running at large, roaming unmolested throughout the most frequented parts of our city, at all times of day, not only to the great disgust, but to the extreme inconvenience and real danger of its inhabitants. . . . It is a fact that may be seriously stated to the world, that the public streets of the city of New York have become dangerous to horses and carriages, by the multitudes of large and overgrown hogs that are permitted to roam at large in all directions. We have laws, good laws, but we have no magistrates with independence enough to see them executed. It is in Boston only that they can boast of magistrates who fearlessly dare to do their duty, regardless of consequences."—N. Y. Eve. Post, O 11, 1825. "

The committee on laws reports to the common council "That the distribution of the Common School Fund in this City, is at present confined to those only, who are the subjects of a gratuitous education. The necessary operation of this limitation, is, the rejection from the Free Schools, and other institutions participating in this fund, of the children of those who can pay for schooling; and the admission of such only, as are unable to pay. The consequences are, that the children of poverty and want, are left to form a community by themselves, and that the classes above them in point of circumstances but whose parents or guardians are not of sufficient ability, amply to provide for them, are omitted as objects of the public care and bounty, in the invaluable objects of Literary and elementary instruction." The following are some of the suggestions "

1825 Oct. 24 for a general plan to break down the "distinctions that now divide these portions of the rising generation, and to promote their mutual benefit, by instructing them together, as children of the free citizens of an enlightened and growing republic:"

1. The title of the "Free School Society" to be changed to that of "The New York Public School Society," and its charter to be so amended that children of all classes may be admitted to the schools, and required to pay for their instruction, according to the branches they may learn, but not more than one dollar per quarter; the trustees to have power to remit the charge in such cases as they may deem proper.

2. The real estate of the Free School Society, and of the African Schools, to be conveyed to the corporation.

3. The whole amount of the school fund to be distributed to the Public School Society and such auxiliary institutions as shall be sanctioned by the common council.

Some of the advantages to be gained are:

a. Experienced teachers, duly compensated for their time and talent.

b. Convenient, light, airy school-houses.

c. Uniformity in instruction.

d. Harmony among religious sects.

e. An increased interest on the part of parents in the education of their children.

The common council resolves to approve of the establishment of "Public Schools" instead of "Free Schools," and to recommend that a memorial on the subject be submitted to the legislature.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIV: 921–25. For this memorial vide ibid., XV: 56–58.

25 A complete preliminary programme of the Canal celebration is published.—N. Y. Spectator, O 25, 1825. See O 26.

" A three-column description is published of the book (see Ag 18, 1824), beautifully engrossed and bound, presented to Lafayette by the common council of New York at the president's house in Washington on Sept. 6, 1825, a duplicate cópy being retained in the city archives. This volume commemorates Lafayette's visit to America, and particularly to this city. It contains portraits "executed by those distinguished young artists, Messrs. Inman and Cummings, of this city;" also drawings by Charles Burton, of Washington, besides a variety of plain and ornamental penmanship by Isaac F. Bragg and Charles Hunt. It is believed to be "the most superb specimen of binding that has ever been exhibited in this city." The book is enclosed in a "mahogany box, lined with purple silk velvet, and stuffed, to preserve the leather and gilding from injury."—N. Y. Spectator, O 25, 1825. The duplicate, owned by the city, is in the N. Y. Hist. Soc. It is a complete record of the resolutions, addresses, etc. which commemorate Lafayette's visit to New York. His signature, and that of President John Quincy Adams, and others connected with the events recorded, are included as their attestation of the record.

26 The canal-boat "Seneca Chief" leaves Buffalo over the Erie Canal, thus opening the events of the celebration, which continued for more than a week along the route to New York and in the harbour of this city.—Colden's Memoir, 148–49, citing the Com. Adv.; N. Y. Mirror, III: 111 et seq.; Goodrich, Picture of N. Y. (1828), 132. The Mirror report traces the daily events accompanying the progress of the "Seneca Chief" from Buffalo. See N 4.

" "Peale's Museum and Gallery of the Fine Arts" opens in the "Parthenon," at 252 Broadway opposite the city hall.—Com. Adv., O 25, 29, 1825; M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIV: 811. It occupies the site of Montaigne's Garden, where the Sons of Liberty met prior to the Revolution.—L. M. R. K., III: 979–80. For accounts of its contents, see Goodrich, Picture of N. Y. (1828), 440; N. Y. As It Is, In 1839, p. 226. Scientific lectures were soon introduced.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ja 11, 1826. It was still standing in 1846.—Watson's Annals, 246.

" Castle Garden is advertised to be open every fair day and evening. In the evening, it is to be "brilliantly lighted with gas and variegated lamps, and decorated with a number of transparent paintings (by Mr. Boudet). A few rockets may also be expected. Admittance 12½ cents."—Com. Adv., Oct. 26, 1825.

Nov. 4 A fleet of canal-boats and steamboats, which had joined the "Seneca Chief" (see O 26) on its voyage to New York, comes to anchor off Fort Gansevoort, just above the state prison, at 6 a. m. They soon again "got under weigh, and came to, off the Battery when the splendid steamboat Washington, . . . having on board a committee of the Corporation and the Officers of the Governor's Guard, came off alongside the Chancellor, in which were the Governor and the several Committees from the North, and tendered them congratulations on the safe arrival of the boats from Lake Erie." Alderman Cowdrey delivered the formal address, and Gov. Clinton replied, in part as follows: Nov. 4

"The gratifications naturally associated with the celebration of this event, are greatly enhanced by its intimate connection with the prosperity of the city of New York.

"Standing near the confines of the ocean, and now connected by navigable communications with the Great Lakes of the North and the West, there will be no limit to your lucrative extensions of trade and commerce. The valley of the Mississippi will soon pour its treasures into this great emporium through the channels now formed and forming, and wherever wealth is to be acquired or enterprize can be attempted the power and capacity of your city will be felt, and its propitious influence on human happiness will be acknowledged."

The corporation of the city having assembled at the city hall, received their guests soon after this. "and about a quarter before 9 o'clock proceeded to Whitehall, and embarked on board the boats prepared for their reception. The whole fleet then proceeded up the East River as far as the Navy Yard, from which a salute was fired. The officers of the Navy were then received on board the Washington, when the boats returned, and on approaching Governor's Island were saluted by Castle Williams, . . .

"The whole fleet then proceeded down the Bay. . . .

"On reaching the Narrows the leading boats fell out of the line to the right and left, and stopped until the ship Hamlet and the pilot boats came up and took stations in front. The line was then re-formed, and the boats proceeded to the U. S. schooner Porpoise, at anchor between Romer & Sandy Hook, around which the flotilla formed, the circle presenting a most beautiful and interesting scene, and occupying a space of about three miles.

"The ceremony of uniting the waters of lake Erie and the Atlantic was then performed by governor Clinton, who delivered an appropriate address. . . .

"Dr. Mitchill then poured the contents of several vials, which he stated contained the waters of the Elbe, and many other rivers, and delivered a long address. The honourable Mr. Colden presented to the Mayor, a memoir which contained a brief history of the Canal from its commencement to the present day. [This memoir is the leading feature of a printed report of the celebration.]

"Salutes were then fired from the Revenue Cutter, the pilot boats, . . .

"The flotilla returned to the city a little after 3 o'clock, when the parties landed and joined in the procession. . . ."—N. Y. Mirror, III: 126–27. For another full account of the events of the day, see Narrative of the Festivities . . . , by Wm. L. Stone (1825); N. Y. Spectator, N 6, 11, 15 et seq.; D 6, 1825.

The naval fête was superintended by Chas. Rhind, whose description of it is found in a report to Richard Riker, chairman of the committee of arrangements, and published in Colden's Memoir, 189 et seq. See also description of Pl. 95-a, Vol. III, which is a reproduction of Archibald Robertson's illustration for this report. The original drawing of this view is owned by Mrs. J. Wray Cleveland of New York, author of "Archibald Robertson" in Century Mag., May, 1890.

On this day also, an extensive and varied civic procession on land was held, consisting principally of societies representing the numerous trades, the firemen, and other organizations. This, and the illuminations and fireworks, are described, with illustrations, in Colden's Memoir. See also John Watts de Peyster, by Frank Allaben (N. Y., 1908), I: 95–97, which contains reminiscences of the events of the day.

A "Grand Canal Ball" is held. A committee, which met late in October at the Shakespeare Hotel, arranged to connect the Lafayette Circus (see Jl 4) with the building back of it, which together formed a hall about 180 ft. long.—N. Y. Mirror, III: 111, 127. The circus building, or riding-school, was situated on what is now West Broadway, and was later known as Lafayette Theatre. It was fitted up for this occasion "with great splendour." —Goodrich, Picture of N. Y. (1828), 383; L. M. R. K., 984; Colden's Memoir, 346. See Mr 11, 1826. 7

A meeting of artists is held in the rooms of the N. Y. Hist. Soc. for the purpose of forming a society for improvement in drawing. 8

1825 The N. Y. Drawing Soc. was the result. From it developed the 10 The recorder, Richard Riker, presents to the common council the report of the committee, of which he is chairman, appointed to commemorate the completion of the Erie Canal.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XV: 14–16. This report forms part of the Appendix of Colden's Memoir, 115 et seq.

The cost of the celebration is indicated by the following summary of warrants paid by order of the board: In 1825,—N 10, $2,500; D 5, $5,500. In 1826,—Ap 24, $2,500; O 9, $3,837.39. In 1827,—Ja 2, $2,750; D 3, $2,561.01. Total, $19,648.40.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XV: 16, 66, 382, 624; XVI: 10, 616–17; Journal D (in comptroller's office), 24, 153. See also D 5.

" Residents of Chatham St. petition the common council for relief from the annoyance caused by the "Spectaculum" established in that street (see My 13); they complain that their business is injured by the crowds collected in the street to hear the band of music which plays on the balcony of this house, and that horses are frightened by the noise of the band, run away, and cause accidents. Referred to the police committee.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XV: 2.

" The commissioners under the act to provide for the permanent regulation of the streets and avenues south of 34th St. present a report to the common council accompanied by maps and profiles. This is referred to a committee with authority to print it for use of the members.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XV: 3–4.

14 A riot occurs at the Park Theatre on the appearance of Edmund Keane in "Richard III." The shouting and hissing were so loud that the play could not be heard.—N. Y. Eve. Post, N 15, 1825. See also ibid., N 16, 17, 1825; Brown, I: 27–29.

17 Signor Garcia announces "that he has lately arrived in this country with an Italian troupe, (among whom are some of the first artists of Europe) and has made arrangements with the Managers of the New-York [Park] Theatre, to have the house on Tuesdays and Saturdays; on which nights the choicest Italian Operas will be performed."—N. Y. Eve. Post, N 17, 1825. See N 29.

21 The N. Y. Gas Light Co. petitions the common council for permission to lay pipes in streets north of Grand St. Referred to a committee.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XV: 20. On Dec. 19, the committee reported that the company had already ventured to lay pipes in one or two streets north of Grand St. without the authority of the board, an act expressly ruled against in their charter. The board therefore decided that the company must take up all the pipes laid beyond the limits of the contract, and put the streets in the same condition as before; also that it is inexpedient to grant their petition.—Ibid., XV: 93–94. On Dec. 23, word was received that the company was perfectly willing to comply with the order of the board, but doubted being able to do so in the present cold weather, and requested indulgence until spring. This was referred to a committee with power.—Ibid., XV: 120. See My 11, 1825, and F 13, 1826.

" The common council adopts resolutions that Second St. be opened from the Bowery to its junction with North St.; and that Third St. be opened from First Ave. to the East River.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XV: 30. See also F 28.

" The common council refers to a committee a resolution directing that stone seats be placed on the Battery.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XV: 41.

" A committee on the subject of forming a public square on the grounds used for the public workshops reports to the common council that it is inexpedient to lay out a public square on what was formerly called the "Collect," because this ground is now occupied by the superintendent of repairs, and will always be a most desirable situation for the public yard because of its location in the centre of the city. "In all probability the buildings on this ground will not be much extended or increased at any time, and . . . consequently the health of that part of the City, will be as well preserved by using said premises as a Public Yard as by appropriating them to the purpose of a Public Square." The board approves the report.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XV: 48–49.

" A committee of the common council to which the matter had been referred recommends that the new hospital at Bellevue be hereafter officially called Bellevue Hospital.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XV: 56. See D 29, 1823; and 1826.

Nov. The corner-stone of the "Second Congregational Unitarian Church" is to be laid on this day at the corner of Prince and Mercer Sts.—N. Y. Eve. Post, N 23, 1825. This was the Church of the Messiah.—L. M. R. K., III: 937.

26 Benjamin Wright, president of the N. Y. Water Works Co. (see Mr 24), announces that the company has "contracted for a number of valuable Water rights, and the shores of Byram and Rye ponds with their outlets, have been secured on terms favorable to the company. Surveys and levels have been made under the direction of Canvass White, Esq. their engineer.

"Plans and estimates are preparing by him, but are not yet fully completed. They are, however, so far done as to justify the assurance that no unforeseen or unexpected difficulty exists, and that a supply of water of the best quality, equal to six millions of gallons every 24 hours in the driest season, can be obtained and brought into this city, and distributed upon a good and permanent plan at an expence within the amount of capital specified in the charter."—N. Y. Eve. Post, N 26, 1825. See also ibid., N 28, 29, D 2, 1825. See, further, D 13.

27 The body of the late Commodore Macdonough, who died at sea on Nov. 10, arrives at New York. Appropriate resolutions were adopted by the common council the next day.—N. Y. Spectator, N 29, D 2, 1825; Life of Com. Macdonough, by Rodney Macdonough, 252. Elaborate funeral ceremonies were held on Dec. 1, after which the body was placed on a steamboat to be taken to Connecticut.—N. Y. Eve. Post, D 2, 1825.

29 Grand opera is presented in America for the first time, at the Park Theatre, by the Italian troupe brought over by Signor Garcia (see N 17). The performance is Rossini's "Il Barbiera de Seviglia." "The house was open at half past 7, and before 8 o'clock the hour of commencing, it was quietly and entirely filled. An assemblage of ladies so fashionable, so numerous & so elegantly dressed, was probably never witnessed in our theatre. . . . The Opera lasted from 8 until half past 11 o'clock, and we never heard such enthusiastic remarks, on any similar occasion, as were made in the lobby after its close. We consider the question whether the American taste will bear the Italian Opera as now settled. We predict that it will never hereafter dispense with it."—N. Y. Eve. Post, N 29 and 30, 1825. 5 The city recorder, Richard Riker, presents to the common council a letter he has received from Gen. Lafayette, dated at his home, "La Grange," France, Oct. 12. The letter renews Lafayette's thanks to the corporation of the city for their attentions to him, and makes reference to receiving "a Copy of the Splendid work" (an engrossed copy of an account of the receptions and complimentary tributes tendered to him). (See also Vol. III, pp. 580–81.) The board resolves that the letter "be engrossed in the Book now in the archives of the Common Council and that the original be put upon the files of the Board." The original letter is still preserved in metal file No. 97, city clerk's record-room, and has been reproduced in the M. C. C. (1784–1831), XV: 64–65.

The board also passes a resolution of thanks to the two bearers of the gift to Lafayette, "for the very handsome manner in which they executed the wishes of this Board in presenting to General La Fayette the duplicate tribute of respect confided to their care."

The committee on reception and entertainment of Lafayette "having officially announced his safe return to his native Country in the Frigate Brandywine dispatched by the President for his accommodation . . ." (see S 7), the board also passes a resolution of thanks to them.—Ibid., XV: 65–6.

In the course of Lafayette's visit to New York, the common council authorised the issuing of the following warrants on the treasurer for the expense of receptions, etc.: In 1824, Sept. 27, $1,000; in 1825, Jan. 31, $250; April 11, $159.94; Aug. 1, $750; Dec. 5, $1,920.41; total, $4,080.35.—Ibid., XIV: 86, 314, 442, 710; XV: 65. See also N 10.

" The common council decides to remove the sick at the almshouse hospitals to the fever hospital (at Bellevue—see N 21); and use the small almshouse hospitals for the poor children. This will relieve the aged and infirm paupers, and be of good moral advantage to the children.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XV: 49–50.

1825 Dec. 5 The superintendent of repairs is directed to number Pearl St. from the Battery to Broadway.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XV: 63. The order was repeated on April 24, 1826.—Ibid., XV: 351.

" The common council adopts a resolution to plant "forest trees" in Duane Park.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XV: 63.

10 James Hardie, who is preparing for the press a work entitled The Description of the City of New York, states that the population of the city amounts to 162,391.—N. Y. Eve. Post, D 10, 1825. Cf. 1825, supra. Hardie's work appeared in 1827 (q.v.).

13 A large meeting of the stock holders of the N. Y. Water Works Co. is held at the Tontine Coffee House, and a resolution passed that their interests "would be best promoted by a dissolution of the company, and a division of the funds among the several stockholders." A committee is appointed to bring the matter before the directors and to arrange for such dissolution.—N. Y. Eve. Post, D 14, 1825. See also ibid., D 16, 22, 29, 30, 1825; and Ja 9, 19, 21, 26, 27, F 23, 1826. The charter of the company proved so defective, in practice, that they were unable to proceed under it. In 1826, they applied to the legislature for necessary amendments, but they were opposed by the Sharon Canal Co., and the amendments failed to pass (see Jl 13, 1826).—Man. Com. Coun. (1854), 218; Wegman, op cit., 15. See also Ja 9, 1826.

15 A fire starting in Thompson St., between Broome and Spring Sts., destroys about 40 houses.—N. Y. Eve. Post, D 15, 1825. On Dec. 16, a meeting was held at the Broadway House to aid the sufferers.—Ibid., D 17, 1825.

17 Plans for the proposed new theatre on the Bowery (see O 20) are published. "The size of the building will be one hundred by two hundred feet. It will have two fronts, one on the Bowery, and the other on Elizabeth street. That on the Bowery will have the entrance to the boxes, and that on Elizabeth-street, to the pit and gallery. . . . The fronts of the building are to be built of marble, or free stone, the proprietor not having yet determined which to use. . . ." The interior of the building is described in detail. "The stage is to be one hundred feet square, and to have a large entrance from Elizabeth-street, to admit cavalry, infantry, and artillery, when necessary to use them in melo dramas and other pieces. In addition to this will be tubes to admit water upon the stage for aquatic spectacles, fountains, &c. The building is to have a balcony seventy feet by ten, supported by marble pillars. . . . A view of the front on the Bowery is completed, and is deposited for the present at Mr. Gibbon's the keeper of the Bull's Head. . ." N. Y. Mirror, III: 162–63, 303. See, further, Je 17, 1826.

19 The common council resolves to apply to the legislature for a new law repealing the one which takes away the city's right to transport paupers back to their last residence, or else that a sufficient sum may be provided for their maintenance. Since the passage of the law complained of, the poor from all parts of the state have come to this city, so that the allowance of $10,000 for their support is wholly inadequate; $30,000 is necessary.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVI: 90.

" As "it is manifest that the Bells of many Churches do not ring on the Alarm of Fire" (M. C. C., 1784–1831, XV: 103), an inquiry is made and it develops that the "Bell ringers had entered into an association not to ring the Bells unless paid therefor the sum of $25 per annum."—Ibid., XV: 119.

23 The common council resolves that the name Slote Lane be changed to Exchange St.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XV: 111. See Ap 10, 1826, and 1827.

" The ferry committee makes a report to the common council on a petition from various inhabitants of Brooklyn and New York who want a ferry established south of Fulton Slip to a point in Brooklyn near the Pierpont residence. The committee studied the question in two aspects: First, "Whether it be expedient to establish a new Ferry at the place desired by the petitioners;" and, if it is, then secondly, "Whether the Common Council have power to establish such ferry consistent with the grant heretofore made to the Lessees of the Fulton Slip Ferry." The committee report, which is full and explicit, closes with a proposed resolution that it is inexpedient to grant the petition. The board approves the resolution.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XV: 115–18; and see Com. Adv., N 17, 1825. The proceedings and arguments thus begun continued for ten years before the South Ferry to Brooklyn received its charter.—See Ap 9, 1835; also All the Proceedings in Relation to the New South Ferry between the Cities of New York and Brooklyn, from Dec. 1825 to Jan. 1835 (N. Y., 1835). Cf. Ferry Leases and Railroad Grants (1866).

Dec. 25 The common council accepted, on Dec. 19, an invitation to attend, on this Christmas Day, the opening of the new home for the Society for the Reformation of Juvenile Delinquents (see Ja 1). —M. C. C. (1784–1831), XV: 70–71; N. Y. Spectator, D 30, 1825. For a description of the "House of Refuge," as the building was called, see Docs. Relating to the House of Refuge (1832), 98, with frontispiece view, or see the same description as republished, with a reproduction of the view, in Man. Com. Coun. (1864), 751. See also L. M. R. K., III: 954. There were two buildings of stone, one for boys, the other for girls, on a lot of ground 320 by 300 ft., enclosed by a stone wall 17 ft. high.—3d Ann. Rep. of Managers of the Soc. for the Reformation of Juvenile Delinquents (1828); Goodrich, Picture of N. Y. (1828), 447. This was the first house of refuge in the United States. Its principal originator, advocate and promoter was John Griscom, whose aim was to separate boys and girls from hardened criminals, and give them manual and moral training in trade schools.—Griscom, Memoir of John Griscom. See 1838.

— "This was a year of great commercial embarrassment and distress, caused by the failure of several spurious banks, chartered by the state of New-Jersey, and located at Powles Hook, but circulating their paper principally in the city of New-York. Their failure caused a temporary panic for the fate of all banking institutions in the city; they all, however, sustained their reputation at that time. But soon after, a scene of iniquity was unfolded by the crash of several Insurance Companies, and other events that transpired, and in the building of several large ships of war for foreign governments, which, in its effects abroad, shook the commercial character of this city to its deepest foundations. . . ."—Goodrich, Picture of N. Y. (1828), 133.

— In this year, the first volume of James Kent's Commentaries on American Law appeared. The last of the four volumes was published in 1830. There were eleven editions before 1867, those after the seventh, inclusive, being edited by William Kent.—Sabin, IX: 445. See, further, Ja 24, 1843.

— In this year, the N. Y. Law Institute was organized, in the house of James W. Gerard, on Broadway near Bowling Green. It then had two members, Mr. Gerard and George Sullivan (its founder), a nephew of Gen. Sullivan of the Revolutionary Army. The first meeting of the society proper was held at the American Hotel, cor. Broadway and Barclay St., Feb. 5, 1828. There was no permanent meeting-place at that time, sessions being held either in the U. S. court-room, the "tea room," or the janitor's "parlour," in the city hall.—Cat. of the Library of the N. Y. Law Institute (1874), xvii, xviii, xxi. For the Institute's incorporation, see F 22, 1830.

— In this year, "marine railways" were built by the N. Y. Dry Dock Company (see Ap 12, 1825) at Burnt Mill Point, near Ave. D and 10th St. For detailed description of the dry docks, see Goodrich's Picture of N. Y. (1828), 411–14. Cf. Ap 16, 1827. See also N. Y. Eve. Post, Mr 17, 1826.

— In this year, Philip Hone began a diary, later portions of which, commencing May 18, 1828, were printed in two volumes, with an introduction by Bayard Tuckerman, in 1889. The original manuscript is in the N. Y. Hist. Soc. One of the earliest entries of special interest in the unpublished manuscript is his address delivered at Rome, N. Y., on the occasion of the commencement of the Delaware & Hudson Canal.

— On his arrival at New York, Lieut. De Roos, of the Royal Navy, wrote, in a narrative of his travels: "We lodged at the City hotel, which is the principal inn at New York. The house is immense and was full of company: but what a wretched place! the floors were without carpets, the beds without curtains; there was neither glass, mug, nor cup, and a miserable little rag was dignified with the name of towel. The entrance to the house is constantly obstructed by crowds of people passing to and from the bar-room, where a person presides at a buffet formed upon the plan of a cage. This individual is engaged, 'from morn to dewy eve,' in preparing and issuing forth punch and spirits to strange-looking men, who come to the house to read the newspapers and talk politics. In this place, may be seen in turn most of the respectable inhabitants of the town. . . .

"New York is situated on the Peninsula which separates the Hudson and the East River: Though the situation is low and the streets are irregular, it is certainly a very beautiful city. The 1826 trees, which were in luxuriant bloom, are planted regularly along

— the foot pavement; the numerous fine churches, and the magnificent central street called the Broadway, are among its most prominent features. The houses are generally of brick, and in the Broadway are very regularly built. The streets are remarkably clean; and, as a protection from the heat of the summer sun, each shop has an awning before it, which affords an agreeable shade to the passenger. The wharfs for shipping extend nearly all round the town. . . ."—Personal Narrative of Travels in the U. S. and Canada in 1826, by Lieut. the Hon. Fred. Fritzgerald de Roos (London, 1827), 5–6.

— In this year, Bellevue Hospital (called at first the "Fever Hospital"), begun in 1823 (q.v., D 29), was completed. It was situated "a few rods southwest from the Alms House, on an elevation immediately adjoining the East River in front." For further details of construction, see Goodrich, Picture of New York (1828), 310–11. "It is four stories high, of which the 2 lowest are fitted up for the reception of the insane poor, and contain 24 rooms and 32 cells. The 3d. story has 6 large rooms, and 4 apartments for the keepers, &c. and the upper story has 2 large wards 50 by 65 each, for the reception of fever patients, and 4 lodging rooms. On the 1st of June, 1826, there were in this hospital, 107 insane poor."—Hardie, Descrip. of the City of N. Y. (1827), 269. In 1826, the hospital and almshouse were separated. —Lossing, Hist. of N. Y. City, I: 115. See, further, 1848.

— In this year, the steeple of St. Mark's Church was designed. The steeple was completed in 1829 at a cost of $5,000. Messrs. Thomson & Town were the architects.—Memorial St. Mark's Church (1899), 54; see also 134–35. Its building was delayed for about a year because of uncertainty as to the ultimate fate of Stuyvesant St., which had not been provided for on the commissioners' plan. "It was . . . originally finished with a quadrangular tower rising from the roof, and terminating at the belfry, without a spire. But in the year 1827, Martin E. Thompson, Esq., our well-known architect, suggested the idea of raising a spire of brick-work, from the summit of the tower, to an elevation of eighty-four feet. This idea was approved and adopted."—N. Y. Mirror, My 15, 1830. Cf. Pl. 119, and p. 624, Vol. III.

— In this year, the church edifice of the Greenwich Reformed Dutch Church, which stood midway between Amos and Charles Sts., was purchased by the Reformed Presbyterians, who removed it bodily to Waverly Place near Grove St. The public clock in the spire was kept running, and a sermon was preached to a congregation in the church during its removal.

The congregation of the Dutch Church built a new church building for themselves at the corner of Amos and Bleecker Sts. This was opened during the year 1826.—Greenleaf, Hist. of the Churches, 29–30; M. C. C. (MS.), LV: 177. See, further, 1863.

— In this year, the Swamp Church congregation acquired St. Matthew's Church (Lutheran), which had been erected in 1821 in Walker St., and thus possessed two houses of worship. About 1830, the Swamp Church was sold, and the German congregation removed to St. Matthew's.—Greenleaf, Hist. of the Churches, 53–57; Sieker, The Oldest Lutheran Church in Am. (1914), 24, 27; L. M. R. K., III: 929.

— In this year, the African Presbyterian Church in Elm St., erected in 1824 north of Canal St., was purchased by German and Polish Jews, and converted into a synagogue for the Congregation Bnai Jeshurum.—Greenleaf, Hist. of the Churches of N. Y., 122, 124, 152–53; Daly, The Settlement of the Jews in No. Am., 57; A Familiar Conversational Hist. of the Evangelical Churches of N. Y. (1839), 161; L. M. R. K., III: 928–29. For description and view of the building in 1829, see N. Y. Mirror, VII: 90 (S 26, 1829).

— In this year, there was erected in the rear of St. Paul's churchyard "a neat edifice of brick, as a vestry room, library, and safe depository for records."—Goodrich, Picture of N. Y. (1828), 215.

— In this year, St. Mary's Church (Protestant Episcopal), organized in 1823, was erected, on Lawrence St., in Manhattanville. —Greenleaf, Hist. of the Churches, 75–76; Riker, Hist. of Harlem, 408.

— In this year, the brick meeting-house of the Quakers, on Liberty St., was sold to Grant Thorburn; it was used by him as a seed-store until its demolition in 1836.—Greenleaf, 117; Annals of Hempstead, by Henry Onderdonk, Jr. (1878).

— Until this year, "Petersfield" was occupied by Peter Gerard Stuyvesant. The mansion stood near the East River shore, on 1826 the block bounded by Ave. A and First Ave., 15th and 16th Sts. —
It was approached by a winding lane, commencing at the present junction of Fourth Ave. and 12th St., and passing the old Stuyvesant pear-tree on the cor. of Third Ave. and 13th St.—Man. Com. Coun. (1866), 579. See also map of Stuyvesant properties in ibid. (1862), 686. For genealogy of the Stuyvesant family, see N. Y. H. S. Collections (1841), 455; Man. Com. Coun. (1852), 413.

"In 1826 and 1827 the Tontine Coffee-house was in the hands — of John Morse, who had formerly kept the old Stage-house at the corner of Church and Crown Streets, New Haven. He turned the entire house into a tavern, and it so remained for several years. The first floor was in one room, running the full length of the house, and fronting Wall Street. At the back of the room, extending nearly its whole length, was the old-fashioned bar. Jutting out from the counter were curious arms of brass supporting the thick, round, and mast-like timber on which the heavy dealers leaned while ordering refreshments. About the room were numerous small tables, and after supper, in fair weather, around the tables could be seen many of the wealthy city men diminishing the contents of their pewter mugs, or planning, amid the curling smoke in the room, their operations for the next day. Morse was not successful in the Tontine, and was finally sold out for the benefit of 'whom it might concern' . . ."—Stone, Hist. of N. Y. City (1872), 322, citing Jour. of Com., Jl 25, 1871. See 1832.

In opening 6th St., a portion is taken of Potter's field, or the — public burying-ground; the new street ran also through the cemetery of the Cedar St. Presbyterian Church.—Doc. 76, Bd. of Ald., F 4, 1833.

In and after 1826, extensive assessments were levied for the — opening and paving of streets throughout the city (see Index to Assessment Rolls, in comptroller's office), following the plan of the commissioners of 1807, as amended from time to time by the legislature.—Gerard, Treatise on the Title of the Corporation, 99–104.

From 1826 to 1828, Anthony Imbert, lithographer, published — in New York a series of "Views of The Public Buildings in the City of New-York." For a list of these, see descrip. of Pl. 102-b, III: 603. See also descrip. of Pl. 95-a, III: 582.

Bowling Green, as it appeared in or about 1826, was pictured — in one of the Megarey street views, published in 1834.—See Pl. 98, Vol. III.

In the city directory for this year was published a full-page — descriptive advertisement of "Peale's New-York Museum, and Gallery of the Fine Arts, in the Parthenon, Broadway, opposite the City-Hall" (see O 26, 1825).

In this year, the firm of Lord & Taylor was founded by Samuel — Lord and John Taylor, cousins, their first store being at 47 Catharine St. Their next store was at 61–63 Catharine St., which the firm occupied from 1838 to 1866, with a branch store at 255–261 Grand St. from 1853 to 1902, both sites being extensively enlarged at various times (see, for example, Ag 29, 1859). In 1872, the firm removed to the new store at the south-west corner of Broadway and 20th St., built in the latest form of iron fronts. This building was extended in later years by the addition of the adjoining property at 129–131 Fifth Ave. and the intervening lots on 19th St. In 1914, the firm moved into the present building on the west side of Fifth Ave. between 38th and 39th Sts.—From information supplied by the firm's executive offices. For views of the first three stores, see King's Handbook (1893), 848–49; and the sales catalogue of the Pyne collection.

In this year, James Frothingham, portrait painter, moved to — New York from Boston, and pursued his calling here until his death in 1864.—Dunlap, Hist. of the Arts of Design (Goodspeed ed.), II: 364–69.

By vote of the common council, Philip Hone succeeds William Jan.
Paulding as mayor. He is elected on the eighth ballot with thirteen 3 votes, after receiving but one vote on the first ballot.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XV: 146–47. For brief sketch of his life, see Man. Com. Coun. (1853), 423. He was succeeded by Paulding, who was again chosen mayor on Dec. 25, 1826 (q.v.). The original MS. of Hone's address on assuming office, dated Jan. 16, is found in metal file No. 98, city clerk's record-room.

Canvas White, engineer, makes a long report to the directors 9 of the N. Y. Water Works Co., in which he states that it is prac-

1826 Jan. 9 ticable to introduce into the city an abundant supply of water from the Bronx River. He estimates the expense at $1,325,000, "exclusive of the sums which may be necessary for purchasing water rights on the Bronx, and to pay damages to those whose lands the tunnel shall pass thro.'" The report was confirmed by Benjamin Wright on Jan. 14, and, at a meeting of the directors on Jan. 16, it was ordered to be published.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ja 18, 1826. For comment on the report, see ibid., Ja 19, 23, 28, 1826. See Jl 13.

13 The American Seaman's Friend Society is organized at the City Hotel. Its object is "to provide Boarding Houses, Intelligence Offices, Saving's Banks and Libraries for the use and improvement of sailors."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ja 14, 1826. Hone entered in his MS. diary (now at the N. Y. H. S.), the constitution, list of officers, etc., of this society. See also Goodrich's Picture of N. Y. (1828), 344.

" The public is informed that the American Museum in the N. Y. Institution "has lately undergone a thorough alteration and improvement, and many new and interesting additions, both mental and artificial, have been made in every department during the last season, and amongst the latest, there has been added one entire story, appropriated for a Grand Cosmoramic department. The Cosmorama consists of 47 Optic glasses and as many distinct views of all the most renowned ancient and modern cities, harbors and landscapes in the known world. . . . The Museum is daily open to visitors, and brilliantly lighted with gas light in the evenings. The rooms are comfortably warmed. . . ." —N. Y. Eve. Post, Ja 13, 1826. See also Hardie, Description of the City of N. Y. (1827), 343–44.

16 A former petition presented on Mar. 15, 1825, which had been referred to a committee, is again presented to the common council, praying that the board apply to the legislature for a reorganization of the marine court. Referred to another committee. —M. C. C. (1784–1831), XV: 158.

19 The N. Y. Drawing Assn. becomes the National Academy of Design, "the first institution in the country established by and under the exclusive control and management of the professional artists."—Howe, Hist. of the Metropolitan Museum of Art (1913), 49, citing Cummings' Historic Annals of the Nat. Acad. of Design, 5. See My 15. See also Ap 5, 1828.

24 The trustees of the High School Society of New York announce "that the spacious building lately erected for a Female High School, in Crosby street, between Broome and Spring-streets, near Broadway, will be opened for the reception of scholars on Wednesday the 1st of Feb. next, at 9 o'clock, A.M."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ja 24, 1826. See also ibid., Ja 30 and Mr 17, 1826.

26 The common council, refusing to permit "the Building on the Battery called the Flag Staff" to be leased for private business, as an observatory or otherwise, orders that it be taken down under the direction of the committee on lands and places.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIV: 638, 655; XV: 159. For views of this landmark, see Pls. 59, Vol. I, and 95-a, Vol. III. See also L. M. R. K., III: 962.

28 The name of the "Free School Society" is changed to the "Public School Society of New York." The society is required to instruct, for a moderate compensation, all children in the city not otherwise provided for, without regard to religion. The society is authorised to convey its school buildings to the corporation of the city, taking back a perpetual lease.—Laws of N. Y. (1826), chap. 25; see also ibid., chap. 32 and 117, and N. Y. Eve. Post, F 4, 1826. See Mr 13.

30 The New York Institution for the Instruction of the Deaf and Dumb petitions the common council for a donation of land or money to erect buildings, "wherein the Pupils may be taught Trades &c to make them more useful members of Society."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XV: 170. On Feb. 13, the board decided that it would be unjust to make to this institution an exclusive donation; for "to give to all simularly situated would have a tendency to exhaust the treasury."—Ibid., XV: 199.

" The common council resolves to open 13th St. from Greenwich Lane to the Old Kill Road; to open and continue Eighth Ave. to the northerly line of 13th St.; to close that part of Greenwich Lane lying between 13th St. and Eighth Ave., and that part of the Old Kill Road lying between 13th St. and Eighth Ave.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XV: 182–83.

" The common council refers to the committee on applications to the legislature a resolution "to enquire into the expediency of a Law to provide that Aliens carrying on business in this City do pay a certain sum as an equivalent for Militia and Jury duty from which they are now exempt."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XV: 192. Jan. 30

" The common council takes action to repair the Lawrence Monument in Trinity churchyard.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XV: 192. See Ap 2, 1825; Ap 10, 1826.

Feb. — The Mercantile Library (see N 9, 1820) moves from its limited quarters in Fulton St., where it has been since F 12, 1821 (q.v.), to a large room in Cliff St.—6th Ann. Rep. of the Assn. (1826–7). This was in the Cliff St. building of Harper & Bros. In 1827, a course of ten lectures on commercial law proved so successful that a lecture department was added, and until 1875 ten or twelve lectures were given each winter under the auspices of the library. —Man. Com. Coun. (1856), 549; see also the history of the library, pub. in the Times, N 7, 1920, at the time of its centenary. See N 2, 1830.

6 "The new novel of Mr. Cooper, The Last of the Mohigans is published to day in this city."—N. Y. Eve. Post, F 6, 1826.

7 The Italian opera "Otello" is presented in America for the first time, at the Park Theatre.—N. Y. Eve. Post, F 7 and 9, 1826.

13 The common council passes an ordinance directing hackney carriages at night to have lighted lamps with glass fronts and sides, and the carriage number painted on them.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XV: 192, 198.

" The New York Gas Co. asks the common council for permission to light the council chamber with gas. Referred to the committee on public offices.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XV: 197. See N 21, 1825, and O 30, 1826.

At the same time, the board appointed a special committee, to which was referred "the contract between the Corporation of this City and the New York Gas light Company for lighting the City," with copies of all proceedings of former boards on the subject; and with instructions "to ascertain the expence necessary to incur in order to prepare for the introduction of the Gas light in our Public Lamps," and also to report a comparative estimate of the cost of lighting the city with oil, "Having due regard to producing the same quantum of Light by either method."—Ibid., XV: 211. This report was presented on June 29, laid on the table, and the board ordered it printed.—Ibid., XV: 492.

" The common council refers to the police committee the following resolution: "Resolved that Pedlers and all others be prohibited from unnecessarily hallowing aloud in the Streets of our City after the hour of 9 O Clock in the Evening and before the break of day in the morning—And that the Counsel of the Board be directed to prepare a Law accordingly."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XV: 211–12.

20 Unsuccessful efforts are again made (see My 31, 1824) to reorganize the common council by act of the legislature.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XV: 223–25, 755. See, further, F 27.

23 St. Thomas's Church, at Broadway and Houston St. (see Jl 27, 1824), is finished and consecrated.—Greenleaf, 85; L. M. R. K., III: 934; Goodrich, Picture of N. Y. (1828), 216; N. Y. Eve. Post, F 22, 27, 1826. It was erected from drawings by Josiah R. Brady, architect.—N. Y. Mirror, Je 20, 1829. A sepia drawing of the interior of the church, by A J. Davis, 1827, is in the N. Y. H. S. (in box of MSS. relating to N. Y. churches). A view of the exterior of the church, by the same artist, is in Emmet coll., No. 11251; see also engraving in Fay's Views of N. Y. (1831). In 1851 (q.v., Mr 2), the church was destroyed by fire.

25 The legislature passes an act "relative to Improvements in the City of New-York." It makes it lawful for the commissioners of the land office to issue letters patent to the corporation of the city, and their successors forever, to convey to the city the state's right and title to water lots along the Hudson river shore of Manhattan Island, from a point four miles north of Bestavers Killitje to Spuyten Duyvel Creek (otherwise known as Kingsbridge Creek or Harlem River), and extending 400 ft. into the river beyond low-water mark; also the water lots along the East River or Sound, extending 400 ft. into the river or sound and northward from a point two miles north of Corlaer's Hook to Spuyten Duyvel Creek, such water lots on both rivers being "contiguous to and adjoining" the lands already owned by the city.

The act declares that "Tompkin's-street," along the East River, shall be the permanent exterior street on the East River, 1826 Feb. 25 between Grand and 23d Sts. All grants "made or to be made" by the common council "shall be construed as rightfully made to extend thereto," and the provisions of the act of April 9, 1813 (an act to reduce into one act several laws relating to the city), and the several acts which later amended or added to it shall be construed to apply to Tompkins Street.—Laws of N. Y. (1826), chap. 58; see also chap. 166.

27 The common council acts unfavourably on a proposal "to make the office of mayor elective by the people." The present method of electing the mayor by the common council, adopted by the constitutional convention Nov. 10, 1821 (q.v.), is believed to cause "no inconvenience" nor "evils which require correction." —M. C. C. (1784–1831), XV: 237–38. See F 14, 1828. The new idea was later written into the state constitution and ratified by the electorate.—See N 4, 1833.

" A committee reports to the common council that the old Potter's field is now being regulated by the board; and that, as it is not likely to be used for private purposes for some years, it seems wise to use it as a military parade-ground. This is approved by the board.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XV: 234. On June 19, a resolution is adopted that this ground be called the "Washington Military Parade Ground."—Ibid., XV: 484. See also Ag 30, 1824; D 18, 1826.

" The finance committee reports to the common council on a petition from E. R. Furman, daughter of the late Richard Furman, manufacturer of pins at the penitentiary, for a relinquishment of a part of the sum due from her father's estate to the corporation. Shortly after the close of the war, the corporation, being desirous of establishing a manufactory at Bellevue which would employ the children, thus separating them from the old offenders, and which would at the same time afford profit to the city, determined upon a pin factory. This proved profitable; but for years has languished owing to foreign competition. Miss Furman now gives notice that it must be abandoned on May 1. The board resolves that she be discharged of the city's claim.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XV: 243–44; and see ibid., XII: 135.

Mar. 11 An account of the special sphere of action of the Lafayette amphitheatre is published. As "the legitimate drama, the opera, and melo-dramatic spectacles . . . ought never to be exhibited in the same edifice, nor on the same stage, . . . an enterprizing and tasteful individual of our city, erected a spacious amphitheatre . . . with the name of . . . Lafayette. . . . Here, independent of the ring, is a stage of sufficient capacity to display and manoeuvre a small army of cavalry, being nearly two hundred feet in depth, and about the same number in width. This is fitted up with scenery, machinery, and decorations, expressly adapted to melo-dramatic and equestrian spectacles; and those who have witnessed the representation of El Hyder, Blue Beard, &c. have been delighted and astonished at the enchanting effect produced by this improvement. . . . The horses (a beautiful stud) are finely trained, and evince the greatest sagacity, docility, and courage, both in parade, and in battle . . ."—N. Y. Mirror, III: 263. This amphitheatre was first opened on July 4, 1825 (q.v.).—Ibid., III: 271. Advertised for sale on March 27, 1826 (ibid., III: 279), the sale was stopped, the proprietor deciding to continue (ibid., III: 287). See, further, Jl 4.

13 The common council refers to the police com'r a petition "that the Horse Market may be removed to 25th Street between 3d & 4th Avenues near the Bulls Head."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XV: 255. Although this site was apparently not then approved (see Ap 10), this neighbourhood later became, and still is, the headquarters for the sale of horses in New York.

" A committee reports to the common council that the old wooden fence around the Battery is in a state of decay; and that, as this public walk is "much resorted to," it should be enclosed by a substantial and ornamental iron railing. The board authorises its construction.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XV: 258–59; N. Y. Eve. Post, Mr 15, 1826. The cost was estimated at $15,000 to $16,000. —N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., Mr 13, 1826. See also Mr 18.

14 The legislature incorporates the "New-York House Carpenters' Architectural and Benevolent Association," for the purpose of "instituting and maintaining practical lectures applicable to architecture, and for collecting and forming a repository of apparatus, books, drawings, and generally for enlarging the knowledge and improving the condition of house carpenters in the city of New-York, . . ."—Laws of N. Y. (1826), chap. 77.

Mar. 17 Henry Wallack announces that he has leased "the Chatham Theatre, Garden, and all that immediate property," and that the theatre will reopen under his direction on March 20.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Mr 17, 1826. For other incidents in the history of this theatre at this period, see N. Y. Eve. Post, My 9, 1825; Mr 16, 1826; D 3, 1827; Je 16, 1828; Brown, I: 86–89.

18 The editor of the Mirror publishes a plan for beautifying the Battery, adding: "Since the above was in type we have been informed, by one of the aldermen, that the 'committee is authorized to place an ornamental iron railing around the Battery, and that seats have been made, and will be immediately erected.'" —N. Y. Mirror, III: 270, 294.

Additional walks and newly planted trees have recently been added to the park. The removal of the bridewell and jail is urged. —Ibid., III: 271, 295, 326.

21 The common council directs a committee on the jail and bridewell to visit the state prison and report as to its value and the expediency of purchasing it; also an estimate of the expense of constructing a debtors' jail, bridewell, and penitentiary, on land owned by the corporation.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XV: 280, 281. On March 23, the committee reported that the main building of the state prison was "in excellent condition, perfectly substantial and so constructed as to be easily converted to all the purposes" desired by the board; that the workshops with the fixtures, machines, tools, and working apparatus of various kinds, would be an acquisition of "immense importance" to the city; that the value of the grounds and buildings probably exceeded $100,000, and that the extent of the grounds and wharf was about six acres; further that the expense of erecting a new building on land owned by the corporation would doubtless be not less than $100,000, exclusive of the value of the land, and that an eligible site at any convenient distance from the city hall would be very difficult to find. Accordingly, a committee of three was appointed to "repair to Albany and on behalf of this Corporation to purchase the State Prison in this City upon such reasonable terms as the Committee shall think advisable, and as can be obtained from the Legislature."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XV: 281–83. On April 3, the committee reported that the state prison could be bought for $100,000 (ibid., XV: 309–10); and on May 22, the board directed that the contract be executed (ibid., XV: 433). See D 20, 1824. Regarding the purpose in making the purchase, see Mr 28, 1826; Jl 5, 1828.

26 Kensington House (or Mount Vernon—see My, 1821), on the East River near the four-mile stone, is burned out. It lately had been occupied as a school.—N. Y. Daily Adv., Mr 28, 1826. This house, a stone one, still stands, at No. 421 E. 61st St., one of the oldest houses on Manhattan Island. In Sept., 1924, it was acquired by the Colonial Dames of Am. by purchase from the Standard Gas Light Co., to be used as a museum and headquarters by that society. For outline of its history, see N. Y. Times, S 7, 1924.

27 The common council instructs the water committee to inquire whether water of the best quality, and in sufficient quantity to supply the wants of this city, cannot be obtained from wells now sunk, or to be sunk, on Harlem Heights.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XV: 301. See Ja 17, 1825.

28 The legislature authorises the city to raise $196,000 by a tax on real and personal property within this city to defray contingent expenses, and a further sum for the support of the common schools. —Laws of N. Y. (1826), chap. 92.

" The city buys for $100,000 the state prison at Greenwich, its buildings and grounds, covering six acres, for the purpose of converting them into a bridewell and penitentiary.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XV: 310. See Ap 12, 1820; Mr 21, 1826; Ja 14 and Je 30, 1828.

31 "The Monitorial Free Schools of the city, under their new name of Public Schools, will be opened, we understand, for the reception of pupils of all classes, whether rich or poor, agreeably to the provisions of the late act of the legislature, on the 1st of May next. Although the teachers will be men of superior qualifications, and the instruction much more perfect than in the ordinary private schools, yet it is intended by the Board of trustees, under whose charge the institution is placed, to fix the terms of tuition so low as to be within the reach of all. This they will be enabled to do by the aid of the large revenues which they derive from other sources, amounting to upwards of $12,000. per annum. Arrangements are also making for the erection of several new edifices.

1826 Mr 31 No. 7, lately commenced in Christie street, is nearly finished. . . ."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Mr 31, 1826. See also ibid., Jl 5, 1826.

" The friends of Italian opera, meeting at the City Hotel, organize "The New-York Opera Company," as a means of permanently establishing opera in this city.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ap 1, 1826. See also ibid., Ap 5, 1826.

Apr. — In this month, The Magazine of the Reformed Dutch Church, the first Reformed Church publication, began its career, and ran as a monthly for about four years. It was succeeded by the Christian Intelligencer (see Ag 7, 1830).

3 The common council, on March 14, resolved to abandon the contract system for cleaning the streets, and to take this work under its own immediate charge at the expiration of the present contract; also, to purchase a sufficient number of horses and carts, not exceeding 40, to remove the street manure. A resolution that sweeping the streets be done by the corporation was, however, negatived.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XV: 270. The board now passes a law in conformity with the resolutions thus adopted.—Ibid., XV: 309. On Sept. 11, the board was informed that the system, "so far as it extended," meets the most sanguine expectations.—Ibid., XV: 583.

8 Henry Clay and John Randolph fight a duel with pistols, on the banks of the Potomac. Neither is wounded.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ap 11, 1826. Randolph had characterized the alliance of Adams and Clay as "the coalition of Blifil and Black George,—the combination, unheard of till then, of the Puritan with the blackleg."—Schurz, Henry Clay, I: 273–74; Adams, John Randolph, 288–89. See also McMaster, Hist. of the People of the U. S., V: 500.

10 The common council adopts a resolution that the horse market be located on Second Ave. between 13th and 24th Sts.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XV: 329.

" The common council is informed that the monument to the late Capt. Lawrence in Trinity churchyard is in such a state of decay (see Ap 2, 1825) that it cannot be repaired. The board appoints a committee to attend to the erection of a new monument at a cost of not more than $2,000, unless the widow should prefer to have a tablet in Trinity Church.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XV: 330–31. See, further, 1833. Such monument was not erected until 1847 (q. v.).

" The common council orders that Exchange St. be widened between William St. and Slote Lane; that Garden St. be straightened between William St. and the buildings of the Merchants Exchange Co.; and that Slote Lane be widened to 30 ft.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XV: 334. See D 23, 1825.

11 An advertisement reads: "M. Maelzel, Proprietor of the celebrated and only Automaton Chess-player in the world, informs the public that the first exhibition will take place on Thursday the 13th inst., in the assembly room at the National Hotel, No. 112 Broadway, opposite the City Hotel. The order of exhibition will be as follows:

"1st. The Automaton Chess-player, who will play a number of ends of games, giving the choice of pieces to any antagonist that offers. These ends of games are played in preference to whole games, as they exhibit the powers of the machine equally well, and do not fatigue the attention of the company.

"2d. The Automaton Trumpeter, invented by Mr. Maelzel. He will play a number of marches composed expressly for him by the first masters.

"3d. The Automaton Slack Rope Dancers, also invented by Mr. Maelzel, and the only ones ever exhibited on a slack rope. . . .

"N. B. Amateurs wishing to engage the Chess-player at whole games, can be accommodated with private meetings on application to the proprietor."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ap 11, 1826. The first exhibition took place on April 13, and it was stated that "nothing of a similar nature has ever been seen in this city, that will bear the smallest comparison with it."—Ibid., Ap 14, 1826. See also ibid., Ap 21, 24, 27, 28, My 9, 27, 30, Je 1, 1826.

13 The legislature designates Tompkins St. between Rivington and 23d Sts., and East St. between Grand and Rivington Sts., as permanent exterior streets on the East River.—Laws of N. Y. (1826), chap. 166.

17 The legislature passes an act to secure the safety of passengers in steamboats and stage-coaches. It directs boats how to pass each other, and how to land passengers. It forbids a stage-coach driver to run his horses in an attempt to pass another vehicle going in the same direction, or to prevent another vehicle from passing him. When passengers are in the stage-coach, it requires that horses be fastened by rope or chain when standing. Racing on highways is prohibited after next July first. The law does not affect laws relating to hackney-coaches in any city.—Laws of N. Y. (1826), chap. 222. This was amended by the addition of new details on April 5, 1828.—Ibid. (1828), chap. 175. Apr. 17

" The legislature incorporates the "St. Andrews Society of the State of New-York," intended for the relief of indigent natives of Scotland and their descendants.—Laws of N. Y. (1826), chap. 236. The St. Andrews Soc. was mentioned as early as 1751 (q. v., Ja 21), and was organized Nov. 19, 1756 (q. v.), with Philip Livingston as the first president. It is still in existence.—King's Handbook (1893), 447–48.

" The Hudson and Mohawk Railroad, between Albany and Schenectady, is incorporated.—Laws of N Y. (1826), chap. 253.

" The legislature incorporates the New York Athenaeum, "for the better cultivation of literature, science and the arts," and for no other purpose. It may hold real estate not exceeding $50,000 in value, independent of improvements, and this shall be tax-free.—Laws of N. Y. (1826), chap. 285.

18 The legislature incorporates the "New-York Harlaem Spring Water Company." The incorporators are Anson G. Phelps, James Renwick and their associates. The company's purpose is to supply the city with pure water. Its capital stock is limited to $500,000, at $50 a share. The company shall not conduct a banking business or other specified financial operations. It shall commence operations in good faith before March 1, 1827, or the act will be void.—Laws of N. Y. (1826), chap. 290.

" The legislature incorporates the "Harlaem Canal Co." It gives it power to cut a canal, commencing "at or near the entrance of Harlaem creek, in the twelfth ward of the city of New-York, and to construct any number of basins in connection therewith, upon the land of said company, for the purpose of opening water communication, on and across the island of New-York, to the North river," at any point between 95th and 135th Sts., and "for the purpose of supplying water for the manufacturing establishments which may be erected." It is given authority to "purchase, build or hire, for the use and in the name of the said corporation, houses, factories, ware-houses, wharves and other necessary buildings, boats or water craft," and to sell or lease them. The consent of land owners shall be obtained before taking land, as well as that of the common council before the company begins to dig. The act does not give an exclusive privilege, however, and the canal must be built within two years from this date or the act will be void.—Laws of N. Y. (1826), chap. 317. On April 13, 1827, the time was extended four years from that date.—Ibid. (1827), chap. 225.

21 The wind-mill in Rivington St. catches fire, and the wood work of the building is entirely destroyed.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ap 22, 1826.

22 A 64-gun ship, built for the Colombian government, is launched from the ship-yard of Mr. Eckford.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ap 22, 1826.

24 A resolution is passed to open 21st St. from Third Ave. to the Hudson River, and to close such part of Love Lane not lying within the bounds of 21st St.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XV: 371; L. M. R. K., III: 1004. See also S 20.

" The common council adopts a resolution that Avenues A, B, and C, from North to 14th St., be opened.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XV: 375.

27 G. S. Silliman begins the publication of a new morning paper called The Times.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ap 24, 1826. This was not the present Times; that was begun in 1851 (q. v.).

28 The "New Exchange Buildings at the corner of Garden and William streets, owned by Messrs. Lord & Delavan," are destroyed by fire. The building (or buildings) is described as "an immense four story brick edifice covering eleven lots of ground." The post-office occupies "a wooden building in the immediate vicinity of the fire."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ap 28 and 29, 1826.

The postmaster publishes a notice the same day that on Saturday, April 29, the post-office will be closed at 2 p. m., "in order to afford an opportunity to remove to the new Exchange fronting Garden st. where it will be opened on Sunday at 9 A. M."—Ibid.

29 "Mr. Rembrandt Peale has opened a room No. 34 Park next the corner of Beekman street, for the exhibition of the portraits recently painted by him. . . ."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ap 29, 1826.

My 1 At a public meeting held at the City Hotel, called together by 1826 May 1 Mayor Hone, resolutions are adopted that contributions be obtained, as a public concern, in behalf of Thomas Jefferson, who "finds his patrimonial estate, and other property incumbered, and in danger of being alienated by the just claims of creditors." A committee is appointed to receive contributions, and with power to appoint a sub-committee to correspond throughout the state for the purpose.—N. Y. Eve. Post, My 1, 1826.

" A. C. Flagg, superintendent of common schools, reports to the common council that the apportionment to the city of money allowed by law for schools is $10,274.66.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XV: 385.

" The subject of appropriating ground at Corlears Hook for a park is again brought before the common council.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XV: 387. See ibid., XIV: 241.

" Castle Garden reopens after a short recess, during which "extensive additions, alterations, and improvements have been made. The interior now is a fanciful garden, tastefully ornamented with shrubs and flowers; the lower promenade exhibits a beautiful panoramic view, painted by celebrated artists, decorated with marble pedestals and busts, representing the four seasons of the year and the different quarters of the globe. The busts have been lately imported from Italy, and are the work of celebrated sculptors. Elegant entrances have also been made into the saloon which will be opened for the convenience of the company. . . ."—N. Y. Eve. Post, My 1, 1826. See also ibid., My 18, 1825.

4 The city acquires by condemnation proceedings the land comprised in Jackson Square, at Horatio St., Eighth and Greenwich Aves. (0.227 acres).—Prendergast, Record of Real Estate. It was reserved as a public place about 1862.—L. M. R. K., III: 970.

5 Pearl St. is being widened and straightened at the head of Coenties Slip by the removal of "the ancient Knickerbocker edifice which has for nearly a century and a half obtruded itself far too much into the street." The newspaper states editorially that this building was called the city hall about 100 years before.—Com. Adv., My 5, 1826. It will be seen, by reference to the item of March 14, 1700, in the Chronology, Vol. IV, that this building was erected upon the foundation of the old "Stadt Huys" (the first city hall). A portion of the original foundation still exists. Cf. Watson's Annals of N. Y. (1846), 350–51. Goodrich places the date of the widening of Pearl St., at Coenties Slip, in 1825.—Picture of N. Y. (1828), 131. He refers, doubtless, to the order of Jan. 17, 1825 (q. v.), which required that the work be done.

Old buildings in Nassau St., opposite the "law buildings," and a number of the wooden shops on Broadway, between Warren and Chambers Sts., are also being torn down.—Com. Adv., My 5, 1826.

8 The common council refers to the finance committee a petition of the Nat. Academy of the Arts of Design for a lease of the Rotunda.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XV: 390. Organized on Jan. 19 (q. v.), it had opened its first exhibition on May 13 in a private room in Broadway, cor. of Reade St.; but by 1828 had secured "a permanent and beautiful exhibition room in the upper portion of the new building in Chambers-street, directly opposite the Academy of Arts, and over the Arcade Baths."—Goodrich, Picture of N. Y. (1828), 372–73; N. Y. Eve. Post, My 15, 1826. For description of the Arcade Baths, see Goodrich, 425. Here a public exhibition was held yearly on May 1.—Ibid.; and see My 4, 1829.

" The common council is informed that the portrait of William Paulding, late mayor, ordered on Jan. 16 to be painted by Samuel F. B. Morse and to be hung in the picture gallery in the city hall, is finished. It cost $122.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XV: 152, 179, 393.

" The common council orders that maps and drawings of all city property, with necessary explanations, be bound in atlas form, with key, and presented to each member of the board. The estimated cost is about $1,000.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XV: 403.

" The common council orders that the maps, plans, and surveys of the city and harbour now in the office of the street commissioner, be framed "in a substantial manner and properly varnished."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XV: 407.

11 "Steam Carriage.—Mr. Stevens has at length put his steam carriage in motion. It travelled around the circle at the Hoboken Hotel yesterday, at the rate of about six miles an hour. . . . 18 "A very elegant model of a statue of General Hamilton, intended to be submitted to the committee of merchants of the New-York Exchange, is at present exhibited at the Coffee House in this city [Phila.]. It is pronounced by those who were acquainted with this illustrious man, an excellent likeness. The model is in miniature. The statue is intended to be eight feet high, and to rest on a pedestal of proportionate elevation. The artist, Mr N. Gevelot, is advantageously known, from his works in the Capitol at Washington, and in the United States Bank Philadelphia."—N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., My 18, 1826, citing the *Phila. Gaz. 31 A meeting of citizens from various parts of the state is held at Washington Hall to consider "the subject of the establishment of Infant Schools for the children of the poor." De Witt Clinton, chairman, explains "the valuable objects to be attained by the proposed charity," and John Griscom reads an informal report "containing an account of the origin and success of Infant Schools as they exist in England, together with the results of a detailed examination into the state of the poor in the city of New York." A committee is then appointed to report a suitable place for the establishment of such schools.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Je 1, 1826.

5 The chief engineer, Jas. Cox, reports that the fire dept. is equipped with 46 fire-engines, 5 hook-and-ladder trucks, 1 hose-wagon, 10,256 feet of hose (good and bad), 255 fire-buckets, 28 ladders, and 30 hooks. 9 Chas. Bernhard, Duke of Saxe-Weimar Eisenach, returns to New York (see 1825) after a tour of the United States. In his account of his visit here, he refers to visiting Aaron Burr, now a lawyer, whom he finds to be "a little old man, with very lively eyes, who spoke very well."

He describes an alarm of fire: "I had scarcely remarked the fire when the bells were rung, and fire cried in all the streets. In less than five minutes engines arrived, each drawn by about thirty people, by means of two long ropes. In New York numerous fire companies exist, among whom the different engines are divided. The members of these companies have voluntarily engaged themselves for this laborious service, and are relieved, in consequence from jury and military service. They wear a short frock at a fire, of coarse linen with a leathern belt, and a leathern hat with a number. As in many English cities, there are water pipes laid in the streets, with an inscription at the corner, how many feet distant is the opening. This has an iron cover to which each engine has a key, is brought near, and the water conveyed into it through a leathern hose. . . .

"I went one evening to the Italian opera in the Park Theatre. This opera was established here last autumn, and is an attempt to transplant this exotic fruit to American ground. It does not, however, appear adapted to the taste of the public here; at least the speculation of the Italian theatre is not so profitable as was expected. . . .

"As I heard that Governor Clinton was in the city, I hastened to pay him my respects, but did not find him at home; on this occasion I again saw how large the city was. The house where the governor lived is nearly two miles distant from the City Hotel, without being out of the city. I remarked that since last autumn three new churches have been built here, of which one, a presbyterian, was very tasteful; since this time also several houses had been erected in this quarter. The number of the inhabitants of the city increases exceedingly, it [is] now supposed to amount to one hundred and seventy thousand. . . .

"To Castle-garden, on the battery, I went about seven o'clock in the evening. The tasteful illumination is effected by gas. A handsome and large saloon is also arranged here, where various refreshments may be obtained. A good orchestra played the whole evening, and rockets ascended from time to time. I was particularly pleased with the walk on the upper gallery, whence there is to be [seen] a beautiful view of Hudson river and bay. It was a moonlight evening; the water was calm, and a gentle wind from the sea, refreshed the sultry atmosphere in a very agreeable manner.

"I visited again, . . . the excellent institution, called House of Refuge for juvenile offenders. The institution has increased since last autumn, and now contains ninety-three young persons of both sexes; . . . The house intended for the boys was finished, and inhabited by them. They were at this time employed in building another for the girls, parallel with the former. . . .

"After leaving this interesting institution, we repaired to the alms-house on the East river. With the alms-house they have connected the workhouse, in which criminals are confined and employed for the benefit and advantage of the city. The institution was erected at the expense of the city, and consists of three long massive buildings, three stories high, with Several Side buildings, designed for hospitals, schools, smithshops, &c. The whole is surrounded by a wall, and divisions made in the interior, to Separate the paupers from the criminals. . . . The whole arrangement has . . . a handsome and open situation; there is a belvidere on the roof of the front house, whence a handsome and extensive prospect may be enjoyed.

". . . In the neighbourhood, however, of the alms-house there is a building three stories high, where the incurable lunatics, supported by the corporation of the city, are received; but the two upper stories are designed to receive, when the yellow fever appears, those who suffer with this dreadful evil, in order to remove, as quickly as possible, the infection from the city. Some old Dutch houses stand in the narrow streets, built by the first settlers, consisting only of a lower story, with the gable-ends towards the street. They are building in Wall street, a new exchange, which, when completed, will be a handsome building. The post-office is already placed in its lower story. Wall street is the street in which the most commercial business is done, and in which most of the banks stand; it is to be regretted that it is one of the ugliest streets in the city."—Travels through No. Am. during the years 1825 and 1826 (Phila., 1828), II: 196–202. An editorial suggests that, for part of the Fourth of July celebration, "Causici's colossal equestrian statue of Washington" be "placed on the steps of the [City] Hall," adding: "This statue it may be recollected, was commenced & finished some years since and a considerable sum subscribed for its purchase.—Since that period from some cause, the subject appears to have been neglected and forgotten by the public. . . ."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Je 22 and 24, 1826. On June 29, E. Causici asked the common council for permission to place his statue of Washington in the Park on the Fourth. The subject was referred to the committees of arrangements, and of arts and sciences, with power.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XV: 489. On June 30, it was announced that the statue would "be placed in an appropriate situation in front of the City Hall on the approaching celebration."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Je 30, 1826. The corner-stone of the Masonic Hall is laid with elaborate ceremonies.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Je 26, 1826. The building stood on the east side of Broadway, between Duane and Pearl Sts.—See the original minutes (MS.) of the Grand Lodge of the State of N. Y. It is thus referred to: "It is . . . nearly opposite the Hospital. Its style of architecture is purely gothic, . . . copied from the most approved classical models, with original appendages, by our celebrated artist Hugh Reinagle." The centre window, in the second storey, is 22 ft. high, and 10 ft. wide. A range of stone battlements terminates the front at the roof.—From Fay's Views in New York (1831), 44, 45, where a full description is given, citing the N. Y. Mirror (q. v., S 26, 1829). 4 This being the fiftieth anniversary of the Declaration of Independence, "extraordinary preparations" are made to celebrate it.—Hone's Diary (MS.), at N. Y. Hist. 7 "A stronger instance of the mischievous effects of monopoly can hardly be conceived than that of the ferry between this city and Brooklyn. The prices of transportation of individuals, carriages and produce to market are four times as high as they would be, if other ferries were permitted between the same places. We do not mean by this, however, to censure the proprietors; the prices are fixed by the legislature, and no more is demanded than the law allows. The whole blame rests upon the selfish spirit of the public authorities, who, for the sake of squeezing out of the lessees, and through them, out of the people, the highest possible revenue, executed a lease of the right of ferriage between the village of Brooklyn and the city of New York, south of Catherine street, about twelve years ago, to Robert Fulton, for the yearly rent of 4,000 dollars, for a period of twenty-five years. We are happy to hear, that, notwithstanding the sweeping terms of the lease, some flaw has been discovered by legal ingenuity, and that another ferry will probably be established between Pierpoint's dock and a convenient spot in this city."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Jl 7, 1826.

8 The news is published in New York of the death of Thomas Jefferson on July 4, at the age of 83 years, three months, and two days. An editorial observes: "It was only yesterday that we were called upon to record the death of John Adams, on the same day, at the advanced age of ninety-two. The circumstances attending the death of these two venerable old men, both formerly Presidents of the United States, both signers of the Declaration of Independence, both called away on the same day, and that, too, the fiftieth anniversary of the day when that instrument was signed—all form a coincidence, of which the world scarcely produces a parallel. . . ."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Jl 8, 1826.

" The common council holds a special meeting to make arrangements for honouring the memory of Adams and Jefferson. The following resolutions are adopted:

"1st Resolved, that the Common Council Chamber be put in mourning and that the members of the Common Council were crape on the left arm for the term of one Month

July 8

"2d Resolved that the persons having charge of the several Churches be requested to cause the bells to [be] tolled on Wednesday next [July 12] from 8 to 9 O Clock A M from 12 to 1 and from 6 to 7 P M

"3d Resolved that the flag upon the City Hall be hoisted half-mast on that day, and the owners and masters of Vessels in the harbour and the proprietors of public buildings be requested to have their colours hoisted at half-mast from sun rise to sun set on the same day

"4th Resolved that Major General Morton be requested to give orders that minute guns be fired during the day at such place as he may appoint

"5th Resolved that his Honor the Mayor request the United States Military and Naval commandants on this station to co-operate with this Board in their expression of respect for the memory of the deceased

"6th Resolved, that the Revd Docr Rowan be requested to deliver an address suited to the occasion in the Middle Dutch Church in Nassau street on the morning of Wednesday next, and that the members of the Common Council will assemble at the Common Council Chamber at half past nine O Clock in the morning of that day and walk in procession to the said Church and that the following persons be invited to assemble at the City Hall for the purpose of accompanying the Common Council Vizt

"The Reverend Clergy
"The Cincinnati
"The Governor Lieutenant Governor and other State Officers
"The Judges of the United States, State and City Courts
"Members of the Senate and House of Representatives U S.
"Members of the Senate and Assembly of the State
"Ministers and Consuls of Foreign Courts
"Officers of the Army and Navy of the United States
"Officers of the Militia
"Trustees and Faculty of Columbia College
"Citizens

"7th Resolved, that it be respectfully recommended to our fellow citizens to abstain from business during the solemnities of the day.

"8th Resolved, that the Revd the Clergy of our City who have charge of Churches, be respectfully requested to notice in a solemn and appropriate manner in their respective Churches on the morning of Sunday the 16th Inst the remarkable dispensation of Divine Providence, which we experienced in the death of two of the Illustrious signers of the Declaration of our Independence on the Fiftieth Anniversary.

"9th Resolved that his Honor the Mayor be requested to communicate the preceeding Resolutions to the families of the late Hon: John Adams and the Hon: Thomas Jefferson and to express the deep sense entertained by the Common Council of the exalted worth and eminent services of these illustrious individuals and that we sincerely sympathise on this melancholy occasion in the loss which they and our country have sustained.

"The first five Resolutions were adopted the remaining Resolutions were referred to the Committee appointed under the following Resolution

"Resolved that a Committee of Six be appointed to carry into effect the foregoing Resolutions and to adopt such other measures as they may deem expedient." Such committee was then appointed.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XV: 503–5; Jl 8, 1826. See Jl 12, when the obsequies occurred. For replies sent by representatives of the families of the deceased, see Jl 31. See also Jl 14, 1828.

12 In accordance with the common council's resolutions, a procession and other ceremonies take place as a tribute to the memory of Adams and Jefferson. For the military orders, etc., see N. Y. Eve. Post, Jl 11; N. Y. Adv., Jl 14, 1826. See also Jl 4 and 8; and M. C. C. (1784–1831), XV: 524, 525–29. On the Sunday following (July 16) Rev. John Stanford, chaplain at Bellevue, gave a "Discourse upon the Death of Thomas Jefferson and John Adams" in the chapel of that institution; it was subsequently published and a copy is preserved in N. Y. P. L. At the request of the New York Lyceum of Natural History, Prof. Samuel L. Mitchill, on Oct 11, delivered "A Discourse on the Character and Services of Thomas Jefferson, more especially as a Promoter of Natural and Physical Science," also printed and preserved in N. Y. P. 1826 July 13 The directors of the New York Water Works Co. hold a meeting and resolve that, "the application to the Legislature for additional powers for a prosecution of the works of the company having failed, the Directors therefore deem it inexpedient to prosecute the works any further at this time; & having reason to believe that the Stockholders desire a return of the monies paid on the shares held by them [see D 13, 1825]; and this Board having ascertained that the funds of the company will warrant a return of 98 to 99 per cent," books shall be opened at the Franklin Bank from July 17 to 27, when stockholders may signify their assent to a return of the money.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Jl 15, 1826. See also ibid., Ag 1, 10, 11, 1826. The company was dissolved in 1827 and its charter surrendered.—Man. Com. Coun. (1854), 218; Wegman, op. cit., 15.

17 The corporation counsel, to whom was referred the subject of the obstruction to navigation in the North and East Rivers during the spring and summer, caused by the great number of fish poles, reports that "nothing short of an efficient armed force" would be sufficient to remove them. The fishermen always have resisted any interference with their fishing preparations, and as it is impracticable to arrest and punish them, it becomes necessary to provide a vessel, with a sufficient number of hands, possibly armed, to remove these obstructions, and to prevent their being replaced.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XV: 513–14. On Feb. 1, 1827, the board resolved to solicit the attention of the legislature to this evil.—Ibid., XVI: 71. On March 26, the counsel and the police committee were empowered to take any measures they might deem necessary to remove these barriers.—Ibid., XVI: 199. On April 9, the board referred to the law committee a resolution that the mayor present these grievances to the attention of the governor, and, if necessary, that they appeal together to the president for relief by a naval power competent to remove the obstructions and restore the uninterrupted navigation of the Hudson River.—Ibid., XVI: 222–23.

" The common council appoints a committee to "enquire into the expediency and necessity of connecting the Waters of the Hudson & East Rivers by a Canal across the Island and that if deemed expedient and necessary that they report . . . a suitable designation of the proper rout for said Canal which would best comport for the public good and least expensive to those concerned."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XV: 520.

25 The governors of the New York Hospital "are fitting up the old Lunatic Asylum as a Marine Hospital, and are furnishing it with every convenience and accommodation which can contribute to this object. The old Lunatic Asylum has not been occupied for its original purposes since the erection of the new one at Bloomingdale."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Jl 25, 1826. The old lunatic asylum was erected in 1806–8 on the southern part of the hospital grounds.—Account of N. Y. Hospital, 6, 10. See 1828.

31 Mayor Hone lays before the common council the letters addressed to (see Jl 8) and replies received from "the representatives of the late John Adams and Thomas Jefferson." The board orders that they be entered in the minutes and published in the newspapers. They are entered in full under this date, the former being written by the mayor himself. It appears that Adams and Jefferson, before their death, were two of only three survivors of the signers of the Declaration of Independence. The reply on behalf of the Adams family is signed by John Quincy Adams, the original MS. is preserved in file No. 101, city clerk's record-room, and has been reproduced in the printed minutes cited below. Hone's letter to the Jefferson family is addressed to Thomas Mann Randolph. It points out that Jefferson (the "venerable author" who "penned" the Declaration) died on the fiftieth anniversary of the day when it was signed, and at the very time when the American people were engaged in repeating it with enthusiasm. His letter also contains this paragraph:

"In a letter written by M^r^ Jefferson shortly before his decease, to the Committee of Arrangements for the 4^th^ of July (and which will be preserved as a precious relic) he expressed his thanks to Providence for the preservation of the lives of the three surviving signers of the Declaration 'a favor (to use his own words) so much the more gratifying as it has enabled them by its blessed effects, to witness the wisdom of the choice then made, between submission and resistance.' His pious wish was accomplished, he lived to see the return of that auspicious day; . . ."

Randolph's long reply is a remarkable description of Jefferson's personality and attainments. He says, in part: "I cannot refrain from congratulating the Common Council on their being the first to call the attention of the instructors of the people in religion, to the miraculous Euthanasia of those two venerable Patriots—Few of the miracles recorded in the sacred writings are more conspicuous." This he enlarges upon in describing Jefferson's vitality. An eminent doctor, at 8 p. m. on July 3, "pronounced that he might be expected to cease to live, every quarter of an hour from that time Yet he lived seventeen hours longer without any evident pain . . . His desire to live and see the midday of the fourth of July, was wonderfully fulfilled contrary to the expectation of almost all around him . . ."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XV: 525–29. Aug. 3 "The shaft of one of the four marble columns intended for the new Exchange building now erecting in this city, has arrived and is lying in Wall street. It is twenty eight feet and a half in length, and eleven feet two inches and a half in circumference at one end, and ten feet seven inches and a half at the other. It is estimated to weigh twenty six tons, and was hewn in the quarries at East Chester out of an entire piece of rock. When raised, these columns will be, we believe, the largest that ornament any building in the United States."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ag 3, 1826. See also ibid., O 10 and 11, 1826.

6 Between Aug. 6 and 11, a Virginia lady, visiting New York, recorded in her diary her observations and impressions regarding various points of interest, including the city hall, museum, Academy of Fine Arts, Rotunda (where the panorama of Athens was on display), Castle Garden, Grant Thorburn's store, the Italian opera, and Robertson's attempted balloon ascension at Castle Garden on Aug. 10. 8 "As the proprietors of the Park Theatre are about to have the interior repainted, refitted, and repaired, it is much to be wished, that for their cracked and dingy oil lamps, they would substitute the brilliant, pure, and ethereal gas-lights. . . . 13 "We received this morning the first number of a new paper established at Yorkville, on Harlaem Heights, about five miles from the City Hall. The 3d Avenue passes through the village. Twelve months ago there were not more than two or three buildings on the barren rock, where there are now upwards of sixty, some of them built in a good substantial manner of brick. . . . There are already several extensive factories established in the village. An academy has been erected, and a spacious church is going up, which, when finished, will be an ornament to the place. . . . A fire company is formed at Yorkville, and yesterday the Corporation delivered to their charge a very elegant engine. And it gives us pleasure to find that the Harlaem Spring Water Company have commenced their operations in that village."—N. Y. Eve. Post, S 13, 1826.

28 William Charles Macready, the actor, arrives from London. He records in his diary: ". . . a very neat carriage, that might have put to shame the hackney-coaches of London, came to take us to our new residence, a well-furnished and comfortable suite in an hotel looking on the park, an open space of some extent planted with trees, having the City Hall, the Park Theatre, and some good houses on the different sides of it. . . . the line of Broadway had its utmost limit in Canal Street.

". . . The principal public building at that time was the City Hall, in which the courts of justice were held. A trial of great interest, the State's prosecution of some bubble companies, gave occasion to Thomas Addis Emmett, who was retained in the defence, . . . and it was with admiration and rapt delight I listened to the energetic accents of 'the old man eloquent.' On leaving the court we passed through the vaulted passages underneath. A solitary figure was slowly dragging his steps along, close to the wall: he was below the middle size, dressed in a light grey-coloured suit, which, with his pale complexion, gave him in his loneliness somewhat of a ghostly appearance. When we had passed him, one of my friends in a significant whisper asked me if I knew who that was. On my replying in the negative, he told me he was Colonel Birr[!], who shot Hamilton the Secretary of State [sic], and who had had been under prosecution for high treason. He looked a mysterious shadow of unrepented evil. . . .

"Having to wait the ferry-boat's return to cross the Hudson, we employed the half hour's delay in visiting the new streets at the rear of the Exchange, and in admiring the structure of that marble building. On our return, in passing down William Street, we were stopped by an apparatus of heavy framework of timber with large screws, laid across the street. Our inquiries were soon satisfied in learning that these preparations were for pushing from their original site, to a foundation built for their reception ten yards behind, two large brick houses. They had been moved part of the way along the soaped beams the previous night, and with so little agitation or disturbance that a cup of milk on the dining-room chimney-piece of one did not spill a drop in its journey! The whole distance was completed in a few days, . . . Our wonder was not participated in by the citizens of New York, to whom a more extraordinary removal of a brick house some time before had familiarised the present experiment. That building was not only moved from the foundation on which it originally stood, but was actually let down upon another some feet below its original basement . . . Sept. 28

"A new theatre in the Bowery, a low quarter of the city, was opened during my sojourn in New York. It was handsome and commodious; but its location was an objection insuperable to the fashion of the place." The "New Circus," a building 75 by 100 ft., is nearly roofed. It stands at the end of East Broadway near the East River. "When finished, it will comprise a capacious ring, large pit, two circles of boxes, and a commodious gallery; besides a stage and scenery for the performance of farces, ballets, &c. It is a substantial building, with a brick front," and is expected to hold 2,700 persons.—N. Y. Mirror, O 7, 1826. See also N. Y. Eve. Post, S 6, 1826. See N 8. "

A committee reports to the common council that, by a law passed March 21, 1823, a board of health was appointed, but "our Ordinances, as such, expire in three years, And the Question is presented—Whether there is any Board of Health since the 12th of May 1826" (q.v.). The board therefore resolves that the persons holding the offices of mayor, recorder, and aldermen of the city of New York, for the time being, and their successors in office, respectively, shall constitute the board of health.—*M. An Act.

Incorporating the UNIVERSITY of the City of NEW YORK. Passed April 18 1831.

THE PEOPLE of the State of New York represented in Senate and Assembly, Do enact as follows.

§ I. The subscribers and shareholders of "The University of the State of New York" are hereby incorporated, for the purposes of promoting literature and science. The corporation shall be known by the name of "The University of the State of New York" and by that name shall have perpetual succession, power to sue and be sued, to make and use a common seal and alter the same at pleasure, to hold such real and personal estate as shall be conveyed to or purchased by them and to sell and convey the same, and to have and exercise all other powers, rights and privileges which are incident to a corporation. But the University shall not elect any trustee or trustees who shall receive an annual income exceeding three thousand dollars.

§ II. The government and care of the University shall be committed to a Council consisting of thirty two members and the Regent and Secretary of the Board of Regents for the time being. The location of the University shall be in the City of New York.

§ III. The members of the council (except the Mayor) shall be elected by the Shareholders. No one religious sect shall ever have a Majority of the Board. The council may fill its own vacancies occurring previous to the annual election.

§ IV. One fourth of the members elected by the Shareholders shall go out of office annually when an election shall be held to fill those vacancies and all other vacancies occurring the preceding year. Members going out of office shall be eligible. At each election the Shareholders shall proceed to make such annual election the council may appoint all necessary officers for the years and the presidents appointed shall hold their appointments for such time as may be chosen by the Shareholders.

§ V. Shareholders to the amount of one hundred dollars in their own right or in trust for others shall be entitled to one vote and proportionally to a greater number of votes not exceeding one hundred votes to any person.

§ VI. The University may confer degrees in course upon such persons as the council may direct. But no person shall have all the rights and privileges of these Shareholders unless he shall have been such Shareholder for the space of one year previous to the election at which he shall offer to vote.

§ VII. Eleven members shall be a quorum for the transaction of business, but no real estate shall be conveyed or mortgaged or leased for more than seven years (except to tenants, servants &c. the tenants other than the affirmative vote of seventeen members.

§ VIII. Persons of every religious denomination shall be equally eligible to all offices and appointments.

§ IX. The University may grant to Students under its charge diplomas or honorary testimonials in such form as it may designate. It may also confer such literary honors diplomas and degrees as are usually granted by any College or Seminary of learning in the United States.

§ X. Diplomas granted by the University shall entitle the possessors to the immunities and privileges allowed to those of like diplomas from any College or Seminary of learning in the State.

§ XI. No diploma shall be granted by the University but in conformity with the laws of the State in force at the time of conferring the same.

§ XII. The University shall be entitled to the visitation of the Regents of the University of the State in the same manner and subject to the same extent as the Colleges in the State.

§ XIII. The Council shall have power to appoint its own officers and all the officers of the University to establish ordinances and by laws not contravening the laws or constitution of this State or of the United States and to repeal any of its ordinances for a violation thereof.

§ XIV. The Members of the Council of the University

I certify the foregoing to be a true Copy of an original act of the Legislature deposited in this office. Albany April 21. 1831.

CHARTER OF NEW YORK UNIVERSITY; DATED APRIL 18, 1831. SEE P. 1701.

1826 Oct. 30 The special committee on gas-lights (see F 13) reports that it has ascertained the terms of the N. Y. Gas Light Co. for lighting the city. The company would make a new contract at $15 per lamp, which would amount to $40,000 a year for the whole city; while under the existing contract it would cost $23,000, this being the amount expended during the last year for oil lights. The report is accepted and the committee discharged.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XV: 661–62.

At the same time, there is entered of record a report of this committee presenting in detail their examination of the terms and provisions of the city's contract with this company, and explaining the items of expense for introducing gas-light into the streets. Some of its findings are as follows: The company will light all the streets lying south of a line commencing at the East River, running through Grand St. to Sullivan St., through Sullivan St. to Canal St., and thence to the North River. They were ready to light Broadway on May 12, 1825, and so informed the board; they will be ready on May 12, 1828, to light the rest of the part of the city included in the contract. It is economy to substitute iron posts for wooden ones, even though the initial cost for erecting one such lamp and fixtures is $20. In narrow streets, however, the committee advises the use of "Iron brackets secured against the sides of buildings and extending out at least five feet." There should be 2,400 lamps, placed 100 ft. apart, to adequately light the city within the territorial limits of the contract, thus making the cost $48,000. This sum, however, would be somewhat reduced by the fact that the oil lamps now in use can all be used in the upper wards. In order to test the value of gas-light before the whole contract is entered into, it is recommended that Broadway be lit from Grant St. to the Battery during the present season. This seems to be a fitting time to do it. If placed 100 ft. apart, 120 lamps will be required, which will make the cost, after deducting the worth of the 75 oil lamps now in use there, nearly $2,000. It is extremely difficult to procure oil that will burn in the street lamps during the most intense weather, hence the advantages of gas over oil in such seasons are very great. Accordingly the board resolves to enter upon a contract with the N. Y. Gas Light Co. "to light Broadway with gas from Grand St. to the Battery during the pleasure of the Common Council." —Ibid., XV: 664–67. For the special committee's further report on lighting Broadway, etc., see ibid., XVII: 29–31. Cf. O 25, 1830. The original reports and resolutions on this subject are found in metal file No. 102, city clerk's record-room.

Nov. 4 For opening Lafayette St. from Great Jones to Art St., $6,300 is appropriated, and for paving Bond St. from Broadway to the Bowery, $1,900.—Journal D, 4, in comptroller's office.

6 The Rutgers Medical College, on Duane St., is opened by Dr. Hosack, Dr. Mott, and Dr. Francis, previous members of the faculty of the College of Physicians and Surgeons.—*N. Y. Eve. 8 The "Mount Pitt Circus" (see O 7), on Grand St., opposite Harman St. (the present East Broadway), near East River, is opened.—N. Y. Eve. Post, and Com. Adv., N 8, 1826. J. Milbert referred to this as a "magnificent" circus, accommodating from 7,000 to 8,000 spectators.—Itineraire Pittoresque du Fleuve Hudson (1829), II: 251

9 "A Midsummer Night's Dream" is performed for the first time in America, at the Park Theatre.—N. Y. Eve. Post, N 7, 9, 10, 1826; Brown, I: 31–32.

13 The United States and Great Britain sign at London a convention whereby American citizens receive indemnification for British spoliations during the war with Napoleon.—U. S. Treaties, etc. (1910), 641–43.

18 The sum of $5,000 is paid for the sewer in Canal St. from Collect St. to the Hudson River (see 1825).—Journal D, 9, in comptroller's office.

20 The common council accepts an invitation to attend the opening of the Catholic Orphan Asylum on Prince St.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XV: 690. The opening occurred on Nov. 23.—Goodrich, Picture of N. Y. (1828), 342. To this institution was awarded a share of the school moneys on N 28, 1831 (q. v.).

Nov. 20 The common council refers to a committee the subject of a change in the method of caring for the poor of the city and county of New York; by substituting for the present almshouse the plan of a public farm, bordering on the shores of one of the rivers, in which the labour of the paupers may be made productive, if not wholly to support the establishment; also by connecting with this a small steamboat and a number of scows to carry the garbage of the city to the farm, take stray animals found roaming our streets to designated places, and bring back to the city markets any surplus produce.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XV: 700.

" The city pays $3,000 on account of the ironwork for the Battery fence (see 1826), and $2,000 for stonework.—Journal D, 11, comptroller's office. This was an "iron railing" around the Battery, facing State, Whitehall, and Marketfield Sts.—Goodrich, Picture of N. Y. (1828), 134. The fence was finished July 6, 1827.—N. Y. Mirror, F 28, Jl 6, 1827.

27 The common council resolves to apply to the legislature to repeal the act passed on April 10, 1823 (q. v.), which provided for the permanent regulation of certain streets in the city, including the section lying between North and 14th St., The Bowery, and East River, and to apply for the passage of a substitute act to regulate that section of the city in accordance with a report, received on this day, from City Surveyor Edw. Doughty. The whole subject is referred to a committee.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XV: 705–7. See, further, F 12, 1827.

30 Mrs. Knight, formerly Miss Povey, appears at the Park Theatre as Floretta in the English opera "Cabinet."—N. Y. Eve. Post, N 28 and D 1, 1826.

Dec. 4 The common council resolves to cause a monument to be placed over the Peekskill grave of John Paulding, one of the captors of the British spy André (see S 23, 1780). The cost is not to exceed $100.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XV: 732. On April 9, 1827, payment of $100 was made for the work.—Ibid., XVI: 222; Journal D, 157, in comptroller's office. For the dedication, see N 22, 1827. The expenses greatly exceeded the estimates of Dec. 4.—Ibid.

" The common council instructs a committee to inquire into the expediency of prohibiting the inhabitants of the city from depositing any wood or coal ashes in the streets, under penalty of $2 for each offense; also of providing that carts for collecting them pass through the streets at given hours, at least twice a week.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XV: 731. On Dec. 18, the board passed a law to this effect.—Ibid., XV: 745. Cf. ibid., XV: 31–32.

" The common council orders that the name of Arundle St. be changed to Clinton St.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XV: 710.

7 A second Unitarian Church is opened, Rev. Dr. Channing, of Boston, preaching the sermon. This church stood on Prince St., a little west of Broadway. For description and view of it, 1829, see N. Y. Mirror, VII: 90 (S 26, 1829). It was a brick edifice, covered with white cement in imitation of marble, in the "Doric Style." For another view and description, see Fay's Views in N. Y. (1831), 54. See also Pyne sale catalogue, items 193 and 194. The congregation was a colony which came from the Unitarian Church in Chambers St. The edifice was destroyed by fire on Nov. 26, 1837 (q. v.).—Greenleaf, Hist. of the Churches, 376; N. Y. Eve. Post, D 4, 1826. The next edifice was called "The Church of the Messiah," a name that is still retained.—See My 2, 1839.

18 The common council refers to the finance committee a petition from N. Bangs and I. Emory stating that "the building N° 14 Crosby street is a public Institution of the Methodist Episcopal Church used for the publication of Religious Books and as such in their opinion not liable to taxation;" that it has lately been assessed, and they seek relief.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XV: 738. This publishing-house appears to have been the Methodist Book Concern of to-day, which began business in 1779.—See also King's Handbook of N. Y. (1893), 408.

" The common council orders that Washington Parade Ground shall include the whole block bounded by 6th, 4th, Wooster, and McDougall Sts., and that the whole square shall "be and remain a Public square or Parade Ground and called the Washington Parade." It is resolved to take necessary steps to effect this object at the earliest possible moment, at an expense not to exceed $2,000.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XV: 748–49. See F 27, 1826.

20 This is the copyright date of the Wall view of the city hall, the most important and beautiful engraved view of the city hall known. For reproduction and description, see Pl. 97, III: 586–89.

1826 Dec. 25 Gen. William Paulding is again chosen mayor by the common council, succeeding Philip Hone. He was inducted into office on Jan. 2, 1827.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XV: 770–71; XVI: 1. Paulding served until Dec. 29, 1828 (q.v.), when he was succeeded by Walter Bowne. For brief sketch of Paulding's life, see Man. Com. Coun. (1853), 421.

— According to Harrison, in his Hist. of Photography, 15–16, and the Encyc. Brit., XXI: 486, Nicéphore Niepce, in this year, made the first permanent photograph. He had been experimenting for many years, and by some of the best authorities is said to have been successful as early as 1822.—N. Y. Times, Je 27, Jl 19, 1925. Owing to disagreement as to the real date of its origin, the centennial of this science and art was celebrated in 1925.—Ibid. See, further, Ag 19, 1839; and Scientific American, Je 5, 1915.

— From this year until 1836, an anti-Masonic movement spread throughout the United States, from which there sprang a very extensive literature, embodied in the reports of conventions, and other works.—See the card-index, N. Y. P. L., under the title "Freemasonry."

— In this year was published Laws of the state of New-York, relating particularly to the city of New-York, published by the authority of the corporation of the said city.—See copy in the N. Y. P. L.

— The number of deaths in New York in this year was 5,181, the largest number recorded up to this time, due to the increase in population. For comparative annual statistics on this subject, see Goodrich, Picture of N. Y. (1828), 178.

— At this time, there existed in New York a gentlemen's social club called "The Lunch," of which J. Fenimore Cooper was a member.—Correspondence of J. Fenimore-Cooper, by his grandson (1922), I: 50, 56, 58, 105–9, 118, 132, 133, 166, 655.

— The first hardware store to deal mainly in American goods is said to have been opened at New York in this year. "At this time a very large part of the tools and builders' hardware used in this country came from Great Britain."—Clark, Hist. of Manufactures in the U. S. 1607–1860, 524.

— In this year, was found, in Jacob St., a mineral spring of a depth of 128 ft., when boring for pure water where there was formerly a swamp or pond. It was given the name of "Jacob's Well."—Goodrich, Picture of N. Y. (1828), 135. See S 10.

— In this year was published A Description of the American Marine Railway, as constructed at New York, by Mr. John Thomas. To which is annexed, the report of the Committee of Inventions of the Franklin Institute (Phila., 1827). This work, which contains engraved plates, is now extremely scarce.

— In this year was published The Description of the City of New-York; containing its population, institutions, commerce, manufactures, public buildings, courts of justice, places of amusement, &c. To which is prefixed, a brief account of its first settlement by the Dutch, in the year 1629; and of the most remarkable events which have occurred in its history, from that to the present period, by James Hardie, A. M. (printed and pub'd by Samuel Marks). It was a posthumous work, the name of the "Finisher" who signed the preface being withheld.

The remarks and statistics on New York's population, the extensive account of the churches, the markets, and prisons; an alphabetical list of streets, each briefly described; the college library and others; the public schools; the art, literary, historical, and scientific societies; the institutions which conserve the health of the city; the benevolent and religious societies; the city's government, and its trade, commerce and manufactures are all quite fully treated by history, description, and statistics.

— In this year, "Delmonico opened his capacious and splendid establishment on the corner of South William and Beaver streets." This building was destroyed in the great conflagration of 1835 (q.v.), and came very near being again destroyed during the fire of July, 1845 (q.v.). In 1846 it was called "a very fashionable resort for the French and Germans."—A Picture of New-York in 1846, 81. Philip Hone described it in 1830.—Hone's Diary, I: 25. See also L. M. R. K., III: 977–78.

— In this year, the Adelphi Hotel, cor. Broadway and Beaver St., was erected.—Man. Com. Coun. (1865), 523. It was described as a "brick edifice, stuccoed, of six stories in height, . . . possessing elegant and spacious accommodations."—Goodrich Picture of N. Y. (1828), 397.

In this year, the Northern Dispensary, at the corner of Christopher St. and Waverly Place, was founded.—N. Y. As It Is, 1839, p. 63. See Mr 22 and O 18, 1830. 1827 —

About this year, the old Tea Water Pump (L. M. R. K., III: 976) was filled up.—Thorburn, Reminiscences (1845). See also descrip. of A. Pl. 14-b, III: 873. See, further, 1846. —

In this year, a house at the corner of Pearl St. and Old Slip, marked "1698," was taken down. It was one of the very few houses of Dutch architecture, having stepped gable ends to the street, which still remained in New York. At about the same time, another, marked "1701," on the north-east side of Coenties Slip, was taken down. On the opposite corner was one marked "1689."—Watson's Annals of N. Y. (1846), 350–51; cf.; however, My 5, 1826. —

One of the houses here referred to as taken down in 1827 appears to have been that of Tunis Quick, on the south-west corner of Pearl St. and Coenties Slip. In the Leisler rebellion, a shot fired from the fort at the city hall, at the head of Coenties Slip, lodged in Quick's house. The ball was found in the wall when the house was demolished.—Reminiscences of Grant Thorburn, 213; also the recollections of one Jacob Tabele, cited in Watson's Annals, 176.

In this year, "Numerous valuable stores and offices were erected in Garden-street and Exchange-street, and the names of Sloat-lane [see D 23, 1825] and Garden-street [see S 24] abolished."—Goodrich, Picture of N. Y. (1828), 134. —

In this year, the post-office was removed to the basement of the new merchants exchange, and occupied two-thirds of the south-east portion of the building on the Garden St. side, which is now Exchange Place.—Man. Com. Coun. (1858), 630; Goodrich, Picture of N. Y. (1828), 206; City Directory (1827). —

In this year, the vestry of Trinity Church stipulated with the owners of the 64 lots of land adjacent to Hudson Square (St. John's Park), on its four sides, that the park should remain forever open for the recreation and resort of those owners; reserving, however, the right to the Church, with the consent of the owners of two-thirds of the lots, to sell and dispose of the lands constituting the park.—N. Y. As It Is, In 1833, p. 179. See also descrip. of Pl. 106-a, Vol. III; L. M. R. K., III: 971; Dix, Hist. of Trinity Ch., IV: 235–37; Goodrich's Picture of N. Y. (1828), 439. See, further, Je 7. —

Since 1812, the Elgin Botanic Garden has been "almost entirely neglected." When it belonged to Dr. Hosack, prior to that year (in which it was sold to the state), it was considered "by far the best botanical garden in the United States."—Hardie, Description of the City of N. Y. (1827), 146. —

In this year, the name Le Roy Place was given to that part of Bleecker St. lying between Mercer and Greene Sts.—See descrip. of Pl. 103-a, III: 604; and account of the Peabody Views, 1831. —

In widening Nassau St., six vaults, which were part of the Middle Dutch Church, were taken, and the remains of the dead removed. In the same year, Liberty St. was opened and the church and private vaults of this church were cut through and the remains of the dead removed.—Doc. 76, Bd. of Ald., F 4, 1833. —

In this year, surveys were made of the water front of the Hudson River as far north as 42d St. and of the East River to 155th St. From these, six volumes of manuscript maps were made by Daniel Ewen, and two volumes by Shaw. These maps or surveys show also, on alternate pages, for a portion of the distance, the names of old owners compiled from original deeds, etc.—See these volumes in bureau of topography, borough president's office. —

In this year, the Fulton Ferry boat "Wm Cutting" was built. For view of it, see ibid. (1859), 603. See also 1836 and 1840. —

The dry-goods house of Arnold Constable & Co. was founded in this year by A. Arnold on Canal St., just west of Mercer St. For the development of the business, changes in location, etc., see King's Handbook (1893), 843–44. The firm occupied its up-town place of business, at the s. w. cor. of Broadway and 19th St., in 1869, and soon afterward acquired the north half of the block, including the Fifth Ave. front. See view in King, 845. In 1915, it occupied its new building on the site of the Vanderbilt residence, at the s. e. cor. of Fifth Ave. and 40th St. —

1827 Jan. 2 " the Common Council, on my retiring from the Office of Mayor. January 2d 1827" (see D 25, 1826).—Hone's Diary (MS.), at N. Y. Hist. Soc.

The common council requests ex-Mayor Hone to sit for his portrait "to be placed in the Gallery of Portraits of the Common Council."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVI: 3. See Jl 16.

6 A public meeting, with Stephen Allen in the chair, is held at the City Hotel "to consider of the most effectual means of relieving the Greeks in their present extreme need of the necessaries of life." A large committee of prominent New Yorkers is appointed to adopt necessary measures, and resolutions are adopted approving Edward Livingston's motion in the house of representatives to appropriate $50,000 for the purchase of food and clothing, and thanking the managers of the Park and Bowery Theatres for the offer of their playhouses to aid in relieving the distress.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ja 8, 1827. See also ibid., Ja 9, 18, 20, 23, 25, 27, F 14, Mr 6, 1827.

" A visitor in America writes to an acquaintance in Dublin: ". . . The beauty of Broadway is marred by the air of gothic heaviness, which prevails like darkness visible, in the details of the edifices. Though the walls are generally composed of a very neat small brick, yet the windows, doors, and roofs, are not in uniformity with the fineness of the material, for they exhibit a clumsy plainness; and what appears still more tasteless and awkward, all the houses have dormetory windows in a long roof. Broadway opens a grand thorough-fare through the city . . .

". . . Canal-street has been built within the period of the last two years, and its majestic appearance indicates the gradual progress of improvement, as well as the extinction of that grotesque system of Dutch architecture which existed here. All the streets are generally well paved, and the sidewalks flagged. . . . During the last year more than twelve hundred new houses have been built in this city, many of them of white marble. . . . The Episcopalian church of St. John, situated in one of the most beautiful squares in the city, must be admitted as a chaste specimen of Ionic architecture. St. John's square is a miniature picture of Merrion square in Dublin. It is the most fasionable residence in the city. . . ."—N. Y. Mirror, Ja 6 and 13, 1827.

13 The N. Y. Society Library, the "Most ancient public Library in the State," is the "third for size and value in the United States; being inferior only to those of Cambridge and Philadelphia. . . . It now possesses above 18,000 volumes, many of which are of the most rare and valuable description."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ja 13, 1827.

15 The smallpox has so spread that the common council directs the physicians of the city dispensary to call at every house in the city and vaccinate every person who will submit to the operation. —M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVI: 21; and see ibid., XV: 738; XVI: 10. See also N. Y. Eve. Post, Ja 20, F 13, 1827.

23 The legislature incorporates the "Neptune Co. of New York," the purpose of which is to raise sunken vessels, to assist stranded vessels, and to remove obstructions in the East or Hudson Rivers or elsewhere.—Laws of N. Y. (1827), chap. 19.

26 A bill having been introduced in the state legislature by Gen. McClure "to take off the tax upon dogs, and to lay it upon bachelors," several thousand bachelors meet at the National Hotel and adopt resolutions protesting against it.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ja 27, 1827.

29 The common council approves a resolution that the ground bounded by 6th St. on the north-east, Wooster St. on the south-east, 4th St. on the south-west, and "McDougal" St. on the north-west, be appropriated for a public place (the present Washington Square); and that application be made to the supreme court to have Thompson St. from 4th to 6th St. and so much of 5th St. as is opened between "McDougal" and Wooster Sts. (the extension of the present Washington Place through the Square) discontinued. —M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVI: 48–50; L. M. R. K., III: 972. See N 5.

" The common council appropriates the triangular piece of ground between Spring, West, Washington, and Canal Sts. for a new public market; and orders that, after the establishment of such market, the old market in Spring St. (see My 4, 1829) between Greenwich and Washington Sts. be discontinued.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVI: 52–54. See Ap 11; D 8, 1828.

" The common council resolves that Lafayette Place be extended to 8th St.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVI: 55. See Ap 14.

" The common council orders that a street 50 ft. wide be opened through the grounds of Mrs. Bethune and Mrs. Ludlow, commencing at Greenwich St. and extending to West St., and that it be known as Bethune St.; also that a street 60 ft. wide be opened and extended through the grounds of Mrs. Ludlow, parallel to Bethune St. and 160 ft. therefrom, commencing at Greenwich St. and extending to West St., and that this street be known as Troy St.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVI: 56–57; L. M. R. K., III: 994, 1010. Jan. 29

A committee reports to the common council that both the committee and grand jury unite "in reprobating Lotteries as having 'a pernicious effect' upon Society 'and that it is greatly to be desired that the time should arrive when the provisions of the Constitution, on this point shall have full effect and there shall be no more Lotteries in this State.'"—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVI: 70. Feb. 1

" The common council decides to have two gas lamps made and suspended over the columns of the Park gates at the junction of Broadway and Chatham St.; also at the north end of the Bowling Green.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVI: 79.

12 In a report to the common council, the committee of Nov. 27, 1826 (q. v.), states that, by the city charter, the common council possesses power to direct the making and laying out of streets, lanes, and alleys, and to alter and repair them; and that the legislature limited this power by statute on April 10, 1823. At the present time, this law seems neither fair, nor satisfactory. The board resolves to apply to the legislature for a repeal of this law, but at the same time to legalize the proceedings concerning the regulating of streets south of 14th St. and west of The Bowery under the act of 1823, as that work has already been begun.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVI: 106–8. The proceedings on this subject were published in a separate pamphlet, a copy of which is owned by the N. Y. H. S.

14 The Chamber of Commerce resolves to address a memorial to congress protesting against a tariff bill now before the senate, which "does, under the disguise of merely altering duties on imports, establish a prohibition of the importation of many articles of woolen goods, which are essential in this climate to the health and comfort of great numbers of our citizens."—N. Y. Eve. Post, F 14, 1827. See also ibid., F 15, 1827. The memorial was printed in ibid., F 16, 1827.

17 "There have been built in the different ship yards in this city, the last twelve months—23 ships, 3 brigs, 49 schooners, 68 sloops, 12 steam boats, 15 tow boats, and 19 canal boats making 29,137 tons."—N. Y. Eve. Post, F 17, 1827.

22 A public ball is held at the Park Theatre in aid of the Greeks.—N. Y. Eve. Post, F 23, 1827.

" The old watch-house and lot at Chatham Square are sold by the corporation.—Com. Adv., F 23, 1827. They brought $8,025. The dimensions of the lot were 26 ft. 4 in. on Chatham St., 14 ft. 2 in. on the Bowery, 20 ft. 1 in. on Catharine St., and 31 ft. 11 in. on the rear.—Goodrich, Picture of N. Y. (1828), 135; N. Y. Eve. Post, F 23, 1827.

26 The common council grants a petition that a street 30 ft. wide between Duane and Jay Sts., and between Washington and West Sts., which was reserved as a street or way by an agreement entered into between the corporation of New York City and that of Trinity Church in 1794, and which has been used as a public street for nearly 30 years, be left open and remain as at present; and the board passes a resolution for regulating and paving it.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVI: 120–21.

" The common council resolves to open 14th St. from The Bowery to the East River.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVI: 128.

" The common council instructs a committee to look into the practicability of building, around the wings of the city hall, a wide area enclosed by a light iron railing.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVI: 130. The present area and railing seem to answer this description.

" A resolution is passed by the common council for numbering the houses in Elizabeth St.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVI: 130.

27 "A quarry of granite, equal if not superior in point of beauty and quality to the Boston granite, has recently been discovered on this island, on land belonging to John J. Astor, about two and a half miles from the City Hall. Specimens have been broken out and subjected to the operation of the tool, and found to work well. The quarry is extensive and will afford any quantity that may be required for building uses."—N. Y. Eve. Post, F 27, 1827.

" "The Arcade [see My 20, 1826].—The workmen are about 1827 Feb. 27 giving the finishing stroke to this extensive and elegant establishment. . . . The building is 170 feet long, extending through the block from Maiden Lane to John-street; 57 feet wide; and three stories high. There is a descent of about three feet from John-street to Maiden Lane. The front upon Maiden Lane, is an alcove, of white marble; that upon John-street is also an alcove, rough cast, in imitation of white marble. Substantial and elegant iron gates and railings will secure each front in the night time. The building is divided into 80 compartments, 40 of which are stores, 10 upon each side on the ground floor, and a like number upon each side of the terraces running through the centre, around the front of which is a light but sufficiently substantial iron railing. . . . The building is lighted by 40 skylights of 4 by 8 feet, in addition to the light from the open ends. At night it will be lighted by gas, and elegant chandeliers . . . It has been built jointly by Messrs. Hayden & Timmins, of this city, and Mr. Topping, of Philadelphia. The cost is something above $100,000. . . ."—Com. Adv., F 27, 1827.

The building will be opened on March 1. Many of the stores "are fitting up in good taste. . . . the rooms are to be illuminated by 100 extra large gas burners, the passage by chandeliers, and the vestibules from lamps supported by tripods. The two fronts are in good Grecian taste. . . ."—N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., F 27, 1827. For detailed description after it was completed and occupied, see Goodrich, Picture of N. Y. (1828), 425–26. It evidently was not successful, as, on Feb. 13, 1830, it was to be sold the following Monday at public auction at the Tontine Coffee House.—N. Y. Mirror, VII: 255.

28 The Baltimore and Ohio Railroad is chartered.—Laws of Maryland (1827), chap. 123. The corner-stone of the roadbed was laid at Baltimore on July 4, 1828.—McMaster, Hist. of the People of the U. S., V: 144.

" St. John's Chapel "has been altered and enlarged in the interior so as to furnish about forty additional pews. The roof is now supported by five Corinthian pillars; the desk and the pulpit are removed to the end of the building, and the chancel which is elevated above the pews is in front. . . .

"The Vestry of Trinity Church . . . intend, as we understand, to place a handsome iron railing in front of the church, and we hope the proprietors of the square will surround it with a railing of the same description. St. John's Square will then vie in elegance with any square in any of the cities of our country."—N. Y. Eve. Post, F 28, 1827. See 1829.

Mar. 1 The legislature provides for cancelling the debts of the N. Y. Hist. Soc., provided the society reduces them to $5,000.—Laws of N. Y. (1827), chap. 51. See also N. Y. Eve. Post, Mr 14, 1827.

" The first number of the Morning Chronicle is issued. It is edited by Messrs. Roberts, Baldwin, Brooks, and Lawson.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Mr 3, 1827.

9 A vessel with provisions for the Greeks sails from New York. "The cargo is said to be worth about $18,000, including the freight and insurance, which have been paid. It consists principally of corn meal, flour, rice, and the like articles."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Mr 9, 1827.

12 The superintendent of repairs is directed to have the buildings in the lower part of Nassau St. regularly numbered.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVI: 153.

17 On the successful establishment of the N. Y. Gas Light Co. to operate below Grand St. (see O 30, 1826; Mr 10, 1828), a new company is incorporated, the American Gas Light Co., for the purpose of lighting the city north of the line prescribed for the northern limits of the former company's operations.—Laws of N. Y. (1827), chap. 81; and see M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVI: 391–94, 438. This second company, in July, 1827, entered into a contract with the corporation of the city, engaging to light with gas the public lamps, etc., as provided in their charter, on certain conditions. This company, however, took no steps toward fulfilling its contract, and it expired by its own limitation on May 1, 1830. During the existence of the contract, the vice-president and the secretary of the company and a majority of the directors associated their names with other individuals and petitioned the legislature to grant them a charter under the title of the Manhattan Gas Light Co. This was granted on Feb. 26, 1830 (q.v.).—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIX: 316.

19 The legislature incorporates the "New York Female Asylum Society for Lying-in Women."—Laws of N. Y. (1827), chap. 90.

Mar. 22 ". . . As if the walks and cross-walks with which the park has long been surrounded and intersected, were not enough in all conscience, some new diagonal walks have been cut, and a huge turnpike constructed leading direct from the lower gates to the steps of the City Hall. The bed of this road is made of lime and sand and broken brick bats, covered with a coarse gravel . . ."—Com. Adv., Mr 22, 1827.

23 The legislature passes an act "to provide for the building an Asylum for the Deaf and Dumb in the City of New-York." It appropriates $10,000 for the erection of the asylum in New York or Brooklyn, provided the directors of the Institution for the Deaf and Dumb raise the same amount for the same purpose.—Laws of N. Y. (1827), chap. 97. See Je 4.

26 The common council reserves, for a public market-place, the ground bounded by Goerck, Rivington, Stanton, and Mangin Sts., and authorises the market committee to erect a market-house there, at an expense not exceeding $2,000.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVI: 172–73. See S 10.

" The common council resolves "that it be referred to the Committee on the Jail and Bridewell to enquire into the expediency and propriety of removing the Jail and Bridewell and clearing the Park and circum-adjacent grounds of the existing incumbrances."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVI: 199. See D 1.

30 The legislature incorporates the "Manhattanville Free School" in the Twelfth Ward.—Laws of N. Y. (1827), chap. 132.

Apr. 2 The legislature incorporates the trustees of the "Yorkville School," in the Twelfth Ward. This is a village school in the section formerly known as the Harlem Common Lands.—Laws of N. Y. (1827), chap. 144; ibid. (1849), chap. 147.

It also incorporates another village school called the "Harlem School."—Ibid. (1827), chap. 149.

6 The legislature passes an act for the erection of the Thirteenth Ward from the Tenth Ward, and the erection of the Fourteenth Ward from the Sixth and Eighth Wards.—Laws of N. Y. (1827), chap. 163.

9 The common council accepts from George Rapelye a deed of cession for so much of 16th, 17th, and 18th Sts. as pass through his premises between Fitzroy Road and the Hudson River.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVI: 219.

13 The city's tax bill this year, authorised this day by the legislature, is $224,000, plus a further sum for the support of the common schools, etc., and also $176,000 for other specified purposes.—Laws of N. Y. (1827), chap. 220.

14 The legislature passes an act authorising the extension of Lafayette Place northward "from Art-street through the plot of ground made by the intersection of Broadway, Art-street and Eighth-street, to the southwesterly side of Eighth-street," thus modifying the Commissioners' Plan of 1807.—Laws of N. Y. (1827), chap. 268. An assessment was made accordingly (Index to Assessment Rolls, Vol. I), after action by the common council on Dec. 17 (M. C. C., 1784–1831, XVI: 636).

16 The legislature appoints commissioners to meet commissioners named by the state of New Jersey, to agree upon the territorial limits and the consequent jurisdiction of the two states.—Laws of N. Y. (1827), chap. 299. See F 5, 1834.

" The legislature incorporates the "Harlaem River Canal Co.," a stock company, which is thereby authorised to make a canal in the Twelfth Ward, "from Spiten deuvel creek to Harlaem river, from and to such points and places as the said directors shall deem most expedient and advantageous; and such number of basins, connected therewith, as may be necessary; and to improve the navigation of Harlaem river, so as to afford to vessels, boats and other freighting craft, which shall traverse the land canal and river, a secure and easy navigation from the said Spiten-deuvel creek to and along the Harlaem river into the East river; . . ."—Laws of N. Y. (1827), chap. 319; amended by ibid. (1836), chap. 333. See Jl 16.

20 This is the copyright date of the Goodrich Plan of the city, which is reproduced and described as Pl. 99, Vol. III.

23 The common council accepts from John Ireland and others a cession of the following streets in Greenwich Village: Horatio St. from Greenwich St. to its termination at Greenwich Lane at 13th St.; Jane Street from Greenwich Lane to high-water mark of the Hudson River; Asylum Street from the Great Kill Road to Jane St.; and so much of Bank St. as passes through their grounds.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVI: 240–41.

1827 Apr. 30 The common council goes into mourning for the late Rufus King, by the usual mode of wearing crape on the left arm for 30 days.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVI: 259. King died on April 29.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ap 30, 1827.

" The common council resolves to purchase two waggons instead of bell carts for collecting garbage.—M.C.C. (1784–1831), XVI: 259–60.

May — Describing a fire in New York at about this time, a traveller says: "On the top of the City Hall, . . . a fire-warden or watchman is constantly stationed, whose duty when the alarm is given, is to hoist a lantern at the extremity of a long arm attached to the steeple, and to direct it towards the fire, as a sort of beacon, to instruct the engines what course to steer. . . ." He adds: ". . . the engines were placed along the streets in a line, at the distance of about two hundred feet from one another, and reaching to the bank of the East River . . . The suction hose of the last engine in the line, or that next the stream, being plunged into the river, the water was drawn up, and then forced along a leathern hose or pipe to the next engine, and so on, till at the tenth link in this curious chain, it came within range of the fire. . . ."—Travels in North Am. in 1827 and 1828, by Capt. Basil Hall, I: 20–21 (Edinburgh, 1829).

1 At this time, there were 3,262 city lamps and gas-lights.

The city watch consisted of 468 men, 6 captains, and 12 assistants.—Goodrich, Picture of N. Y. (1828), 135.

" The merchants' exchange, on Wall St. (see L. M. R. K., III: 925), is opened for business.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ap 30 and My 1, 1827. It was not completed until July. It stood on the south side of the street embracing 115 ft. of the block front between William and Hanover Sts. It had two storeys and attic above an elevated basement, and extended 150 ft. south to Exchange St., where there was a frontage of 114 ft. The front on Wall St. was of Westchester marble. The first and second storeys were of the Ionic order, from the temple of Pallas Minerva, at Prigue, in Iona; a recessed elliptical portico 40 feet wide was introduced in front. A screen of four columns and two antae, each 27 ft. high and 3 ft. 4 in. in diameter above the base, composed of a single block of marble, extended across the foot of the portico, supporting an entablature of six ft. in height, on which rested the third storey, making a height of 60 ft. from the ground. The principal entrance to the rotunda and exchange-room was by a flight of ten marble steps, 27½ feet long, with a pedestal at each end. On ascending to the portico three doors opened to offices. The vestibule was of the Ionic order, from the little Ionic Temple of Illysus. The exchange-room, which was the rotunda, was 75 ft. long, 55 ft. wide, and 45 ft. high, to which were attached four principal rooms, and, in the rear of the rotunda, another used for the auction sales of real estate, shipping, and stocks. M. E. Thompson was the architect.—Goodrich, Picture of N. Y. (1828), 206; Hardie, The Description of the City of N. Y. (1827), 333–36; N. Y. Mirror, VII: 89 (S 26, 1829); N. Y. Annual Register (1830), 208; descrip. of Pl. 110, III: 614.

The cupola was used for a "telegraph" station, where signals were exchanged with the signal-poles on Staten Island. The post-office for years occupied the basement (see descrip. of Pl. 115, III: 618). For view, see Pls. No. 110 and 115, frontispiece of Goodrich (vide supra), and the Peabody views. The building was erected by the Merchants' Exchange Company, which was incorporated in 1823, with a capital of $1,000,000.—Belden, New-York. Past, Present & Future, 62. It was destroyed in the fire of 1835 (q. v.).—Costello, Our Firemen, 276. A new exchange was begun in 1836 (q. v.).

" The Chamber of Commerce held its first meeting, in this month, in its new offices, in the merchants' exchange. Its headquarters remained here until the fire of 1835.—Bishop, The Chronicle of 150 years. The Chamber of Commerce of the State of N. Y. (1918), 55 et seq.

" The "New York Stock and Exchange Board" (organized in 1792), having secured quarters in the merchants' exchange when it was ready for occupancy in 1827, remained there until the building burned in 1835.

Then they took a room temporarily at "Howard's Hotel," No. 8 Broad St. (This was the Exchange Hotel, kept by the Howards—see N. Y. As It Is, 1839, p. 186.) A portion of its site is included in the site of the present Stock Exchange building.

On December 23, 1835, a room was engaged in the basement of "John Warren's building."

From 1836 to 1842, the "Board" occupied the second floor of one of the Jauncey buildings on the site of the present 43 Wall St. These buildings were removed in 1849, and Jauncey Court was constructed on the site. May 1

From 1842 to 1854 the "Board" occupied "the large hall over the Reading Room in the New Merchants Exchange building, which covered the block bounded by Wall, Hanover, and William Streets and Exchange Place."

From 1854 to 1856, it occupied the top floor of the old Corn Exchange Bank building, at the corner of William and Beaver Sts., on the site of the present building of the same name.

In 1856, the "Board" moved into a room in what was known as Lord's Court, which had its main approach at 25 William St., another at 53 Beaver St., and a third at 50 Exchange Place; and remained there until 1865, when it moved into its own building on Broad St.

On Jan. 29, 1863, the title of the "New York Stock and Exchange Board" was changed to the "New York Stock Exchange."—The New York Stock Exchange, by Francis L. Eames, president (1894), 27–50; and see 1865 and 1901.

The American Hotel is opened at 229 Broadway, fronting the Park.—Com. Adv., My 2, 1827; and descrip. of Pl. 100, III: 592. See also Duer's Reminiscences, 40. 2

The Nat. Acad. of Design holds its first anniversary celebration, an address being delivered by Sam'l F. B. Morse, its president. For the text of this, see Cummings' Historic Annals of the Academy 45 et seq. 3

Mayor Paulding lays before the common council a letter from Philip Hone regarding four granite cannon balls sent by Capt. John B. Nicolson, of the U. S. S. "Ontario," for "the use of the Corporation." Hone's letter, dated April 24, says he has received the shot from Nicolson, who suggests that they "will form a handsome and appropriate Ornament for the square Columns at the lower entrance of the Park," adding: "They were shipped from the Archipelago in the Month of February last and have now arrived here via Boston." Hone says he intends "to get them from on board the Vessel tomorrow [April 25] and to present them to the Corporation, in order that Capt[n] Nicolsons wish may be gratified as to their future destination." He quotes from a letter from Nicolson, dated at Rhodes: " 'I have brought from the Island of Rhodes, four Granite shot or Balls made from what is supposed to be the ruins of Troy,' " and adds: "As Rhodes was once the most celebrated Commercial City in the World from which emanated the first Commercial Code, I think these memorials of a place so renowned, worthy of being placed in the first Commercial City in America . . ." 7

Mayor Paulding states that the shot are "in possession of M[r] Roome Superintendent of Repairs." The subject is therefore "referred to the Committee on Lands & Places with authority."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVI: 264. For a chronological history of the Park fence, see descriptive catalogue of the Eno prints, pub. by the N. Y. P. L. See, further, N 17, 1847.

A report is made to the common council that there are 60 wharves and piers, belonging entirely or in part to the city, between the state prison and the Battery on the North River, and between the Battery and North St. on the East River; and that the value of this property, including the bulkheads connected with them, exceeds $1,000,000. This brings about a need for a superintendent of wharves. Accordingly, the council takes measures to create such an office.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVI: 284–85. 14

A map of Wall St. from Broadway to Front St., by E. W. Bridges, bears this date. See map No. 284 in bureau of topography, borough president's office. 15

Garden Street, between William St. and Pearl St., is to be called Exchange Place henceforth; and houses thereon are to be numbered.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVI: 291. 21

The common council orders that the name of Cheapside St. be changed to Hamilton St.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVI: 298. "

It is ordered that the houses in Fulton St. be renumbered.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVI: 313.

The common council adopts a resolution to remove the horse-market to the corner of Fourth Ave. and 86th St.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVI: 314. "

Announcement is made that the "Theatre Broadway—Late Circus" will be opened on May 31. "The appearance of the house will be entirely changed—an airy and convenient pit will be thrown 29

1827 May 29 across the circle, which may be, from its elevation, styled the most commodious in New York."—N. Y. Eve. Post, My 29, 1827. See also L. M. R. K., III: 983, under "City Assembly Rooms." See, further, Ap 22, 1829.

June 4 The common council orders that the corporation counsel make out a lease of the house built by the United States, commonly called the boat-house, on the west pier at Whitehall, for the use of the United States during the pleasure of the board.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVI: 319–20.

" The common council resolves to lease for 21 years to the N. Y. Institution for the Instruction of the Deaf and Dumb lot No. 59 of the Common Lands, covering about 4¼ acres, bounded by Fourth and Fifth Aves., 49th and 50th Sts., on which to erect the building for which the legislature appropriated $10,000 provided the directors raise an equal sum for that purpose (see Mr 23). The lease is to be dated May 1, 1827.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVI: 320–21. See, however, Jl 16.

" The common council accepts from Nicholas Stuyvesant and others a deed of cession of 12th St. from Stuyvesant St. to Avenue C, and of 10th St. from Stuyvesant St. to Avenue D.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVI: 321.

7 "The owners of property facing St. John's Park, with a praiseworthy liberality, have subscribed to have the Park enclosed within an iron railing and the walk flagged, and the Park itself put in order. This will make it altogether one of the finest squares in the Union."—N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., Je 7, 1827. While it is stated in Vol. III, p. 608, that Hudson Sq. was called St. John's Park after 1840, it appears here bearing that name as early as 1827. See, further, Je 27, 1828.

18 The common council is informed that the portrait of Gov. Clinton, by George Catlin, is finished; also that the portrait of Gov. Yates, by John Vanderlyn, is nearly finished.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVI: 339. See Jl 16.

29 The new synagogue in Elm St. built by the German and Polish Jews is dedicated.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Jl 2, 1827.

July 1 The first number of a Spanish weekly paper, El Redactor Espagnol, printed here.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Jl 1, 1827.

4 The act passed by the New York legislature in 1817 to abolish slavery in this state goes into effect.—McMaster, Hist. of the People of the U. S., V: 192; Annals of N. Am., 558.

" The supreme court room in the city hall is appropriated for the meeting of the N. Y. State Society of the Cincinnati.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVI: 357.

14 The second Trinity Church, which was consecrated in 1790 (q.v.), was thus described as it appeared in 1827, when a view of it was published: "This building is inferior in size to the old one, being one hundred and four feet long, and seventy-two wide. The steeple is about the same height as the old one; but stands on the east, instead of the west end, as was the case with the former church, and is still the case with St. Paul's Chapel; this method having been adopted with the view of bringing the chancel, and the great altar-window, agreeably to ancient ideas of propriety, on the east end. The style of the building is plain Gothic. It has galleries on the two sides and on the east end,—a part of the last of which forms the organ loft, in which is placed a fine organ, built in London, soon after the church was finished. The galleries are surrounded by square, panelled columns, directly over each of which rises a clustered Gothic column to the roof. The ceiling consists of three arches over the nave, and one over each gallery. From the centre arch are suspended three large and elegant cut glass chandeliers, and four smaller ones under each gallery. The windows are long, finished at the top with the pointed Gothic arch, and glazed with very small panes. The Communion Table is placed against the western wall of the church, and above it is one of the largest windows in the United States. It is Gothic, with three compartments, and contains one thousand and thirty-nine panes of glass. The desk and pulpit are directly in front of the chancel, without the rails. The church is ornamented with a number of handsome marble monuments, among which are one to the memory of General Alexander Hamilton, and one to that of the late Jacob Sherred, Esq. the munificent patron of the Episcopal Theological Seminary.

"The cemetery in which the church is erected, is one of the most ancient in this city, having been the resting place of successive generations for upwards of one hundred and thirty years. The steeple contains a ring of eight fine bells."—N. Y. Mirror Jl 14, 1827. See also descrip. of Pl. 122, III: 629; and L. M. R. K., III: 934.

July 14 A lease of land in the Twelfth Ward having been given to the N. Y. Institution for the Instruction of the Deaf and Dumb (see Je 4), the finance committee now offers a resolution, which the board adopts, "that the Counsel draw a deed of Release to the Directors" of the institution "of One acre of the aforesaid Leased Lot, in fee, for the consideration of One dollar . . ."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVI: 371–72. Such deed was given on Sept. 24.—Goodrich, Picture of N. Y. (1828), 343; Man. Com. Coun. (1870), 761. For the corner-stone, see O 19; see also 1850.

16 The committee of arts and sciences reports to the common council that a bust of the late Pierre C. Van Wyck, a former recorder of the city, has been procured at a cost of $250.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVI: 382. This may be the bust, described as of "white plaster," "life size," "artist unknown," which, in 1909, was in the governor's room.—Cat. of Works of Art belonging to the City of N. Y. (1909), 112. The payment was made on July 30, when payment of $400 was also made for the portrait of Gov. Yates and its frame (see Je 18), and $150 for the portrait of Philip Hone (see Ja 2).—Journal D, 102, in comptroller's office; Cat. of Works of Art, etc., 17.

" The common council adopts a resolution granting the Haerlem Canal Co. the right to construct a canal from Harlem Creek to Manhattanville, provided the company comply with certain conditions, one of which is to deposit $30,000 with the corporation as security.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVI: 387; XVII: 43–44, 110–11. For the commencement of excavations, see My 8, 1828.

" Chester Bailey, proprietor of Washington Hall, a hotel on the s. e. cor. of Broadway and Reade St., announces extensive alterations in the house, and its intended opening on Aug. 5.—Com. Adv., Jl 16, 1827.

20 Extensive alterations are also made in the City Hotel, including the addition of two more storeys. For description of these improvements, see Com. Adv., Jl 20, 1827. See, further, My 1, 1828.

24 Workmen discover at the intersection of Wall and William Sts. "the covering of an old well [see reference to pump, Je 25, 1770] which was filled up that the statue of the elder Pitt [see S 7, 1770] might be erected on the spot. In order that the pedestal might not be displaced by the sinking of the earth, a strong arch of brick was turned over the mouth of the well and on this the pedestal was placed."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Jl 24 and 25, 1827. For an early mention of this well, see My 24, 1701.

30 An index of the laws of the corporation and of the state costs the city $200.—Journal D, 102, in comptroller's office.

" A deed of cession of 9th and 10th Sts., between Broadway and The Bowery, from the trustees of the Sailor's Snug Harbor, is presented to the common council, and referred to the counsel of the board.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVI: 408. On Aug. 27, the cession was accepted.—Ibid., XVI: 449.

" The common council resolves that Nassau St. be widened between Cedar St. and Maiden Lane, and that Liberty St. be widened between Broadway and the north-east corner of premises near William St.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVI: 417.

" The common council adopts a resolution to open Vestry St. between Hudson and Greenwich Sts.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVI: 421.

Aug. 27 The common council orders that Commerce St. be opened and so continued as to form a junction with Barrow St. at its east end.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVI: 440.

" The common council resolves to change to Cliff St. the name of the remaining portion of Skinner St., between Frankfort St. and its easterly termination.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVI: 442. Skinner St. was the name of the northern end of the present Cliff St. between Ferry and Hague Sts.—L. M. R. K., III: 1009.

" The common council resolves to cause an "Iron tube" to be sunk in the park in the rear of the city hall for the purpose of obtaining good water for use in that building.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVI: 456.

29 "Whilst the papers are speaking lavishly of the enterprise, taste and assiduity of other managers, it is but justice to say something in praise of the spirit, activity and boldness of Mr. Sandford. Since the close of last season, he has levelled the old Lafayette [see Jl 4, 1826] to the ground, and re-erected it on the most extensive scale. It is now the largest and most capacious Theatre

1827 Aug. 29 in the city. Though not entirely finished, yet the interior may challenge any comparison for neatness convenience and architectural arrangement. The lobbies are unusually wide and commodious. The stage is not only the largest in this country, but it exceeds any one we know, unless perhaps the Italian Opera House in London, be excepted. . . . In touching upon this house, we ought on larger grounds, to point out the immense obligations which this quarter of the city owes to Mr. Sandford. His spirit and adventure has vastly increased the value of property, and added to the respectability of the locality. What, with his numerous private buildings and the influence of his Theatre, he has done more for the Canal-street district, than almost any individual we could name."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ag 29, 1827, citing Enquirer. See also ibid., S 28 and 29, 1827. The rebuilt theatre was opened on Sept. 29.—Ibid., O 2, 1827. A view of it is shown in an engraving by A. J. Davis, in Emmet collection, item No. 11289. See, further, Ap 8, 1828.

Sept. 1 The Journal of Commerce, daily and semi-weekly, is established. —Goodrich, Picture of N. Y. (1828), 393. It is now (1926) the only survivor of the morning newspapers in existence in New York at that time.—North, The Newspaper and Periodical Press, 62, 99.

4 "Miss Livermore, the female preacher, who preached in the House of Representatives some time since, is now in this city."—N. Y. Eve. Post, S 4, 1827.

10 The new market on Rivington St. (see Mr 26), now completed, is named Manhattan Market by the common council.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVI: 466; L. M. R. K., III: 959. The name of this market, according to Thos. F. De Voe, was taken from that of a knoll at this place called "Manhattan Island," which was surrounded by salt marshes, and, at very high tides, partly covered with sea-water. This was between Houston and 3d Sts., and Lewis St. ran through the centre of it.—Market-Book, 524; L. M. R. K., III: 959, 966.

" The common council passes a resolution that all that part of the old Boston Post Road extending from 125th St. to Harlem Bridge be abandoned by the city as a public highway.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVI: 469–70.

" The common council accepts from Nicholas W. Stuyvesant a cession of 9th St. between Stuyvesant St. and Second Ave., and that part of 8th St. lying between First Ave. and the East River which belongs to him; also from other owners the part of 9th St. between First Ave. and Ave. D.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVI: 477–78.

" The common council resolves to confer with owners of property in Jacob St. (see L. M. R. K., III: 1003) as to terms upon which their claims to some supposed mineral waters in that swampy section may be adjusted, so that boring may be begun (see 1827). —N. Y. Eve. Post, Ag 29, 1827; M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVI: 488–89; Pl. 174, and pp. 99–115, Vol. III. On Oct. 8, it was resolved that Jacob St. be enclosed at both ends with an iron railing, and taken for public purposes.—Ibid., XVI: 544. On Feb. 11, 1828, the proprietors of the mineral spring in Jacob St. offered to sell it to the corporation. Referred to finance committee. —Ibid., XVI: 727. The board found it inexpedient to make the purchase.—Ibid., XVI: 765–66.

" The common council accepts from Gen. Philip Van Cortlandt a bust he has made of his father, the late Pierre Van Cortlandt, former lieutenant-governor, and adopts a resolution reciting the patriotic services of each.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVI: 489–91. The bust is not included in the Cat. of Works of Art Belonging to the City of N. Y. (1909); its whereabouts is unknown.

" Canal Street Park, the title to which was acquired by the city through the Dongan and Montgomerie Charters, is enlarged by purchases made on this date and on Nov. 22.—Prendergast, Record of Real Estate, 49, citing Liber Deeds, CCXXVI: 335; CCXXVIII: 265; and see L. M. R. K., III: 968–69.

11 During the session of the legislature commencing on this day, the state statutes were extensively revised. On Dec. 10, the secretary of state deposited, in accordance with the copyright law, the title of the book: Part of the Revised Statutes . . ., consisting of Chapters 6, 8, 9, 10, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17 and 18. This is printed in Laws of N. Y. (1827), Vol. II, after p. 22.

24 The common council permits the erection of a liberty-pole at the cor. of Sixth Ave. and 5th St.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVI: 500.

" The common council resolves that so much of Garden St. as lies between William and Broad Sts. be named Exchange Place, as the newly opened street at the rear of the merchants' exchange is named.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVI: 402, 505. Sept. 24

" The common council resolves that Green St. be opened and extended to the grounds of the Sailors' Snug Harbor.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVI: 506.

" The common council orders that 9th St. from Broadway to Sixth Ave. be opened.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVI: 507.

" The committee on gas is instructed by the common council to have the two large lamps in front of the merchants' exchange lighted with gas at the public expense.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVI: 517.

" The committee on the canal celebration, in recognition of the fact that lithography originated in Bavaria, having presented to the king of Bavaria a copy of Colden's Memoir, which was illustrated with many lithographs, the king sends his thanks accompanied by a fine collection of lithographs, which the common council now accepts.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVI: 513–16; Colden's Memoir, 515–16; descrip. of Pl. 95-a, III: 584. A similar interchange was made with the king of Sweden.—Ibid., XVIII: 271–72.

" The common council investigates the expediency of providing a place of security for the few debtors in close confinement and of erecting a fireproof building as a depository of all the records which are evidence of title and property in this city, the records in the register's office, the supreme court, register of chancery cases, etc. being in constant danger of fire in the city hall.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVI: 518. See, further, Mr 9, 1829; Jl 12, 1830.

28 "For some time past, the workmen have been busily employed in taking down the old fence, on Broadway, in front of the New-York Hospital, lowering the ground, and putting up a new fence based with Boston granite. The improvement which is about being made, will enable the public to have a perfect view of this splendid edifice, which has been obscured by the high ground and small buildings, which have been for a long time suffered to remain in that part of Broadway."—Com. Adv., S 28, 1827.

Oct. 1 A number of gentlemen meeting at the French Church in Pine St. decide to found a new P. E. church to be called the "Church of the Ascension."—N. Y. Eve. Post, O 1, 1827.

8 The common council resolves to open Fifth Ave. from 90th to 106th Sts; 86th St. between East River and Eighth Ave.; and Sixth Ave. from 21st St. to the Bloomingdale Road.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVI: 538.

13 "Workmen are now employed in demolishing the wooden fence around the Middle Dutch Church. In its stead will be erected a substantial iron railing. Nassau Street . . . is to be widened from Cedar Street to Maiden-lane."—N. Y. Mirror, O 13, 1827.

17 The legislature provides for the publication of a map and atlas of the state, to be compiled by David H. Burr, and approved by the surveyor-general and comptroller. Burr is to be compensated by a gift of the engraved plates after he has supplied 50 copies of the map to the state and a copy to each town.—Laws of N. Y. (1827), chap. 2; ibid. (1829), chap. 30. Burr's atlas was published in 1829.

19 The corner-stone of the building of the N. Y. Institution for the Instruction of the Deaf and Dumb (see Ap 15, 1817) is laid on the south side of 50th St., between Fourth and Fifth Aves.—N. Y. Eve. Post, O 20, 1827; N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., O 22, 1827; Goodrich, Picture of N. Y. (1828), 343. For the dedication of the building, see S 30, 1829 (q. v.); see also L. M. R. K., III: 955.

22 The common council permits "A B C Durand Wright & Co" to borrow the "likeness of General Jackson for the purpose of making an engraving therefrom . . ."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVI: 550.

25 "New York Gallery of Fine Arts, No. 100 Broadway. It has long been manifest to all the patrons of the Fine Arts that some suitable building is requisite for the purpose of displaying the works of the ancient as well as modern masters, and for the general encouragement of science. To facilitate so desirable an object, Mr. Michael Henry has . . . commenced a building as above, which will be finished in a few days, and which we are convinced, will prove well adapted for this purpose. He has, we understand, concluded to devote a room 90 feet long by 20 wide, with an opaque light, which will show to just advantage the work of those masters whose productions have heretofore been shown to every disadvantage—thus producing the desirable purpose for both purchaser and disposer, the want of which has been so long and generally complained of."—N. Y. Eve. Post, O 25, 1827, citing Enquirer.

1827 Oct. 26 The city acquires by condemnation proceedings one-third of the land comprising Washington Parade Ground, at Fifth Ave. and Waverly Pl. (8,906 acres).—Prendergast, Record of Real Estate. The Parade Ground later became Washington Square.—L. M. R. K., III: 972. See N 19.

30 Masonic Hall, on Broadway (see Je 24, 1826), is dedicated.—N. Y. Spy, N 3, 1827. It was later known as Gothic Hall.—L. M. R. K., III: 985. See Ap 20, 1836; My 26, 1856.

Nov. 5 The common council receives a copy of a resolution of the state senate "That the Clerk of the Senate cause the Portrait of Christopher Columbus presented to the Senate by Mrs Maria Farmer in 1784 to be removed from the City of New York, and put up in some suitable place in the Senate Chamber." This is referred to the committee on repairs.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVI: 576. There is also entered in the minutes under this date the text of the entry in the senate journal of March 12, 1784 (q.v.), including the senate's acceptance of the gift at that time.—Ibid., XVI: 586–87. For the committee's report, see Nov. 19.

" The common council resolves to procure for each member of the board a map of the city lately published by Goodrich.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVI: 577.

" The corporation counsel informs the common council that the supreme court, on Oct. 26, confirmed the report of the commissioners relative to forming a public place in the Ninth Ward (Washington Parade Ground), bounded by 6th St. on the north-east, Wooster St. on the south-east, 4th St. on the south-west, and McDougall St. on the north-west; and closing Thompson St. from 4th St. to 6th St., and so much of 5th St. as is opened between McDougall and Wooster Sts.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVI: 578. See Ja 29; N 19.

" The common council orders that awning-posts must be made conformable to a plan approved by the street commissioner.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVI: 584.

6 A friend in a distant part of New England writes to Editor Coleman of the Post:. "I am waiting with anxiety the result of your electon. The course which may be taken by New-York will have a prodigious effect elsewhere. If the city gives a large and decided majority against Adams, even New-England will be shaken. Boston will be aghast, and many will be preparing for a shelter from the coming storm. I must repeat the hope, that you may have succeeded in the city by an overwhelming majority, for, be assured, if such is the result, the effect will be felt far beyond your limits. Never was there such folly as Ebony and Topaz; and the people, yea, the Adams people themselves perceive the ridicule of it."—N. Y. Eve. Post, N 13, 1827. The election, for senators and assemblymen, took place on Nov. 5, 6, and 7, and the Jackson ticket won by a majority of 5,000.—Ibid., N 6–9, 1827. See N 11.

11 A New Englander writes concerning the New York election (see N 6): "I cannot sleep without congratulating you on the unparalleled victory in your city. You must know that the effect of this election travels far beyond your limits. It was not so much eleven assemblymen and two senators gained to the legislature of New York, (although that is important,) as this decided demonstration of popular opinion in the greatest city of the union —a city which may well be called its heart, and if wisdom be the type, its head. The coalition must now be convinced that public opinion will run clear and transparent at last, although the waters of the fountain head may be defiled. The city of New York produces the same effect on political opinion, as her merchants do on the general market, or her capitalists in establishing the price of stock. Your city operates on the whole confederacy, and even the election of charter officers produces some effect abroad. Your success is all important; it puts the battle in our power. Yes—even the Jacksonians in New England, who maintain their lonely posts in the heart of the enemy's country, may now march under the banner of the great city, (and, I hope, of the great state,) with Jackson for commander, to a victory as certain, as overwhelming, and as glorious as that of New Orleans."—N. Y. Eve. Post, N 17, 1827.

13 "St. Patrick's trustees, at a meeting held Nov. 13, 1827, invited the trustees of St. Peter's and St. Mary's to a joint meeting, to consider the propriety of purchasing a new burying-ground. Accordingly, on May 14, 1828, a committee of the members from each of these boards was appointed to examine Mr. Dennis Doyle's place on the Middle Road [now occupied by St. Patrick's Cathedral, Fifth Ave. and 50th St.]. A cursory examination would have revealed the nature of the soil, which rendered it entirely unfit for burial purposes. Fortunately, however, the trustees did not make any examination, and thus secured for St. Patrick's Cathedral one of the most beautiful and valuable sites in the United States."—Farley, Hist. of St. Patrick's Cathedral (1908), 112. Thomas Addis Emmet dies.—See N. Y. Eve. Post, N 15, 1827; and inscription on monument in St. Paul's churchyard. On Nov. 16, the common council passed resolutions of respect for his memory, and agreed to wear the usual badge of mourning for 30 days in his honour.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVI: 587–88. See also Francis, Old N. Y., 358–59; and N 21, infra. 14

The common council permits the "Medical Society of the City and County of N. Y." to hold meetings in a room in "the Old Alms House" (the N. Y. Institution).—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVI: 591. This appears to have been the last permit of this kind before the building's alteration for the use of the courts.—See L. M. R. K., III: 973. 19

The committee on repairs reports as follows regarding the Columbus portrait (see N 5): ". . . the Portrait alluded to is now hanging in the Street Commissioners Office and there can be no question of returning it if requested, but from the history given of the Portrait by Mrs Farmer that it had been in possession of her family for more than 150 years there is great probability of its being a Copy of an Original Portrait of that great Navigator —and as it would be extremely gratifying to have the Portrait of the Great Discoverer of this Continent among those in the Gallery of the Corporation, they would suggest the propriety of taking a Copy of the same before it is returned to the Senate." They recommend, and the board adopts a resolution, "that the Clerk of the Common Council under the direction of the Committee on Repairs be directed to procure a Copy of the said Portrait to be painted, to be placed in the Gallery of Portraits in the City Hall and the Original immediately thereafter be transmitted to John F. Bacon Esquire of the Senate at Albany."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVI: 594. "

In 1856, the original, from which this copy was made, as ordered in 1827, hung in the State Library.—See Cat. of the maps, portraits, etc. in the State Library (1856), 145. It was destroyed in the capitol fire in March, 1911.—See Univ. State of N. Y., Bulletin, Je 15, 1915. The copy, painted by Samuel F. B. Morse in 1828, hangs in the city hall.—Cat. of Works of Art Belonging to the City (1909), 18.

Regarding the authenticity of this portrait, Washington Irving wrote in a letter dated "Sunnyside, October 28th, 1851," in part as follows: "There is no portrait extant of Columbus on which thorough reliance can be placed. Most of the portraits given as his, are either too young or have dark hair, whereas his was white by the time he was thirty years of age, or have the ruff, a Flemish fashion which did not come into vogue in the South of Europe until after the death of Columbus, . . ."—From extract printed in cat. of sale of the Geo. S. Hellman collection, at Anderson Galleries, New York, Nov. 26, 1919. See also an address by Chas. P. Daly before the Am. Geographical Soc., Jan. 9, 1893, entitled "Have We a Portrait of Columbus?" pub. in the Bull. of the Am. Geog. Soc., Vol. 25 (1893).

As the proposed widening and straightening of Nassau St. from Cedar St. to Maiden Lane will bring the vaults of the Dutch Church into the street, J. C. Roosevelt is given permission to remove the bodies from the vaults and re-inter them in the cemetery of that church or elsewhere.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVI: 578, 590, 595. "

The common council directs the street com'r to enclose the Washington Parade in "a neat pale fence."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVI: 593. It appoints a collector of assessments "for opening and forming the Washington Parade ground."—Ibid., XVI: 601. See N 5. "

New Yorkers of Irish birth and parentage hold a meeting at Tammany Hall and resolve to erect a monument to the memory of Thos. Addis Emmet.—N. Y. Eve. Post, N 27, 1827. See also ibid., D 3, 1827. 21

The tomb and monument to John Paulding near Peekskill, erected by the city of New York (see D 4, 1826), are dedicated. On Dec. 3, the committee of the common council in charge of erecting them submitted a report on the business and ceremonies connected with the event. The board ordered that the report be published in the newspapers and in a pamphlet, "appending thereto 22

1827 Nov. 22 the proceedings of the Court Martial which found Andre guilty." The board also ordered that a warrant for $1,000 be issued in favour of the chairman of the committee to cover the board's expenses in attending the dedication.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVI: 618–23, 626–27. The builders' account for erecting the monument amounted to $1,233.80.—Ibid., XVI: 762; XVII: 14, 53.

28 William G. Graham, associate editor of the N. Y. Courier & Enquirer, is shot and killed at Weehawken in a duel with a Mr. Barton, son of Dr. Barton of Philadelphia.—Winfield, Hist. of the County of Hudson, N. J. (1874), 228–29. See, further, D 19.

" "The public Law Library, which has been so long talked of and so much longer needed, is, we are told, in a fair way at last of being established. It will probably be placed in the City Hall, in the room appropriated to the United States' Court."—N. Y. Eve. Post, N 28, 1827. See F 11, 1828.

Dec. 1 The Mirror says of the jail and bridewell: "These two beautiful specimens of architecture, constituting such elegant accompaniments to the City-Hall, still maintain their pride of place. We wonder when they will take unto themselves wings and fly."—N. Y. Mirror, D 1, 1827. See Ja 19, 1828.

3 The council resolves to present a gold medal to Gen. Andrew Jackson to commemorate the completion of the "Grand Canal" (the Erie Canal), and their appreciation of his services.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVI: 626. For Jackson's letter of thanks, see ibid., XVII: 179–80.

17 The common council resolves to extend Lafayette Place to 8th St.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVI: 636.

19 A disposition to duelling seems to have possessed the men of New York at this time. Henry Brevoort, in a letter to Washington Irving of this date, says: "The pugnacious character of our citizens still continues. Lately, a Mr Barton of Phil[adelphia] killed a Mr Graham at Hoboken in a duel, provoked by the latter—Graham was assistant editor to Noah & had made himself very obnoxious by his satire upon what Charles King foolishly called 'good society' . . . Since then Dr [David] Hosack sent Cad[wallader] Colden with a challenge to Dr Watts—which produced an apology. Yesterday—a challenge was sent by Mr Henry Eckford to Maxwell (the Dist Atty) the cause of which grew out of the late indictments for conspiracy—Maxwell very properly handed the challenge to the Police. Whether the Shipbuilder intended to use the Broadaxe or the pistol I know not."—Letters of Henry Brevoort to Washington Irving, ed. by Geo. S. Hellman (N. Y., 1916), II: 16.

— In this year, the first edition of Webster's Dictionary was published. Noah Webster, its author, began writing it in 1807, and was in his seventieth year at the time of its completion.

— In this year, Timothy Pitkin published his Political and Civil History of the United States, the first political history of the country. —Winsor, VIII: 475.

— In this year, the U. S. government built, at New York, the ship "Peacock" (18 guns).—The Navy of the U. S. (Wash., 1853).

— The character of the typical court cases coming daily before police magistrates in 1828 and 1829 were described in humorous vein in Skillman's New-York Police Reports, by John B. Skillman (1830). By reason of its scarcity and serious title, doubtless, this work has not found its way into anthologies or bibliographies of early American humour, where it should have a prominent place.

— In The Talisman for 1828 and 1829, reminiscences of New York by Gulian C. Verplanck were published. They were reprinted in the Man. Com. Coun. (1870), 904–21. For his description of "Richmond Hill," see S 27, 1789. The Talisman was a literary annual (1828–30). It was edited by "Francis Herbert," a nom-de-plume which concealed the identity of its three authors, Gulian C. Verplanck, William Cullen Bryant, and Robert C. Sands. The three volumes—all that were published—were reprinted in New York in 1833 under the name Miscellanies, with the names of the authors on the title-pages.—See Literary Annuals and Gift Books by Frederick Winthrop Faxon (Boston, 1912), 52, 69.

— In this year, the third descriptive guide-book for New York was published, the former ones being Mitchill's in 1807 (q.v.), and Blunt's in 1817 (q.v.), 1818 (q.v.), and 1825 (q.v.). Published and copyrighted by Andrew T. Goodrich, he presumably, was its principal author. It is entitled, The Picture of New-York and Stranger's Guide to the Commercial Metropolis of the United States. Of the plan of the city and island which the work contains, the preface says it "was drawn and engraved expressly for the purpose, . . . is considered as the most correct ever issued here of a similar size; comprising, at one view, the ancient limits of the island, and the encroachments since made on the surrounding waters." The Goodrich plan is reproduced and described as Pl. 99, Vol. III. Commencing on p. 136, the text is a reprint of Blunt's 1817 guide (q.v., p. 30 et seq.), but soon becomes original and contemporary. 1828 —

The book begins with an "Historical and Chronological Account of the Origin and Progress of the City of New-York," and was therefore one of the earliest attempts to present the city's record of events in chronological sequence, without, however, the citation of authorities. A 16mo of 492 pages, it contains descriptions and statistics of timely interest, too numerous to mention all in a brief resumé. The city hall with its many offices and galleries is described in detail, as well as all the city departments, and all other public buildings. The Exchange, on Wall St., recently completed; the "telegraph," the churches, colleges, public schools, and seminaries, societies, markets, banks and insurance companies; the commerce of the port, the packet lines, custom-house, and chamber of commerce; prisons and institutions; theatres and public gardens; newspapers, hotels, ferries, gas and water works, fortifications, parks and streets, are all most interestingly described, with historical and statistical details. The lottery, auctions, bookselling trade, tread-mill, and many other special features of the city's life, are given attention, and the book contains several copper-plates showing important buildings and street scenes. See also descrip. of Pl. 99, III: 591. The following extracts will serve as a record of some of the new and contemporary facts presented:

"There are about 73 blocks of made ground on the East River side, from Whitehall to the Dry Dock, and about 50 on the west side of the city, from the Battery to State Prison. The area of the Battery is entirely made ground from State-street; at least, the loose rocks and reefs that originally projected out at this spot, have been deeply buried beneath the earth; and when to the foregoing is added the vast quantity of earth that has been thrown into the Collect, and the adjacent low and marshy grounds, it is apparent that no inconsiderable portion of the city has been redeemed from the water by the persevering industry of man.

". . . the exterior and permanent line, facing the water, around the city, and the piers, should be constructed of solid masonry, similar to the face of the Battery, in lieu of the present unsightly constructions of wood."—Ibid., 143. See also 154.

Referring to the alterations and improvements that have taken place in the city in the past, Goodrich says in part: "The widening of the old streets has caused the greatest alteration in the external aspect of the city, particularly in Maiden-lane, at the corner of Broadway, where the Oswego Market and a group of old wooden buildings stood, on the south side; and also at the intersection of Pearl-street on the east side, where, until 1823, it was hardly wide enough for two carts to pass. . . .

"Another improvement of great importance was the cutting and widening of Fair-street, now Fulton-street, from Cliff-street through to Pearl-street, and thus creating a new thoroughfare from the Hudson to the East River; also the entire demolition of a triangular block of unsightly old brick buildings, called Hanover Square, and occupying the space between Pearl-street, Old-slip, or William-street, and Stone-street, which then extended to Slote-lane, (now Exchange Place.) . . .

"The most tedious and expensive undertaking of a public nature has been the filling up of the great ponds and bodies of fresh water, that formerly covered many acres of what is now the very centre of the city, from Orange-street to Elm-street, and Pearl-street to Grand-street, and on the west side of Broadway, in the rear of St. John's Church, and several blocks on each side of Canal-street, leading from Collect-street to the Hudson River; all this space was formerly covered with water, which in some places was of very considerable depth, and communicated with the East River through Roosevelt-street, and by the present Canal-street with the Hudson, draining a surface of 400 acres of land. Several large hills or mounds of earth that environed this pond, under various names, such as Bayard's Mount, which elevated itself on the site of Grand and Rhynder streets, have all been levelled, and the ground thrown into the ponds. . . .

1828 — "Great labour has also been bestowed in reducing to a proper level that portion of the island near Corlaer's Hook, and in the filling in of a large tract of low land and water lots in that vicinity, and near the ship yards at Manhattan Island. [For the latter locality, see L. M. R. K., III: 966.] . . .

"Since the erection of the Exchange, in Wall-street, the most extensive alterations have been effected in the immedate vicinity, particularly in Garden-street, which has been widened from Broad-street, on the south side, and extended east of William-street, beyond the Exchange, and the whole is now called Exchange Place. In Slote-lane, (now Exchange-street,) which has also been widened and extended east, and thence by an angle to meet Pearl-street, ranges of the most capacious four story buildings have been erected.

"The style of architecture, and the taste of the public, has evidently improved of late years; and the materials now introduced into buildings, such as the eastern white granite, and the marble of West Chester, (of the latter, the Exchange and the U. S. Branch Bank are constructed,) have conduced much to improve the aspect of the city. The brown sand stone of New-Jersey is quite neglected in domestic architecture, compared with its former exclusive use [!].

"Whole streets, such as Wall-street, Pearl-street, Water-street, Broad-street, Garden-street, and many others in the First Ward, that were formerly filled with private dwellings, have changed their character, and are now occupied by warehouses, and places of business of various descriptions, or as Banks, Insurance Offices, Brokers, &c.

"Since the beginning of the present century, there have been erected in this city the Fulton and Washington Markets, the City Hall, the Alms House, Fever Hospital and Penitentiary, the new Cemetery, and many other works of utility and splendor. The various fortifications on the island, and in the harbour, under the management of the general government, have been completed within the same period. . . ."—Ibid., 155–58.

At this time there was no building in the city of sufficient size to contain a large general meeting of citizens.—Ibid., 185.

Goodrich gives the following concerning telegraphs: "A line of telegraphs runs from the Exchange in Wall Street to Sandy Hook. It consists of a pole, rising from the cupola, with two arms, with which 12 different positions can be assumed, the first ten to represent the nine digits, and the cylinder the eleventh, as a separator of words and sentences, and the twelfth to excite attention. The marine or ship signals are thirteen in number, the first ten also standing for the digits and cypher, and the three others denominated first, second and third repeaters. The object of the repeaters is to obviate the necessity of duplicates and triplicates of the same signal. A dictionary of the signals is printed. It is divided into five parts,—the first embracing all the questions and replies requisite between vessels and telegraphic stations, together with the alphabet, and the points of the compass, and occupying the numbers from 1 to 1000; the second part contains sea-phrases; the third part consists of a vocabulary of all the words in the language essential to be used; the fourth is a list of vessels' names; and the fifth a list of countries, ports, cities, and harbours. Much utility has already been derived from the marine signals, by enabling ships to communicate with each other at sea; and on approaching the shore, with the land telegraphs."—Ibid., 209–10. See, further, 1837.

The custom-house, at the cor. of Wall and Nassau Sts. (see L. M. R. K., III: 973, under "City Hall, second"), was described, in this year, as "a plain brick building . . . four stories in height, and stands on the site formerly occupied by the City Hall . . . Before it was applied to its present purpose, it was used as a book store and reading room."—Ibid., 280.

The post-office, in this year, was situated in the basement of the Exchange, on the Exchange Place side. "The windows that front to the interior of the basement display 800 small glazed compartments, or boxes, all numbered, and each rented and paid for at the rate of $4 per annum, by mercantile houses to receive their letters. . . .

"There are several sub-post-offices in the upper parts of the city, where letters may be deposited, and regularly transmitted every hour to Wall-street: for this service two cents on each letter is charged. Subs are, one in Canal-street, near Mercer-street; one in Grand-street. These have no connection with, and are not under the control of the postmaster in this city, but are private establishments for the convenience of the public who live remote from Wall-street." Certain features in the management of the post-office, and statistics of the amount of business transacted are also given.—Ibid., 284. 1828 —

Goodrich describes the New York Hospital buildings as occupying an area bounded by Broadway, Church St., Anthony (Worth) St., and Duane St., 465 ft. long and 450 ft. in width. The grounds were surrounded by a brick wall 10 ft. high. At this time, the buildings stood on a considerable elevation. In front was "an extensive lawn, sloping towards Broadway, with a paved walk and venerable elms on each side." A handsome iron railing and granite columns separated it from the busy street in front. The main edifice was "situated in the centre of the lot, about 200 ft. from Broadway," and was "constructed of gray stone, with a slated roof." It was 124 ft. long in front, its depth was 50 ft. in the centre, and at the wings, which projected on each side, 86 ft. It was three storeys (52 ft.) high besides the basement, with a cupola, which commanded an extensive panoramic view of the entire city. Adjacent to the hospital on the south was a large stone building, formerly occupied as an asylum for the insane; but in 1827 (error for 1826, q. v., Jl 25) a hospital for seamen was commenced, and by 1828, was exclusively appropriated to their use.—Goodrich, Picture of N. Y. (1828), 299–303. The hospital was enlarged in 1804, 1808, and 1841.—Account N. Y. Hosp. (1811); Wilson, Mem. Hist. of N. Y., IV: 407–8. The main building was demolished in 1869 (q. v.). See Pls. 88 and A. 27-c, and pp. 570–71, Vol. III; L. M. R. K., III: 954–55.

The building used for the "Sailors' Snug Harbour" was the Randall mansion, situated on Broadway between 8th and 9th Sts., which, with the property attached to it, had already "become of great value."—Goodrich, 346; Disturnell, N. Y. As It Is, In 1837, 87. For a brief account of this institution, now on Staten Island, see Je 1, 1801, and F 6, 1806. See, further, Ap 19, 1828; My, 1831.

Two private enterprises in art at this period, worthy of note, were Browere's "Gallery of Busts and Statues," soon to be established in New York, and the "Architectural Room" of Ithiel Town and M. E. Thompson, in the Exchange. The latter was described as containing "the most valuable and extensive collection of books and prints, relative to that noble art and science;" while of the architects it was said: They "stand at the head of their profession in this city, and have produced the best specimens of architecture."—Goodrich, 375–76. The name of the sculptor was John Henri Isaac Browere.—See Browere's Life Masks of Great Americans, by Chas. Henry Hart (Doubleday and McClure Co., 1899). Regarding the Town collection, see Cat. of Ancient & Modern Books in the library of the late I. Town . . . sold at auction . . . Sept. 1847 (in N. Y. P. L.).

The principal hotels, at this time, were numerous and most of them on Broadway. They were: the Adelphi, erected in 1827 (q. v.); the Mansion House, at 39 Broadway, kept by W. J. Bunker, which was "large and commodious," and possessed "much of the retirement and quiet of an elegant private residence;" the City Hotel, which occupied the entire block on the west side of Broadway between Thames and Cedar Sts., and was the "loftiest" hotel in the city, containing "more than one hundred large and small parlours and lodging-rooms, besides the City Assembly Room, chiefly used for Concerts and Balls;" the National Hotel, finished in 1825, at 112 Broadway, opposite the City Hotel; the Franklin House, on Broadway, cor. Dey St.; the American Hotel, on Broadway, opposite the Park, a new hotel, five storeys high, extending on Barclay St. as far west as the College of Physicians and Surgeons; Washington Hall, on Broadway, cor. of Reade St., which, in 1828, was altered, repaired, and newly furnished; and the Park Place House, cor. of Broadway and Park Place, opposite the Park, and in the street that leads to Columbia College. The several other hotels included Niblo's Bank Coffee House, at the cor. of William and Pine Sts.; the Tontine Coffee House, cor. Wall and Water Sts.; the New York Hotel, 162–164 Greenwich St., between Dey and Cortlandt Sts.; the Walton House, 328 Pearl St., between Peck Slip and Dover St., in Franklin Sq.; and Tammany Hall, cor. Nassau and Frankfort Sts., "generally known as head quarters of the Republican party, and the arena of frequent political strife."—Goodrich, Picture of N. Y. (1828), 397–99. 1828 —

1828 — "In no place on this island has the destroying hand of man done more to alter the face of nature, than in the vicinity of Corlears Hook, where hills of great magnitude have been entirely levelled, or cut down, and used to fill up docks and wharves, and a dense population has taken the place of what was, a few years since, a bleak and unfrequented spot."—Ibid., 412.

The "new burying ground" was described, in this year, as "situated on the 5th avenue, near the three mile stone [on present site of Bryant Park—see D 20, 1824—and the N. Y. Pub. Library], and embraces 10 acres of ground, which is suitably laid out, and contains a large number of vaults . . .

"The old Potters Field is now levelled, and is formed into a beautiful public square, called Washington Square, which is also used as a military parade ground.

"There are three large burying grounds in North-street, east of the Bowery, viz. one for the Friends, one for the Dutch, and one for the Presbyterian Churches; another for the Episcopalians in Clarkson-street, between Varick and Hudson-streets; for the Baptists and Scotch Churches in Wooster-street, near the old Potters Field, now the Washington Square."—Ibid., 420–21.

The gas-works, in this year, were described as "one of the largest edifices in the city, . . . situated in Rhynder-street, corner of Hester-street, near the East part of Canal-street." The building is described in some detail. "The gas is measured by a curious machine called a meter, and passes out into all the principal streets south of Grand-street, through pipes of cast iron, of various sizes, from six inches to two inches bore; and by lateral pipes into the private houses, where the company pipes end, and the whole interior fitting is done at the expense of the person using the gas." This is the gas company which was granted a charter in 1823. "The company have thus far, laid 15 miles in length of cast iron pipes in the principal business streets. The pipes, were, in the first place, imported from England. . . ."—Ibid., 421–23. See also descrip. of Pl. 99, III: 591.

In this year, Hudson Square (St. John's Park) was described as constituting "the fairest interior portion of this city. . . . The regularity of the elegant mansions surrounding it, together with the choice trees and shrubbery, and the costly and much admired metropolitan church of St. John's, with its lofty and beautiful spire, places this square as the most desirable residence, and the most judiciously embellished spot contained in the city.

"It is not open to the public at large, at present; it has recently, at the expense of the surrounding proprietors, been enclosed with an iron railing, combined with granite pillars."—Ibid., 439.

By 1828, "many handsome private dwellings" had been erected around Washington Square, and this vicinity, like Hudson Square, had become "a most fashionable residence section," although "remote from the centre of business."—Ibid., 439.

The following topographical description of the city's streets is found in Goodrich's guide: "The streets of New-York, south of North-street and Greenwich Lane, including Lanes and Alleys, amount to 250. Although towards the harbour, in the 1st and 2d wards, a few of the streets are somewhat crooked and narrow, they are in general straight, regular, and spacious, particularly those recently formed. Running in parallel lines, and terminating at right angles at the corner of every street, a free circulation of air is greatly promoted; which is further increased by a gradual descent having been given to the streets, on both sides, from the centre of the city down to the Hudson and East rivers. The causeway is firm and neat, and the foot pavement, which was formerly constructed of a reddish brick, is now made of durable flat stones, from the quarries of Connecticut; the crossings from one street to another are also generally laid with these stones. The city is well lighted with lamps: Broadway and some other streets are lighted with gas, on the most approved plan, and have fluted ornamental iron posts. A regular night-watch is also established, to give security to the inhabitants, and clear the streets of improper persons.

"The pleasantest streets for the residence of private and genteel families within this city, are as follows: State-street, fronting the Battery, Bridge-street, Bowling Green, Greenwich-street, from the Battery to Courtlandt-street, Broadway from the Battery to Rector-street, and facing the Park; also north of Anthony-street, Bond-street, the streets around Hudson Square, Hudson-street, Park Place, Chambers-street, Liberty and Courtlandt-streets west of Broadway, Dey-street, Vesey-street, opposite St. Paul's church-yard, Barclay-street, Murray-street, Warren-street, Bleecker-street, Prince-street, the streets around Washington Square, La Fayette Place, Broome-street, Spring-street, and Grand-street, Franklin, White, and Walker streets. Many elegant private mansions are also scattered in other parts of the city. Other streets that are more within the vortex of business are also pleasant, but are not considered quite as fashionable a quarter of the town; such are, Beekman-street, Pearl-street, Cliff-street, John-street, Cherry-street; Harman and Madison streets, as now widened, improved, and built up with neat and spacious houses, are also very convenient and respectable streets. Broadway, the Bowery, and Canal streets are all of uncommon width. That large portion of the city, lying east of the Bowery, comprises a dense population, principally inhabiting small two story wooden, or brick buildings. The streets on the west side of Broadway, are generally preferred by citizens and strangers. 1828 —

"South-street, in its whole extent, is exclusively occupied by the merchants owning the shipping, and by those connected with that line of business, and it forms a range of warehouses, four and five stories in height, extending from the Battery to Roosevelt-street, facing the East river. Front-street, and Water-street, together with the various slips intersecting them from South-street, are occupied by wholesale grocers and commission merchants, iron dealers, or as warehouses for the storage of merchandise and produce of every description. Pearl-street, is the peculiar and favourite resort of wholesale dry good merchants, earthen ware dealers, etc. from Coenties Slip to Peck Slip; and in it also, are the auction stores. Sales at auction are also made in Wall-street, between Pearl and Water streets. Wall-street commences at Broadway, and leads to South-street, and comprises the Custom House and its appendages, the principal banks, insurance offices, brokers, and Bankers; also the Merchant's Exchange, with the Post Office, and offices of several important daily papers; in short, it is the money depot of the city, and from 10 to 3 o'clock, it displays a busy scene, and gives a favourable impression of the extensive trade, wealth, and importance of New York.

"Broadway is the handsomest street, and the greatest thoroughfare in New-York. It runs in a direct line from the Battery to Tenth-street, and is three miles in length, and 80 feet in breadth. It contains the principal retail shops of jewellers and watchmakers; also the principal book stores, merchant tailors, hatters, carpet and fancy dry good stores, confectioners, hotels and boarding-houses; also four episcopal Churches, and the Hospital, the Masonic Hall, two Museums, and the City Hall. It is well paved throughout, with the side walks 19 feet in width, laid with flagging stone. The perspective views in proceeding from the battery up this street towards the City Hall, are striking to the eye of a stranger; we would notice especially the view standing by St. Pauls' Church, and looking towards the north and north east, as presenting the finest coup d'œil in the city.

"Maiden Lane, from Broadway to William-street, and William-street from Liberty to Beekman streets, and Chatham-street from the Park eastward, are principally occupied by retail dry good and fancy stores; Canal-street, west of Broadway, contains many similar shops.

"There are some trades so concentrated, that they are mostly contained in one neighbourhood, such are the tanners and curriers in Ferry-street, Jacob-street, and the vicinity; also furriers in Water-street, cabinet and chair makers in Broad-street. Other trades and occupations are so diffused over the city, that no one particular spot could be designated as appropriated to them. Pine, Wall, and Nassau streets, contain many of the offices of law practitioners."—Ibid., 459–62.

In 1830, Peter Neilson published in Glasgow his observations made during a residence of six years in the United States, from 1822 to 1828. From these have been selected a few relating to New York (see also 1822): —

". . . In most of the genteel dwelling-houses, the door steps and lintels, and window sills, are made of fine free-stone, or white marble; the plates and other ornaments on the principal doors of some few houses in the lower part of the town, are made of pure silver. This is very unlike republican simplicity. A few of the side pavements are of broad flag stones; the rest are of brick, and the middle of the streets of good whinstone, with which the island abounds.

". . . In 1826, the 103d place of worship was erected within 1828 the city, so that there is no want of visible religion in this quarter. — . . .

"In New York, there are many manufactories of iron, brass and crystal. Very excellent hats are also made, . . . The cotton weavers and dyers are a considerable body. . . . In 1814, there were only 2 looms in the city, now they may reckon near 1000."

"In cut glass and crystal," he says, "the Americans have exhibited great proficiency, as several shops in Broadway can testify." They have very extensive manufactories of nails, which are all cut by machinery.

". . . It is confidently anticipated, that the time will arrive, when the city will extend over the whole island of Manhattan . . . Streets are already marked out to the distance of six or seven miles.

". . . Many respectable men may be seen in the morning making purchases [at the markets], and carrying home their bargains in their hand. People in the same rank in Scotland would imagine themselves degraded by carrying a leg of mutton, or a junk of raw beef along the streets; custom sanctions the practice here.

"The museum in New York is a private collection, and contains many good specimens of natural history. . . . There are no manuscripts or rare books, and the coins are hardly worth mentioning."—Recollections of Six Years Residence in the U. S. A. (Glasgow, 1830), 4–16, 19, 32–33, 39–40, 46–52. Cf. Bangs, Bro. & Co. catalogues, in N. Y. P. L., of large private collections of coins sold by this firm of auctioneers in 1855 and later years.

— At some time after 1828, the Belvidere Club-House, erected in 1792 (q.v., Je 25), at the corner of Cherry and Montgomery Sts., was taken down, and the elevation on which it stood was graded to the level of the adjacent streets.—See L. M. R. K., III: 976; see also Man. Com. Coun. (1853), 452; and Pl. 60-a, Vol. I.

— At this time, the Walton house (see L. M. R. K., III: 953), had a garden in the rear, which extended "quite down to the river." —Recollections of Daniel J. Ebbetts, in Watson's Annals, 350.

— In this year, the residence of former Governor Jay, at 52 Broadway, was a boarding-house kept by a Mrs. Keese. Similarly, other residences on lower Broadway had become boarding-places. For their addresses, see Man. Com. Coun. (1865), 523.

— In this year, the "Separation" occurred throughout the Society of Friends in New York City, one branch calling itself "Orthodox" and the other sometimes calling itself "Hicksite."—See John Cox, Jr.'s MS. Catalogue of Records and History of the two Yearly Meetings.

— In this year, the common council designated, as the permanent exterior street on the North River, that portion of West St. from "its northerly termination to its intersection with a continuation of the Great Kill road [Gansevoort St.]." For an outline history of the development of West St., see Vol. I, p. 456; also L. M. R. K., III: 1012.

— In this year and the next, the Itinéraire du Fleuve Hudson, by J. Milbert, consisting of two folio volumes of text and two of lithographed plates, was published in Paris. These plates, 53 in number, are admirable views of places in the regions traversed by the artist, —among them a "View of New-York, taken from Weahawk" (cf. descrip. of Pl. 92, Vol. III); "Interior of New-York, Prevost Street and Chapel;" "Tarrytown, where Major André was captured;" "Sing Sing;" "West Point;" "Town of Hudson;" "View of Albany;" "View of Albany, with the house of the first Dutch Governour;" "Saratoga Springs;" "Falls of the Hudson;" "Lake George;" "Niagara Falls;" "View of Boston and the South Boston bridge;" etc. See also 1825.

Jan. — In this month, the "American Institute for the City of New York" was organized.—See N. Y. As It Is, In 1833, p. 79. Its first "fair" was held on Oct. 24 (q.v.). For its incorporation, see My 2, 1829. See also King's Handbook (1893), 321.

The anniversary of the Battle of New Orleans is celebrated with a dinner at Masonic Hall, fireworks, illuminations, etc. The festivities are more elaborate than usual because of Jackson's prominence as a presidential candidate.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ja 9 and 10, 1828. Jan. 8

"At a late meeting of the Trustees of Columbia College, the plan of establishing a Grammar School to be connected with the institution and preparatory to it, was discussed and adopted. The school is to be under the direction and regulation of the Board of the College, who are to appoint a master and assistants, define their duties, and prescribe the course of studies. The usual branches of English education will be taught, and at least so much of the classics and mathematics, as shall be necessary to qualify the scholars to enter the Freshman Class of the College. When it is ascertained that forty scholars will be sent to the school & will pay for tuition at the rate of $12.50 per quarter, the school will be opened. . . . "

"The Trustees seem to have been impressed with the opinion that the course of education in many of the various private seminaries established in this city, has not been such as to prepare the pupils in the best manner for the course of study pursued at Columbia College, and have adopted this plan to supply the deficiency." —N. Y. Eve. Post, Ja 8, 1828. On April 19, the board of the college authorised the establishment of the grammar school and appointed John D. Ogilby master.—Ibid., Ap 23, 1828. The Columbia Grammar school is still (1926) among the leading private schools of the city.

At this time, David T. Valentine served as marshal of the marine court, being paid in fees.—Journal D, 163, in comptroller's office. 12

The common council refers to the committee on applications to the legislature a report of the committee on the jail and bridewell, recommending application for the passage of a law authorising the removal of male convicts from the state prison at Greenwich to the new state prison in Westchester (Sing Sing), and declaring the Greenwich prison to be the city prison; also for authority to raise, by loan, the $100,000 to be paid to the state for the Greenwich prison.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVI: 662–63. See Mr 21 and 18, 1826; Ja 28, 1828. 14

The common council accepts from William De Peyster a deed of session of those parts of the streets and avenues which pass through his grounds at Bloomingdale.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVI: 663. "

The common council grants to the city dispensary (see O, 1790) a lot, 50 x 89 ft., out of the state ordnance-yard, on the northwest cor. of Collect (Centre) and White Sts.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVI: 663–64. (See also ibid., XV: 91–92, 231; XVI: 16, 339, 632.) After the state had released or reconveyed this lot to the city by act of the legislature on April 16 (Laws of N. Y., 1828, chap. 232), the conveyance was made the same day by the city to the dispensary at a consideration of one dollar. On this site was erected a brick building three storeys high, which was first occupied in 1829 (q.v., Ja 11).—Lossing, Hist. of N. Y. City (1884), I: 117. See also L. M. R. K., III: 954. In 1837, 20 ft. additional on White St. were conveyed to the dispensary.—Laws of N Y. (1837), chap. 446; Man. Com. Coun. (1870), 761. "

The common council refers to the committee on applications to the legislature a resolution that this committee examine the expediency of establishing by law a poll-list, or register of voters, to regulate the elections hereafter to be held in this city.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVI: 688. "

The Mirror again comments on the jail and bridewell: "Hopes are entertained that these intollerable nuisances will be removed—but when, it is left entirely to conjecture—at the last regular meeting of the corporation, the committee on this subject reported in favour of raising one hundred thousand dollars, for purchasing the Greenwich state prison, for the use of a jail and bridewell. Be quick, gentlemen."—N. Y. Mirror, Ja 19, 1828. See Jl 19. 19

The common council refers to the committee on arts and sciences a memorial of William Dunlap, the portrait painter, "proposing to paint and present to the Common Council an Historical painting of the Inauguration of General Washington." —M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVI: 696. 28

The common council is informed by Senator Waterman that a senate committee of which he is chairman has under consideration "the subject of the erection of a State Prison for female "

1828 Jan. 28 Convicts," but is of the opinion that it cannot be erected until "the Prison at Mount Pleasant" (Sing Sing) is completed; that the committee desired to give N. Y. City possession of "the State Prison at New York [Greenwich] immediately," but "the disposition of the Female convicts prevented it." The committee suggests that they "be disposed of in the City Penitentiary." The communication is referred to the committee on the jail and bridewell.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVI: 699. On Feb. 11, on the committee's reporting favourably, the common council approved a resolution that the female convicts be kept for a year from May 1st at the Greenwich prison where they then were, at the city's expense, "provided the Corporation be put into possession of the same without delay" (according to the terms of purchase—see Mr 28, 1826). The board then resolved that the committee on jail and bridewell "also communicate to the Committee of the Senate the request of this Corporation that a law be passed allowing the Penitentiary of this City to be removed to the State Prison whenever this Board may so direct the same."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVI: 737–39. See N 8, 1824; Ap 12, 1828. Regarding the removal of the female convicts, see My 1 and 16, 1829.

" The common council adopts a resolution offered by the committee on public offices "that the small room in the Attic at the head of the Stair Case [in the city hall], & which is now unoccupied, be appropriated to the use of the Clerk of the City and County for such purposes as may be by him deemed necessary for the preservation of the papers and documents entrusted to his care, and that the Committee on Repairs be empowered to carry this Resolution into effect provided that the expense for the same does not exceed Twenty Dollars."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVI: 700.

" The common council resolves that 19th St. and 20th St. be opened respectively from Sixth Ave. to the Hudson River; also that Minetto St. be opened and continued to McDougall St.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVI: 709–10.

" The common council resolves that Ninth Ave. be dug out and regulated from the Great Kill Road at 12th St. to above 21st St.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVI: 712.

" The city pays $200 for boring for water at the rear of the city hall.—Journal D, 168, in comptroller's office.

Feb. 11 "An association of the members of the bar of this city, so long wanted, has at length we are told, been formed, under the title of the New York Law Institute."—N. Y. Eve. Post, F 11, 1828. The objects of this association are "to advance the jurisprudence of the state, to promote an efficient administration of justice, and to regulate the practice of the profession on principles beneficial to their fellow citizens and honorable to themselves. . . . Preparations, we understand, have already been commenced in the United States Court Room in the City Hall, for the accommodation of the Library. . . ."—Ibid., F 14, 1828. Goodrich says: "There are standing Committees on the Library, Jurisprudence, and Censorship. All Counsellors, Solicitors, and Attorneys of the Supreme Court and Court of Chancery in this state, are eligible to the society, by the ballots of three-fourths of the members, present at two successive meetings. James Kent (former Chancellor of this state) is President; and Smith Thompson (one of the Judges of the Supreme Court of the United States), Peter A. Jay, and Beverly Robinson, Vice-Presidents."—Picture of N. Y. (1828), 441. The Institute had its inception in a meeting at the residence of Judge McCoun. It was incorporated in 1830 (q. v.). For a brief account of its initial development, see Man. Com. Coun. (1856), 558–59. In April, 1855, it removed to No. 45 Chambers St.—Ibid., 559. It is still a flourishing organization.

14 Changes in the city charter are still (see F 20, 1826) in the minds of the common council. After much discussion, an act to be submitted to the legislature is agreed to. The creation of a bicameral council is the intent of the act, and the machinery for such an organization is virtually the same as that of Oct. 27, 1823 (q. v.). Provision is made as before for the act to be "submitted to the decision of the voters" before going into effect.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVI: 747–60. See also N. Y. Eve. Post, F 2 and 4, 1828. See, further, Ap 18.

16 The common council is informed of the death in Albany of De Witt Clinton, the late governor, on Feb. 10, 1828. Resolutions of sorrow and sympathy are passed, and one to adopt the usual mode of mourning.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVI: 761; N. Y. Eve. Post, F 15, 16, 18, 20, 1828. See F 21.

Philip Hone records in his diary his "Address delivered at a meeting of Citizens on Munday Feb^{y} 21, 1828, preparatory to my presenting the Resolutions which were adopted by the meeting on the occasion of the Death of Governor Clinton" (see F 16).—Hone's Diary (MS.), in N. Y. Hist. Soc. See also N. Y. Eve. Post, F 22, 1828. Feb. 21

A letter to the press, signed "A Whip," calls the common council's attention to the condition of Third Ave., which is in "a most frightful state, as well for foot passengers as riders." He recommends "McAdamizing," a method of paving recently adopted on the road between Albany and Troy. He says Third Ave. is "laid with large soft stone," forming "an excellent base for the said system," as used in England, "over which is laid the broken stone, of nearly uniform size, and not exceeding one inch square, and laid from four to six inches thick. . . ."—Com. Adv., F 23, 1828. By 1833 (q. v.), Third Ave. was "McAdamized." 23

John London McAdam (1756–1836), whose name is applied to this system of road-making, published, in 1819, a Practical Essay on the Scientific Repair and Preservation of Roads, followed in 1820 by the Present State of Road-making.—See Encyc. Brit., 11th ed., XVII: 190.

Circulars containing a plan of the Clinton Hall Association are to be issued on this day. "The object of this association is, to place upon a firm and respectable footing the Mercantile Library Association of New-York. While it will afford entire security and a full equivalent to subscribers, it will also give to their clerks an opportunity of improving in knowledge and virtue, in some degree commensurate with their numbers and usefulness, and suited to the intimate relation which they bear to the business and the families of the merchants of New York."—N. Y. Eve. Post, F 25, 1828. See also Hone's Diary (MS.), in N. Y. H. S. 26

The common council resolves to express to the legislature the regret which this board has on account of the passage of a law removing to Albany the only term of the supreme court now granted to this city.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVI: 785. See Ap 4, 1825. 28

The Courrier des Etats-Unis appears. It was first a weekly; in 1830, it became a semi-weekly; in 1839, a tri-weekly; and in 1851, a daily.—North, The Newspaper and Periodical Press, 128. It is still published. Mar. 1

The common council resolves to accept the cession of all the streets between 21st and 30th Sts.; also First and Fourth Aves., on the usual terms and condition.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVII: 22. 10

The common council approves a resolution that West St. be extended across Spring St. Slip.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVII: 27–28. "

The common councils accepts from Samuel Boyd, and orders recorded, a deed of cession of 18th St. from Eighth Ave. to Hudson River.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVII: 32. "

The following newspaper comment appears: "With pleasure we perceive, that within one or two years our fashionable houses, especially those newly erected in our principal streets, have assumed a more beautiful look, resembling those which distinguish Philadelphia, both as respects their uniformity in height, and the neat and more convenient and becoming appearance of our outer doors, which are now painted a white or straw color, with suitable and useful plated ornaments to match—of which a very good specimen may be seen on the door of a new four story house in Chamber street, between Church and Chapel streets, on the north side, and just below the Unitarian Church, with the name of the engraver. But, in another respect, our streets, too, have of late improved still more, namely, in the greater uniformity in the height of our buildings. To judge of our principal street, Broadway, you would think that the first object with every person about to build, had been to measure with his eye the houses adjacent and take care to order his to be several inches higher or lower than his neighbor's. A specimen of this peculiar taste may be seen by casting your eyes at the eves of the houses that form the block on the west side of Broadway, from Cedar to Liberty-street; where you will see no two buildings of a similar height. But in those now erecting, or lately erected, this old, ugly, and absurd custom is avoided; so that in the course of a few years, we shall be able to boast that New York resembles in appearance the elegance of Philadelphia; besides is all 12

1828 alive with the hum of bustling crowds engaged in business."—

17 The common council passes a resolution to open parts of 10th, 11th, 12th, and 15th Sts. east of the Bowery and Third Ave.; and Seventh Ave. between Greenwich Lane and 21st St.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVII: 47–48.

" The common council approves a resolution that a suitable law and memorial shall be sent to the legislature providing that McDougal, Mercer, Greene, Wooster and Lewis Sts. be opened and continued to 8th St.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVII: 50–51. See Ap 19.

31 West St., from its northerly termination to its intersection with a continuation of the Great Kill Road, is designated the permanent exterior street on the North River.—Laws of N. Y. (1828), chap. 149. See, further, Ap 7.

Apr. The National Academy of Design (see Jan. 19, 1826) is incor-
5 porated, until Jan. 1, 1858, by Sam'l F. B. Morse, Henry Inman, Asher B. Durand, Thomas Cole, and others, its object being "the cultivation and extension of the arts of design." Its annual income shall not exceed $5,000.—Laws of N. Y. (1828), chap. 173. See also the original MS. petition, asking for incorporation, item No. 12893 in Emmet collection, in N. Y. P. L.; and L. M. R. K., III: 957.

7 The common council adopts a resolution that the streets heretofore known as Collect and Rynder Sts., being properly but one street, be henceforth called Centre St.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVII: 51, 106–7; L. M. R. K., III: 997, 1008.

" The common council adopts a resolution that West St. be continued from its present termination at Hammond St. to its intersection with a line drawn through the middle of Jane St., as soon as the water grants within these bounds be taken out.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVII: 110. See, further, N 17.

8 The Lafayette Theatre (see Ag 29, 1827), "fronting on Laurens, and extending through to Thompson street, covering more square feet of ground than any other theatre in the U. States," is sold at auction to H. Yates for $21,500.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ap 9, 1828. It burned on April 10, 1829 (q. v.).

12 The legislature authorises the state prison commissioners to contract with the common council for the support, confinement, government, and employment of the female state convicts in the prison at Greenwich. They shall then cause all the male convicts to be removed to "the new prison at Mount Pleasant" (Sing Sing), and shall "give possession of the old prison to said corporation; at which time the amount of the purchase money for the said prison [$100,000—see Mr 28, 1826] shall be payable." After June 1, whenever prisoners are adjudged and ordered to be confined in a state prison, in the first and second districts, the male convicts shall be sent to Mount Pleasant, and the female convicts to the present state prison in New York. Prisoners so adjudged in all other counties shall be confined in the state prison at Auburn.

When expedient, the common council may designate a proper place in the city to be the penitentiary or bridewell of the city, and cause all the prisoners then in the city penitentiary to be removed there.—Laws of N. Y. (1828), chap. 197; ibid. (1829), chap. 220.

Although the prisoners are not yet removed from the state prison (see 1829; My 16, 1829), the furniture, etc., of the buildings are to be sold on May 16.—N. Y. Eve. Post, My 14, 1828. See, further, My 19.

15 The corner-stone of the Church of the Ascension is laid, on Canal St. between Broadway and Elm St., for the congregation formed in 1827 under the rectorship of Rev. Manton Eastburn. The building was completed and opened for worship May 26, 1828. —N. Y. Eve. Post, Ap 14 and 16, 1828; Greenleaf, 86–87. It was erected from designs of Town & Thompson, architects. While called the most perfect example of Doric architecture in New York, its prototype being the temple of Theseus in Athens, it was built of brick, stuccoed. Its situation proved unfavourable, being in the vicinity of the gas-works, and its exterior soon became begrimmed.—From a memorandum (by A. J. Davis?), in the N. Y. H. S. (box 2 of MSS. labelled "N. Y. City Churches"). For view of this church, see Pl. 15 of the Bourne series (1831), drawn by Burton and engraved by Fassette, showing it in close proximity to factories, inferior buildings, and a disordered street. See, further, My 23, 1829, and Je 30, 1839.

18 The changes in the city charter proposed by the common council on Feb. 14 (q. v.) are enacted into law by the legislature.—Laws of N. Y. (1828), chap. 249. The law failed of ratification at a city election on May 28 (q. v.).

The legislature provides for the extension of Mercer, Greene, Apr.
Wooster, McDougal, and Lewis Sts. northward to 8th St.—Laws of 19
N. Y. (1828), chap. 264.

The trustees of the Sailors' Snug Harbor, incorporated Feb. 6, "
1806 (q. v.), are authorised by the legislature to regulate the land devised by Robert Richard Randall, so that it will conform to the permanent plan of the city; also to purchase a suitable and convenient tract of ground, lying upon the "Island of New York," or adjacent thereto, and fronting upon the North or East River, or in the vicinity thereof, and it shall be lawful to build thereon a marine hospital to be called and forever known as the Sailors' Snug Harbor.—Laws of N. Y. (1828), chap. 266. See, further, My, 1831.

The legislature passes the annual tax budget for the city.— "
Laws of N. Y. (1828), chap. 285.

The legislature incorporates the "New-York and Boston Steam- "
Boat Co.," to operate a regular line of boats through Long Island Sound between the two cities, the boats to be constructed with two engines on a plan of the principal incorporator, Elihu S. Bunker. The company is now building such a boat.—Laws of N. Y. (1828), chap. 293.

The legislature passes an act to suppress duelling. A person 21 causing the death of another in a duel in this state shall be adjudged guilty of murder, and may be indicted in the county where it occurs. A person issuing a challenge to fight a duel, or one who shall convey it, or who shall give other assistance in it, shall be adjudged guilty of a felony and subject to imprisonment for seven years or less.—Laws of N. Y. (1828), chap. 320.

The common council receives, and accepts with thanks, from "
Rev. John Stanford "an Ancient Map of the City of New York drawn from Actual Survey by W^m^ Bradford in the year 1735." —M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVII: 124. In June, 1922, this map was reported missing from the files of the topographical bureau of the borough president's office. This office was formerly called the bureau of design and survey, and prior to that it was the street commissioner's office. The lithographic copies of this map show it to have been "in the possession of G. B. Smith, Street Commissioner."—Andrews, James Lyne's Survey or the Bradford Map (1900), 32–33. See also descrip. of Pl. 27, Vol. I.

The common council appoints Reuben Spencer a city surveyor. "
—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVII: 126.

The common council authorises the street commissioner to " advertise for and enter into contracts for building a market at the foot of Spring and Canal Sts. under the direction of the market committee.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVII: 117, 127–28; Laws of N. Y. (1827), chap. 214. See D 8.

The common council orders that a cupola be erected on Wash- " ington Market.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVII: 128.

The common council adopts a resolution to open 8th St. from " the Bowery to Third Ave., and also to open Ninth St. from the Bowery "to the centre of what is commonly called Stuyvesant Street."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVII: 129–30.

The street commissioner conveys to the corporation a deed " of cession from Peter G. Stuyvesant for parts of 10th, 11th, 12th, 15th, 16th, 17th, 18th, 19th, 20th, 21st and 22nd Sts.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVI: 697; XVII: 136.

Russia declares war on Turkey because of the sultan's violent 26 manifesto calling for a holy war and naming Russia as the cause of the Greek insurrection.—Hazen, Europe since 1815 (enlarged ed.), I: 559. See S 14, 1829.

John Jacob Astor buys of Ezra Weeks and others the City May Hotel, 115 Broadway (see Ja 24, 1793; N 20, 1801).—Liber Deeds, 1
CCXXXVII: 46 and 48. This is the date of Astor's deed; the sale took place at public auction at the merchants' exchange on April 8, the price paid being $121,000.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ap 5 and 8, 1828. See also L. M. R. K., III: 977; and Fay's Views of N. Y. (1831), 22. See, further, Ap 25, 1833.

Philip Hone records in his diary: ". . . went to Manhattan- 8 ville, to view the Commencement of the Excavation for the Harlaem Canal" (see Jl 16, 1827).—Hone's Diary (MS.), at N. Y. Hist. Soc.

"Washington Military Parade Ground.—Workmen are busily 10 employed in putting a handsome fence around this spacious public square, by far the largest of any in this city. And laborers are busy in leveling and preparing the ground to be laid down to green turf, with neat gravel foot walks around the margin and across it from each extremity. When this work is completed and 1828 May 10 proper shade trees and shrubbery are tastefully set out over the whole square, it will afford a most delightful morning promenade. The improvements already made on the streets bordering upon it, and also those in contemplation, will add to its beauty."—N. Y. Eve. Post, My 10, 1828.

16 Philip Hone, acting as foreman of the grand jury, draws up a presentment in regard to the jail and bridewell. He recommends discontinuing those prisons "and providing Prisons for Debtors, and for Culprits in another part of the City."

He says, further: "The Grand Jury have heard with satisfaction of the purchase of the State Prison, and the arrangements which have been made, to appropriate that Establishment to City purposes: and it was hoped those arrangements would sooner have been carried into effect. The expectation of the contemplated removal of the Prisoners, has rendered it inexpedient to incur the Expense necessary to keep the present Buildings in suitable repair, and they have of consequence become unsafe, and nearly uninhabitable.

"In connection with this subject the Grand Jury feel themselves imperatively called upon to present to the attention of the Court, the present situation of the exterior of the Jail and Bridewell, and the Grounds in their immediate vicinity; the latter in particular presents a nuisance of the most disgusting nature, in the Centre of our City, on Ground left Vacant for the Health and Recreation of the Citizens, and so near to our Courts of Justice, and public offices, as to give to the Senses of those who attend them, the constant evidence of its existence."—Hone's Diary (MS.), at N. Y. Hist. Soc. The buildings referred to are seen in the Wall view of the city hall. See descrip. of Pl. 97, III: 588–89. See Jl 19, N 29, D 1 and 6, 1828; and Ag 23, 1830.

17 In his diary, under this date, Hone refers to ". . . Bloomingdale Asylum, where I met John McComb [!], and conferred with him about the Plans of the new Buildings, about to be erected by the Committee."—Hone's Diary (MS.), at N. Y. Hist. Soc. See also L. M. R. K., III: 953.

18 This is the first date in Philip Hone's diary as printed. Regarding the early items in the original manuscript, see 1826. Between this date and July 26, 1828, 28 quarto pages of the manuscript diary are omitted in the printed form. These pages contain many items of interest and value to historians of New York City. For example, in this part of the diary is given an account of the fire on May 26 (q. v.), which destroyed a large number of buildings, including the Bowery Theatre; also the consecration of All Saints' Church on June 5 (q. v.), the reference to Manhattan Co. pipes on June 7 (q. v.), etc.

19 The common council resolves that a sum not exceeding $1,500 be appropriated "for providing a Transit Telescope [see Jl 12, 1830], an Astronomical Clock and a Turret Clock to be placed in the City Hall under the direction of the Committee on Arts & Sciences." It is also resolved that the committee on repairs be requested "to direct such alterations as the placing of those Instruments may require."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVII: 180. This order, as regards the turret clock, was modified on Nov. 16, 1829 (q. v.).

" The common council appoints Anthony M. Hoffman a city surveyor.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVII: 187.

" The common council passes an ordinance (agreeable to the law of Ap 12) "to establish city prisons and penitentiaries in the city of New York." It provides "for appropriating the North part or half of the State Prison as a Penitentiary in addition to the Penitentiary at Bellevue;" also "for appropriating the South part or half of the State Prison as a City Prison in addition to the City Prison in the Park." Respecting the jail for debtors, and the permanent appropriation of the city prison in the Park, the committee has not interfered; as that subject is already before the board. They propose, however, that the city prison in the Park be continued as such until the further order of the board. "It will be competent for the Board hereafter to make such disposition of the Jail & City Prison, both of which are situated in the Park, as may be deemed expedient."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVII: 188–89. See, further, Je 28. See also Jl 5.

26 A fire which starts in a livery stable in Bayard St. near the Bowery destroys the New York or Bowery Theatre (except the front and side walls), Benjamin Scribner's Shakespeare Tavern, and about 15 other buildings.—N. Y. Eve. Post, My 27, 1828; Hone's Diary (MS.); descrip. of Pl. 102-b, III: 604. The theatre was rebuilt in 90 days and opened on Aug. 20 (q. v.).

May 28 A law providing for a bicameral council (see F 14) fails of ratification in a special election by a vote of 5,427 to 3,753. A newspaper explanation is: "The framers of that law, which were the Corporation themselves, did not mean to have any salutary check placed upon their hasty summary mode of doing business. And rather than such a law should go into effect, the people prefer the old system until they can procure such a change in the mode of transacting the affairs of the city as will promise an effectual restraint upon improper and ruinous legislation. Meetings should be called in each ward and delegates appointed to frame a law to be submitted to a general assembly of the citizens; for their consideration and approval. Application should then be made to the Legislature to give their official sanction to it."—N. Y. Eve. Post, My 31, 1828. It may be observed that the charter changes were finally obtained through the procedure thus recommended by the Post. See My 11, 1829.

June 5 All Saints' P. E. Church, which was organized on May 27, 1824, and the corner-stone of which was laid on Oct. 3, 1827, is opened for public worship. It is a substantial stone building on the southeast corner of Henry and Scammel Sts. The land was conveyed to the church by Moses and Esther Leon on Sept. 28, 1827.—N. Y. Eve. Post, My 29, 1824; O 2, 1827; Liber Deeds, CCXXVI: 441; Greenleaf, 85–86. See also Supp. L. M. R. K., in Vol. VI; and Pl. 175, Vol. III. See also My 18.

" "Water Works.—The Manhattan Company are substituting iron pipes, for logs, through which water may be conveyed in sufficient quantities to all who wish to be supplied, within the sphere of their operations. A great improvement has also been made, by the construction of secondary reservoirs, near the grand one, which, in case of fires can throw the whole volume of water in the requisite direction."—Com. Adv., Je 5, 1828. See Je 7.

7 Hone records: The "Manhattan Company are laying down large Iron Pipes in Broadway, opposite to my House."—Hone's Diary (MS.), at N. Y. H. S. His residence was at 235 Broadway. See also N. Y. Eve. Post, Je 4, 1828.

12 James Monroe, "late President of the United States," visits New York, and the common council tenders to him the hospitality of the city.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVII: 231. See also N. Y. Eve. Post, Je 6, 23, and 26, 1828.

16 The packet ship "Pacific" arrives at New York from Liverpool bringing news of war between Russia and Turkey.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Je 16, 1828.

" The common council adopts a resolution to open and continue Cedar St. to the width of 35 feet from William to Pearl St.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVII: 247–48.

" The common council requires the committee on public offices to report to the board "the different Tenants who occupy the Building usually called the Scientific Institution [the N. Y. Institution, formerly the almshouse], the tenure of their Leases, and whether all or any of them ought to be required to provide accommodation for themselves elsewhere."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVII: 252. This was the first step towards transforming the building for occupation by the courts. See, further, Mr 23, 1829.

18 "The Corporation and their numerous guests set out this morning in the steam boat Sun, on their junketing party to the Sing Sing State Prison. What right they have to expend the public money in this way, we have yet to learn. They might just as well get up a party at the public expense to go to Saratoga Springs, or to view the Auburn State Prison, or Niagara Falls. It appears by the proceedings of the Corporation that the committee of arrangements were unwilling to be limited in the expense to $1000, and how much will be expended for turtle soup, nabob wine, and Champaigne, no one can tell. It is certainly time that there should be some check upon this irresponsible body in the disbursement of the public moneys. . . ."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Je 18 and 19, 1828; M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVII: 231–32. See, further, D 16.

27 An ornamental iron fence is being constructed around St. John's Park at a cost of $25,000.—N. Y. Mirror, Je 27, 1828. See also 1833, and descrip. of Pl. 106-a, Vol. III.

30 The common council orders that the comptroller be authorised

1828 June 30 to borrow (under the direction of the finance committee and on such terms as they may prescribe) the sum of $100,000 "for the purpose of paying to the State of New York the purchase money for the State Prison at Greenwich at an interest not exceeding Six per Cent."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVII: 275. See Mr 28, 1826; Jl 28, 1828.

July 1 "To-day that unblessed act, the tariff, commences to operate, and we are pleased to learn that all the gentlemen connected with the revenue department, manifest a very proper solicitude for the shipping and commercial interest. . . ."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Jl 1, 1828.

3 The French Coffee House at Broadway and Fulton St. is offered for sale.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Jl 3, 1828.

4 Wm. Niblo removes from the Bank Coffee House (see 1814), and opens a hotel, garden, and theatre, at the n. e. cor. of Broadway and Prince St. He calls the theatre "Sans Souci." The famous "Niblo's Garden" was "an actual garden, with walks, flowers, trees, summer-houses, etc., and was considered somewhat remote from town. The theatre or entertainment saloon was in the centre. This subsequently gave place to a complete, permanent theatre, and the garden vanished."—Haswell, Reminiscences, 230; L. M. R. K., III: 985. For a view and an outline of the history of this property after 1812, see Man. Com. Coun. (1865), 631, 635. For view in 1845, prior to its destruction by fire in 1846, see ibid. (1865), 632. Soon afterward the Metropolitan Hotel was erected on part of the same site.—Ibid., 635; L. M. R. K., III: 979, 985; and see S 13, 1851, and 1852.

The Sans Souci Theatre was "situated in the extensive garden of Mr. Niblo, in Broadway," and was "erected in the incredible short period of fifteen days." A descriptive and complimentary address in verse, which was recited on the opening night, was published in The N. Y. Mirror, VI: 7 (Jl 12). The Post said the theatre was "in the new Vauxhall Garden of Mr. Niblo, at the corner of Broadway and Prince streets. The situation is airy, healthy, and delightful for summer amusements, within the 1 mile stone." It was to be occupied by the "Bowery company, under the management of Mr. Gilfert, until the New-York house is re-built."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Jl 3, 1828. See also ibid., Ag 8, 1828, and L. M. R. K., III: 985.

5 "We understand the Corporation of this City have recently purchased Blackwell's Island [see Jl 14, 1828], at the price of 32,500, dollars as a site for a new Penitentiary. The Island contains above 100 acres of land, and a great quantity of building stone. This location for a prison is considered judicious.—The old state prison at Greenwich, which was purchased by the Corporation [see Mr 28, 1826], will be used as a Penitentiary, until the contemplated new one at Blackwell's Island is erected"—N. Y. Eve. Post, Jl 5, 1828. See S 10.

14 The common council receives from the Rev. Stephen N. Rowan a copy of the Declaration of Independence engrossed on vellum, with a letter from him addressed to Mayor Paulding stating that he presents it, "in the name of the contributors to the work," for use "at the successive Anniversaries of our great National Festival." It is accompanied by "a Certificate of the venerable Charles Carroll the last surviving signer of the Original Instrument." Rowan states that this copy was made "as the result of a suggestion made by me in an address delivered at the request of the Common Council, on occasion of the almost simultaneous death of John Adams and Thomas Jefferson" (see Jl 4 and 8, 1826).

"It is the most splendid Copy of the Declaration extant and the Certificate accompanying it, was written, without any recollection of the fact exactly Fifty [52?] years after the Original signature." He adds:

"I trust, that the same Common Council, who were the first to render Elegiac Honours, to the memory of the man who wrote the Declaration, and of him, who eloquently plead for its adoption, will cheerfully take measures to give perpetuity, and publicity to the patriotick sentiments contained in a Document, written with his own hand and in his Ninetieth year by its last surviving Signer." The board accepts the gift and directs that the letter be "filed."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVII: 281.

" The following resolutions were offered by the committee on the almshouse and adopted: "Resolved that the Comptroller be authorized . . . to issue a Warrant to James Blackwell for such sum as your Committee may direct not exceeding 15,000 Dollars; and a Bond of the Corporation upon the conditions agreed on for the ballance [$17,500] of the purchase money of Blackwells Island July 14

"Resolved that the Commissioners of the Alms House be authorised to take possession of said Island forthwith

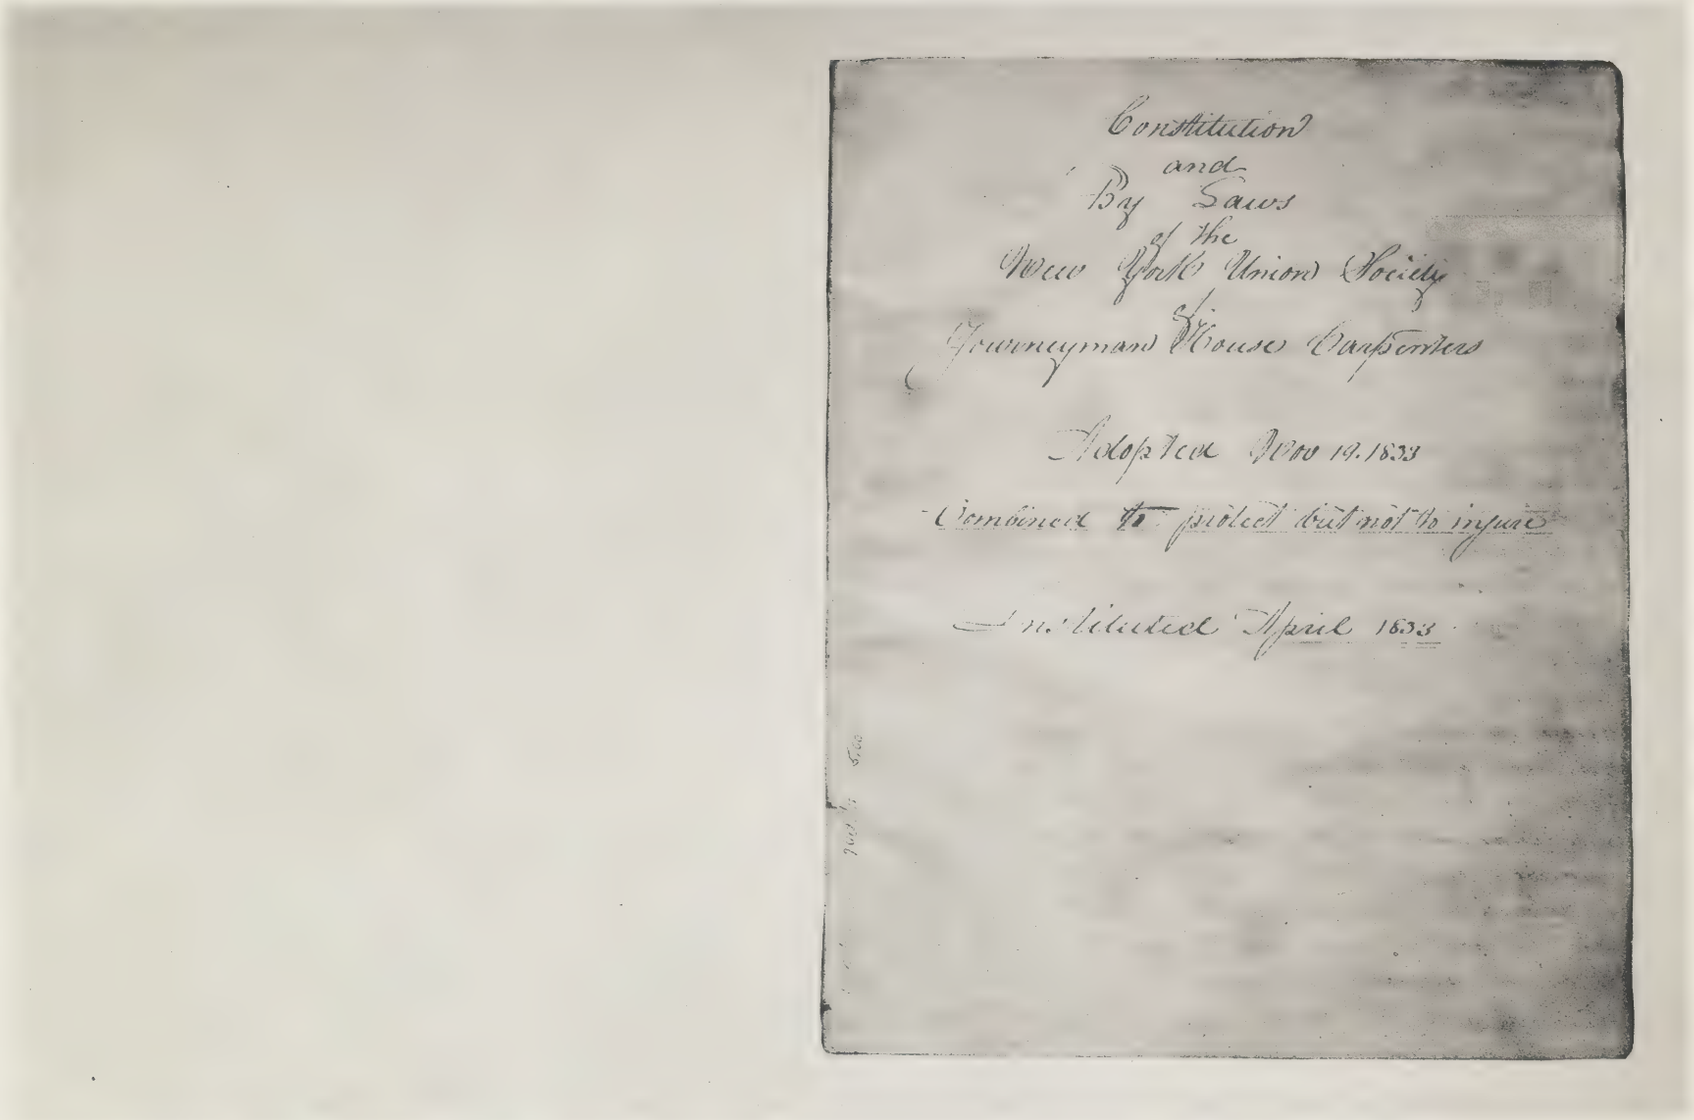
"Resolved that a Special Committee consisting of Seven members be authorised to cause a Map of said Island to be made, with the lines of High and Low water mark, and with the elevations; and to report the plan of a suitable building for a prison, together with the best mode of building, and a proper site for the same."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVII: 294–95, 299. See, further, Jl 19.

19 James Blackwell's deed of his island to the city of New York (see Jl 14) bears this date.—Liber Deeds, CCXXXIX: 287. Blackwell had previously deeded the island to Jas. L. Bell (see Ap 9, 1823). Bell died there on Jan. 12, 1825, and, by foreclosure of a mortgage which Blackwell held, the island came back into his possession.—Hoffman, Treatise on the Estate and Rights of the Corporation of the City of N. Y., I: 147. For the final disposition of the Bell interests, see Paige's Chancery Reps., X: 49; N. Y. H. S. Bull., Jl, 1921, pp. 40–41. On Sept. 11, 1844, the city paid $20,000 more to acquire the interest held by the Widow Bell.—Liber Deeds, CDLI: 405. The city made this purchase of Blackwell's Island as the site for a penitentiary.—See Ag 11.

" The editor of the Mirror writes: ". . . We have, for a long time, been anxiously looking out for the demolition of the Jail and Bridewell, those carbuncular excrescences on the fair surface of the Park. We again call attention to this subject, because the foul condition of these buildings renders them actual pest-houses to all those confined within their walls. . . . Down with the filthy receptacles!"—N. Y. Mirror, VI: 15 (Jl 19). For earlier protests, see D 1, 1827; Ja 19, 1828. See, further, D 22.

27 The "Mission house at the corner of North and Forsyth streets, erected by the liberality of a few individuals" is to be dedicated on this day.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Jl 26, 1828.

28 The comptroller reports that, agreeable to the authority given to him by the common council on June 30 (q. v.), he borrowed, on July 19, $100,000 from the Bank for Savings to pay the state for the state prison and grounds at Greenwich, and has deposited the amount to the state's credit in the Manhattan Bank.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVII: 309. Regarding the disposal of the property, see ibid., N 17, 1828; and see, further, Mr 9, 1829.



30 "The following distinguished persons have recently arrived in this city, and are present at the City Hotel, Broadway.—Count Survilliers and suite; Mr. Barbour, Minister of the United States to the Court of St. James; Don Joaquin Campino, Chilian Minister to the United States; the Right Reverend Bishop Inglis of Nova Scotia; Counts Sziliski and Dalverme; Beaufort T. Watts, Esq. Secretary of Legation to the Court of St. Petersburg; and Mr. Robert Owen, the celebrated Philanthropist."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Jl 30, 1828.

Aug. 11 The common council orders the removal of the old market at the foot of Grand St., and that a new market, 75 ft. long and 27 ft. wide, be erected in this vicinity.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVII: 320–21; De Voe, 458–59. Cf. near-by Manhattan Market, Mr 26, S 10, 1827. The new Grand St. Market was finished the next year.—Ibid., XVII: 542. On the completion of the Monroe Market in 1836 (q. v.), into which the occupants of the Grand St. Market were transferred, the Grand St. market-house disappeared.—De Voe, 459–60; L. M. R. K., III: 959.

" The special committee on the survey of Blackwell's Island (see Jl 14), recommends to the common council that the site for the new penitentiary be about the centre of the island which is about 1,500 ft. from the south-western extremity, 20 ft. above high-water mark, and where the island is about 450 ft. wide. A stone building for 200 prisoners, modelled after Sing Sing prison, which shall be from 150 to 200 ft. long and 50 ft. wide, is advised. It is hoped to complete it by Jan. 1, 1829. The estimated cost is from $16,000 to $20,000. The committee is authorised to proceed with the building.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVII: 325. See, further, S 10.

" The special committee on gas is required by the board to cause the platform in front of the city hall and the walk between the large gates on the east and west side of the Park to be lighted with gas.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVII: 331.

1828 for the Dutch West Indies, being the second steam vessel to cross
Aug. the Atlantic. The voyage was repeated during the year, but the 12 line was not a commercial success.—U. S. National Museum Report (1889–90), 638.

19 "The growth and prosperity of New-York have for years past been the subject of pride and exultation to its citizens. Our disposition to expatiate upon this agreeable subject has sometimes excited a little envy among our neighbors, and given occasion to some ill-natured criticisms. At present, however, we have more occasion for sympathy than for envy. Our situation in some respects is as bad as our worst enemies could wish. The check which our commerce has lately experienced, has produced greater embarrassment and distress among all classes of our citizens than has been known here for a long period. Hundreds of our laborious citizens who in this great and populous mercantile metropolis, followed occupations in some way connected with commerce, have found themselves without employment or means of support. . . . The want of employment is followed by the want of money as a necessary consequence. . . . In a city where, hitherto, no one who chose to work was without employment, laborers begin to talk of departing to seek in the country some occupation which may give them bread. . . . These evils are generally ascribed among us to their true cause, the pernicious acts of legislation levelled at the commerce which has been the source of our prosperity."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ag 19, 1828. See also ibid., S 12.

20 The new Bowery Theatre, erected on the site of the one destroyed on May 26 (q. v.), opens with the "Dramatist."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ag 9, 15, 16, 19, 20, 21, 22, 1828. The new theatre is described and illustrated in N. Y. Mirror, VI: 49–51.

25 The common council passes an ordinance for building 18 "Public Cisterns" as follows: two at the public school in Duane near Church St.; two at the church in King St., near McDougal St.; two at the church, cor. of Herring and Amos Sts.; one at the church in Bedford near Arden St.; two at the church in Bleecker St. near Broadway; two at St. Mark's Church in Stuyvesant St.; two at the church, cor. of Broome and Ridge Sts.; one at the Essex Market; two at the Baptist Church, cor. of Delancey and Christie Sts.; two at the Friends Meeting House, cor. of Hester and Elizabeth Sts.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVII: 341.

" The supreme court confirms the report of the commissioners for opening streets, including Fifth Ave between 90th and 106th Sts., Sixth Ave. from 21st St. to the Bloomingdale Road, 86th St. between East River and Eighth Ave., and 14th St. from The Bowery to East River.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVII: 348.

Sept. The common council approves a petition to change the name
8 of Reason St. to Barrow St.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVII: 358. See Ja 26, 1829.

10 The corner-stone of the new penitentiary on Blackwell's Island is laid by the common council. "A more eligible spot for health, cleanliness and safety, could not have been selected for the erection of all the public buildings, which are supported at the public expense. We hope in a few years to see the Mad-House, and Fever Hospital removed to this Island."—Eve. Post, S 11, 1828.

The address is delivered by Chaplain Stanford, "the Mayor and Corporation" attending.—Sommers, Memoir of John Sanford, 289. Mr. Stanford's address was ordered by the common council to be printed; a copy is preserved in the N. Y. P. L., bound with other sermons and addresses in a volume entitled Sanford's Discourses (pub. c. 1836). When completed, the penitentiary cost $16,569.88.—N. Y. H. S. Bull., Jl, 1921, p. 40, citing city comptroller's report, 1829. See, further, M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVII: 458–59; also Je 8 and O 19, 1829.

22 Rembrandt Peale offers to sell to the corporation his portrait of Washington giving orders to commence the entrenchments at Yorktown; his letter is referred to the committee on arts and sciences.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVII: 376.

" The common council resolves that counsel take the usual measures for opening Exchange Place and continuing it to Wall St. along the south-easterly side of the "Merchants Exchange Buildings."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVII: 380–81, 414–15.

" Because "the time is fast approaching when in conformity to the views of the Common Council for the better administration of the affairs of the City, the Old goal and Bridewell must be removed, or modified," a committee is appointed to report to the board "concerning the premises."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVII: 397. See D 1; and L. M. R. K., III: 972.

The common council resolves to open 14th St. between The Oct.
Bowery and North River.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVII: 405. 6

The common council resolves to cut down two hills, between 20
Yorkville and Harlem, on the line of Third Ave.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVII: 428.

The common council refers to the committee on lands and " places a resolution to place trees on the Washington Parade Ground. —M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVII: 433. According to the view of this ground, etc. which was published as the frontispiece of N. Y. As It Is, In 1837, the committee acted favourably on the resolution.

The first "Manufacturers' Fair" is held under the auspices 24 of the Am. Institute (see Ja), at Masonic Hall.—N. Y. Eve. Post, O 25, 1828; N. Y. As It Is, In 1833, 79. See also My 2, 1829.

At a crowded meeting held at Tammany Hall, Andrew Jackson 31 is endorsed for president, John C. Calhoun for vice-president, and Martin Van Buren for governor.—N. Y. Eve. Post, N 1, 1828. This ticket won in the city and state.—Ibid., N 5, 6, 7, 8, 10, 11, and 12, 1828.

Andrew Jackson and John C. Calhoun, Democrats, are elected Nov.
president and vice-president. The National Republican candidates 4 were John Quincy Adams and Richard Rush.—McKee, National Conventions and Platforms, 24–26.

The common council refers to the committee on arts and 17 sciences a petition of Chas. B. Shaw, city surveyor, asking for the loan of "the Drawing of the City Hall for the purpose of having an Engraving made of the same."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVII: 449.

The common council grants a permit to a contractor to cut " through the bulkhead on the south side of Stanton Slip so that his scows may pass through to fill up the basin at this place.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVII: 454.

The common council adopts a report and resolution which re- " quires the committee on wharves, piers and slips to cause West St. to be extended across the slip or basin at Washington Market between Fulton and Vesey Sts. The report contains, in part, the following facts:

West St. is "a great leading Street along the Margin of the North River, and a principal Channel of communication for the very extensive trade of the West part of the City (which will be greatly increased by the recent establishment of a Line of Tow Boats between Courtlandt and Fulton streets and the erection of an extensive range of Stores between those Streets along the Easterly side of West Street) . . .

"The said street now extends from the Albany Basin (across which it has been ordered to be continued) and at Washington Market Basin, and it will shortly be extended from the State Prison so as to unite with the Tenth Avenue above Fort Gansevoort, when that shall be done, and the street continued across the Washington Market Basin, and the Tenth Avenue be opened it will form a direct and uninterrupted communication from the Albany Basin to Kings Bridge at which place the said Avenue terminates.

"Washington Market Basin, in its present state, is a great impediment to the free intercourse which ought to exist between the upper and lower parts of the City along the North River as all persons passing from one to the other along West street, are under the necessity of going round Washington Market into Washington street which, during the business hours of the day, is so much obstructed by Market Carts and Waggons as to render the passage of other Carriages almost impracticable. . . ."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVII: 467–69. See also Je 10, 1794, and description of Pl. 71, I: 456.

The common council refers to the committee on gas a resolu- " tion to light Wall St. with gas; and another to purchase 150 iron posts for gas lamps when this "can be done to most advantage." —M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVII: 469.

The common council resolves to apply to the legislature for the " passage of an act requiring electors to register annually some time before the day of election.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVII: 470.

"We believe that the time is now arrived when public opinion 20 has become almost, if not quite, unanimous respecting the ineligibility of the President, tho' not respecting the length of time for which he shall be chosen; it may, therefore, be expedient to make it an early subject of discussion, preparatory to the proposed amendments of the Constitution. Taught by experience, we would throw out for consideration several amendments respecting the Chief Majistrate. First, that he be chosen by a plurality, instead of a 1828 Nov. 20 majority of the Electors; which and which only, to a moral certainty, would prevent the choice devolving on the House of Representatives, that last of evils. Secondly, that he be chosen for the single term of seven or eight years, and not to be re-eligible. . . . To these may be added a third, which has been the subject of a good deal of conversation—namely, that of submitting the choice of President to the people in the first instance without the intervention of electors. And while the subject is before us, we will mention a fourth, namely, that the mode of electing be uniform throughout the states."—N. Y. Eve. Post, N 20, 1828.

22 The Mirror says, in speaking of the improvements in the Park: "We had hoped, that with the commencement of the present laudable undertaking, we should have seen a simultaneous attempt made —it would be a pretty arduous one, we confess, judging from the long delay attending its execution—to demolish those foul blots on the smooth and fair face of the city's public square, the jail and the bridewell. But, alas! the creditor, and the dun, and the collector are not more intent on retaining their hold on the poor debtor's person, nor the tip-staff and constable on that of the condemned culprit, than are our aldermen, well fed and sleek, to preserve in the view and purview of the city-hall, its ancient and gloomy associates."—N. Y. Mirror, N 22, 1828.

Dec. 1 The committees on arts and sciences and on jail and bridewell, to whom was referred the subject of enlarging the city hall, present a report with a plan, &c; these are read and laid on the table. A resolution directing that $100 be paid for the plans is adopted.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVII: 397, 480. The text of the report is not recorded.

" The common council resolves to widen Liberty St. east of Broadway, beginning the first of the next May, and to remove buildings and incumbrances within 30 days thereafter.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVII: 481–82.

" The common council adopts a resolution: "That the Bridewell building above the basement story, be prepared for the Debtors Prisoners without unnecessary delay; and that the Jail be torn down, as soon as the Bridewell can be prepared for the reception of the Jail Prisoners, And that the counsel of the Board prepare an Ordinance constituting the above part of the Bridewell a County Jail."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVII: 491. For the Mirror's comment upon this, see D 6.

6 James Kent, president of The New York Historical Society, delivers before that body the "Anniversary Discourse," in which he traces the history of the colony of New York from its discovery by Hudson to the establishment of an independent state, and lauds especially Director General Stuyvesant and Gen. Philip Schuyler. —N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections, 2d ser., I: 9–36.

8 Resolutions are presented to the common council and ordered to be printed, which look to certain changes in the municipal government. A bicameral council is again (see F 14) advocated. The creation of responsible executive departments is recommended, also the popular election of the mayor.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVII: 503–4. The Mirror's comment reads: ". . . Alderman Peters . . . has brought forward two resolutions in the common council, having for their object the reorganization of that important board. The first relates to its division into two branches; an alteration loudly called for by the augmented population and wealth of the city. The second contemplates the election of the mayor and other important officers, by the people. . . . The present form was adopted as far back as 1686, when its population did not exceed a few thousands, and the resources under the control of the public authorities were comparatively trifling. Now the former is upwards of two hundred thousand, and the latter amount to several millions. The question is simply this: Shall no check be interposed to the indiscriminate and hasty expenditure of the public funds by a single corporate body—and shall the first and most responsible office in the metropolis be any longer held at the disposal of a few individuals, when the whole body of the population are interested in its proper and judicious disposition?—We think not."—N. Y. Mirror, VI: 183 (D 13, 1828). See also N. Y. Eve. Post, D 11, 1828. See Ap 30, 1829.

" The common council resolves "that the Market now building between Canal, Washington & Spring streets in the Eighth Ward [see Ja 29, 1827] be called and Known by the name of Clinton Market."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVII: 504; XVIII: 212. For the board's action leading to the construction of this market-house, see De Voe's Market Book, 527–28; L. M. R. K., III: 958.

Dec. 10 A cargo of coal, "the first fruits of the Delaware & Hudson Canal," arrives from Kingston.—Memorandum by Hone's daughter, on inside of cover of Diary of Philip Hone (MS.), Vol. I. See also D 27.

15 The common council authorises the finance committee to contract for the purchase of land for a market on the east side of Third Ave. nearly opposite its intersection with the Bowery Road, and bounded "in front by the Avenue, on the north by Seventh, and on the south by Sixth Street." It comprises 8 lots of 22 ft. 8 in. each, making a front on Third Ave. of 181 ft. 8 in., and 100 ft. in depth along 6th and 7th Sts.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVII: 517–19; Market Book, 550. See law of Ap 25, 1829.—Laws of N. Y. (1829), chap. 267. See, further, S 7.

16 The new state prison at Sing Sing (see Ap 18, 1825) has been completed. It cost $128,500.—N. Y. Eve Post, D 17, 1828, citing West Chester Herald, D 16, 1828. See 1829.

22 The common council accepts an invitation from Wm. A. Coleman to visit the "Literary Emporium" at "Park Place House."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVII: 525. A view of "Colemans Literary Rooms, Broadway, New York," was published in Hinton's Hist. of the U. S. (London, 1830), opp. p 490, bearing publication date of "Aug. 1, 1831." The building was that erected in 1802–3 for the General Soc. of Mechanics and Tradesmen, called originally Mechanics Hall, at the n. w. cor. of Broadway and Park Place.—L. M. R. K., III: 985.

" The common council resolves to widen Ann St. on both sides between Broadway and Nassau St.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVII: 538.

23 The city buys land of Charles Henry Hall (0.229 acre) at Third Ave. and E. 7th St.—Prendergast, Record of Real Estate, 49, citing Liber Deeds, CCXLIV: 435. Here the present Cooper Park was afterwards laid out.—L. M. R. K., III: 969.

27 "The Delaware and Hudson Canal.—This great work has been completed, and an immense quantity of coal and wood has already been transported to our wharves and yards. . . ."—N. Y. Mirror, VI: 199 (D 27, 1828).

29 The aldermen and assistants elect Walter Bowne as mayor. He succeeded William Paulding, who was not a candidate for re-election. Bowne was inducted into office, and presided first on Jan. 5, 1829.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVII: 558, 559. He was succeeded on Jan. 2, 1833 (q. v.), by Gideon Lee. For brief sketch of Bowne's life, see Man. Com. Coun. (1853), 424.

" The common council resolves to open and continue Fifth Ave. from 13th to 21st St.; to open 15th St. from The Bowery to the Hudson River; and to open 17th St. from Bloomingdale Road to Sixth Ave.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVII: 554. The same resolution was again passed on Feb. 9, 1829.—Ibid., XVII: 632. Regarding 17th St., see also ibid., XVII: 654–55.

— In this year was published, under the direction of the N. Y. Hist. Soc., The History of the Late Province of New-York, from its discovery to the appointment of Governor Colden, in 1762. By the Hon. William Smith, Formerly of New York, and late Chief Justice of Lower Canada, in 2 vols. This is the continuation of Smith's history of this province, which was first published in London in 1757 (q. v.), and which carried the provincial history only to 1732. A second edition of this continuation was printed in 1830. The original manuscript volume, in Smith's autograph, is owned by the N. Y. Pub. Library. See reproduction of a specimen page in Vol. IV, Pl. 35-b. Smith "arranged" this continuation of his history "at the Manor of Livingston in 2 Months before the 20 March 1777."—See Je 3, 1777. For bibliographical notes respecting his diaries, etc., now in the N. Y. Pub. Library, see My 6 and Ag 26, 1778.

— Apparently, it was in this year that Sam'l F. B. Morse began to work on his electric telegraph. He wrote to J. Fenimore Cooper under date of "Irving House, New York, Sept. 5th, 1849," thus: "I was agreeably surprized this morning in conversing with Prof. Renwick to find that he corroborates the fact you have mentioned in your Sea Lions [but which Morse had previously questioned as implying too early a date], respecting the earlier conception of my Telegraph by me, than the date I had given, and whch goes only so far back in my own recollection as 1832. Prof. Renwick insists that immediately after Prof. Dana's Lectures at the N. York Athenaeum, I consulted with him on the subject of the 1829 velocity of electricity, and in such a way as to indicate to him that — I was contriving an Electric Telegraph. The consultation I remember, but I did not recollect the time. He will depose that it was before I went to Europe, after those Lectures; now, I went in 1829; this makes it almost certain that the impression you and Mrs. Cooper and your daughter had that I conversed with you on the subject in 1831 after my return from Italy is correct.

"If you are still persuaded that this is so, your deposition before the Commission in this city to that fact will render me an incalculable service. I will cheerfully defray your expenses to and from the city if you will meet me here this week or beginning of next. . . ." —Correspondence of James Fenimore Cooper (1922), II: 633–34; see also 620. This inquiry had an important bearing on the question of priority of invention, claimed for Joseph Henry. See 1830 (p. 1688). Morse perfected his invention in the N. Y. University, on Washington Square.—Chamberlain, N. Y. University (1901), I: 80–82; Appendix, ibid., 24.

— In this year, Louis Braille, a French teacher, devised his point system of writing for the blind.—International Encyc., III: 661.

— In this year, Henry Clay became the leader of the Republican party.—Winsor, VII: 281.

— In this year, the first volume of the Revised Statutes of the State of New York was published, to be followed soon by the rest of the work. "The changes made by it were far reaching, and radically altered a large portion of the previous law, especially that relating to uses and trusts and powers. It substituted a simple and precise code as to the creation and alienation of estates, and simplified and reduced to more of certainty the practice of the courts."—Personal recollections of the Hon. Benj. D. Silliman, in Hist. of the Bench and Bar (1897), I: 233.

— In this year, the prisoners in the state prison at Greenwich were removed to Sing Sing.—Eddy, Account of the State Prison, 16–20; L. M. R. K., III: 973. See also descrip. of Pl. 71, I: 456.

— In this year, the manufacture of bricks by machinery was begun successfully in New York.—Annals of N. Am., 561.

— In this year, a bridge was projected, to be built from the foot of Maiden Lane to Brooklyn, high enough to allow the largest ships to pass under it, its estimated cost being $600,000.—N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., N 5, 1829.

— In this year, the "Old Sketch Club or The XXI" was established. For an outline of its career, see Howe's Hist. of the Metropolitan Museum of Art, 84–85, citing John Durand's Life and Times of A. B. Durand, 90, 97. The "Sketch Club" was formed as a fraternity of artists. It soon welcomed members of other professions interested in art, among them being Bryant, Verplanck, and Sands. —Lamb, Hist. City of N. Y., II: 707; Wilson, Mem. Hist. of N. Y., IV: 364. From this club was evolved the Century Club, in 1847 (q.v., Ja 13).

— According to De Voe, the first meat-shop, not in a public market-house, was opened in this year by Henry Cornell. This was due to the common council's compelling the occupants of the old Spring St. Market, when it was about to close, to take stands in the new Clinton Market by competitive bidding. Those butchers "who had money" were obliged to buy their new stalls at very high prices,—so high that Cornell, unable to purchase, established himself in a meat-shop. He was supported by many citizens who thought the corporation should have given the butchers who had stands in the Spring St. Market the choice of stands in the Clinton Market; and, although often convicted, yet "his friends assisted him to baffle the Corporation, and, in fact, to make it appear that our 'public markets,' as then conducted, were a monopoly. This led on others to open 'shops;' although some were fined and imprisoned, yet they succeeded, and a law was established in their favor in 1843." —De Voe, Market Book, 381–82.

— An English traveller, visiting this country, writes of New York: "The main street, called Broadway, is two miles and a half long, in a straight line, and proportionably wide, with broad flagged trottoirs or side-walks, some parts of which are shaded by poplars and other lofty trees; but in the quarter devoted to business, canvass blinds are stretched from the shops to permanent wooden rails of a convenient height and neatly finished. The architecture of the buildings, however, does not at all correspond with the magnificent scale of the street, the greatest irregularity prevailing; handsome edifices of brick, and even marble, of four and five stories, being side by side with those of two or three, and in some parts actually intermixed with miserable wooden cottages. . . .

"Of the edifices dedicated to commercial purposes, the Merchants' Exchange, and the Bank of the United States, are the most considerable. The façades of both these structures are of white marble, and in a good style of architecture. . . . 1829 —

"Underneath the Exchange is the Post Office . . .

"In the immediate vicinity are concentrated almost all the principal banks, insurance offices, newspaper offices. . . ."—Boardman, America and the Americans (London, 1833), 22, 41–44.

"New York, and the avenues leading to the ocean, are strongly — fortified. . . .

"Castle William and Fort Columbus stand on Governor's Island, . . .

"Fort Wood is on Bedlow's Island, and Crown Fort on Ellis's Island, . . .

"Castle Clinton, on the west battery, is situated at the south-western angle of Manhattan island. The latter, with forts William and Columbus, command the head of the bay, and the mouths of East and Hudson rivers.

"North Fort is on the Hudson, a mile and a half north of fort Clinton.

"Fort Ganzevort is still higher up.

"Besides these there is a fort at Hurl Gate, eight miles northeast of the city, which secures the entrance on the side of the sound.

"Fort Fayette is within the narrows. Forts Richmond and Tompkins are on Staten Island, over against fort Fayette. The Narrows are seventeen hundred and sixty yards broad. The possession of Long Island and Staten Island, in time of war, is of vital importance to New York, since he who possesses them can dictate laws to the city."—Hist. of the State of N. Y., by James Macauley (1829), II: 88–89.

In this year, New York had eleven public schools, under the — direction of the Public School Society.—24th Ann. Rep. of the Trustees of the Pub. Sch. Soc. (1829).

The opening of 12th St., in this year, and later the opening — of 11th St., cut off a part of St. Mark's churchyard.—Memorial St. Mark's Church (1899), 135.

In this year, Richard Patten published a map, from a survey — by E. W. Bridges, city surveyor, showing the entire island of Manhattan, and including parts of Brooklyn, Jersey City, Hoboken, etc.—See map No. 340, filed in bureau of topography, borough president's office, dept. of public works, Municipal Bldg. See also descrip. of Pl. 80-b, III: 549.

The Raritan Canal, connecting the Hudson and Delaware Jan. Rivers, was under construction at this time.—M. C. C. (1784–5 1831), XVII: 570–73.

The "anniversary of the glorious victory of New-Orleans, and 8 the election of General Jackson to the presidency of the United States," are celebrated "in a manner corresponding with the grateful feelings of a free people." The festivities include a "great dinner" at Tammany Hall, a military ball at the Bowery Theatre, and other affairs in the various wards, gardens, etc.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ja 8–13, 1829.

The new building of the N. Y. City dispensary, at the north- 11 west cor. of Centre and White Sts., is completed and opened.—N. Y. Mirror, VII: 223 (Ja 11, 1829).

The Clinton Hall Association purchases "the plot of ground 22 100 feet square, fronting the Brick Church, in Beekman street, . . . for the erection of a building in conjunction with the New-York Athenæum."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ja 22, 1829. The lots fronted on Beekman St. between Nassau St. and Theatre Alley.—Ibid., Ja 29, 1829. See, further, Mr 26 and Jl 11.

The editor of the Post writes: "Park Theatre.—We perceive 26 with utter astonishment, and no less alarm than astonishment, that the lessees of this theatre have agreed to let it for six nights to Frances Wright, as a place to deliver her lectures in. Have they well considered what may be the consequences of the displeasure of the people? Suppose the singular spectacle of a female, publicly and ostentatiously proclaiming doctrines of Atheistical fanaticism, and even the most abandoned lewdness, should draw a crowd from a prurient curiosity, and that a riot should ensue, which should end in the demolition of the interior of the building, or even in burning it down, on whom would the loss fall? Would the policy of insurance against fire, which describes it as a building devoted to theatrical exhibitions, extend to exhibitions of a very different description, and which must attract a very different order of people? This is a question for the Insurance Offices 1829 Jan. 26 seriously to consider as well as the proprietors and lessees. It is also a question for the public authorities to reflect upon. Is there no danger of collecting an unruly mob which nothing perhaps can restrain short of public force and bloodshed itself?"—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ja 26, 1829. The next day he added: "We are sorry to perceive . . . that Frances Wright means to persist in her determination to appear this evening at the theatre. We hope nothing will happen of a dangerous or even of an unpleasant nature. We presume that no modest woman will be seen there."—Ibid., Ja 27, 1829. Miss Wright delivered her first lecture, on "Knowledge," on Jan. 27, and there was apparently no disturbance.—Ibid., Ja 27, 29, 1829. The other lectures were delivered on Jan. 29, 31, Feb. 3, 5, and 7.—Ibid., Ja 29, 31, F 3, 4, 7, 1829.

" The common council changes to Barrow St. (see S 8, 1828) the name of that part of 5th St. which lies west of Washington Parade. It also changes the name of Pump St. to Walker St.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVII: 598.

31 The legislature incorporates "The Seamen's Bank for Savings in the city of New-York." Among the incorporators are Anson G. Phelps, John Pintard, and Peter Remsen.—Laws of N. Y. (1829), chap. 17. The bank opened at 149 Maiden Lane on May 11.—N. Y. Eve. Post, My 9. It is still doing business.

Feb. — The architectural firm of Ithiel Town and A. J. Davis was formed in this month, with offices in the merchants' exchange. For a list of their more important works, see Dunlap's Hist. of the Arts of Design (Goodspeed ed.), III: 212.

2 The "Chatham Theatre with its appertenances, which have undergone so many changes since the death of the late Mr. Barrere, has at length been taken on a lease by one of our native citizens, Mr. [James H.] Hackett, for the purpose of converting it into an Opera House. . . ."—N. Y. Eve. Post, F 2, 1829. See also advertisement in ibid., F 3, 1829. See, further, My 20.

Mar. 2 "A Soup House is established at the corner of Mercer and Houston-streets, where the poor will be gratuitously supplied with soup this afternoon. This establishment was got up by and is under the direction of Moses Field, Esq."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Mr 2, 1829.

3 An elaborate masquerade ball is held at the Park Theatre.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Mr 5, 1829. Another one was held there on March 19.—Ibid., Mr 20, 1829.

4 Andrew Jackson's administration as president begins.—Winsor, VII: 283, 348. His inauguration is celebrated in New York by the firing of salutes from Whitehall, Forts Stoddard and Gansevoort, Governor's Island, the Navy Yard, and the Narrows, and by a military parade, and a display of flags.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Mr 4, 1829.

" The following report on the subject of providing a fire-proof building for the preservation of the city records is presented to the common council by the joint committee to which was referred a memorial of the register of the city respecting the necessity of securing the records of his office from danger by fire, in consequence of the accumulation of books, and requiring the committee to make further arrangements for more room; to which com. was likewise referred the resolution of Sept. 24, 1827 (q.v.). The committee finds "that the records of the Courts, which are the evidences of the titles of property to the amount of many Millions of Dollars; The great importance of your Registers Office, as respects real estate, likewise your Comptrollers Office and your Street Commissioners Office, which has already been on fire, and was very near being destroyed, And further, that in consequence of the necessity of having fire and light at all times of night, in all parts of the building [the city hall]; and the necessity of allowing free access to every part of it, to all classes of Citizens, and the Records Books Maps &c being of a combustible nature, do consequently greatly endanger this valuable building.

"The Committee are therefore of opinion that a suitable fire proof building should be provided as soon as possible; And your Committee beg leave farther to state, that they have carefully examined the Debtors Gaol, which is soon to be vacated, and find that it will answer every purpose, for the fire proof building proposed. Its walls are of the best quality, and built in the most substantial manner, the interior is divided in a suitable manner with Stone Partition walls to every Room 22 inches thick, and consequently will only require the wooden floors taken out, and brick Arches put in their places, the Doors and windows made of Iron, and the outside finished in a handsome manner, so as to represent marble; a flat Copper or Stone roof, with a neat balustrade all round thus giving you at a comparatively small expense a handsome building of 60 by 75 feet containing 14 fireproof rooms, ten of which are 18 by 19 and four are 19 by 26 feet, the said rooms being sufficiently spacious for all the purposes required—And farther, the advantages of making use of the said walls, are as follows: The age of the Walls has made them permanent to receive the pressure of the arches, which if you were to build a new one would require the outside walls to be double the thickness to be of equal strength—The present walls are perfectly dry, and can be made ready to receive your Records &c in nine months, Whereas a new building could not be used for several years without destroying your papers in consequence of the dampness of your Walls. The probable cost, according to a rough estimate made by your Committee, for the alteration of said building as above proposed (the minute description of which is not inserted here) will be from 15 to 20,000 Dollars and your Committee are of opinion that the cost of erecting a new building of the same description would be from 35 to 40,000 Dollars making a saving by using the walls of the present Jail of one half the expence, independent of the advantages of having the use of the building for the purposes for which it is required much sooner than if you were to build a new one." The committee therefore offers a resolution that a committee be directed "to procure a plan representing the proposed alteration of the present Jail, and in the usual manner obtain estimates of the Cost of said alteration." This report was not entered of record until July 26, 1830.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIX: 185–87. See, further, Jl 12, 1830.

" The common council adopts a resolution to continue Charles and Amos Sts. through the state prison grounds to West St.; and to authorise the finance committee "to have the said Ground laid out in parcels or Lots and to advertise and sell the same at Public Auction in such Lots and upon such terms of credit as they . . . may think proper reserving the buildings and materials upon the said premises to be afterwards disposed of and sold as the said Committee shall think most advantageous for the interests of the City."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVII: 689. See, further, Mr 27, Ap 22 and 28.

" The special and finance committees, to which were referred memorials from the trustees of the public schools and from others on the subject of extending the system of public schools, report to the common council statistics regarding the diffusion of elementary education in New York City. It is resolved that application be made to the legislature for the passage of a law authorising the common council annually to lay a special tax of one-eighth of one percent to be applied exclusively to the support of common schools in the city of New York.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVII: 696–702. See Laws of N. Y. (1829), chap. 265.

" The common council adopts a resolution to open 18th St. between the Bloomingdale Road and the Fitz Roy Road.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVII: 704.

" The common council refers to the committees on repairs and public offices a resolution to examine and report on "the propriety and expediency of fitting up in a proper & Convenient manner the Building in Chamber street belonging to the City called the Rotunda for the occupation of the Court of Sessions—And also their opinion as to the propriety of erecting a convenient Edifice adjoining the said Rotunda on Chamber street for the accommodation of the Police Office and Grand and Petit Jurors."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVII: 705. For the report of the joint committees, see Mr 16.

16 The joint committee on the Rotunda (see Mr 9) makes a preliminary report, which states that "it will be a great accommodation to the Public and relief to the City Hall that the said Rotunda be repaired and properly fitted up, for the use of the Court of Sessions and other Courts for the Trial of Criminals—The walls on examination are of sufficient solidity & Strength and that the said building is of ample capacity, to be converted into a convenient and elegant Sessions Room or Hall." The board accepts this report and refers it to the committee on repairs "to take proper measures to obtain possession of the Building . . . in behalf of the Corporation," and to "proceed to cause [it] to be fitted up and repaired 1829 Mar. 16 . . . for the purpose mentioned in their Report without any further direction of the Common Council."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVII: 712–13. This purpose prevented further exhibitions of panoramic paintings there.—Ibid., XVII: 728, 734. Friends of Mr. Vanderlyn, who erected the Rotunda in 1817, protested against the corporation's action.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Mr 21, 1829.

" Aldermen Isaac Brown, Samuel Stevens, etc., make a report to the common council in favour of establishing a well and reservoir in 14th St., whence water for extinguishing fires may be distributed in iron pipes. The report is approved, and the committee is directed to carry it into effect.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVII: 722–26. On April 20, the board approved a contract made by the committee with Mark Richards of Philadelphia "for Iron pipes for conveying Water into the City."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVIII: 25. See, further, My 4.

19 Crimes and outrages are committed "almost daily" in the neighbourhood of the Five Points, "which has become the most dangerous place in our city."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Mr 19, 1829.

21 Gov. Martin Van Buren arrives in New York on his way to Washington to take up his duties as secretary of state, to which office he has recently been appointed by Pres. Jackson. He left on March 24. A public dinner was planned for him, but lack of time forced him to decline the honour.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Mr 23, 24, 1829.

23 The common council adopts a complimentary resolution, tendering the freedom of the city to Martin Van Buren, the secretary of state.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVII: 746–47; N. Y. H. S. Coll. (1885), 414–17. On April 4, he wrote his acceptance and thanks.—Ibid., XVIII: 2. See, further, Je 8, 1832.

" As Fourth, Fifth, and Eighth Aves., and 125th and 129th Sts., in Harlem, "are opened and worked into good Roads by the proprietors of the Grounds through which they pass," the "Old Road" is no longer required by the public as a passage-way. The owners of all the grounds between the Third and Eighth Aves. and 125th and 129th Sts. "are prepared to Cede to this Corporation all the remaining Streets and Avenues not yet opened, and work the same at their individual expence." The common council therefore adopts a resolution "that the proprietors of the Grounds, lying on and adjoining the Old Road or Lane between the 125th and 129th Streets be permitted to close the same on the conditions expressed. . . ."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVII: 732.

" The committee on public offices finds "it is necessary to make farther provisions for Juries and Courts of Justice and other public objects," and the common council orders "that the Clerk give notice to all the occupants of apartments in the buildings in Chamber street, that the Rooms occupied by them are wanted for the use of the City and that they will be required to be vacated on or before the first day of August next."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVII: 733. Reference here is to the N. Y. Institution (formerly the almshouse) and the Rotunda. The order led to requests for extension of time, etc., on the part of the Lyceum of Natural History, the Am. Academy of Fine Arts, and the N. Y. Literary and Philosophical Soc.—Ibid., XVIII: 33–34, 34, 76. See, further, My 31, 1830.

" The common council resolves that the counsel of the board take the usual measures for opening McDougal St. from 6th to 8th St.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVII: 735.

" The common council approves a resolution that 6th St. be opened from Broadway to the Bowery. This will open a direct communication from the East to the North River along the market to be built near Third Ave., and also along the Washington Parade. —M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVII: 736.

" The common council adopts the following resolutions: (1) To reserve the front ground on West St. between Christopher and Amos Sts. to the depth of 30 ft. for the purpose of erecting a public market-house thereon; (2) to open a street, to be called "Wehauken Street," in the rear of said market ground, to be 50 ft. wide and to extend from Christopher to Amos St.; (3) to sell the grounds belonging to the corporation fronting on Christopher, West, and Barrow Sts. along with the state prison grounds.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVII: 750; De Voe, Market Bood, 576. See Ja, 1834.

26 The Clinton Hall Association offers a medal worth $25 for "the most approved plan" for their projected building at Beekman and Nassau Sts.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Mr 26, 1829. See Jl 11.

27 Commenting on the common council's resolution for tearing down the state prison (cf. Mr 9), the Post says: "This may be well; but we would ask with all deference whether to have commenced with the City Prison would not certainly have been better? But perhaps some honorable members of the board, being particularly gifted in the article of taste, look upon this latter establishment (the same not being in the ninth ward) as a very ornamental sort of concern. The rear of it, covered with sundry nameless, though by no means smell-less architectural structures, is preserved, we presume, as a foreground to the City Hall, and as a sort of snuff box to the noses of their honors. It is said there is no accounting for taste, and possibly the saying may be equally true of the olfactories of a body corporate.

"Quere.—Has not the Bridewell been once indicted by the Grand Jury as a nuisance? If so, we should like to see it tried and sentenced to be transported to the 'Five Points,' or some other place out of sight."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Mr 27, 1829.

30 The common council resolves to number the houses in Vestry St. from Canal St. to the Hudson River, and likewise the houses in Desbrosses St. from Hudson St. to the river.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVII: 756.

Apr. 4 Privileges to "the Firemen of the City of New-York" are granted by the legislature. A service of eight years (in some cases, seven) as fireman shall exempt the person "from serving as a juror in any of the courts of this state, and from all militia duty, except in cases where the militia are ordered into actual service."—Laws of N. Y. (1829), chap. 100.

" The apothecaries of New York have formed an association under the title of the College of Pharmacy, for the purpose of improving the sale of drugs and elevating the character of those engaged in this business.—N. Y. Mirror, Ap 4, 1829.

" The editor of the Mirror discusses the subject of a junction to be made of Broadway with Fourth Ave., saying in part that it has been suggested to him that ". . . after a junction between it [Broadway] and the avenue shall have been effected—which can now easily be done, and at so small an expense—the name, which is at once so appropriate and significant, should designate the whole line from the Battery to Harlaem river, and that it should be known and distinguished by no other appellation than that of Broadway. In this we heartily concur; nor are we without the conviction that the great body of the citizens would give it their cordial assent. . . ."—N. Y. Mirror, VI: 311 (Ap 4, 1829).

6 The common council adopts a resolution "that Martin Van Beuren late Governor of this State be requested to sit for his portrait to be placed in the City Hall."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVII: 777. In his letter of appreciation, dated Washington, April 15, he says: "I shall select the Artist and enable him to perform the work at the first leisure moment."—Ibid., XVIII: 3 (where the original of this letter, now in the city clerk's record-room, is reproduced). The city paid Inman $1,050 for this portrait.—Ibid., XVIII: 147, 256, 595. The frame cost $100.—Ibid., 456. See also Cat. of Works of Art Belonging to the City of N. Y., 18. 20 The police and the jail and bridewell committees, to whom jointly was referred a petition "for taking the Triangular block called the Five Points & building thereon a Bridewell & Watch House," report to the common council that it is inexpedient to erect a bridewell there, and are sustained by vote of the board. The report, referring to this neighbourhood, says that "the Five Points is a place of great disorder and crime, and that it would be particularly desirable to rid the City of the Nuisance complained 1829 Apr. 20 of, and were it a suitable place for a Bridewell, they would be willing to see the Corporation make some sacrifices for the improvement of the part of the City referred to . . .

"Your Committee Know of no public use which this Block if taken could be put to, and it would probably be valued very high to the Corporation as it produces a great rent on account of its being a good location for small retailers of Liquor, who have extensively located themselves in this vicinity. What may be considered as the Nuisance has in reality increased the Value of the property . . .

"Your Committee know of no instance (and the precedent would be a bad one) of the Corporation taking ground to convert the same into a Square. . . ."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVIII: 11–12.

Five Points is the intersection of Baxter, Park, and Worth Sts. —L. M. R. K., III: 1,000. For views of this locality at various periods, see Man. Com. Coun. (1853), 180; (1855), 112; (1860), 372, 396; (1868), 377, 435; (1869), 367, 369; (1870), 499, 511.

22 The state prison grounds at Greenwich are sold at auction. "They were divided into 100 lots, 92 of which were sold for $117,000 —averaging $1,200 per lot. The remaining eight lots were reserved by the Corporation. The buildings were not sold. This property was purchased of the state by the corporation of this city some time ago for 100,000 dollars."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ap 23, 1829. See also Ap 28.

" The old Circus on Broadway (see My 29, 1827) is converted into a repository for the sale of horses, carriages, etc., a riding school and livery-stable, and is named Tattersall's after the one in London.—N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., Ap 22, 1829. The building is shown in Horner's view (see Pl. 113, Vol. III); see also the history of the site under "City Assembly Rooms," in L. M. R. K., III: 983.

25 The public square designated the "Parade" on the map of the commissioners of 1807, which was altered and reduced in size by the act of April 15, 1814 (q. v.), is now discontinued by a new act of the legislature. Fifth Ave. is continued northward through this land, uniting with itself (its northern section) at 31st St.; and 24th, 25th, 26th, 27th, 28th, 29th, and 30th Sts. are extended westward from Fourth Ave. through this land as far as Sixth Ave.—Laws of N. Y. (1829), chap. 269. This was the result of action taken by the common council on Feb. 20, 1826; March 31, 1828, and March 16, 1829.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XV: 217; XVII: 82–85, 726. See, further, Ap 10, 1837.

" The legislature passes an act "for the Prevention of Masquerades" in any public hall, theatre, public garden, etc., to which admission fees are asked.—Laws of N. Y. (1829), chap. 270; M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVIII: 32. See, however, F 13, 1830.

28 The buildings at Greenwich formerly occupied as a state prison are sold for $4,827, "with the exception of the centre building, which is supposed to be worth a larger sum." The lots reserved by the corporation are to be used for a market to be called "Greenwich Market."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ap 30, 1829, citing Jour. of Commerce. See also Ap 22. See, further, My 1.

29 To create a fund in aid of "the Society for the Reformation of Juvenile Delinquents, in the City of New York," the legislature passes an act requiring excise collectors (provided for in the act of Ap 10, 1824) to demand $1.50, in addition to the sum already required by law, upon issuing a license to a "tavern-keeper, grocer or keeper of an ordinary or victualling house or public garden," and the additional sums so collected shall be turned over to the treasurer of the society. Likewise, the manager or proprietor of every theatre or circus is now required to take out a license, to be granted by the mayor for one year, and pay a fee of $500 if a theatre or $250 if a circus. These fees shall be given to the society.

The act also requires that the commissioners of health shall render an annual accounting to the comptroller of all "Hospital monies" received and disbursed for the Marine Hospital, and for official expenses.—Laws of N. Y. (1829), chap. 302. See also M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVIII: 32.

30 A meeting of citizens is held at Masonic Hall, after notice in the daily papers, "to take into consideration the subject of providing for a salutary and prompt amendment to the city charter."

It is resolved "that the present organization of our local government is not adapted to the altered exigencies of the city, but is essentially deficient in those checks, balances and securities against abuses, the necessity and efficacy of which have been declared by our wisest statesmen, and demonstrated not only in the general government, but in every state in the Union." Apr. 30

It is the opinion of the meeting that the calling of a city convention is the proper mode of revising the charter and discussing the merits of the proposed amendments.

The meeting approves the ordinance now before the common council making provision for calling such convention, and passes a resolution that a copy of the proceedings of this meeting be presented to the mayor with request that he lay them before the common council at its next meeting.—N. Y. Eve. Post, My 1, 1829; M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVIII: 68–69. See My 11.

In this month, the locomotive called the "Stourbridge Lion" arrived from England on the ship "John Jay," for the Delaware and Hudson Canal and Railroad Co. It was landed at the wharf of the West Point Foundry works, foot of Beach St., and was the first steam locomotive in the city. It was sent to Honesdale, Pa., where it was tested on Aug. 8,—the first locomotive to be run upon a railroad in America.—Hist. of the First Locomotives in Am., by Wm. H. Brown (N. Y., 1874), 75–92; The Stourbridge Lion. The First Locomotive to turn a Wheel on the Western Hemisphere, by Edw. A. Penniman (Honesdale, 1905). See also My 27, 1829; 1830; and 1831. May —

The legislature incorporates the "New-York Sacred Music Society," to cultivate sacred music, and for charitable purposes.—Laws of N. Y. (1829), chap. 345. See 1837. 1

The common council designates "the Penitentiary at Bellevue" as a proper place of confinement for "the female convicts now confined in the Prison formerly known as the State Prison at Greenwich," and those who hereafter may be "received for the purpose of confinement" by the city according to "An Act relative to the imprisonment within the City and County of New York of female convicts adjudged to be confined in the State Prison," passed April 23, 1829. "

It is also resolved that as soon as the penitentiary at Bellevue shall be approved "by the Commissioners for building a New State Prison at Mount Pleasant," it shall be so used "under the direction of the Commissioners of the Alms House." It is ordered that "the Counsel of the Board be instructed to proceed forthwith to Albany to obtain the approbation of the Commissioners," or to procure the passage of a law authorising the common council to appropriate "any prison now erected or to be hereafter erected within the said City and County for the confinement of the Female Convicts."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVIII: 31–32. On May 4, the counsel reported that he had obtained the commissioners' approval.—Ibid., XVIII: 38–39.

The legislature incorporates the "American Institute in the City of New York" (see Ja, 1828), to encourage and promote domestic industry in the United States, in agriculture, commerce, manufactures, and the arts.—Laws of N. Y. (1829), chap. 348; N. Y. As It Is, In 1833, 79; and see M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVIII: 274. 2

The name of Burrows St. is changed to Grove St.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVIII: 46. "

The common council authorises the committee to purchase certain described property at the corner of the Bowery and 13th St. for a "fountain" (reservoir) of water to be used in extinguishing fires. The purchase price is $10,250.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVIII: 50–51. The reservoir was erected on the purchased ground and was "the first public reservoir and the beginning of the public water-works of the city of New York."—N. Y. H. S. Bulletin (Oct., 1917), 70. See Mr 16, Je 1, and N 16, 1829; Ap 19, 1830. "

The common council appoints a committee to contract for a site for a new bridewell.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVIII: 54. It lays on the table a resolution directing the committee on public offices "to submit a plan for Alterations in the Buildings in Chamber Street for the purpose of a Bridewell."—Ibid., 55. "

The common council takes up the resolutions passed on April 30 (q. v.) by the meeting of citizens. The law committee submits an ordinance for calling a city convention, delegates to which shall be 11

1829 May 11 chosen in each ward by ballot on May 20. The delegates so chosen shall meet on June 10 in the city hall, in the room occupied by the court of sessions. When the convention has agreed upon amendments, it may make application to the legislature for the passage of an act to sanction and give effect to them. Various amendments to these resolutions are referred, with the whole subject, to a special committee.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVIII: 68–72. See also N. Y. Eve. Post, My 12, 14, and 16, 1829. 17 John Jay dies at his country-seat in Westchester Co., at the age of 84 years. The news reached New York and was published on May 19.—N. Y. Eve. Post, My 19, 1829. On that day, the members of the New York State Bar, meeting at the city hall, drew up resolutions regretting "the recent decease of the late venerable John Jay."—Corresp. and Pub. Papers of John Jay, IV: 516–18; N. Y. Mirror, VI: 375 (My 30).

18 The common council adopts a report of a special committee which has examined the recommendations of the law committee in relation to an amendment to the city charter to effect a reorganization of the common council. This report, as well as the resolution which is adopted, states that it is the sense of this common council that "the present Organization of our City Government, is not adapted to the extent importance and Complexity of our public business, but is deficient in not providing proper securities against improvident expenditure and hasty Legislation." It is agreed that such reorganization should take place; and a plan is adopted for a meeting of the electors of the city and county of New York in their respective wards, at specified places, on the evenings of the second Tuesday in June at 8 p. m., there to choose by ballot five delegates from each ward to meet in convention at the "Sessions Room" (court of sessions) on the fourth Tuesday in June at 10 a. m., "for the purpose of suggesting to the Board such alterations in the Organization of our City Government as they may deem advisable."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVIII: 93–95. The time of meeting of the electors was later changed from June 9 at 8 p. m. to June 9, from 9 a. m. until sundown.—Ibid., 98. " "Several alterations in the fronts of houses [on Broadway] are going on. Granite pillars are taking the place of brick, and the materials for such a job are strewed about in every direction. The builders, one would imagine, seem to think that every other kind of business should stand still till they have completed their job. . . ."—N. Y. Eve. Post, My 20, 1829.

23 Sir John Ross, with the steamer "Victory," sails from Woolwich on his first voyage to the Arctic. He returned on Oct. 12, 1833. The most important fruit of the voyage was the discovery of the true position of the north magnetic pole.—Winsor, VIII: 88–89, 119.

" "Trinity Church.—The wooden paling which has so long disfigured this venerable edifice, has been removed some paces back, and is to have its place supplied by a light and graceful iron railing. Availing ourselves of a suggestion made by the editor of the American, we recommend the still farther removal of the new enclosure, so that it shall range with the front of the body of the church, and throw forward the portico, in bold relief, upon the pavement, which will then form a noble sidewalk and promenade, fit for the most commanding site in the most elegant highway in the United States."—N. Y. Mirror, VI: 367 (My 23, 1829). See also N. Y. Eve. Post, My 22 and Jl 25, 1829.

" The Church of the Ascension on Canal St. is to be consecrated on this day by Bishop Hobart.—N. Y. Eve. Post, My 21, 1829. For corner-stone date, and description of the edifice, see Ap 15, 1828. Ten years later it was destroyed by fire.—See Je 30, 1839.

27 Philip Hone goes to Abell & Dunscomb's foundry in Water St. to see one of the new locomotives engines in operation, which was recently imported from England for the use of the railroad belonging to the Delaware and Hudson Canal Co. (see May, supra). The second locomotive was set in operation the following day at the works of the Messrs. Kemble.—Hone's Diary, I: 10. See also Mag. of Am. Hist., XXV: 437. May 27

29 "Among the number of improvements which are in contemplation in our city, none strike us as of more utility & convenience than the plan of opening a direct communication from the centre of the Park to the East river. It is proposed to widen Spruce street, commencing at the corner opposite the Tract Society building, and carry it through, in a straight line, until it strikes Ferry street, and from thence to Peck-slip.—Barclay and Murray streets on the North river side of our city are nearly parallel to Spruce street, and it will therefore in fact, open an almost uninterrupted view of both rivers from the City-Hall. . . .

"Another improvement is also in contemplation, but meets with great opposition. It is to widen William street from Pine street to Maiden lane. . . ."—N. Y. Eve. Post, My 29, 1829. See also ibid., Je 3.

June 1 The common council votes to appropriate $2,000 for the purchase of ground to equalize the depth of lots bought from Mr. Coddington, and which form a part of the tract for the new reservoir. This may be made to face 13th St. leaving the valuable lots on the Bowery undisturbed. There may also be some lots left on 13th St. which can be sold later.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVIII: 112. See Mr 16, My 4, Jl 13, and N 16, 1829; Ap 19, 1830.

" The common council records the following account of the opening of Eighth Ave.: About 1811, the opening of the avenue was started, "from Greenwich upwards and from McCoomb's bridge downwards." A middle section of about three miles in a rocky part of the island remained unfinished, until about 1826, when the penitentiary convicts were employed on the work and finished about two miles. As the convicts are to be moved to Blackwell's Island, the board now decides to have the remaining portion, "from Apthorps lane to the foot of Clindennings Hill," completed by contract.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVIII: 116–17.

4 The steam frigate "Fulton the First" is completely demolished by the explosion of her powder magazine, while lying at the Navy Yard. Nearly all on board are killed.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Je 5, 1829, cited in descrip. of Pl. 83-a, Vol. III.

8 The following general order is issued from the adjutant-general's office in Albany: "The Sixth Brigade of New York State Artillery is hereby reorganized, and will hereafter consist of the 3d Regiment of Artillery, under command of Colonel Sanford; the 13th Regiment, under command of Colonel Ming; and the First Squadron of Clinton Horse Guards, under command of Major Cowan. The said Brigade is placed under command of Brigadier-General Spicer, and will remain attached to the First Division of Artillery."—Grand Opening of the New Armory of the Eighth Regiment (1890), 12.

" "The Penitentiary now building under the direction of the Corporation of this city on Blackwell's Island, on the model of the State Prison at Sing Sing, is nearly finished. The roof is on, the cells are completed, the floor between the great interior mass of masonry containing the cells and the outer wall of the prison, is nearly laid, and the windows are glazed. The number of cells is two hundred and forty. . . . Each of them is opposite to one of the outer windows of the building. . . . There is no part of the interior susceptible of combustion but the slight wooden galleries that pass along the outside of the three upper stories of cells. . . ."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Je 8, 1829. See S 10, 1828.

9 At a special election called by the common council (see My 18), five delegates from each ward are chosen to meet in a city convention and consider alterations in the city government.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Je 10, 1829. The delegates convened on June 23 (q. v.).

15 The name of Arden St. is changed to Morton St.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVIII: 129–30. See L. M. R. K., III: 1006.

" The common council adopts the following resolutions: (1) to open 14th St. from the Bowery to the Hudson River on Oct. 1 next, and to remove all buildings therefrom; (2) to open Lewis St. from North St. to Eighth St.; (3) to open Exchange Place and remove all the buildings therefrom; (4) to open Seventh Ave. and remove all the buildings therefrom.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVIII: 131.

" Convicts are employed in cutting down the hill at 86th St. to secure connection with Hell Gate ferry.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVIII: 135.

" The common council orders that William St. be widened from Pine St. to Maiden Lane. "Owing to the extreme narrowness of that part of William street, it is often with much difficulty that Citizens can pass without being Jostled from the side walks, and besides, the line of the present buildings being so irregular as almost wholly to obstruct the view between John and Pine Streets."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVIII: 138–39.

" As "a compliment for their faithful services," the common council orders "that the perquisites arising from the permission to erect Booths around the Park on the ensuing celebration of American Independence" be equally divided between the high constable, the first marshal, the messenger, and the clerk of the common council.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVIII: 144–45. Vide infra.

" The common council resolves "that it be referred to the Celebration Committee to permit Booths to be erected around the Bowling Green and Battery to accommodate the People visiting the City and at Washington Parade Ground."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVIII: 146. The editor of the Mirror wrote on June 20: ". . . Let us hope that no more booths will be erected around the Park and Battery,—let them be transported to the regions of Washington-square. . . ."—N. Y. Mirror, VI: 399 (Je 20, 1829). See also *N. Y. 20 The editor of the Mirror again attacks the jail and bridewell: "We have lately received several communications on the endless subject of the removal of these foul excrescences; but we most respectfully decline their publication. It is in vain. Go and ask the Emperor of China to abdicate the throne he has inherited from Fee-fo-fum—the Autocrat of Russia to give up his views on St. Sophia's steeple—the Pope of Rome to cut off his whiskers—Judge Miller to relinquish the 'luxury of his tenth segar'—but not the corporation of the city of New-York to give up their two darlings—twins in beauty—the Jail and Bridewell."—*N. The governors of the N. Y. Hospital resolve to make some alterations in the main building. "The design is to carry out a projecting front and pediment on the north and south sides of the present main hospital building, to contain excellent and spacious baths, nurses apartments, and other offices communicating with each ward throughout the edifice. . . .It is also intended to connect this improvement with a complete system of ventilating and warming the building in winter, by the Walkefield or Belfer stoves, introducing fresh warm air into every apartment. Another great improvement in the Asylum for the Insane at Bloomingdale is in progress and nearly completed. . . . It is the erection of an exceedingly commodious building at some distance from the present edifice and wholly separate from it, for the reception of the more noisy and violent patients, leaving the present structure to be occupied by those of another class, undisturbed by anything that will bring in their minds the idea of a mad-house . . ."—*N. The common council authorises the alderman and assistant of the First Ward "to cause a Fountain to be constructed in the Bowling Green at the private expence of such of the Citizens as may agree to contribute to the same."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVIII: 268. Cf. N 30. 21

The city convention, which assembled for its first session on 28

1829 June 23, holds its final session in city hall. Although the charter
Sept. amendments (see Ap 7, 1830) had been adopted at the session of 28 Sept. 25, this last session was called to decide upon "a suitable plan for obtaining the sense of the people of this city in relation to the amendments to the charter." It was agreed to submit the amendments to the common council with a request "that an ordinance may be passed . . . for submitting to the electors of this city, at the next general election, the determination of the question, whether the amendments so proposed ought to become a law of this state." They also request a separate vote on the question "whether the term of service of the Aldermen should be one or two years"—a question much discussed at the convention sessions.—N. Y. Eve. Post, S 29, 1829. A newspaper comment on the convention's work is: "It is, perhaps, taking all its provisions together, as judicious a frame of government as could be devised for the city. It is a system of well contrived checks and responsibilities, of good practical guards against inconsiderate proceedings, and against waste and misapplication of the public money. . . . The amendments as now adopted will, we doubt not, prove acceptable to the people, among whom we believe there is but one opinion as to the abuses that exist, namely, that they have been borne too long, and the time to remedy them is come."—Ibid., S 26, 1829. The common council, on Oct. 19 (q.v.), took the action requested by the convention.

30 The "elegant building" erected for the N. Y. Institution for the Instruction of the Deaf and Dumb, on the east side of Fifth Ave. between 49th and 50th Sts. (see O 19, 1827), is dedicated.—N. Y. Eve. Post, S 29 and O 1, 1829; Hist. of the N. Y. Inst. for the Instruction of the Deaf and Dumb (1893). In 1831, its situation was described as "on the Fifth Avenue, adjacent to the line of the N. Y. and Harlem Railroad, and within a short distance of the great post road leading from New York to New Haven." It was "110 feet long and 60 feet wide, built of brick, covered with stucco, resembling marble," and, including a basement, was four storeys high. It contained "rooms sufficient to accommodate, with board, lodging and tuition, 150 Mutes, together with the requisite number of instructors." It cost $31,000. It was "ornamented in front with a beautiful colonnade, 50 feet long, occupying the centre of the building." The acre of ground on which it stood was a donation from the corporation of the city (see Je 15, 1829), who, in addition, leased to the directors, for a term of years, nine acres which were "handsomely laid out into lawns and gardens, planted with trees and shrubbery, . . . affording, to such as desire it, the opportunity of becoming acquainted with horticulture."

Workshops had been erected by that year. Gardening, tailoring, shoe-making, and cabinet-making were the useful trades taught. Girls were instructed in needlework, and other domestic occupations, and in drawing and painting. There were 28 pupils in 1831, and it was intended to establish courses of lectures in physics, chemistry, natural history, geography, general history, political economy, etc. The government was described as "parental." The principal was Prof. H. P. Peet, who had associated with him five professors.—Fay, Views of N. Y., containing view of the institution by Dakin (pub. by Peabody, 1831). By the end of 1832, there were 87 pupils, of whom 55 were supported by the state, 11 by the city of New York, and the remainder by friends and charitable institutions.—N. Y. As It Is, In 1833, 68. In 1844, there were 168 pupils, —96 males, 72 females.—Picture of N. Y. (1846), 47. Necessary additions were made to the building in 1834, 1838, 1846, and 1850. —Belden, 94; Man. Com. Coun. (1870), 761. See, further, L. M. R. K., III: 955. Regarding lease of a lot from the city for the institution's use, see M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVIII: 126.

Oct. A meeting, called by Russell Comstock, "Ciderist," is held on
2 the steps of the city hall, by those who are in favour of establishing national schools in which the blacks shall be taught with the whites, of "putting the wife on a par with the husband," and of abolishing imprisonment for debt. Resolutions are adopted favouring the election of only such legislators as agree to these amendments. Comstock is nominated for president, senator, and finally as assemblyman. Constable Hays broke up the meeting by arresting the "Ciderist" for disturbing the peace.—N. Y. Eve. Post, O 2 and 3, 1829. See also ibid., O 15, 1829. Regarding Comstock, see McMaster, Hist. of the People of the U. S., V: 101–2.

5 The common council authorises an appropriation of $2,500 towards the building now nearing completion for the N. Y. Dispensary.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVIII: 283, 359.

"The plan for removing the location of the Criminal Courts, Oct. from the City Hall to the Rotunda, is about to be carried into 13 effect . . . the necessary alterations of the Rotunda are in active progress, in order to the consummation of the design. . . . It is intended, among other things, that a part of the Institution (formerly the old Alms-House) shall be prepared and set apart for the reception of persons committed for trial. . . . At the present time, all who are imprisoned for trial, whether for great or small offences, are committed to the Bridewell, in common with murderers, thieves, and wretches of every description. . . . The plan now before the Corporation, not only provides for the committal of accused individuals to a different place from the convicted offenders, but it proposes, also, to erect a walled passage from the Rotunda, or Criminal Court, to the House of Detention, (the title to be given to the new receptacle) through which persons committed for trial may be conducted without being exposed to the ragged rabble that now invariably crowd and hoot around the heels of a supposed offender. . . ."—N. Y. Eve. Post, O 13, 1829.

"The building for the reception of the students of the Grammar 16
School, connected with Columbia College" being completed, it is formally opened.—N. Y. Eve. Post, O 17, 1829. Pine erroneously gives the date as "September" in his Hist. of Columbia Univ. (1904), 109. Its connection with the college ceased in 1864.—Ibid., 110.

A copy of the amendments to the charter adopted by the city 19 convention the previous month (see S 28) is submitted to the common council assembled in special session, and an ordinance is passed as requested providing for the submission of these amendments to the voters.—M. C. C. (1784–1831) XVIII: 301–10. See also N. Y. Eve. Post, O 22, 23. The amendments were approved by the voters on Nov. 4 (q.v.).

The common council resolves "that the deed of Cession made " by Nicholas W. Stuyvesant and Charles Henry Hall for that part of Eighth Street lying between the second and third Avenues be accepted and filed."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVIII: 314.

Mrs. Lancaster Lupton presents to the city a bust of Gov. " Throop executed by her, and the common council orders that it be put in some appropriate place in the city hall.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVIII: 317. It is not listed in the Cat. of the Works of Art Belonging to the City of N. Y. (1909). She also presented a bust of Throop to the Natl. Acad. of Design.—Dunlap, Hist. of the Arts of Design (Goodspeed ed., 1918), III: 315.

The committee on Blackwell's Island reports that "a Building " 200 feet in Length by 50 feet wide and four stories in height, containing 240 separate cells of 3½ feet by 7 and 7 feet high has been completed and is now occupied, The whole amount disbursed by Mr Burtis is $29,120.15, . . ." Cf. Ag 11, 1828.

The increasing number of prisoners together with the proposed moving of prisoners from all the prisons to Blackwell's Island makes larger quarters imperative. The board approves of the erection of a main building at the east end of the present one for the use of the guard, keepers, etc., and which shall also include a hospital and a chapel; and the building of an east wing to contain 300 cells. The work is to be done largely by the convicts and the cost of improvement is estimated at $12,000.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVIII: 319–20. See also Jl 14, 1828.

The "Brick-meeting Church" has been "newly painted, inside 24 and out, from the groundsel to the weathercock."—N. Y. Mirror, VII: 127 (O 24, 1829).

A "great and merry meeting" is held at Masonic Hall, of "the 30 opponents of Gen. Jackson's administration, invited by several of the Adams papers, as the exclusive friends of law, order, and honesty, and also of the New Light and Fanny Wright party, professing the wholesome doctrine of community of property, wives and children." Resolutions nominating an "Adams and Clay no party Assembly ticket" are adopted by a great majority, and then the meeting is taken over by the communists, who nominate a "Mechanics' ticket." Robert Owen and Russell Comstock were among the speakers.—N. Y. Eve. Post, O 31, N 2.

The polls for the election of charter officers open amid great Nov.
excitement because of the numerous tickets in the field. After 2 the first day of voting was over, it was feared that the Fanny Wright or Mechanics' ticket was ahead, and the "friends of good order" were urged to vote to prevent such a "shameful result." However, when the final results were known, it was found that the radicals had polled only about 6,000 votes and elected only 1829 N 2 one candidate.—N. Y. Eve. Post, N 2–11, 1829. Regarding the election, see McMaster, Hist. of the People of the U. S., V: 102–3.

4 At the regular charter election, the amended charter (see Ap 7, 1830) is approved by the voters by a large majority.—N. Y. Eve. Post, N 6, 1829. After several days, the result of separate balloting, as to whether the voters preferred that the term of the aldermen should be extended to two years, was reported as a majority in the negative.—Ibid., N 11, 1829. The common council took action seeking legislative sanction on Dec. 28 (q. v.).

16 It is reported to the common council that an excavation of only 50 ft. in depth on 13th St. gives a well which promises to supply the reservoir and pipes with water for extinguishing fires. It is proposed to enclose the cast-iron tank with either a brick or a wooden building, and the board votes for the wooden one, the estimated cost of which is $2,000.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVIII: 352–53. See Mr 16, My 4, Je 1, 1829; Ap 19, 1830.

" The common council authorises changes in the cupola of the city hall so that the clock which is now being made may be placed therein.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVIII: 353–54. See My 17, 1830.

" The following resolution is presented to the common council by Alderman Peters and is referred to the water committee: "Resolved that a Competent practical man be appointed and employed to Act as a Commissioner or Agent for the Common Council to procure information and to make plans and Estimates for supplying the City (abundantly) with pure and wholesome water said Commissioner or his successor to be continued as Superintendent of this highly important public business."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVIII: 357. See D 14, 1829 and Ja 11, 1830.

30 The common council refers to the committee on lands and places a petition of Jacomo Raggi for permission to erect a fountain in the Bowling Green at his own expense, but depending upon the inhabitants in the vicinity for remuneration.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVIII: 363. Cf. S 21. For the completion of a fountain here, see Je 30, 1843.

Dec. 2 The "Union Presbyterian Church, recently formed in this city, by a secession from the Church in the Bowery, and now worshipping in Vandewater-street, have purchased the Church in Prince-street, east of Broadway, formerly occupied by a society of Universalists. The amount of the purchase money . . . was $17,500."—N. Y. Eve. Post, D 2, 1829. See also L. M. R. K., III: 937.

8 In his first annual message to congress, Pres. Jackson attacks the Bank of the United States and urges against a renewal of its charter.—Macdonald, Select Docs., etc., 238–39.

14 The common council adopts the following resolution, as presented by Mayor Bowne: "Resolved that the Water Committee and Committee on the Fire Department, be and are hereby authorized (if deemed by them expedient) to visit the Croton and other Rivers and any Lakes and Ponds in the neighbourhood of the Croton & Rye pond, and that if considered expedient by the Joint Committee that they procure an experienced Engineer to accompany them, and that Two hundred dollars is now appropriated for the expences."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVIII: 394. See N 16, 1829; Ja 11, 1830.

16 New York University has its inception in the first of a series of meetings held by nine citizens of New York, called to consider organizing a university in this city.—N. Y. Univ. Bulletin, Je 30, 1911. The original call for this meeting is preserved in the library museum of the university. It was held, by invitation of Rev. J. M. Mathews, D. D., at his house. For his account, as chancellor, of the origin and early history of the new university, see Recollections of Persons and Events, Chiefly in the City of N. Y. (1865), 192–93 passim. For the dates of the subsequent meetings, see Chamberlain's N. Y. University (Boston, 1901), I: 58. See also Ja 6, 1830.

19 Part of the wooden fence enclosing the lot adjoining Potter's field having been stolen, the whole line on the Bloomingdale Road is ordered replaced with a stone fence.—Min. of the Com'rs of the Almshouse (MS.), in secretary's office, dept. of charities.

21 The common council changes to Battery Place the name of that part of Marketfield St. lying between Broadway and the Hudson River.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVIII: 430.

28 The common council resolves "that in complience with the wishes of the people, expressed at the late Election (see N 4) a Memorial be presented to the Legislature, submitting to that Body the amendments so proposed to the City Charter."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVIII: 450. The legislature took the necessary action on April 7, 1830 (q. v.). Dec. 28

29 Nearly 3,000 "Mechanics and other Working Men" assemble in Military Hall and complete a "Plan of Organization." A "General Executive Committee" of five members from each ward is to be elected annually, and each ward shall have a "Committee of Vigilance" of 25 members. The general executive committee is empowered "to call public general meetings whenever they deem necessary," and bring before the public "our candidates for congress and for the senate." Resolutions are adopted disapproving "imprisonment for debt;" approving "a well constructed lien law, which would secure to thousands of our fellow citizens that just recompense their services entitle them to;" urging that "public funds be appropriated (to a reasonable extent) to the purposes of education, upon a regular system, that shall ensure the opportunity, to every individual, of obtaining a competent education before he shall have arrived at the age of maturity;" deprecating the present militia system as "highly oppressive to the producing classes of the community, without any beneficial result to individuals or the state, reforming the courts so that "the producing classes may be placed on an equality with the wealthy."—The Proceedings of a Meeting of Mechanics and other Working Men (1830), in N. Y. P. L.

— In this year, Hinton's Hist. of the U. S. was published in London; it contained quarto engraved views of American cities.

— In a letter from Washington, dated Dec. 4, 1876, Joseph Henry wrote to Rev. S. B. Dod, A.M.: "The electro-magnetic telegraph was first invented by me in Albany in 1830. Prof. Morse, according to his statements, conceived the idea of an electro-magnetic telegraph in his voyage across the ocean, in 1832, but did not, until several years afterwards (1837), attempt to carry his ideas into practice, and when he did so he found himself so little acquainted with the subject of electricity that he could not make his simple machine operate through the distance of a few yards. In this dilemma he called in the aid of Dr. Gale, who was well acquainted with what I had done in Albany and Princeton, having visited me at the latter place. He informed Professor Morse that he had not the right kind of a battery nor the right kind of magnets; whereupon the Professor turned the matter over to him, and with the knowledge he had obtained from my researches he was enabled to make the instrument work through a distance of several miles.

"For this service Professor Morse gave him a share of his patent, which he afterwards purchased from him for $15,000.

"At the time of making my original experiments on electro-magnetism in Albany, I was urged by a friend to take out a patent both for its application to machinery and to the telegraph; but this I declined, on the ground that I did not then consider it compatible with the dignity of science to confine the benefits which might be derived from it to the exclusive use of any individual. In this perhaps I was too fastidious.

"In briefly stating my claims to the invention of the electro-magnetic telegraph, I may say I was the first to bring the electro-magnet into the condition necessary to its use in telegraphy, and also to point out its application to the telegraph, and to illustrate this by constructing a working telegraph, and had I taken out a patent for my labors at that time, Mr. Morse could have had no ground on which to found his claims for a patent for his invention. To Mr. Morse, however, great credit is due for his Alphabet and for his perseverance in bringing the telegraph into practical use." —From "Princeton and Science," by Dod, in The Princeton Book (1879), 96–97.

— The first locomotive built in the United States, the "Tom Thumb," was constructed by Peter Cooper at the St. Clair Works near Baltimore in 1829. It was successfully experimented with in 1830, proving the ability of a locomotive to stay upon the track in running a curve.—Brown, Hist. of First Locomotives in Am., 106–16.

In this year (1830), also, the first American-built locomotive for actual service upon a railroad, the "Best Friend" (cf. May 1829), was set up in the West Point Foundry, foot of Beach St., corner of West St., New York. It was shipped to Charleston, S. C. for the Charleston and Hamburg R. R., in the fall of this year. Its engineer was Nicholas W. Darrell—the first locomotive engineer in America.—Ibid., 14. See also 1831.

— In this year, the first railway stock (Mohawk & Hudson) was 1830 placed upon the list of the New York Stock and Exchange Board.—Eames, The N. Y. Stock Exchange, 29.

— In this year, Godey's Magazine was founded in Philadelphia.

— The population of Manhattan Island in this year was 202,589.—13th U. S. Census Bulletin (1910).

— "A new branch of the Carriage Manufacture, was about this date introduced by the construction of the first 'Omnibus' in New York. During the next year, Mr. John Stephenson commenced the business on Broadway, where he built his first omnibus, and the second in that city."—Bishop, Hist. of Am. Manufactures, II: 346; Encyc. Americana. For the first street-car, see Nov. 26, 1832. See also Pl. 108, III: 610–12.

— In this year Frederick W. Geissenhainer, a German-American iron-master, successfully smelted iron ore with anthracite coal at a laboratory furnace in New York City. In 1833, he was granted a patent for his discovery, and shortly afterwards began the commercial manufacture of iron by this process.—Clark, Hist. of Manufactures in the U. S., 1607–1860, 412–13.

— In this year, the militia organization called "Tompkins Blues" (see O 21, 1826) was formed. It was later absorbed into the Twelfth Regiment, New York.—Chas. S. Clark, in The Eve. Post, F 26, 1916.

— In this year, the Quarterly Review, and the New York Evangelist were established.—North, Newspaper and Periodical Press, 62.

— About this time, the "Third Avenue Trotting Course" was popular. It had its southern termination at Tompkins Market (see D 15, 1828), at the junction of the Bowery and Third Ave. Here, "every fine afternoon (Sundays included) the tired, panting, and foaming steeds, before all sorts of vehicles, came rushing in from Harlem, or Cato's, in two's, three's, five's; and I have seen more than twenty, often appearing as if they were 'all in a heap.' There was no such road in the United States as the Third Avenue for a 'trot.' From almost one end to the other, through the centre of it, a smoothly-graded Macadamized road was laid, while on each side appeared a well-beaten track, usually preferred by the 'knowing trotters,' and the whole kept in the most perfect order. It was, however, a dangerous one for a pleasant family ride . . .

"Not many years passed before the 'cobble-stone' pavement began to creep up; then followed, to Yorkville and Harlem, the heavy-ladened omnibus—to tear up; and finally appeared the 'Third Avenue Railroad,' which entirely used up, and totally exterminated, the far-famed 'Third Avenue Trotting Course.'"—De Voe, Market Book, 551–52.

— About this time, Rear-Admiral Jacob Walton, of the British Navy, having inherited the property of the William Walton family of New York, took possession of the "Walton House" in Pearl St. Here he found, in the attic, dragoon saddles and Hessian muskets.—Sabine, Loyalists of the Am. Rev., II: 396.

— From 1830 to 1856 there was great activity in opening streets. For a statement showing the dates, expense, etc., of this extensive work, see Man. Com. Coun. (1857), 529–41. See 1836, for example, for some of the streets affected in that year.

— In this year, in opening 11th St., portions of two cemeteries were taken, one belonging to the Jews, and the other to the Presbyterian Church (corner of Grand and Mercer Sts.).—N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., F 25, 1833, citing transactions of the bd. of ald. of F 4, 1833. See also 1833.

— The following views depicting New York in 1830 are found in Vol. III: A view of the neighbourhood of Hudson and Christopher Sts., about this time, showing fire-engine No. 34, which probably had its headquarters there (Pl. 96); Grace and Trinity Churches (Pl. 101-a), and see list of the Bourne views (III: 594); the council chamber in the city hall (Pl. 101-b); Leroy Place (Pl. 103-a); Wall St. (Pl. 105); Kip's Bay (Pl. 107); the Crosby residence (Pl. 109); Broadway and Trinity Church (Addenda Pl. 19-a); city hall and Park Row (A. Pl. 19-b); governor's room, city hall (A. Pl. 21-a). The two views on Addenda plate No. 19 are water-colour views, drawn in this year by J. W. Hill, and representing respectively Broadway looking south from Liberty St., and the city hall and Park Row with engines going to a fire.' The view of the governor's room, the only contemporary representation known, is from a drawing by C. Burton. See also 1831.

— A water-colour view of Broadway at the corner of Fulton St., 1830, by Burton, was sold with the Pyne collection, at the Am. Art Assn. galleries, Feb. 5–7, 1917.—See sales catalogue, item No. 161. Cf. Pl. 132, Vol. III.

1830 In this year, John Wesley Jarvis, still pursuing his calling in New York, was at the height of his career as a painter.—For accounts of his work see Dunlap, Hist. of the Arts of Design; Tuckerman, Book of the Artists (1867); Isham, Hist. of Am. Painting (1905).

— In this year, the city receipts amounted to about $261,000, the largest revenues coming from the rents of public wharves ($42,000), market rents ($35,000), and tavern licenses ($31,000). The annual expenses were about $500,000, one-quarter of which was for the almshouse.—Man. Com. Coun. (1859), 519–20.

— The following views of buildings, etc., as they appeared in 1830, were published in later years in Valentine's Manuals, as cited: Contoit's Garden, Broadway (Man. Com. Coun., 1855, p. 132); Masonic Hall, Broadway (ibid., 1855, p. 296); Tammany Hall (ibid., 1858, p. 372; and 1865, p. 849); Livingston sugar-house, and Middle Dutch Church, Liberty St. (ibid., 1858, p. 488).

In this connection, it should be observed that the view of the Broadway House, at the corner of Broadway and Grand St., which was published in the Manual of 1853 (p. 90) and assigned to 1818, and that in the Manual for 1865 (p. 615), where it is assigned to 1824, are both in error. The date depicted is 1830. The original painting, by the artist R. Bond, in the author's collection, bears this date.

Jan. The New York Magdalen Society is organized. From it grew the New York Magdalen Benevolent Society, which issued its 1 first report in Jan., 1834. Its first directress, Mrs. Thomas Hastings, continued in charge of its affairs for over 40 years. The society purchased 12 city lots and an old frame building at Fifth Ave. and 88th St., for $4,000. It continued there in later years, occupying the wooden building for 20 years. For histories of this society, accounts of its work, and descriptions of its buildings, see Man. Com. Coun. (1870), 477–79; Richmond, N. Y. and Its Institutions (1871), 317–20.

This resolution was passed after hearing a communication read on the subject of the "Expediency and the Means of Establishing a University." Another resolution was passed requiring that this communication be printed and distributed "as exhibiting the views of the meeting and as preparatory to a more general call of the citizens of New York." This was published in a pamphlet, a copy of which is preserved in the N. Y. Hist. Soc. For reproduction of its title-page, and digest of contents, see N. Y. University: Its history, influence, equipment and characteristics, ed. by Gen. Joshua L. Chamberlain, LL.D. (Boston, 1901), I: 48–51. See O 15. On Jan. 9, an address to the public was issued, and by Jan. 12 the matter was "a subject of general conversation."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ja 12, 1830. See also ibid., Ja 13, 14, 15, 19, 22, F 2, 4, 6, 1830.

9 The building for the New York Dispensary, on the corner of White and Centre Sts., has been completed.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ja 9, 1830. It was formally opened on Jan. 11.—Ibid., Ja 12, 1830.

11 In the mayor's inaugural address to the common council, he urgently recommends that early measures be taken regarding an adequate water supply for the city. "We have the opinion of two of the most eminent Civil Engineers that the Byram, Rye and Wompia Ponds will afford such supply; there are also the Bronx, Saw Mill and Croton rivers all within our reach. The expence it is believed cannot exceed Two millions of Dollars. It will probably be less . . ."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVIII: 465–66. See N 16 and D 14, 1829; Ap 19, 1830.

18 The legislature provides for laying out West St., from Albany Basin to Battery Place (late Marketfield St.), parallel with Washington St. (see 1828).—Laws of N. Y. (1830), chap. 8. See also I: 456.

" The Chatham Garden Theatre, known for a time as the American Opera House (see My 20, 1829), opens as Blanchard's Amphitheatre. Equestrian performances, with rope-dancing and the like, were offered.—Ireland, I: 633; Haswell's Reminiscences,

1830 244; L. M. R. K., III: 983. On March 11, 1831, it was reopened
Ja 18 as a theatre.—Haswell, 254–55. See 1832.

27 Webster makes reply to Hayne, in a debate between Benton, Hayne, and Webster, extending over several days, which turned on the question of upholding the Constitution and the union of the states against sectionalism.—McMaster, Hist. of the People of the U. S., VI: 11–30; Winsor, VII: 254, 263, 286. See also Mr 24, 1831.

Feb. Although the legislature has prohibited masquerades (see 13 Ap 25, 1829), "subscriptions are opened for the purpose of producing a most splendid one, at the Park theatre, on . . . [Feb. 17]. The manager, of course, intends to pay the fine [$1,000], and pocket the surplus. Four hundred tickets are to be issued at five dollars each [Perhaps the first prophetic reference to "the 400"!]. . . . The company of course will be select, and the same rules and regulations will be adopted which gave such universal satisfaction on similar occasions last winter."—N. Y. Mirror, VII: 255 (F 13, 1830).

" "Statue of Clinton.—The directors of Clinton-hall association, some time since, applied to Mr. [Ball] Hughes, the sculptor, for the model of a projected statue of our late governor, intended for the front of Clinton-hall [see Jl 11, 1829]. This model has been completed, and the exquisite accuracy of its execution has so fully satisfied the directors that they have ordered one of marble, larger than life, for the embellishment of the front of that magnificent edifice. Mr. H. was the pupil of the celebrated Flaxman, . . . Although Mr. Hughes never saw De Witt Clinton, he has still, by the aid of prints and portraits, produced the most perfect and accurate delineation of the imposing features which distinguished that profound statesman that we have ever seen. . . ."—N. Y. Mirror, VII: 251 (F 13, 1830).

17 Col. Henry Rutgers dies at the age of 85.—N. Y. Eve. Post, F 18, 1830. He was buried on Feb. 20 in the family vault in the Middle Dutch Church.—Ibid., F 23, 1830. His great-nephew, Wm. B. Crosby, inherited his mansion-house and adjoining lands. The house stood in the block bounded by Rutgers Place, Clinton, Cherry, and Jefferson Sts.—Descrip. of Pl. 109-a, III: 612–13; L. M. R. K., III: 952.

22 The New York Law Institute is incorporated, "for literary purposes, the cultivation of legal science, the advancement of jurisprudence, the providing of a seminary of learning in the law, and the formation of a law library."—Laws of N. Y. (1830), chap. 48.

" The common council authorises the establishment of a standing committee on common schools. The administration of school matters is given to fourteen "Commissioners of School money," appointed by the common council. Their duties are "to require certain returns from the Officers of the several schools," to apportion and pay school money to the designated institutions, to visit and examine the schools at least twice a year, and to make to the board annually a full report of their doings. Over $40,000 are handled by them yearly. "There is no subject in which our City has a deeper interest than in the elementary education of the people, and none, therefore, it would seem, in regard to which the action and supervision of the City Government should be more perfect."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVIII: 552–53.

23 The Clinton Hall Association is incorporated "for the cultivation and promotion of literature, science, and the arts."—Laws of N. Y. (1830), chap. 53. See N 2.

" A public meeting is held at Masonic Hall in favour of abolishing imprisonment for debt.—N. Y. Eve. Post, F 24, 1830. See Ap 26, 1831.

26 The Manhattan Gas Light Co. (see F, 1827) is incorporated. Its charter permits this company to make and sell illuminating gas and various by-products, and to lay gas-pipes under specified regulations, without interfering with any exclusive right heretofore granted. Its real estate holdings shall not exceed $100,000 in value, nor its capital stock $500,000. Before the act shall take effect, the "Am. Gas Light Co." shall surrender, within 60 days from this date, the privileges which it acquired by act of incorporation dated March 17, 1827.—Laws of N. Y. (1830), chap. 59. See D 31, 1832.

Mar. The legislature incorporates the "New-York Life Insurance
9 and Trust Co."—Laws of N. Y. (1830), chap. 75. This appears to have been the first life insurance company in New York City, none being mentioned in the Goodrich guide for 1828, and this being the only one mentioned in N. Y. As It Is, In 1833. Life insurance was introduced in the U. S. in 1812 (q. v.). Mar. 9

The editor of the Mirror calls attention to "the dilapidated 13 monument" of Capt. Lawrence, recommending that it be "replaced by a new one, worthy of his fame, and consistent with the dignity of the city which entombs his remains."—N. Y. Mirror, VII: 287. See also N. Y. Eve. Post, Mr 6, 1830. A public meeting to adopt measures for erecting a new monument was held at the city hall on March 16.—Ibid., Mr 17, 1830. An application to the legislature for aid was rejected by the assembly.—Ibid., Ap 7, 1830. See also ibid., Ap 17, 1830.

The city agrees to grant to the Northern Dispensary a tri- 22 angular piece of ground bounded by Christopher, Factory, Grove, and old Sixth St., so long as it is used for a dispensary.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVIII: 626. For an historical sketch of this institution, which had its inception in 1826 (cf. 1827), and was the second dispensary in the city, being preceded by the New York or City Dispensary (cor. Centre and White Sts.), see Man. Com. Coun. (1870), 348. This conveyance was dated March 26.—Ibid. (1870), 761. See, further, O 18; N 15. Both dispensaries are still in operation, the former at 165 Waverly Pl., the latter at 34–36 Spring St. —Directory of Social Agencies (1925), 218, 233.

". . . The new City Dispensary, Clinton-hall—the Rotunda, 27 converted into a sessions court [see Ja 24, 1831]—the opening and widening of Ann, Cedar, and Liberty streets, which formerly threaded their sinuous courses between piles of rookeries, but are now enlarged and graced by splendid rows of stores and dwelling-houses—the elevation of Justice on the cupola of the City-hall, making way for the introduction of a monitor of time [see Ap 19], which shall speak to the eye by night as well as day—and sundry other improvements . . . attest the advancement of New-York in architectural decoration and beauty."—N. Y. Mirror, VII: 303.

"Scudder's American Museum.—We learn that a lot of ground, 30 at the corner of Ann street and Broadway, has been purchased, on which a building is to be erected which will be an ornament to the city, and to which the exhibition of the American Museum will be transferred. The edifice will extend 104 feet in depth on Ann street, and 37 in front on Broadway. The front will be circular. The building will be carried up to five stories, with a promenade roof, balconies, &c. and an observatory. Round the roof 18 colossal statues, from antique models, will be placed. It is to be finished by the first of November, and to be constructed of West Chester marble. Until it is ready for the reception of the collection of curiosities now exhibited in the old Alms House, the exhibition will continue open at the latter place as heretofore."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Mr 30, 1830. See also Com. Adv., Mr 26, 1830. See D 24.

Now, seven years after the alleged discovery of the "Book of Apr.
Mormon," and its "translation," at Palmyra, N. Y., by Jos. Smith, — Jr., and others, the "Church of Christ" is "regularly organized and established, agreeable to the laws of our country." In June, the first church conference was held at Fayette.—For reliable accounts of Smith and the rise of Mormonism, see McMaster, Hist. of the People of the U. S., VI: 102 et seq., and authorities there cited.

John McVickar, professor of political economy in Columbia 1
College, writes from Washington to a member of his family in New York and refers to his efforts to persuade the government to attach a naval school to the college. As a part of the university plan proposed for Columbia, the trustees had approached the navy department in Washington with a proposal that the facilities for instruction in the college should be placed at the disposal of the authorities for the midshipmen and young officers stationed in New York Harbour. Prof. McVickar was sent to Washington to explain to the authorities the nature and advantages of the plan. In his letter he writes: "I met by appointment General Hayne . . Chairman of the Naval Committee in the Senate. . . . He was very frank, explained his views and put his opposition on the ground of its economy. He was for a great naval school." Prof. McVickar had opportunity to present the subject to President Jackson on the following day but the plan was eventually refused by the government and it was not until fifteen years later that the Naval Academy as an independent institution was established at Annapolis.—Life of the Rev. John McVickar, by William A. McVickar (N. Y., 1872), 118–21.

"The New-York Museum.—It is understood that Mess. Coz- 3
zens and Charles Pool have taken the large and convenient four story house, corner of Broadway and Anthony street and have fitted 1830 Apr. 3 it up as a Museum in a truly splendid manner. The lower apartments are more particularly appropriated to Natural History. . . . The upper hall is converted into a neat & tasteful Amphitheatre, in which it is proposed to exhibit a series of attractive optical, chemical and other philosophical experiments. . . ."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ap 3, 1830. This museum was opened on April 12.—Ibid., Ap 10, 1830.

5 Owing to the bad condition of Third Ave. between 24th St. and the six-mile stone, repairs are almost impossible, and the common council votes to have the road taken up and made anew "on the McAdam plan."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVIII: 653–54.

7 By act of the legislature, the charter of New York, granted to the municipality by Gov. Montgomerie on Feb. 11, 1731 (q.v.), which has suffered little change in its century of existence, is now greatly altered. Twice previously (see Ap 3, 1824, and Ap 18, 1828) the legislature had enacted into law amendments proposed by the common council, but the voters had failed to ratify. This time the amendments were initiated by delegates from the wards of the city in a convention assembled (see Je 23, 1829), approved by the common council, and ratified by the electors, before they were submitted to the legislature. The essential alterations include:

1. The legislative power is to be vested in a bi-cameral common council, each board choosing its own president.

2. The mayor and recorder are no longer to be members of the common council, but the former to have veto power over all laws, ordinances, and resolutions.

3. "The general duties of the Mayor," quoting James Kent, "are more specifically defined and enlarged, by requiring him to communicate to the Common Council, once a year and oftener, if need be, a general statement of the condition of the city government, finances and improvements, and recommend such measures as he shall deem expedient; and to be active and vigilant in the exercise of the duties of his executive trust as Mayor." Furthermore, he is "to exercise a constant supervision and control over the conduct and acts of all subordinate officers, and to receive and examine into all such complaints as may be preferred against any of them for violation or neglect of duty." In case of the mayor's disability, or a vacancy in the office, "the president of the board of aldermen shall act as mayor."

4. To check improvident legislation no money shall be "drawn from the city treasury, except the same shall have been previously appropriated to the purpose for which it is drawn." Again, the common council is prohibited from borrowing "on the credit of the corporation, except in anticipation of the revenue of the year in which such loan shall be made, unless authorized by a special act of the legislature." Also, the common council must publish annually, "two months before the annual election of charter officers," a detailed statement of receipts and expenditures for the year preceding.

5. The business of the corporation heretofore entrusted to committees of the common council "shall hereafter be performed by distinct departments, which it shall be the duty of the common council to organize and appoint for that purpose."

6. The annual election of city officials, which has been held on the first Monday in November and the two days following (see Ap 17, 1822), is now to "commence on the second Tuesday in April," such officers to be sworn on the second Tuesday in May (see My 10, 1831). This provision satisfied the wish of the common council to alter the time of holding elections so as to separate the charter from the state elections in this city (see M. C. C., 1784–1831, XVI: 723).—Laws of N. Y. (1830), chap. 122; Kent, The Charter of the City of New York, 177–78.

For a long time after these amendments to the charter were adopted, the common council failed to organize the executive departments as called for in the charter, and continued to do business the old way through committees of their own number. Such failure aroused sharp criticism from Mayor Morris thirteen years later (see My 29, 1843).

8 The legislature incorporates "The Butchers' and Drovers' Bank," which is to be built in the Bowery, north of Grand St.—Laws of N. Y. (1830), chap. 130.

" The committee on repairs, and that on arts and sciences, to whom was referred back a report and resolution regarding an alteration in the cupola of the city hall to receive a public clock, report "that the work should be completed as proposed in the former Report with the exception of the fixtures and of lighting the Dial." The dial "being made of Glass will answer the several purposes of emiting light in the Cupola, and form a Beautiful surface to show the time by day and be prepared for Illumination whenever the interest of the City calls for it to be done."

The common council therefore adopts the following resolutions: "1. Resolved that $650, be appropriated to add to the Clock the machinery necessary to make it strike the Hour. 2. Resolved that $1500 be appropriated to furnish a Bell for that purpose. 3. Resolved that $1000, be appropriated to put in Dials of glass in Copper frames. 4. The widening of William street, from Maiden-lane, is another improvement which was much required, and the advantages of which will be very great. The alterations now in progress on the west side of Columbia College, are also very important, and will add much to the beauty and value of that neighborhood."—N. Y. Eve. Post, My 26, 1830. May 26

For the purpose of securing a fund to give support to the widow and heirs of Robert Fulton, arrangements are being made to place a "Fulton box" "on board of every steam-boat in the United States for the reception of a single cent from every passenger." Gaz. & Gen. Adv.*, F 9, 1831. 29

The common council takes up a report (see M. C. C., 1784–1831, XVIII: 269, 367) which the joint committee of repairs and public offices made on Nov. 30 last, on the subject of accommodations for courts, etc., in "the Building on Chamber street"(the "N. Y. Institution," which was formerly the almshouse). The report says that the entire building is needed for public purposes, —for the police office, house of detention, grand jury, first district watch, commissioners of the almshouse, and ("where the Museum now is") for a courtroom, 42 by 93 ft., with judges' chamber, clerk's office, and jury rooms connected with it; also for the collectors of assessments, the public administrator's office and court, and the marine court. The several apartments remaining may be appropriated later. 31

The committee further proposes "that the Iron railing of the Park be extended on the Chamber street front, and that the ground be laid out in an Ornamental manner . . ., that the whole building be newly painted white, and windows trimmed on Chamber street with green blinds which will in the opinion of your Committee, make the front equal in appearance to any of the private buildings opposite, particularly as the proposed plan is to make the front on the Park, the business front."

Attention is also called to the imperfect arrangement of the "City Prison" (the old Bridewell). Persons awaiting trial should not be kept in "a building which possesses the character and all the revolting attributes of a common prison." The committee therefore suggests "that that part of the Institution [the east end] lying nearest to your future Court of Sessions [the Rotunda], be occupied for the accommodation of persons charged with crime, to be called the House of Detention, and to be prepared with the view of separation or such Judicious classification as may best comport with the health and propriety of the establishment, and the comfort of individuals confined therein. . . . As that part of the Institution to be occupied as above stated will be seperated from the Court of Sessions (now preparing) by a small space of ground it will be readily seen that by running high walls so as to include that space into a yard, as it is now occupied, the intercourse between the two places will be entirely concealed from the public eye; and thus one of the greatest Nuisances complained of the assemblage of idle and curious spectators to witness the passage of the prisoners will be in a great measure done away; . . ."

The following prophesy closes the report: "The future improvements of the City will undoubtedly develope a more central location for all these Institutions; but until that period arrives, public accommodation as well as economy suggests the present as the most suitable situation." The estimated cost of the proposed alterations, except the iron fence, will not exceed $10,000. The joint committee offers a resolution that they be authorised to make the alterations within this limit of cost.

This report of Nov. 30 last, now brought forward, is presented by the joint committee to the common council with a fresh report embodying additional observations. They say that "all the legal measures necessary to put the City authorities in possession of the building called the Institution have been taken, and the same is now in situation to be occupied for public purposes, as soon as the Common Council shall direct.

". . . When to this consideration is added the present crouded state of the City Hall and its utter inadequacy to the accommodation of the numerous Courts and public Offices, the Committee are persuaded that no other argument need be urged to induce the Common Council, without further delay, to adopt some plan for the occupation of the building in question."

Since the Nov. 30 report was written, proposing a house of 1830 May 31 detention in the east wing of the building, "the Board have passed certain resolutions on the subject of a Location for a New Bridewell, the effect of which however, has been suspended by a notice of re-consideration. The Committee therefore have deemed it proper to postpone for the present that branch of the subject referred to them, reserving until the Bridewell location question shall have been finally settled by the Board.

"With respect to the Westerly portion of the building, there is no difficulty in the way of fitting it up immediately to meet such of the Public wants as are the most pressing." The following plan is proposed:

"First. One large Court Room with its Judges Chambers, Clerks Office and Jury Rooms, for the use of one or more of the higher Courts

"Second. One smaller Court Room for the Surrogate, with an Office adjoining for the records of Wills and other documents relating to the estates of deceased persons.

"Third. One Court Room for the Marine Court with a Clerk's Office and Jury Room, instead of the present subteranean abode of that tribunal.

"Fourth. A more appropriate and commodious apartment for the Grand Jury with a Chamber for the witnesses and others in attendance."

The estimated cost for these alterations is $5,000. The board passes a resolution that this portion of the building be so fitted up, and an appropriation of this amount is made for the purpose.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIX: 76–80. See, further, Jl 12; and descrip. of Pl. 95-b, III: 585.

June 3 Thomas Kelah Wharton, a young artist, describes in his journal the appearance of New York upon his arrival from England. 19 "We understand that the vestry of Grace Church have it in contemplation to cover the Church with cement, and finish it in imitation of marble—and also to put up in front of it a chaste and beautiful Portico, to be supported by massive marble columns. . .

"We also understand that the Vestry of Trinity Church intend making an improvement about St. Paul's, which has long been called for. In place of the heavy brick walls which now nearly surround this beautiful edifice, and the block which it occupies, it is intended to substitute a light iron railing similar to that in front of Trinity Church—terracing the ground on the inside, which is higher than the street. It is also intended to remove the present uneven flagging in front of the church, and supply its place with one which will do credit to the church."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Je 19, 1830.

21 An address of the general executive committee of the mechanics and other workingmen of the city (see D 29, 1829) is read at a public meeting at the West Chester House, Bowery, and unanimously approved. The address recounts the fact that 25 members of the executive committee have "denounced the principles which they once professed to entertain and vacated their seats in the Committee," and others been elected to fill their places. The committee deprecates "the intrusion of religious opinions and prejudices in their great work of political reform." In addition to the principles previously enunciated the committee considers "dangerous" the practice of the legislature in incorporating companies "with privileges which are denied to individuals," enabling the rich "to combine and concentrate their power to oppress the poor and laboring classes of society." Especially dangerous do they consider the chartering of banks. June 21

"The polar star to which our efforts point," the address continues, is "a more extensive general system of National Education. . . . We believe that you have but to satisfy the human mind, that virtue and happiness, vice and misery, are but cause and effect, and crime will cease. This can be done in no way, but by a proper training of the intellect, from infancy to manhood."

The committee recommends a general convention in September to nominate "suitable candidates to be supported by the Farmers, Mechanics, and other Working Men, for the offices of Governor and Lieutenant Governor."—An Address of the General Executive Committee of the Mechanics and other Working Men (1830), in N. The joint committee on public offices and repairs, to which 12 was referred a communication from the register of deeds, as well as a resoluton offered by Mr. Roosevelt in regard to fireproof offices, and a report of a former committee on the same subject (see Mr 9, 1829), makes a report to the common council. This states that "the City Hall, in which the Public Records are now deposited, is not secure against Fire;" and that the committee has examined the two suggestions submitted: "one of which proposes the fitting up of a portion of the building on Chamber street, and the other altering the old Gaol." Observations in detail are embodied in the report.

The board passes the resolution, proposed by this joint committee, "that it be referred to the Committees on Public Offices and Repairs to cause the building at present occupied as a Gaol to be fitted up in a Fire proof manner for the reception of the Public Records as soon as the imprisoned debtors shall be removed," and $15,000 is appropriated to carry this into effect.—*M. "The question respecting the jail appears to have been at 17 length decided in a way directly contrary to the wishes of our citizens. It is to be fitted up 'in a fire-proof manner for the purpose of keeping the public records!' There seems to be a settled determination on the part of the Common Council totally to disregard the desires of their constituents. The public have long since voted the nuisance down, but we fear it will remain for their posterity to demolish, unless they take the law in their own hands,

On Aug. 23 (q.v.), the old bridewell became the debtors' jail. After this, the editor of the Mirror seems to have given up hope, for a while, of having the jail and bridewell removed. His next comment does not appear until June 7, 1834 (q.v.).

" The Mirror publishes a description and a small wood-cut view of the French Church du St. Esprit (on the north side of Pine St., east of Nassau St.), drawn by Davis and engraved by Mason. 23 The common council adopts a resolution to enclose the potters-field with a board fence, the cost not to exceed $500.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIX: 193.

" The standing committee on public offices and on the jail and bridewell, acting jointly, report that, although six years have elapsed since the passage of the act of April 10, 1824 (q.v.), which authorised the building of a new jail and bridewell, or the appropriation for this purpose of a building already erected, nothing effectual has been done, owing to great diversity of opinion.

On July 12 (q.v.), a report was adopted directing the fitting up of the present jail for the reception of the public records. This required that other accommodation be provided for the confinement of the debtors. The committee finds that "it would be most advisable as a temporary arrangement, that the Bridewell should be turned into a Debtors Prison, and that the Criminals should be removed to the establishment at Bellevue. By adopting this course no expence will be incurred, and the future changes now in contemplation, may hereafter be made without loss.

"A large Portion of the Penitentiary [at Bellevue], owing to the removal of the prisoners to Blackwells Island, is now vacant, and the building (in everything except its name) is in fact a Bridewell ready built. Its distance will no doubt be attended with some inconvenience, an evil however which as the City increases will be daily decreasing and which even now may be greatly mitigated by holding there the Courts of Special Sessions, and also a branch of the Post Office. And with respect to the present Bridewell its occupation as a Gaol would probably be of short duration, inasmuch as the barbarous practice of imprisonment for debt, jud[g]ing from the strong indications of public sentiment will no doubt eer long be abolished." Aug. 23

The joint committee therefore recommends, and the board passes, the following resolution: "Resolved that the building in this city at present known as the Bridewell be and the same is hereby designated as the Gaol of this City for the confinement of persons on civil process [debtors].

"Resolved that the Building at Bellevue, in this City known as the Penitentiary be and the same is hereby designated as the City Prison or Bridewell of this City.

"Resolved that the Keeper of the City Prison forthwith cause the prisoners under his charge to be removed to the said Prison at Bellevue and that the Debtors in actual confinement be thereupon removed to the Goal or debtors Prison so newly designated."—*M. 10 The members of a committee on behalf of N. Y. University write a letter to the president, vice-president, and directors of the N. Y. Athenaeum, in which they say:

"Gentlemen

"The establishment of a University in the City of New York has for some time occupied the attention of several of our most distinguished citizens; and an amount of means is now pledged to the object, which will place the Institution at its commencement on a liberal foundation.

"In contemplating the various plans by which the University as well as other Seminaries of Learning might most effectually promote their common cause it has been thought that a meeting of Literary and Scientific gentlemen to confer on the general interests of Letters and Liberal education would be attended with happy results; and so far as it has been in our power to collect the sentiments of those most competent to Judge, the measure has been 1830 Sept. 10 approved and the most earnest wishes expressed to see it carried into effect.

"There seems to be a universal impression that our Literary Men and Literary Institutions have been too much insulated and that more frequent intercourse and comparison of views would be a source of high gratification to individuals and a benefit to those interested in the welfare of Science & Literature.

"With this view the undersigned have been appointed a Committee on behalf of the University of this City to invite such a meeting to be held in New York on the 20th of October next.

"We are happy to state that some of our most distinguished Scholars who have spent several years in the Universities of Europe will be present on the occasion, and give the result of their observations on the systems of education now pursued at home & abroad.

"Will you favor the meeting with your presence, and with such views as you may be pleased to lay before it

"We have the honor to be "Very Respectfully

20 The committee on repairs, to whom the question has been referred, reports in favour of "painting the Basement of the City Hall white in imitation of Marble." They think "a great Error was committed by building any part of the outside of the Hall with Brown free stone, when Marble could have been procured of a much stronger and more durable nature, But from the experience of some of your Committee, and from the enquiry they have made of old experienced builders and Stone Cutters, they are satisfied that painting free Stone with Oil colours, tend more to harden and preserve that material, than any other thing they are acquainted with." The common council therefore adopts a resolution "that the Superintendent of Repairs cause the Basement of the South, East and West fronts of the City Hall to be painted white under the direction of the Committee on Repairs."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIX: 249. This regulation was never carried out. See Ap 1, 1833. The north front, except the basement, was painted white in 1890 (q. v., My 13).

From Oct. 20 to 30, a convention of literary and scientific men was held in the common council chamber, in the city hall, in response to the invitations sent by a committee of the university to be established in New York, for which see the original MS. quoted under Sept. 10, supra. John Delafield, who acted as secretary of these sessions, copyrighted, on Nov. 23, a book of the proceedings, bearing the title, *Journal of the Proceedings of a Convention of Literary and Scientific Gentlemen, held in the Common Council Chamber of the City of New York, October, 1830. The law committee reports to the common council on a memorial from the Manhattan Gas Light Co. (see F 26), which asks the board to annul the city's contract with the N. Y. Gas Light Co. (see O 30, 1826; Mr 10, 1828), and to grant to the memorialists the right, in common with that company, "to use the Streets of the City, for laying Pipes and supplying Gas Light within the Limits prescribed for the old Company." The committee lays before the board an historical résumé of the origin and proceedings of the two companies. The Manhattan Co. claimed in its memorial that the concurrent rights applied for would create a "useful competition;" and alleged that the N. Y. Gas Light Co. had "wholly failed to comply with the stipulations and engagements which form the conditions of their contract with the Corporation." The memorial offered to prove that the gas of the N. Y. Gas Light Co. was of poorer quality than that of London; that the gas factories of that company have been "nuisances since their erection," and that their pipes "have been and are, in several streets so carelessly laid, as to be offensive to Citizens;" that the price has been "exorbitant," and that pretended reductions have been "wholly nominal and deceptive," although superior gas can be supplied at a cheaper rate. 25

The committee reports that it has held several meetings, and examined witnesses under oath, including "persons both scientifically and practically acquainted with the quality, manufacturing and furnishing of Gas in different cities in Europe, as well as at Baltimore and New York." The facts educed are embodied in the report. It is found that the N. Y. Gas Light Co.'s gas is inferior to that of London. Some witnesses testified that the factories were nuisances, but none that they were injurious to health. They are less offensive than those of London. It was proved that the company "used great care in testing each pipe by hydrostatic pressure, and also in joining, cementing and laying the same; and in all cases, endeavouring to discover and remedy every accidental escape of Gas as early as possible." It also appears from the testimony that "the Gas delivered to customers is all measured with meters, made and tested with great care." No proof was adduced to show "that better Gas could be furnished at less or even at the present rates;" it being found "that the company could not afford to reduce their price of gas, without an increase of custom from the public."

It was also proved "by the testimony of the manager that the Company were losers to the amount of fifteen dollars per year, for every public lamp furnished by them with gas under their contract with the Corporation;" and it was shown "that the price per annum, for lighting each public Lamp with coal gas, in Baltimore was Ten dollars, and in London about Twenty five dollars, while the Corporation here pay the company but Five dollars and twenty five cents per Lamp."

Regarding the alleged benefits of competition, "it has been 1830 Oct. 25 shown by the result of an investigation made by Commissioners in the City of London, and instituted by the British Parliament that serious evils grew out of the operations of different Gas Companies in the same district, the breaking up of the pavement for two sets of mains [in] the place of one the confusion and disorder produced by pipes crossing and intersecting each other, the disputes and delay in identifying leakages, altogether became so great an inconvenience that it proved absolutely necessary to separate and confine the different companies to different districts, which distinct separation was accordingly made of the different Companies; and all the latter grants made by Parliment for the metropolis to new Companies, have been confined to particular and exclusive sections of the City."

The law committee further reports that the N. Y. Gas Light Co's works "have now been in operation between five and six years, and during the whole of that period, by the judicious management and care of the persons in their employ, the difficult and somewhat dangerous process of preparing and distributing the gas, have been carried on without a single failure of any consequence, in supplying the necessary quantity of Gas, and without any accident affecting in the slightest degree the person or property of any of the Citizens."

In conclusion, the committee states that it has not found any breach of contract on the part of the N. Y. Gas Light Co. to justify the common council in annulling or revoking the grant. The committee therefore offers a resolution that "it is inexpedient to grant the prayer of the petitioners." While the action of the board on this report is not recorded in the minutes in a very clear manner, it appears to have been agreed to.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIX: 315–21. See, however, D 31, 1832.

15 The common council adopts a report of its joint committee on public offices and repairs (see Ag 23) in relation to alterations they propose to make in the "Old Jail" for the purpose of converting it into fire-proof offices. This report recommends that, in addition to the alterations intended by the resolution of July 12 (q. v.), the exterior of the jail "ought to be made in some measure to correspond in appearance with that splendid building" (the city hall). The board appropriates $7,500 for the purpose, in addition to the $15,000 already allowed.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIX: 358–59. See also descrip. of Pl. 97, III: 589. See, further, My 7, 1831. "It is estimated that 50,000 people from the city, the neighboring counties, and the adjoining States will unite in celebrating, on the 25th inst. the double jubilee, on occasion of the anniversary of the evacuation of this city by the British in 1783, and of the triumph of liberal principles in Paris the 27th, 28th and 29th July last, and throughout France immediately after those three memorable days. Our citizens of all conditions and parties are active in preparation for an imposing spectacle at the parade ground, Washington Square, which will be the Champs Elysees of the day. The Common Council, the various societies of New York and Brooklyn, the Trustees of the latter, and indeed almost every public and private civic body will be represented. . . ."—*N. Y. Eve. The celebration in honour of the revolution in France is postponed to Nov. 26 on account of rain.—N. Y. Eve. Post, N 25, 1830. 25

The successful revolution of July, 1830, in France (q. v., Jl 28), is celebrated in New York on this day, having been postponed from the 25th on account of the weather. "Evacuation Day" was selected as an appropriate day for celebrating this event because that day restored our own citizens to their homes and to the enjoyment of their rights and liberties. A great civic and military pageant is held in the morning, the route of the procession being from the Park, by way of Chatham St. and The Bowery, to Washington Square. Here a chair, made in the procession, is presented to the venerable ex-president, James Monroe, by the chairmakers. An oration is delivered by Samuel L. Gouverneur, Monroe's son-in-law; an ode, written by Samuel Woodworth, is sung by the Park Theatre choristers. A tri-colour flag is presented, on behalf of the natives of France, resident in New York, to the First Division of N. Y. State Artillery, commanded by Maj.-Gen. Morton. The Marseillais Hymn is sung, and the proceedings in Washington Square close with a feu de joie. The remainder of the day is occupied with dinners, illuminations, and special performances at the theatres. For details of the events of the day, see N. Y. newspapers of Nov. 25–30; also "Full Account of the Celebration of the Revolution in France, in the City of New-York, on the 25th [26th] November, 1830 . . .," which comprises the latter half of a work entitled Full Annals of the Revolution in France, 1830, by Myer Moses (N. Y., 1830). The most interesting features of the procession were the printing-press striking off the ode, written for the occasion by Woodworth and distributed to the crowd, to be sung to the air of the Marseillais Hymn; and a huge ox on a platform drawn by four oxen as large as himself, the butcher's contribution to the pageant. A copy of the printed ode was sold in the H'y Cady Sturges sale at The Anderson Galleries, Nov. 20–22, 1922; there is also one in the collection of the Grolier Club. The text of the ode, in Woodworth's handwriting, is in the N. Y. Pub. Library. 26

27 The common council votes to have 14 lamps put on Third Ave. between 14th and 28th Sts., although this section is outside the lamp district. 31 "Among the shows of the season one of the most novel in its plan is the Erie Canal Museum, at Washington Market wharf. This is a floating magazine of curiosities, which has greatly amazed the good people of all the towns between Albany and Buffalo, during the summer season; and now that the canal is closed has come to move itself in the waters of New York, and amuse its citizens, until the return of fine weather. It is a collection of the rarities of the world in the apartment of a canal boat, which have been transported five hundred miles without disturbing their arrangement."—N. Y. Eve. Post, D 31, 1830.

— In this year, Dr. Samuel Guthrie of Sackett's Harbor, N. Y., discovered chloroform.—Benj. Silliman in Am. Chemist (N. Y.), Aug.-Sept., 1874, p. 86.

— In this year, the locomotives "West Point" and "De Witt Clinton," the second and third American-built locomotives for actual service upon a railroad, were fitted up at the West Point Foundry Works, at the foot of Beach St., New York City (see Ap 15, 1818). The "West Point," like the "Best Friend" (1830), was built for service in South Carolina. The "De Witt Clinton" was ordered by John B. Jervis, chief engineer of the Mohawk and Hudson Railroad, which was the first part of the New York Central Railroad, from Albany to Schenectady. It was commenced in April, 1831, soon after the "Best Friend" and the "West Point" were completed and forwarded by boat to Albany. The engineer of this locomotive, David Matthew, thus describes it:

"I left New York with the 'De Witt' on the 25th of June, 1831, and had steam on to commence running in one week from that time. The 'De Witt' had two cylinders five and a half inches in diameter and sixteen inches' stroke; four wheels, all drivers, four and a half feet diameter, with all the spokes turned and finished. The spokes were wrought-iron, hubs cast-iron, and the wheels tired with wrought-iron, inside crank and outside connecting-rods to connect all four wheels; a tubular boiler with drop furnace, two fire-doors, one above the other; copper tubes two and a half inches in diameter and about six feet long; cylinders on an incline, and the pumps worked vertically by bell crank. This engine weighed about three and a half tons without water, and would run thirty miles an hour with three to five cars on a level, with anthracite coal, and was the first engine run in the State of New York on a railroad."

The first experimental trial trip occurred on the 5th of July, and others were made at different times during that month. The first excursion trip with a train of passenger-cars was made from Albany to Schenectady on Aug. 9, 1831, on which occasion William H. Brown, the author of The History of the First Locomotives in America (1874), rode in one of the cars, and before the train started made a sketch of the train. The picture was cut out of black paper with scissors, an art which this writer successfully practised. The original picture, which was about six feet in length, was presented by the artist to the Connecticut Historical Society. There were five or six coaches, of the old-fashioned stage-coach pattern, with a driver's seat or box upon either end outside. See Brown's History, 178 passim, where a reproduction of the cut-out picture of the train is presented in a folding plate, showing the engine, tender, and two of the passenger coaches. See, further, S 26, 1831. The original engine was "scrapped" in 1835.—Stevens, The Beginnings of the N. Y. Cent. R. R. (1926), v, 43–45. A replica of the "De Witt Clinton," as described by a circular of the N. Y. Cent. & Hudson River R. R. (1923), under the title "The First Train Run in the State of New York," weighs, without its tender, 9,420 pounds; the tender weighs 5,340, and each of the three coaches (now connected with it) weighs 3,420 pounds. The "De Witt Clinton" is 12 ft. 10 in. long, and its height to the top of the steam dome is 8 ft. 5 in. The tender is 10 ft. 11 in. long. Each coach is 14 ft. long. 1831 —

In 1921, this replica of the "De Witt" and its coaches were placed on exhibition in the east balcony of the concourse of the Grand Central Station [What a name!]. On July 17, 1921, the engine, under its own steam, was exhibited with the coaches on the rails on the track below Riverside Drive, from 96th to 116th St. It was then mounted on flat cars and taken to Chicago for the "Progress Pageant" held there from July 30 to Aug. 14.—N. Y. Times, Jl 17 and 18, 1921. Afterwards, it was exhibited at several state fairs, and at a number of other points throughout the Eastern states. On its return to New York in 1924, it was again placed on exhibition in the Grand Central Station, where it still remains (1926). Mr. Stevens' book (vide supra) corrects for the first time the popular supposition that the replica, now shown, is the original engine.

In this year, The Spirit of the Times, the first sporting paper published in the U. S., appeared in N. Y. City. The publisher was Wm. T. Porter.—Annals of N. Am., 564. —

In this year, the first steamer arrived at Chicago.—Preble, Hist. of Steam Navigation, 134. —

Mrs. Trollope, who sailed from London on Nov. 4, 1827, and arrived "on Christmas-day at the mouth of the Mississippi," and thereafter spent three and a half years in the United States (principally in the Western and Southern portions), visited New York City for a period of seven weeks in 1831, before returning to England. Her observations, published in London in 1832 in Domestic Manners of the Americans, at once became famous; they contained the following (selected) references to this city: —

". . . I have never seen the bay of Naples, I can therefore make no comparison, but my imagination is incapable of conceiving any thing of the kind more beautiful than the harbour of New York . . . I doubt if even the pencil of Turner could do it justice, bright and glorious as it rose upon us. We seemed to enter the harbour of New York upon waves of liquid gold, and as we darted past the green isles which rise from its bosom, like guardian centinels [sic] of the fair city, the setting sun stretched his horizontal beams farther and farther at each moment, as if to point out to us some new glory in the landscape.

"New York, indeed, appeared to us, even when we saw it by a soberer light, a lovely and a noble city. To us who had been so long travelling through half-cleared forests, and sojourning among an 'I'm-as-good-as-you' population, it seemed, perhaps, more beautiful, more splendid, and more refined than it might have done, had we arrived there directly from London, but making every allowance for this, I must still declare that I think New York one of the finest cities I ever saw, and as much superior to every other in the Union, (Philadelphia not excepted,) as London to Liverpool, or Paris to Rouen. Its advantages of position are, perhaps, unequalled anywhere. Situated on an island, which I think it will one day cover, it rises, like Venice, from the sea, and like that fairest of cities in the days of her glory, receives into its lap tribute of all the riches of the earth.

". . . Broadway . . . may vie with any [street] I ever saw, for its length and breadth, its handsome shops, neat awnings, excellent trottoir, and well-dressed pedestrians. It has not the crowded glitter of Bond-street equipages, nor the gorgeous fronted palaces of Regent-street; but it is magnificent in its extent, and ornamented by several handsome buildings, some of them surrounded by grass and trees. The Park, in which stands the noble city-hall, is a very fine area . . .

"The dwelling houses of the higher classes are extremely hand-

1831 — some, and very richly furnished. Silk or satin furniture is as often, or oftener, seen than chintz; . . . Every part of their houses is well carpeted, and the exterior finishing, such as steps, railings, and door-frames, are very superior. Almost every house has handsome green blinds on the outside; balconies are not very general, nor do the houses display, externally, so many flowers as those of Paris and London; . . .

"Hudson Square and its neighbourhood is, I believe, the most fashionable part of the town; the square is beautiful, exceedingly well planted with a great variety of trees, and only wanting our frequent and careful mowing to make it equal to any square in London. The iron railing which surrounds this enclosure is as high and as handsome as that of the Tuilleries, and it will give some idea of the care bestowed on its decoration, to know that the gravel for the walks was conveyed by barges from Boston, not as ballast, but as freight.

"The great defect in the houses is their extreme uniformity—when you have seen one, you have seen all . . .

"There are three theatres at New York . . . The Park Theatre is the only one licensed by fashion, but the Bowery is infinitely superior in beauty; it is indeed as pretty a theatre as I ever entered, perfect as to size and proportion, elegantly decorated, and the scenery and machinery equal to any in London, but it is, not the fashion. The Chatham is so utterly condemned by bon ton, that it requires some courage to decide upon going there; . . .

"At the Park Theatre . . . we saw many 'yet unrazored lips' polluted with the grim tinge of the hateful tobacco, and heard, without ceasing, the spitting, which of course is its consequence. If their theatres had the orchestra of the Feydeau, and a choir of angels to boot, I could find but little pleasure, so long as they were followed by this running accompaniment of thorough base. . . .

"The Exchange is very handsome, and ranks about midway between the heavy gloom that hangs over our London merchants, and the light and lofty elegance which decorates the Bourse at Paris. The churches are plain, but very neat, and kept in perfect repair within and without; but I saw none which had the least pretension to splendour; the Catholic cathedral at Baltimore is the only church in America which has."

Mrs. Trollope next describes a Sunday visit to the pleasure gardens of Hoboken; art exhibitions in New York, including "Colonel Trumbold's" (Trumbull's), of which she says: ". . . and how the patriots of America can permit this truly national collection to remain a profitless burden on the hands of the artist, it is difficult to understand . . ." She then refers to the interior of the public institutions of New York, than which she "can imagine nothing more perfect;" and describes the custom of moving on May first, which gives the city "the appearance of sending off a population flying from the plague."

"There are a great number of negroes in New York, all free; their emancipation having been completed in 1827. Not even in Philadelphia, where the anti-slavery opinions have been the most active and violent, do the blacks appear to wear an air of so much consequence as they do at New York. They have several chapels, in which negro ministers officiate; and a theatre in which none but negroes perform. At this theatre a gallery is appropriated to such whites as choose to visit it . . .

"If it were not for the peculiar manner of walking, which distinguishes all American women, Broadway might be taken for a French street, where it was the fashion for very smart ladies to promenade. The dress is entirely French; not an article (except perhaps the cotton stockings) must be English, on pain of being stigmatized as out of the fashion. Everything English is decidedly mauvais ton . . .

"Most of the houses in New York are painted on the outside, but in a manner carefully to avoid disfiguring the material which it preserves: on the contrary, nothing can be neater. They are now using a great deal of a beautiful stone called Jersey freestone; it is of a warm rich brown, and extremely ornamental to the city wherever it has been employed. They have also a grey granite of great beauty. The trottoir paving in most of the streets is extremely good, being of large flag stones, very superior to the bricks of Philadelphia.

"At night the shops, which are open till very late, are brilliantly illuminated with gas, and all the population seem as much alive as in London or Paris. . . .

"The hackney coaches are the best in the world, but abominably dear, and it is necessary to be on the qui vive in making your bargain with the driver . . . 1831 —

"The private carriages of New York are infinitely handsomer and better appointed than any I saw elsewhere; the want of smart liveries destroys much of the gay effect, but, on the whole, a New York summer equipage, with the pretty women and beautiful children it contains, look extremely well in Broadway, and would not be much amiss anywhere.

"The luxury of the New York aristocracy is not confined to the city; hardly an acre of Manhattan Island but shews some pretty villa or stately mansion. The most chosen of these are on the north and east rivers, to whose margins their lawns descend. Among these, perhaps, the loveliest is one situated in the beautiful village of Bloomingdale; here, within the space of sixteen acres, almost every variety of garden scenery may be found. . . . no spot I have ever seen dwells more freshly on my memory, . . . than that of Woodlawn."—From Domestic Manners of the Americans (1st ed., 1832), II: 151–83. See also an introduction to a recent ed. of this work (N. Y., 1901), written by Harry Thurston Peck, quoting from the Autobiography of Anthony Trollope, Mrs. Trollope's son, in which Mr. Trollope describes the causes which induced his mother to write this famous book. Mr. Trollope states that Domestic Manners "was the first of a series of books of travels, of which it was probably the best and certainly the best known." He means, of course, the first written by his mother; but Mr. Peck erroneously interprets this statement when he says "Mr. Trollope was mistaken in thinking his mother's book the first of those written by English travellers on America."

In this year, owing to the great increase of equity business in the city of New York, the offices of vice chancellor and circuit judge were disunited, and a separate vice chancellor created for the first circuit.—Daly, Hist. Sketch of the Judicial Tribunals of N. Y. from 1623 to 1846 (1855), 57, citing Laws of N. Y. (1831), 12. Other changes were made in 1839 and 1840, which prevailed until the court of chancery was abolished by the constitution of 1846 (q.v.). —

"In the vaults and cellars of the buildings of the Brinkerhoffs," the first city hall's "ruins may yet be easily traced."—Fay's Views of New York (1831), 13; T. R. De Forest, Olden Time in N. Y. (1833), 38. See also Mr 14, 1700. The author examined the cellar walls in 1909, when they were (and presumably still are) distinctly discernible. —

In this year, 23d St. was opened from Third Ave. to the East River.—Man. Com. Coun. (1857), 530. —

In this year, Geo. M. Bourne published his series of small views of New York; they are listed by titles and fully described in Vol. III, pp. 594–98, of the present work, together with the original drawings by C. Burton and by the Messrs. Smillie owned by the N. Y. Hist. Soc. The "Washington Hotel, Broadway," shown in one of these views, is not the former Kennedy house, as stated in L. M. R. K., III: 950, but the former Washington Hall at the s. e. cor. of Broadway and Reade St.—See 1851. See also A. Pl. 21-a, Vol. III; and 1830. —

In this year also, Peabody & Co., New York, published a thin quarto volume entitled Views in New-York And its Environs, from Accurate, Characteristic & Picturesque Drawings, Taken on the spot, expressly for this work, by Dakin, Architect; with historical, topographical & critical illustrations [text] by Theodore S. Fay (Co-Editor of the New York Mirror, Assisted by several Distinguished Literary Gentlemen. It contains, besides, a folding map of the lower part of the city, by William Hooker. These views are listed and described in Vol. III, pp. 599–603, of the present work, two of the views, "Le Roy Place" and "La Grange Terrace" being reproduced on Pl. 103, Vol. III. In the description of the latter (see III: 605), it should be noted that Archibald Dick, not Alexander L. Dick as there stated, was the engraver. The Peabody views are also described in the N. Y. Mirror, Je 4, Jl 30, N 12 and 26, 1831; Mr 24, 1832. See also descrip. of Pl. 102-a, III: 599. See, further, My 25. —

— In this year, the public reservoir, on the south side of 13th St., east of Fourth Ave. (Colton Map, Pl. 124, Vol. III), which was begun in 1829, was in successful operation. Excavated to great depth in solid rock, and with pipes from it laid through some of the principal streets, it was used for extinguishing fires. See descrip. of Pl. 13 in Peabody's Views in N. Y. (1831); N. Y. Mirror, XI: 71. Wegmann's Water-supply of the City of New York (1896), 16, states that this reservoir was "the beginning of the public water-works of the City of New York." Cf. "Reservoirs, Wells, and Water-Works" in L. M. R. K., III: 975–76. See, further, Mr 29, 1832.

— Between 1831 and 1842, a series of American views was engraved by W. J. Bennett. They are listed in the description of Pl. 116, Vol. III. They form the finest early collection of folio views of American cities, etc., in existence.

— The following views depicting New York in 1831 are found in Vol. III of the present work: Youle's shot-tower (Pl. 102-a); La Grange Terrace, Lafayette Place (Pl. 103-b); the Broadway stages (Pl. 108).

Jan. 10 The joint committee (on finance and public offices) to which was referred a petition of Cadwalader D. Colden and others respecting the "Rotunda" reports to the common council: "That this application comes from those gentlemen who originally patronized the undertaking of Mr Van Derlynn to establish an Exhibition of Panoramick pictures in this City, and who still are desirous to aid him in another attempt to conduct such an Institution. The joint Committee have heard the statements of Mr Vanderlynn and of other gentlemen who are interested in his behalf. It is proposed by them that the Rotunda should be appropriated to its original use under the direction of Trustees and that for this purpose a new Lease should be granted by the Corporation at a certain Rent and that such rent or a portion of it should be applied to extinguish the demands still remaining unsatisfied for work and materials for the Building. It is also urged that the construction of this building fits it peculiarly for such a purpose only, and that there is a prospect that under judicious management an exebition of panoramas in it might be made popular and profitable.

"It will be recollected that the ground upon which this building is erected was leased by the Corporation to Mr Vanderlynn for the term of nine years from the 1st day of May 1817. . . . Mr Vanderlynn was allowed to remain in possession for about three years after his term had expired and until it was determined by the Board that the premises were required for public purposes and since the surrender of the premises to the corporation alterations have been made in the building. . . . Under all these circumstances the committee do not deem it expedient to grant the present application. It is well understood that Mr Vanderlynn when he had no rent to pay was not successful there. . . . and considering the present altered condition of the premises the Committee do not think that the Common Council are called upon to allow a second experiment to be tried there. . . ."

A motion being proposed and lost that the Rotunda "be leased jointly to Mr Vanderlynn and the Mechanics who assisted in the erection of the building and whose claims are still unliquidated," the board adopts the report and its recommendation that it is inexpedient to grant Colden's petition.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIX: 427–29. See Ja 24.

" The name of Lombardy St. is changed to Monroe St.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIX: 435. The name of Harman St. is changed to East Broadway.—Ibid., XIX: 436.

12 Attention is called to "the insufficiency of the buildings employed by the Government for the purpose of a Custom-House. . . . Instead of the Collector's, Naval Officer's, Surveyor's and Auditor's rooms being all on one floor, near the ground, they are on different floors, rendering access to either, in the ordinary transaction of business exceedingly tedious. . . . The buildings, besides being so poor and small, are badly constructed for the purpose to which they are applied, and in warm weather the atmosphere is very oppressive . . ."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ja 12, 1831. See also ibid., Ja 14, 21, and 25, 1831, and N. Y. Mirror, N 26, 1831. Jan. 12

The common council appropriates the "Rotunda" (at this time called "Session's Hall"—see also Mr 27, 1830) for the use of the marine court, and directs the committee on applications to the legislature to prepare an application for an act authorising the removal of this court into the building.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIX: 456. 24

The common council orders that the pond between First and Second Aves., 10th and 11th Sts., adjoining the burying-ground of St. Mark's Church, be filled up.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIX: 457. Marshy ground in this neighbourhood is shown on the Poppleton Map, of 1817. See also the Viele "Topographical Atlas" of 1874. "

The council of N. Y. University meets and elects officers: Albert Gallatin, pres.; Morgan Lewis, vice-pres.; John Delafield, sec.; Sam. Ward, treas.; Jas. M. Mathews, D. D., chancellor. "The preliminary arrangements necessary to the establishment of this institution are rapidly progressing."—N. Y. Mirror, VIII: 247 (F 5, 1831); Hone's Diary, I: 27. See Ap 18. 31

Nearly $120,000 has been subscribed for the new university, and the institution is expected to go into operation next autumn.—N. Y. Eve. Post, F 2, 1831. Feb. 2

"The New-York Marble Cemetery" is incorporated. The act describes the property as "The cemetery recently constructed in the interior of the block formed by the Bowery, the Second avenue, and Second and Third-streets."—Laws of N. Y. (1831), chap. 38. The land was purchased, July 13, 1830, by Anthony Dey and Geo. W. Strong (Liber Deeds, CCLXIV: 302), and conveyed by them as trustees to "New York Marble Cemetery," May 1, 1832.—Ibid., CCLXXXVI: 24. See also L. M. R. K., III: 927. 4

This cemetery must be distinguished from "The New-York City Marble Cemetery," which was incorporated April 26, 1832 (q. v.).

Rhinelander's sugar-house at Duane and Rose Sts. is considerably injured by fire.—N. Y. Eve. Post, F 4, 1831. For a good photograph of this building, see Brown, Book of Old N. Y. (1913), opp. p. 308. See also L. M. R. K., III: 963. "

The common council orders the comptroller to give notice to the owners of lands fronting the Hudson, between Jane St. and the Great Kill Road, to apply for grants for the water lots in front of their grounds to the permanent line, with a view to filling these lots and making West St.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIX: 473. 7

The committee on arts and sciences reports "that the Clock intended for the Cupola of the City Hall [see My 17, 1830] is so far completed as to be at present in temporary operation in the lower Chamber of the Cupola."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIX: 481; N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., F 12, 1831; and descrip. of Pl. 97, III: 586. See My 2. "

"The ridiculous fashion of wearing mustachios, which quite lately seemed to be confined to a few boys and dandies, is on the increase in this city, and one now, in the course of a walk in Broadway of a pleasant afternoon, will meet quite a number of young men who, but for the hairy argument in the negative upon their upper lips, might be mistaken for rather sensible looking persons. We cannot account for this growing fashion, unless the dandies, tired of being called smooth-cheeked and effeminate, are determined, in compliance with Hamlet's advice, to 'assume a virtue if they have it not.' . . ."—N. Y. Eve. Post, F 10, 1831. 10

"The contemplated improvements and embellishments of the Park, demand the removal of Public School No. 1." The board approves the draught of a law "for the further support and extension of Common Chools [Schools] in the City of New York."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIX: 488–89. 14

The burning of another church is recorded,—the Seventh Presbyterian Church, at the n. e. cor. of Broome and Ridge Sts. Only the walls are left standing.—N. Y. Eve. Post, F 16, 1831. It was rebuilt, however, in this year.—L. M. R. K., III: 932. 16

"We regret that the alteration of the old jail made it necessary to remove the two noble trees, which for a century have shaded the front of that building. Even their venerable appearance could not save them. The axe was yesterday laid to their root, and the contrast since their removal has been such as to create a general regret that it was necessary to do so."—N. Y. Eve. Post, F 19, 1831. 19

1831 F 21 The common council appoints Silas Ludlam as city surveyor.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIX: 507.

24 The managers of the "N. Y. Female Asylum for Lying-in Women" obtain from the common council a lot on the north side of White St., adjoining the City Dispensary, on which to erect a building similar to the dispensary. The Lying-in Hospital was incorporated in 1799, and was at first allied with the N. Y. Hospital. —M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIX: 492–95.

28 The common council resolves that a bill be presented to the legislature stating the city's need of an ample supply of pure water and asking that the rights of the Manhattan Water Company to take streams of water and other property and change the channels of water courses be repealed and the same be vested in the corporation of the city of New York.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIX: 459–60, 519–21. See Ap 18.

Mar. 1 Lord John Russell introduces the First Reform Bill in the house of commons. After much debate, it was defeated on April 19, parliament was dissolved, and a new election ordered. The election took place amid the greatest excitement and was an overwhelming victory for the reformers.—Hazen, Europe since 1815, 430–35. See Je 24.

3 The common council resolves to apply to the legislature "to take the necessary steps to have the Constitution of the State so altered that the Mayor of this City may be elected hereafter by the People." —M. C. C. (1754–1831), XIX: 525. See Ap 25, 1833.

7 The legislature passes an act incorporating "the Leake and Watts Orphan House in the City of N. Y."—Laws of N. Y. (1831), chap. 58. See, further, Ap 28, 1838. This asylum was endowed by the wealth of John George Leake.—Ibid.; and Man. Com. Coun. (1861), 623–28.

9 Stuyvesant St., running from the Bowery Road to Second Ave., is declared by law to be a public road.—Laws of N. Y. (1831), chaps. 59 and 252; M. C. C. (1784–1831), XVIII: 492, XIX: 559. On March 21, the common council ordered that Stuyvesant St. between the Bowery and Second Ave. be opened.—Ibid., XIX: 579. On April 18, the corporation counsel decided that the consent of the legislature was necessary.—Ibid., XIX: 652. This was obtained.

19 The City Bank in Wall St. was robbed of nearly $200,000 in bank bills and 200 Spanish doubloons sometime between its closing on this Saturday evening and its opening on Monday, March 21. A reward of $5,000 was offered for the recovery of the property.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Mr 21, 1831. See also ibid., Mr 22, 1831. The reward was later increased to $10,000.—Ibid., Mr 24, 1831. This was the first successful attempt on record to rob a New York bank. The thief, Edward Smith, was finally captured, and $175,738 recovered.—Ibid., Mr 28, 29, 30, 1831. See also ibid., Ap 1, 4, 9, 30, My 12, Jl 9, 19, S 21, 22, 28, O 11, 1831.

21 The common council appoints Edwin Smith a city surveyor.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIX: 576.

" Painting parts of the interior of the city hall has not been done "since the Hall was finished." This neglect is remedied "for the preservation of the building."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIX: 578.

" The finance committee, to whom was referred the subject of delaying the suit now pending for the recovery of Fort Gansevoort by the city, reports: "That the premises in question are erected upon land formerly covered with water lying beyond High water mark in front of property belonging to John Jacob Astor, Esq[r], which was formerly part of the Clinton Farm.

"That in 1812 M[r] Astor having what is termed the pre-emptive right to said premises, sold and conveyed the same by a Warrantee Deed to the United States for $10,000—That the Government of the United States caused the Fort and other improvements to be erected there, and have been in possession ever since. That in February 1829 an application was made to the Corporation by M[r] Astor for a grant of the land under water between the great Kill road & 12[th] Street embracing the whole of the premises in question, upon which application, the then Finance Committee reported on the 30[th] of November 1829 that in their opinion the premises so applied for would be required by the Corporation for public purposes; and a Resolution was thereup[on] adopted by the Board, 'that it was not expedient to comply with the prayer of the said Petition.'" Then an action of ejectment was commenced by the corporation counsel against the U. S. officer in charge of the Fort, which action is now pending.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIX: 581–82. See also L. M. R. K., III: 944.

Mar. 24 Daniel Webster's friends in New York give him a dinner at the City Hotel, in admiration of his "defence of the constitution" during his debates in the senate with Hayne on questions of the tariff, internal improvements, the proper functions of the judiciary, and the reserved rights of the states (see Ja 27, 1830).—N. Y. Eve. Post, Mr 25, 1831.

" The legislature passes an act which declares that the term "City Hall of the City of New York," when used in any law of this state, shall include, for legal purposes, all buildings designated by the common council for the use of courts or public offices within that part of the city bounded by Chambers St., Broadway, Park Row, Chatham St., and Tryon Row.—Laws of N. Y. (1831), chap. 77. On March 29, the common council ordained that the buildings known as "the old Alms House," "the Rotunda," and "the Old Jail" shall be "designated as part of the City Hall of the City of New York for the use of Courts and Public Offices."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIX: 583–84.

28 Acting Secretary of War Randolph gives orders for delivering "to the Corporation of New York the North battery (in conformity to an act of Congress passed at its last Session) as soon as the Ordnance and Quartermasters Stores can be removed from the premises."—Original letter in city clerk's record-room; M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIX: 584–85, 662. See Ap 23. The city had conveyed this property to the U. S. on May 6, 1808 (q.v.).

30 A public dinner is given by the citizens of N. Y. to the Hon. Tristram Burges, of Rhode Island, in the assembly-room of the City Hotel. The invitation to him to speak, signed by a committee, refers to his recent "able and eloquent exposition of the Law of Nations," and his "exposure of the corruption of the present administration [Gen. Jackson's], particularly as it appears in the appointment of the gentleman who yet holds the credentials of Minister of the United States to the Court of St. Petersburgh" (John Randolph). A toast to Henry Clay, of whom it was said: "The genius of America beckons him to the Capital," was received with "raptures" and repeated cheers. The speech, correspondence, etc., connected with the event were published in a pamphlet.—See one of these in the N. Y. P. L.

31 "Among the distinguished visitors in our city we notice on the books at the Washington Hotel, the names of Joseph Bonaparte, Ex-King of Spain; Joan Mosquera, Ex-President of Colombia; Gen. F. C. de Mosquera, of Colombia; and Jorge Winterton, late Consul General from the Government of Great Britain to Mexico; Marquis F Neri del Barrio, of Mexico."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Mr 31, 1831.

Apr. — In the spring of this year, several gentlemen of New York associated themselves in a plan to build a row of houses on the north side of Washington Square, which was then so far up town that, for all practical purposes, it was in the country. Plans were prepared (by A. J. Davis?), and all the houses between University Place and Fifth Ave. were contracted for together. The land belonged to the corporation of the Sailors' Snug Harbor, and from that corporation the building lots were leased.

"The original plan provided for lots about twenty seven feet front and this is the width of the first five houses," as described by a granddaughter of John Johnston, one of the associated owners, whose family has ever since occupied No. 7. "The other lots were thirty-foot front, and Mr Johnston built two houses, on two plots, one thirty-two and one-half feet, and the other twenty-seven and one-half feet front." At first, "the ground rents of the houses" were "$130 per annum for the narrower and $150 for the wider lots." The exteriors of the houses were alike, and within they differed only slightly, having for instance mantles carved from statuary marble in Italy and handsome gilt and bronze chandeliers. Writing in 1909, the author above referred to gave a list of these houses, their original owners, and their later occupants.

John Johnston and his family moved into their house on Nov. 2, 1833. At that time these houses were "surrounded by green fields, very few dwellings having as yet been built so far uptown. . . . all had beautiful gardens in the rear about ninety feet deep, surrounded on two sides by white, grape-covered trellises, with rounded arches at intervals and lovely borders full of old-fashioned flowers. . . . The garden at No. 7 remained in very nearly its original condition until an addition to the house was built over it in 1894."—John Johnston, of New York, Merchant, by Emily Johnston de Forest (1909), 124–27, 148. See My 7; also 1833, and 1835.

1831 Apr. 4 The common council accepts an invitation of the committee on arts and sciences "to view the New Bell prepared for the Cupola of the City Hall at Allaires Furnace."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIX: 585–86. See My 17, 1830; F 7 and My 9, 1831.

" A dilapidated wooden fence encloses the Park on the Chambers St. side. The committee on lands and places, being "desirous of putting that ground in order, so as to get it in grass and set out the trees," finds that "the probable cost of erecting an Iron fence, to correspond with that [of wood] now on Chambers street with a large Gate in the centre corresponding with the Gate at the head of Murray street," will be about $2,000. The board authorises the committee to spend that amount for the purpose.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIX: 598.

" "The committee on public offices and repairs to whom was referred a resolution directing the committee to report "what Room in the City Hall will in their opinion be suitable to accommodate the additional Chamber of the Common Council under the organization of the New Charter, and an Estimate of the Expence, of fitting up the same in a proper manner," reports that "the South East Room on the second floor of the City Hall now appropriated to the Court of Sessions is the most convenient and proper room" for this purpose; that $300 will be required for repairing and painting it, $1,300 "for procuring Furniture and drapery to correspond with that of the present Council Chamber," and $3,000 "for altering the said Room in such manner as that its style of Architecture shall correspond with the Chamber at present occupied by the Common Council." The room is accordingly appropriated, and the $300 and $1,300 appropriations made. The proposed $3,000 appropriation for altering the architecture of the room was "Laid for further consideration."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIX: 593–94.

" "The Building in the Park that is now occupied for an Oil House is in a very bad state of Repair, and is not large enough to accommodate the Lighters who are 50 in number . . . and the Cisterns now used [for storing oil] will not hold more than 1000 Gallons." The common council orders the removal of this building (which is deemed a nuisance in its present state and location), as soon as a new one can be erected adjoining Fireman's Hall, in Mercer St.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIX: 597–98. On May 2, a remonstrance against placing the oil-house in Mercer St. (ibid., 627) was over-ruled (ibid., 698).

16 "Broadway Stages.—These vehicles . . . have so cut up the pavement as to render travelling in lighter carriages disagreeable. For this we can suggest no remedy except slow and careful driving . . . ; but they are liable to another objection . . . That is, the use of only two horses to draw those immense and heavy conveyances, sometimes loaded with eighteen or twenty persons. Either four horses should be attached, or the stages themselves should be of less dimensions."—N. Y. Mirror, VIII: 327.

The next issue of this paper contained the following: "Omnibus.—An accommodation coach, of uncommon dimensions, bearing the above classic title, and drawn by four white horses, has made its appearance among the Broadway stages. Its exterior is as showy as the interior is capacious and convenient. A ride in it for several days after it started, subjected the passenger to as much attention as the adventurers in the first ship that approached the shores of the Indians. . . ." This writer then recommends that owners of the stages follow the example of the "Omnibus" by attaching an additional pair of horses.—Ibid., VIII: 343. See also the "View of St. Paul's Church and the Broadway Stages, N. Y.," Pl. 108, Vol. III. New York was called "The City of Omnibuses."—N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., Ag 5, 1834.

18 An act of legislature authorises the common council "to cause the earth to be bored for the purpose of obtaining water, in any street, road or public highway . . . and the expense thereof, and of pumps and other fixtures connected therewith, shall be estimated and assessed among the owners or occupants of the houses and lots of ground intended to be benefitted thereby."—Laws of N. Y. (1831), chap. 158. See F 28.

" The subscribers and shareholders of "The University of New-York" are incorporated by the name of "The University of the City of New York." Its purpose is "promoting literature and science." It "shall not own real estate, at one time, yielding an annual income exceeding twenty thousand dollars." The government and estate of the university "shall be conducted and managed by a council composed of thirty-two shareholders, and the mayor and four members of the common council of the city of New-York, for the time being." The act gives the names of the members of the council of the university, elected by the shareholders at the last annual election. Among the members of the first council, named in the act, are Jonathan M. Wainwright, Spencer H. Cone, Morgan Lewis, Albert Gallatin, Myndert Van Schoick, James Lenox, Valentine Mott, Edw. Delafield, John Delafield, with certain members of the common council, including Gideon Lee and the mayor. The act further provides that "No one religious sect shall ever have a majority of the board" (or council of managers).—Laws of N. Y. (1831), chap. 176. This was the college on Washington Square, and must not be confused with the College of the City of New York, which took its name in 1866. In the university's archives are the early minutes of meetings of the stockholders, the Subscription book of Myndert van Schoick, Treasurer, and other contemporary records. For a history of the university, see N. Y. University and her Sons, ed. by Chamberlain (Boston, 1901). See, further, S 26, 1832. Apr. 18

" The common council accepts an invitation from Col. John Trumbull "to visit a Collection of Paintings done by himself descriptive of the Military and Civil scenes of the United States during the Revolutionary War."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIX: 644.

" The street committee, to whom was referred, on April 4, a petition of Seth Geer and others, who own lots on Lafayette Place, requesting permission "to inclose a Court of fifteen feet wide in front of all the Buildings to be erected on that Street or Place," reports to the common council that, as the request "is in accordance with an express understanding of all the owners of the grounds through which that street was opened in 1826 with the then Corporation . . . And as the proposed plan of Buildings . . . will be highly Ornamental to our City, . . .," the committee proposes that the petition be granted and that an ordinance entitled "a Law relative to La Fayette place" be passed. This is carried.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIX: 654.

This appears to have been one of the steps in the erection of "La Grange Terrace" or "Colonnade Row," of which Theodore S. Fay, one of the editors of the N. Y. Mirror, wrote in this year: "Of all the modern improvements which characterize our city, the sumptuous row of houses in Lafayette Place, called after the seat of the venerable Patriot, La Grange Terrace, and of which our publishers present an accurate engraving [reproduced as Pl. 103-b, Vol. III], is the most imposing and magnificent.

"These costly houses . . . are built of white marble, the front supported by a rich colonnade of fluted Corinthian columns, resting on the basement story, which is of the Egyptian order of architecture. They were designed and built entirely by Mr. Geer, and all the stone work was executed by the State prisoners at Sing Sing. One of the houses was sold not long since, for 26,500 dollars, a sum greatly below its value."—Fay, Views of New York (1831), 46; Knickerbocker Mag., Jl, 1833, XI: 71; Ladies' Companion, N, 1836, cited in Mag. of Am. Hist., XVI: 2–3. See My 7.

" The common council resolves that William St. be widened and improved between Exchange and Stone Sts.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIX: 655; Man. Com. Coun. (1857), 530.

" The common council orders that Tenth Ave. be "worked into a convenient Road" between 51st and 70th Sts.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIX: 659.

20 Wm. Cullen Bryant thrashes Wm. L. Stone on Broadway with a "cowskin" because of insults published against him in Stone's paper, the Commercial Advertiser. Stone defends himself with a cane, and wrests the whip from Bryant. The antagonists are finally separated.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ap 21, 1831. Philip Hone sees the encounter from his house opposite, and describes it.—Hone's Diary, I: 30.

21 The N. Y. Institution for the Blind, which was founded in 1830, is incorporated.—Man. Com. Coun. (1858), 631–32; Laws of N. Y. (1831), chap. 214. See Mr 15, 1832.

22 The city acquires by condemnation proceedings the land now comprised in Abingdon Square, at Eighth Ave. and W. 12th St. (2.02 acres).—Prendergast, Record of Real Estate (1914); L. M. R. K., III: 968.

23 The legislature passes an act "authorising certain Lands and Premises in the City of New-York to be opened as a Public Place, called Union Place."—Laws of N. Y. (1831), chap. 252. On April 25, the common council took steps for the appointment of com-

1831 Apr. 23 missioners of estimate and assessment to carry the act into effect.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIX: 676. This "place" was afterwards named Union Square.—L. M. R. K., III: 971–72. See also Mr 2, 1812; N 7, 1831; and descrip. of Pl. 135, III: 702.

" Maj. Henry Stanton, quartermaster of the U. S. Army, delivers the North Battery (see Mr 28) to Gen. J. Morton, clerk of the common council, in behalf and for the use of the corporation of the city. The correspondence in this connection was entered in full in the minutes on April 25.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIX: 661–63. See also editor's note in ibid., 662; and L. M. R. K., III: 945; and view of this fort in Emmet collection, 11360.

Even prior to this transfer, the city began to receive petitions from persons desiring to lease the North Battery, or "Red Fort," from the city.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIX: 587, 645.

25 The legislature incorporates the N. Y. and Harlem R. R. Co. The incorporators (among whom are Benson McGown, Thos. Addis Emmet, and Gideon Lee) are given power to construct "a single or double railroad" from any point on the north bounds of 23d St. to any point on the Harlem River between the east bounds of Third Ave. and the west bounds of Eighth Ave., with a branch to the Hudson River between 124th St. and the north bounds of 129th St. They may transport property and persons by the power of steam, animals, or "any mechanical or other power." This charter is to run for 30 years. If the company shall not locate its route and survey it within six months, filing a map thereof in the register's office, and shall not commence construction work within two years and finish it within four years, the corporation shall cease and this charter be void. The capital stock shall be $350,000, divided into shares of $50 each. The consent of the common council shall be obtained before the railway shall be built across or along any of the city streets.—Laws of N. Y. (1831), chap. 263. The act was amended on April 6, 1832 (q. v.). See, further, My 30, 1831.

" The College of Pharmacy is incorporated.—Laws of N. Y. (1831), chap. 264. Instruction was given at the N. Y. Dispensary at White and Centre Sts. In 1878, the college built on 23d St., near Third Ave. The present building, at 115–119 West 68th St., was completed in 1894. On July 1, 1904, the College of Pharmacy was affiliated with Columbia University.—Hist. of Columbia Univ., 418–21.

" The common council permits the owners of the steamboat "General Jackson" to have the exclusive use of the south side of the pier at the foot of Warren St. The owners of the Old Line of Liverpool packets and certain steamboats are permitted to use piers 22 and 23.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIX: 666–67. Also, The New York and Boston Steamboat Co. is assigned to the use of wharves and piers at the foot of Cortlandt and Liberty Sts.—Ibid., 669.

" The common council adopts resolutions to open Front St. from Clinton to Corlaers St., and to widen South St. from Clinton to Montgomery St.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIX: 678–79.

" The common council resolves that the committee on public offices and repairs be empowered "to improve the building known as the Old Alms House (now part of the City Hall) so that the front on Chamber street correspond with the front on the Park."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIX: 683. This order was in addition to an appropriation of $1,400 on April 4 for painting and repairs to the building.—Ibid., XIX: 594–95.

" The finance committee, to whom was referred a communication from Henry N. Western to the mayor claiming compensation for his client, Enrico Causici, "for a colossal Statue of Washington," reports that the testimony taken shows "that in the years 1823 and 1824 Mr Causici was engaged in making a Model of a Colossal Equestrian Statue of Washington which was for some time erected in the Park, and for the labor Materials and time bestowed upon this work Mr Causici now prefers a claim against the Corporation amounting in the whole to $5944, as appears by his bill annexed hereto." The committee, after investigation, finds that no resolution was ever passed which could "be construed as an understanding to pay anything to Mr Causici. . . ." On the contrary, the proof is that "whatever was done by the Common Council respecting Mr Causici's said work was done out of pure kindness to him, and that there is no ground either of Law or Equity upon which his present claim or any claim arising out of the said transactions can rest." It is therefore rejected.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIX: 668–69. See also descrip. of Pl. 100, III: 592. For the next effort to erect a statue in New York to the memory of Washington, see D 10 and 12, 1831.

Apr. 25 Imprisonment for debt upon contract, except in cases where fraud has been committed or is intended, is abolished in N. Y. State.—Laws of N. Y. (1831), chap. 300. The other states followed in a measure the example of New York. The act was amended in some particulars in later years.—See, for example, ibid. (1840), chap. 165 and chap. 377.

26 The first exhibition of the National Academy in its new quarters in Clinton Hall (see O 8, 1830) is held.—Cummings, Historic Annals of the Academy, 121. See also N. Y. Eve. Post, Ap 27 and 28, 1831. On May 7, the Mirror published a list and description of the paintings and drawings shown. Among them are the "Design and front view for the Record-office." These show the proposed transformation in the old jail in the Park (see N 15, 1830). This was probably drawn by A. J. Davis (see S 10 and 17).—N. Y. Mirror, VIII: 350, 358.

27 A public dinner in honour of Gulian C. Verplanck is held at the City Hotel by "the friends of literature and the arts." Fitz-Greene Halleck, Wm. Dunlap, James K. Paulding, A. B. Durand, Wm. Cullen Bryant, and Judge Irving are among those present.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ap 28–30, 1831.

28 "The exhibition at the gallery of the American Academy of the Fine Arts, in Chambers-street, is rendered interesting by the fact that all the productions, including nine subjects of the American revolution, with near two hundred and fifty portraits of persons distinguished in that period, are painted from the life by a single individual" (Col. Trumbull).—N. Y. Mirror, VIII: 339.

30 The common council authorises the payment of $1,500 to "the Messrs Demilts" for "the Public Clock now nearly completed in the City Hall."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIX: 701; and descrip. of Pl. 97, III: 586. See My 17, 1830; F 7, 1831; Ja 12, 1832.

May 2 "The ship yards of this city have assumed a look of activity which has not been seen in them for five years past. One first rate ship was launched a day or two since, and contracts are already entered into for building ten others, of which six are already on the stocks, and the others will be begun as soon as the ship yards can be made ready for them. This is a greater number than has been under contract at any time since the year 1826. Besides these large vessels, great numbers of small craft and steamboats are constructing along the shores, and vessels of every burden are undergoing repairs. . . .

6 "The reality and strength of this new impulse given to commerce, may be judged of from the remarkable fact, that within two months the value of shipping has risen in this port from twenty-five to thirty per cent. . . ."—N. Y. Eve. Post, My 6, 1831.

7 "We notice in many parts of the city a great number of spacious new brick buildings, in various stages of erection. . . . The growth of that part of the city which lies above Canal street, on both sides of Broadway, is astonishingly rapid, and the new edifices for the most part are handsome permanent structures. In Houston, Bond, Bleecker, Fourth, and many other streets, large blocks of spacious and elegant houses are erecting or just completed, and, preparations for as many more are actively going forward. In Lafayette place, the marble, bricks, and other materials for a row of splendid fabrics are collecting, and we understand that contracts have been made, and preparations are immediately to be commenced, for a line of superb edifices, to front on the North side of Washington Square, and extend nearly the whole length of that beautiful enclosure. . . ."—N. Y. Eve. Post, My 7, 1831; Hone's Diary, I: 31.

9 The common council grants a petition that that part of Chapel St. lying between Murray and Barclay Sts. be called College Place.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIX: 706.

" The committee on arts and sciences reports to the common council "that the original appropriation of $1500 for the Hall Bell [see My 17, 1830] has been found inadequate to the expence incurred, and leaves a ballance due to James P. Allaire [see Ap 4, 1831] of $874.99." The price of the bell, by weight, came to $2,087 and the expense of "turning, raising, Standard frames and other preparations" increased this to $2,374.99. This left the deficiency of $874.99. The board votes an appropriation to pay it.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIX: 710–11; and descrip. of Pl. 97, III: 586.

" "The piece of ground now enclosed in the rear of the building now known as the Debtors' Jail in the Park," is established as a public pound.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIX: 722.

1831 May 9 The common council adopts a resolution to widen Pine St. between Nassau and William Sts. on the easterly side, and between William St. and the store of Saul Alley on the westerly side.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIX: 722–23; Man. Com. Coun. (1857), 530.

10 The first bicameral council in the history of the city, provided for in the amended charter of April 7, 1830 (q.v.), is sworn into office, the oath being administered by Mayor Bowne. Neither mayor nor recorder is any longer a member, and the two boards, of 14 members each, choose their own presidents. It required 29 ballots in the board of aldermen before Samuel Stevens received a majority of the votes and was elected.—Proc., Bd. of Ald. (1831), I: 10–18; Proc., Bd. of Asst. Ald. (1831), I: 3. The common council continued in this form, aldermen and assistants being added as the number of wards increased, until April 12, 1853 (q.v.).

" David T. Valentine is elected sergeant-at-arms in the board of assistant aldermen.—Com. Adv., My 11, 1831.

14 "The Trustees of the 'Sailors Snug Harbour' [see Je 1, 1801; F 6, 1806] have purchased Mr. Houseman's farm on Staten Island, consisting of about one hundred and thirty acres, intended as the location for a hospital for superannuated seamen, accommodations for fifty of whom are to be erected immediately. The farm is situated near the entrance of the Kills; and the site selected for the buildings commands a good view of this city and harbour, of the town of Brooklyn, and of whatever passes in or out of the port." —N. Y. Eve. Post, My 14, 1831.

Twenty acres were afterwards added. The income from the Manhattan property in 1806 was $4,000.—Man. Com. Coun. (1856), 469. In 1836, the trustees reported to the legislature an income of $52,702.58 and expenses of $50,766.19. This increase resulted largely from the policy initiated in 1830 and 1831, when "the whole of the Sailor's Snug Harbor estate, from Broadway to the Fifth Avenue, and Washington Square, was leased out in house lots for twenty-one years."—See Disturnell's N. Y. As It Is, In 1837, 88.

On Oct. 31, the corner-stone of the first building of the Sailors' Snug Harbor on Staten Island was laid. For a brief history of the establishment, see Lossing's Hist. of N. Y. City, I: 129–30. See also Goodrich, Picture of N. Y. (1828).

17 "The fondness for the cultivation of tulips, for which the Dutch founders of New York were distinguished, is not yet extinct. The plantations of this splendid flower, however, have changed their location. Formerly tulips were cultivated on the soil which now covers the north part of Trinity Church Yard, when it was without the city—at present the finest beds are some miles to the northward and eastward of that place. Two successful cultivatiors of tulips, Mr. Kinnersley and Mr. Neale, have this season advertised their gardens as open to visitors. Mr. Kinnersley's garden is situated on the Eighth Avenue, at the place formerly known as the seat of J. B. Murray, Esq. Here is a good situation and a congenial soil, and under skilful and experienced tendance, fifteen hundred of these plants, embracing the finest varieties, are now in full bloom in a single bed. . . . Mr. Neale's garden is on Fifth-street. . . ." —N. Y. Eve. Post, My 17, 1831.

20 Jacob Lorillard has purchased the old state prison building and grounds at Amos and Greenwich Sts. and transformed them into a sanitorium. "The main building contains 29 rooms finished and the wings 60. . . . There are, besides baths either cold, warm or vapour, a refectory, apothecary shop, cistern and ice house within the premises. . . . The roof of the large front portico is formed into a promenade, or place for reclining, and commands a splendid prospect of the city, part of Staten Island—the Jersey shore, North River, and all the variety of life and being that animates that interesting scene. The building is surrounded by a beautiful garden, laid out in gravel walks and planted with shrubbery and evergreens.

"The establishment is opened for the accommodation of the sick, either residents of the city or strangers, who cannot elsewhere receive the attention of the medical faculty. It combines all the advantages of a hospital and a home; for every patient may call what physician he chooses, and receive such attention as he desires." It was opened for public inspection on May 17.—N. Y. Eve. Post, My 20, 1831, citing Courier & Enquirer.

25 Views in the city of New-York and its Environs "is the title of a work, the first number of which has been published in this city, by Messrs. Peabody & Co. It is intended to comprise views of public buildings, private residences, dock-yards, &c. &c. from drawings by J. H. Dakin, to be engraved on steel by Messrs. Bernard & Dick. The letter-press descriptions and explanations are by Mr. Fay. The present number contains, besides an engraved title page, two well executed plates, each containing two views, viz:—New-York, from Governor's Island; Broadway, from the Park; the Bowling Green, and the American Hotel, with one or two of the adjoining houses." —N. Y. Eve. Post, My 25, 1831. The second number of this work was in course of preparation on July 16, and views of the city hall and Brooklyn Navy Yard, engraved by Dick from drawings by Dakin, were intended for insertion.—Ibid., Jl 16, 1831. See also 1831 (supra). Some of the Peabody views are reproduced as Pls. 102-a, 103-a, 103-b, Vol. III, and the series is described in III: 599–603. See, further, N 19. May 25

" "Burnham's Mansion House.— . . . Mr. Burnham, of Bloomingdale, has fitted up the country seat of the late John C. Vandenheuvel, as a house of entertainment. . . . The house is commodious, . . . and the rear grounds and gravelled walk to the Hudson River, skirted on either side by forest trees, &c. make it fascinating . . ."—N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., My 25, 1831; L. M. R. K., III: 952.

30 Books for subscriptions to the stock of the N. Y. & Harlem R. R. (see Ap 25) are opened at the merchants' exchange at 10 a. m. Before 2 p. m. about $1,500,000 had been subscribed.—N. Y. Eve. Post, My 30, 1831. See also ibid., Je 1, 2, 4, 10.

June 3 The "Duelling Ground," where Hamilton fell, at Weehawken, is described. The monument to his memory which formerly stood there (see D 2, 1806) was removed (cf. Ag 3, 1816), "because it was believed to have a bad moral effect, by encouraging others to go and expose their lives on the spot where so distinguished a man had fallen. . . . The fame of that great man requires no memorial of stone— . . . But if a monument is necessary, the Duelling Ground was the last spot, which should have been thought of for its erection. . . ."—N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., Je 3, 1831, citing N. Y. Constell. (sic).

11 An account for improvements at Hell Gate ferry bears this date.—See a comptroller's Ledger of Disbursements, etc. for Public Improvements, etc., 1827–1842, No. 298, in record-room, finance department, hall of records.

24 The Second Reform Bill (cf. Mr 1) is introduced in parliament by Lord John Russell. Though it met with much opposition in the house of commons, it was finally passed on Sept. 22 and sent to the house of lords. The lords, who were the greatest gainers by the existing system of nomination and "rotten boroughs," killed the bill on Oct. 8. This caused great indignation and led to numerous riots. Parliament was prorogued until Dec. 6.—Hazen, Europe since 1815, 435–36. See D 12.

25 The locomotive "De Witt Clinton" was taken from New York to Albany by boat on this day.—See summary at beginning of the year.

July 4 France and the United States sign at Paris a convention for the settlement of claims arising from unlawful seizures, confiscations, etc. The former agrees to pay 25,000,000 francs and the latter 1,500,000 francs, to be distributed to claimants in the two countries.—U. S. Treaties, etc., I: 523–26.

" James Monroe, the ex-president, dies in New York while temporarily residing with his daughter, Mrs. Samuel L. Gouverneur, at the Gouverneur residence, 63 Prince St., cor. of Elm (the later Lafayette) St. On July 7, the body was placed in the Gouverneur vault in the "Marble Cemetery" on Second Ave.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Jl 5, 1831. For full account of the obsequies, see ibid., Jl 7, 1831. For the removal of the remains from the Marble Cemetery, see Jl 2, 1858. John Adams, Jefferson, and Fisher Ames also died on the 4th of July (q.v., 1826).

In 1919, a movement was started to buy the house where he died.—Eve. Sun, O 31, 1919. The effort was again made in 1922.—N. Y. Times, S 8, 1922. Again, in 1924, a "drive" was undertaken to raise a fund for this purpose (ibid., My 19; The Sun, My 17, 1924), but was not successful. In Oct., 1925, the house was removed to a near-by position at No. 95 Crosby St.—N. Y. Times, O 11, 1925.

" A disastrous fire destroys 9 buildings on Charlton St., three on Varick St., and 13 on Van Dam St., including the Baptist Church. —N. Y. Eve. Post, Jl 5, 1831. Another fire, on July 17, in the vicinity of Rivington and Eldridge Sts., destroyed about 20 buildings.—Ibid., Jl 18, 1831.

1831 Jl 11 Hone describes a fête champêtre "given by the Messrs Stevens at the Elysian Fields above Hoboken."—Hone's Diary, I: 32–33.

15 Wm. Niblo informs the public that he has established a coach called the "Lady Clinton" to run to and from his garden and the City Hotel from 7 p. m. to 10:30 p. m. During the day, it will run from Wall St. to Bond St.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Jl 15, 1831. Commenting on this, one of the papers said: "This is by far the handsomest and most commodious Broadway coach yet produced. In general appearance, it is not very different from Brower's Omnibus, but much superior. The doors open at the sides, which allows of a person stepping from the side walk into the carriage, and the body is hung so low, that there is need of but a single step. . . . Mr. Niblo, we believe, was the original proprietor in this city of the sort of carriages which have of late been so extensively introduced among us, under the names of Broadway and Greenwich Stages. As long ago as 1821, he ran a sociable of this kind, which was drawn by four very fine horses. The little respect which his driver paid to the chains then extending across Broadway in front of some of the churches, occasioned considerable conversation, and we believe, gave rise to a prosecution of the proprietor."—Ibid., Jl 20, 1831.

18 This being the day appointed for paying a national tribute of respect to the memory of ex-Pres. Monroe, a salute of 13 guns is fired at daybreak from Governor's Island, followed by the discharge of a single cannon at intervals of half an hour up to sun-set. —N. Y. Eve. Post, Jl 18, 1831.

8 The New Yorkers "friendly to free trade and to a revision and reduction of the present tariff" meet at the merchants' exchange and appoint delegates to the national convention to be held at Philadelphia on Sept. 30.—N. Y. Eve. Post, S 9, 1831. See also ibid., S 27, 1831.

" "S." writes to one of the papers: "The great increase of population in the vicinity of Richmond Hill, as it appears, called for the erection of a new Theatre in that, now, important section of our city. A number of gentlemen accordingly associated themselves together for the purpose of erecting a substantial building, of sufficient capacity for the performance of the regular drama, and the unimproved ground of the Richmond Hill estate, have been chosen for that purpose. It would be difficult to find a situation combining greater advantages, and judging by the plan of improvements, we may expect an edifice, neat, sufficiently spacious, and well calculated to promote the comfort of the audience, as rooms in the Hotel will be fitted up and thrown open to visitors as drawing rooms, &c. . . ."—N. Y. Eve. Post, S 8, 1831. From this it appears that the statement in L. M. R. K., III: 951, to the effect that the mansion itself was "opened as a theatre" is inaccurate, as well as the descrip. of Pl. 55-a, I: 417, which says that "a new wing was added to the rear of the house, . . . and the whole was converted into a theatre." See also N 11, 1831, which definitely describes the theatre as "a new brick edifice." The "Hotel" above referred to was probably the mansion, which, in 1822, had been converted into a public resort.—See L. M. R. K., III: 951, citing Haswell's Reminiscences, 133.

The old jail in the Park is "now nearly transformed into a handsome edifice, for the accommodation of several public municipal offices."—N. Y. Mirror, IX: 73–74. This issue of the Mirror contains a small wood-cut view of the old jail before its transformation, engraved by Anderson from a drawing by Davis. See also descrip. of Pl. 97, III: 589; and L. M. R. K., III: 972. For the earliest view of the reconstructed building, see S 17. 10

Several members of the common council and directors of the Harlem R. R. Co. arrive in Albany to examine the Mohawk & Hudson R. R. before laying rails on Fourth Ave., New York, to determine whether they would interfere with "the ordinary passage of the streets." As tested on "the Albany road," it is found the tracks may be crossed by vehicles of every description. "The travel and transportation, however, . . . must be confined to horse power. The use of the locomotive through business or travelled streets is undoubtedly impracticable."—N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., S 21, 1831, citing the Albany Argus, S 17, 1831. 16

The N. Y. Mirror publishes a small wood-cut view, drawn by Davis and engraved by Anderson, of the transformed jail, renamed the "hall of records." The original drawing was probably the "front view" of the remodelled building which was shown in the Spring exhibition of the Academy (see My 7). The walls are the only remaining part of the old building (see S 10). It is thus described: "It is eighty feet six inches in depth, and sixty-two feet six inches in breadth, and in height forty-eight feet six inches—the portico of each front is supported by six solid marble columns, from the Sing-Sing quarries, manufactured by the convicts at that place. The height of the columns is thirty feet, the diameter at the base four feet eight inches, and at the top three feet four inches. The exterior is to be stuccoed, in imitation of marble, and the roof covered with copper. The apartments are to be thoroughly fire-proof—the floors formed of solid masonwork, and arched ceilings finished in the same manner. The register, county clerk, surrogate, street commissioner, and clerk of the supreme court, together with others, are here to be accommodated in order to secure the valuable records and papers from the possibility of conflagration. The common council have already appropriated twenty-five thousand five hundred dollars for this improvement, and it will require a further appropriation to complete it. Scientific gentlemen and artists pronounce the building the most perfect and chaste piece of architecture in this city. Its style is Grecian, from the model of the temple of Ephesus."—N. Y. Mirror, IX: 81. See also S 10. 17

The Albany Argus publishes an interesting account of a trip (regarding the first trip, see 1831) of certain officials over the Mohawk & Hudson R. R. from Albany to Schenectady, in a train drawn by the "De Witt Clinton." Toasts were offered at dinner in Schenectady after the trip, one of them being: "The Buffalo Railroad—may we soon breakfast in Utica, dine in Rochester, and sup with our friends on Lake Erie."—Brown, Hist. of the First Locomotive, 186. 26

This company was chartered in 1826, with a capital of $600,000, or about $38,000 per mile; and the work was commenced in 1830; double tracking was completed in 1833.—Tanner, Canals and Railroads in the United States, 77. The line from Schenectady to Utica was not completed until about 1836, and continuous connection by rail from New York to Buffalo was not obtained before 1842. The Erie Canal had then been opened 17 years.—See "Pioneer Railway Development in the United States," by W. D. Taylor, in Papers and Discussions of the Am. Soc. of Civil Engineers, XXXVII: 867–68. See also Hist. of the Railroads and Canals of the U. S. of Am., by Henry V. Poor (1860), I: 221.

"Bourne [see N 11, 1830] has published several additional engraved views of New York, which possess much merit. A part of them are well engraved by H. Fossette; the rest by Hatch and Smillie. . . . Among others, the views of the Reservoir in the Bowery, and of the Steamboat wharf in Whitehall street, engraved by these artists, are among the best things of the kind we remember to have seen. There is also a view of New York from Weehawken, drawn by Wall and engraved by Hatch and Smillie. The rest of the drawings are of objects within the city, and are from 28

Oct. 5 The common council passes an ordinance "Creating a Fire and Building Department." Their respective duties are defined.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, I: 71–72.

8 "The block of marble, designed for the statue of Hamilton, has been brought to this city . . . from Leghorn, and it is the intention of Mr. Hughes . . . to commence the statue immediately. . . . The statue when completed is to be placed in the large room of the Merchants' Exchange."—N. Y. Eve. Post, O 8, 1831.

11 The common council approves the map or maps presented by the N. Y. & Harlem R. R. Co. (see Ap 25) showing the route of the proposed road, "from the north side of twenty-third street, through the centre of the 4th avenue to Harlaem river," and "the branch of the same through the centre of 125th street, from the 4th avenue to the Hudson river." Before building the railroad, the consent of the common council shall be obtained.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, I: 79–80. See D 22.

13 A riot occurs at the Park Theatre upon the first American appearance of Joshua Anderson, because of some indiscreet remarks against Americans made by him on his voyage from England. 7 The board of assistant aldermen passes a resolution directing the street committee to report upon the expediency of applying to the legislature for permission to enlarge Union Place (see Ap 23), by taking the gore formed by the intersection of the Bowery, Fourth Ave. and 16th St., and also the gore between 13th and 14th Sts. and The Bowery and Bloomingdale Road.—Proc., Bd. of Assts., I: 233, 243. On Dec. 19, the street committee made a lengthy report; this was ordered printed.—Ibid., 279. This report contains an argument in behalf of the proposed enlargement of Union Place upon a plan shown on a map deposited in the street commissioner's office, or otherwise. It makes reference to the state law of April 11, 1815, which first appropriated Union Place for public purposes, and states:

"Its shape is an irregular polygon, embracing the triangle bounded by the Bowery on the west, Bloomingdale Road on the east, and Fourteenth Street on the south, together with that part of the Fourth Avenue where it merges in the Bloomingdale Road, from Fourteenth to Thirteenth Streets, commencing at the 'Forks,' so called, at Seventeenth Street, where the Bowery and Bloomingdale Road unite, and terminating at Thirteenth Street.

"In its present form, Union Place presents to the eye a shapeless and ill-looking place, devoid of symmetry, and is also of too limited dimensions for any purpose for which hereafter it may be not only expedient but necessary to devote it." Nov. 7

Statistics are given in this report to show the probable future growth of the city, "to prove the importance that it is to the present generation to locate, both for themselves and for those succeeding us, squares and public places now, while they can be obtained at a price comparatively small, and so to locate them both with reference to the present and future importance of parterres, where great streets and avenues, the arteries of our body politic, diverge or unite, and where, now that the ground is unoccupied, the purchase can be effected, which, in the lapse of a few years, when valuable buildings are erected, will be impracticable, on account of the great expense; thus precluding to future generations, the advantages that would necessarily accrue to them from having such squares in various parts of the city, for purposes of military and civic parades, and festivities, and, what is perhaps of more importance, to serve as ventilators to a densely populated city.

"It is worthy of remark, that almost every stranger who visits us, whether from our sister States or from Europe, speaks of the paucity of our Public Squares; and that in proportion to its size, New York contains a smaller number, and those few of comparatively less extent than perhaps any other town of importance." Comparison is made with cities of Europe. The proposed enlargement of Union Place the committee deems desirable as a site for public buildings. They offer a resolution that the enlargement be made as shown in the plan.—Docs., Bd. of Assts., I: 153–61.

The report was adopted by the assistants on Jan. 16, 1832.—Proc., Bd. of Assts., I: 309. On Jan. 30, the committee on lands and places of the board of aldermen, to whom the subject was referred by the board of assistants for concurrence, reported in favour of the plan. They stated that this was the highest land on the island south of 21st St.—Proc., Bd. of Ald., II: 105–6.

St. Mary's Church (Roman Catholic), in Sheriff St. (see My 14, 1826), is destroyed by fire.—N. Y. Eve. Post, N 9, 1831. "With the edifice perished the only church bell then possessed by the Catholics in New York. . . . A new and more advantageous site was selected on the corner of Grand and Ridge streets. . . . The corner-stone of the new church was laid . . . on the 30th of April, 1832, and it was solemnly dedicated on the 9th of June, 1833."—Shea, *Hist. of the Catholic Ch. in the U. Richmond Hill Theatre (see S 8) "is the name of a new Theatre which has been erected in this city, at the corner of Varick and Charlton streets. . . . The Theatre is a new brick edifice, the interior arrangements of which . . . are very commodious, and finished with much elegance and taste. . . ."—N. Y. Eve. Post, N 11, 1831. The theatre was opened on Nov. 14 (q. v.). 11

The Richmond Hill Theatre (see N 11) opens for the first time with the comedy "The Road to Ruin." The poetical address on this occasion was written by Fitz-Greene Halleck and read by Mr. Langton, a member of the stock company.—N. Y. Eve. Post, N 15, 1831; Haswell's Reminiscences, 262. 14

"American Academy of Fine Arts.—A building has been erected on the former site of Dr. Hosack's stable, between Barclay and Vesey-streets, for the reception of the paintings and statuary belonging to the old Academy, and for its exhibitions. For such a building, which is an ornament to the city, the community is indebted to the public spirit of the owner of the property, who has leased it to the Academy on the most liberal terms. It has been constructed under the immediate direction and supervision of Colonel Trumbull, the President of the Institution. . . ." The building and contents are described.—N. Y. Com. Adv., N 14, 1831. It was opened in May (q. v., 15), 1832. "

The third number of Peabody's Views (see My 25) has just been published. "It contains views of the following places: the Elysian Fields, Hoboken; the City Hall, and the contiguous edifices; the Lunatic Asylum at Manhattanville; and the large room in the Exchange."—N. Y. Eve. Post, N 19, 1831. The series is described under Pl. 102-a, III: 599–603. 19

The common council yields a share of the school moneys to "the Orphan Asylum, in Prince street [opened in 1826—see N 20, 1826], under the direction of the New York Catholic Benevolent 28

N 28 change of attitude since April 28, 1825 (q. v.).

29 A plan is on foot for erecting in New York a statue of Washington by Mr. Greenough, a native artist.—N. Y. Eve. Post, N 29, 1831. See also ibid., D 2, 1831.

Dec. — Alderman Samuel Stevens, reporting in behalf of the committee on fire and water of the board of aldermen, urges that the Bronx River be used as the source of New York's water supply. Appended to the report is a letter signed by Cyrus Swan, president of the N. Y. and Sharon Canal Co., asserting that the Croton River could be carried into New York, and that a sufficient supply of water for the present and future wants of the city could not be obtained without it. The common council approved Stevens' report, and a bill embodying his proposal was sent to the legislature in 1832, which, however, failed to enact it into law.—Colden, Memoir Croton Aqueduct, 110–113; Man. Com. Coun. (1854), 218–19. See O 26, 1832.

9 It is resolved to open 42d St. from Third Ave. to the Bloomingdale Road.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, I: 101; Man. Com. Coun. (1857), 530.

10 "Statue of Washington.—A project is on foot, . . . of employing the inimitable sculptor of the Chanting Cherubs [Greenough] at present exhibiting in this city, upon a statue of Washington. . . . It is purposed to raise the necessary sum of five thousand dollars by subscription. The proceeds of the exhibition of the above-mentioned exquisite groupe will also hereafter be devoted to that purpose."—N. Y. Mirror, IX: 183. A cast of Greenough's Washington was exhibited in the 7th exhibition of the National Academy of Design the next year.—Ibid., IX: 382. This was for the city of Washington.—Ibid., X: 23. See, further, D 12 and 14.

12 Lord John Russell introduces, in the house of commons, the third Reform Bill, which was passed on March 23, 1832, and sent to the lords. They showed the same disposition to defeat it as before (see Je 24), until finally William IV gave Earl Grey and Lord Brougham permission to create a sufficient number of peers to insure its passage in the upper house. This threat sufficed, and the bill passed on June 4 and was signed.—Hazen, Europe since 1815, 436–38.

" The board of aldermen requests its committee on arts and sciences "to examine and report upon the propriety of erecting a statue of General George Washington, in the City Hall."—Proc., Bd. of Ald., I: 458. See D 14, 1831; F 20, 1832.

14 "The Proposals for the purchase of a Marble Statue of Washington, to be erected in this city, being highly approved of, the exhibition of Greenough's Group of Chanting Cherubs, now open at the American Academy of the Fine Arts in Barclay-street, will continue a short time longer for the purpose of assisting in raising a fund for this object. A subscription is already open at the Exhibition Room. . . .

"Conditions of subscription for the purpose of a Statue of Washington, to be erected in the city of New-York," require "the work to be sculptured by Horatio Greenough, for the sum of $5000; the whole amount of subscription to be $6000, $1000 being reserved for contingent expenses. . . .

"The order for the work will be forwarded to the artist as soon as the price of the Statue is collected, . . . The total proceeds of the exhibition of the Group of Cherubs . . . will be added to the subscription list. . . ."—N. Y. Com. Adv., D 14, 1831. See, however, F 20, 1832.

16 "Mr. Hornor the artist who executed the view of London for the Colosseum in that city, has issued proposals for publishing a panoramic view of the city of New York and the surrounding country, taken from the highest accessible part of the spire of St. Paul's church in Broadway. It is to be published in two engravings, 36 inches by 20. One of these called the South View, comprises the bay of New York with its islands, and the coast scenery from the heights of Brooklyn to the Jersey shore. It also embraces the south part of the island with Broadway in the centre of the view. The north view embraces that part of the city extending from the Park northwards, and the distant scenery includes the shore of Hoboken on one side, and the Navy Yard and part of Brooklyn on the other. . . ."—N. Y. Eve. Post, D 16, 1831. The former of these views, if drawn, evidently was never engraved; the drawing of the latter is in the author's collection. Cf. the well-known view of Broadway (Pl. 113, Vol. III) and the view of New York (Pl. 120, Vol. III). These are both by Horner.

Dec. 17 Samuel B. Ruggles having acquired by several conveyances, in this year, from the heirs of James Duane, the following described property, now conveys it to five trustees and their successors: 42 lots of land between Third and Fourth Aves., 20th and 21st Sts., being part of the Gramercy farm of the late James Duane, and the boundaries of which are fully defined in the deed. This conveyance requires that the trustees shall enclose not more than 420 ft. of the length of this tract with an iron fence, having ornamental gateways, by May 1, 1833, and lay out the grounds with roads and paths and plant them with trees before May 1, 1834. This park or square shall be maintained at the expense of the owners of the surrounding lots for their particular benefit.—Liber Deeds, CCLXXVIII: 528.

" A Mr. Herbert writes the following reminiscences of New York: "We passed over a part of the city which in my time had been hills, hollows, marshes and rivulets, without having observed anything to awaken in either of us a recollection of what the place was before the surface had been levelled, and the houses erected, until, arriving at the corner of Charlton and Varick streets, we came to an edifice ["Richmond Hill"] utterly dissimilar to any thing around it. It was a wooden building of massive architecture with a lofty portico, supported by Ionic columns, the front walls decorated with pilasters of the same order, and its whole appearance distinguished by that Palladian character of rich though sober ornament which indicated that it had been built about the middle of the last century. . . .

"'If I did not see that house on a flat plain,' said Mr. De Viellecour . . ., 'I should say at once that it was a mansion which I very well remember . . . That house resembled this exactly, but then it was upon a noble hill several hundred feet in height' . . .

"Perceiving it to be a home of public entertainment, I proposed to Mr. De Viellecour that we should enter it. . . . 'Yes,' said Mr. Viellecour, 'this is certainly the house I spoke of' . . .

"I explained to my friend the omnipotence of the Corporation, by which every high hill has been brought low, and every valley exalted, and by which I presumed this house had been brought to a level with its humbler neighbors.

" 'This is wrong,' said the old gentleman; 'these New Yorkers seem to take a pleasure in defacing the monuments of the good old times. . . . This house . . . was built upwards of seventy years ago, by a gallant British officer, who had done good service to his native country, and to this. Here Lord Amherst was entertained, and held his headquarters . . . Here were afterwards successively the quarters of several of our American generals in the beginning of the revolution, and again after the evacuation of the city. Here John Adams lived as Vice-President, during the time that Congress sat in New York; and here Aaron Burr, during the whole of his Vice-Presidency, kept up an elegant hospitality . . . The last considerable man that lived here was Counsellor Benzon, afterwards governor of the Danish islands . . .

" 'There are few old houses,' continued Mr. De Viellecour, 'with the sight of which my youth was familiar, that I find here now. Two or three, however, I still recognise. One of them is the house built by my friend Chief Justice Jay in Broadway, and now occupied as a boarding-house. It is as you know a large square three story house, of hewn stone, as substantially built within as without, durable spacious and commodious . . .

"'. . . No remaining object brings him to my mind so strongly as the square pew in Trinity Church, about the centre of the north side of the north aisle. It is now, like everything else in New York, changed. It is divided into several smaller pews, tho still retaining equally its original form. . . . But, Mr. Herbert, can you tell me what is become of the house of my other old friend, Governor George Clinton, at Greenwich?'

" 'It is still in existence,' I answered, 'although in very great danger of shortly being let down, like the one in which we now are.' [They were still at "Richmond Hill."]

1831 Dec. 17 "'I remember it well—a long, low, venerable, irregular, white, cottage-like brick and wood building, pleasant notwithstanding, with a number of small, low rooms and a very spacious parlor, delightfully situated on a steep bank, some fifty feet above the shore, on which the waves of the Hudson and the sides of the bay dashed and sported. There was a fine orchard, too, and a garden on the north; but I suppose that if not gone, they are going, as they say in Pearl Street.'

"'Is Hamilton's house still standing?'

"'Not that in which he labored as Secretary of the Treasury . . . That was in Wall Street; it has been pulled down, and its site is occupied by the Mechanic's bank. His last favorite residence was the Grange, his country seat at Bloomingdale, which, when I last saw it, remained much as he left it . . .'"—N. Y. Eve. Post, D 17, 1831.

19 The street committee, to whom was referred a memorial of nearly 200 persons who are owners and occupants of property in the vicinity of the "Five Points," praying that part of Cross and Anthony Sts. might be widened, and that the triangle of ground bounded by Little Water, Cross, and Anthony Sts., might be appropriated to public purposes, make a report on the character of this neighbourhood, which "has long been notorious in the annals of the Police Department." They state, among other things: "The name of 'Five Points' has been given to that section of the city where Cross and Orange Streets intersect each other, and from whence Anthony street diverges, making five corners or 'points' —three right and two acute angles. . . ."

The number of houses, their value, and the number of occupants, on the triangular block are stated. The committee offers the resolution: "That Cross street be widened 10 feet from Anthony to Little Water Street, and that Anthony Street be widened 10 feet from Cross to Little Water Street;" also "That the triangle of ground bounded on Little Water, Cross and Anthony Streets, be opened and appropriated as a Public Square—and that the buildings thereon be removed."—Docs., Bd. of Assts., I: 163–68. For view of Five Points (in 1827), see Man. Com. Coun. (1855), 112.

On July 25, 1832, the mayor approved a joint resolution that the street com'r be directed to furnish the com'rs of estimate and assessment with a map of the property "to be taken for opening at Five Points."—Proc., App'd by Mayor, I: 254. "Five Points" is now Paradise Park.—L. M. R. K., III: 971.

22 The common council passes "A Law To authorize the New York and Harlaem Rail Road Company to construct their Railway." This permits the company to lay its rails "along the 4th avenue, from 23d street to the Harlaem River, in conformity with a map now on file in the Register's office [see O 11], and a branch thereof along 125th street, from the 4th avenue to the Hudson River, provided that the width of such double rail road or way shall not exceed twenty-four feet."

If, after construction, it shall appear to the common council that the railways or any part thereof "shall constitute an obstruction or impediment to the future regulation of the city, or to the ordinary use of any street or avenue" (of which the common council shall be the sole judge), the company shall provide a remedy, satisfactory to this board, or, failing to find a remedy, the company, within a month after requisition, shall remove the "railway, obstruction, or impediment," and "replace the street or avenue, in as good condition as it was before the said railway was laid down." Failing to do so, the common council will cause the removal at the company's expense.

The common council reserves the right "of regulating the description of power to be used in propelling carriages on and along said railways, and the speed of the same," and other rights reserved by the city in the company's act of incorporation (see Ap 25).

It is incumbent upon the company "to construct stone arches and bridges for all the cross streets, now or hereafter to be made, (which will be intersected by the embankments or excavations of the said rail road,) and which, in the opinion of the Common Council, the public convenience requires to be arched, or bridged; and also to make such embankments or excavations as (in the opinion of the Common Council) may be required to make the passage over the rail road and embankments, at the intersected cross streets, easy and convenient for all the purposes for which streets and roads are usually put to; and also, that the said Company shall make, at their own like cost and charges, all such drains and sewers as their embankments and excavations may (in the opinion of the Common Council) make necessary, . . ." Dec. 22

The company's powers and privileges granted by this ordinance shall be null and void if the company fails to build its railway within the time allowed by its charter.

There is a prohibition against erecting any building on the strip of land taken for the railway. Railings or fences shall be erected by the company on the outer edges of embankments.

The ordinance shall be binding on the common council, and go into effect when the company shall execute an agreement embodying the terms of this ordinance.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, I: 108–11. See 1832.

31 The residence of Peter G. Stuyvesant (built prior to 1765, q.v., and known as "Petersfield House") was still standing at this time (cf. L. M. R. K., III: 952). The earth around it having been removed to fill up surrounding hollows, it stood high on a pyramid of ground. The north-east corner, which had been undermined, had fallen. The building was oblong, of brick painted yellow, two storeys high, with a hipped or gambrel roof. It had two fronts, one facing west, and the other overlooking the East River. Its location was a little east of where First Ave. crosses 15th St.—N. Y. Mirror, D 31, 1831. The reference to it in the Mirror as the country-seat of Gov. Peter Stuyvesant is of course erroneous; as is also the statement in this Chronology, under Jl, 1768, that this was the house which was destroyed by fire on Oct. 24, 1778 (q.v.). An error is also found in the L. M. R. K., III: 952, where "Petersfield" is said to be the residence of N. W. Stuyvesant. It was Peter G. Stuyvesant's. Likewise, the "Bowery House" is there said to be Peter G. Stuyvesant's; it was N. W. Stuyvesant's. They are correctly designated on the Landmark Map, Pl. 175, Vol. III. See also O 24, 1778, Addenda.

— In this year, the first newspaper in the Welsh language in America, the Cymro America, a semi-monthly, appeared in New York. —North, Newspaper and Periodical Press, 129.

— In this year, Robert L. Stevens conceived the idea of the Stevens Battery. It was to be an iron-armoured ship, 250 ft. long and 28 ft. beam. His brothers, J. C. and E. A. Stevens, assisted in the experiments.—Preble, Hist. of Steam Navigation, 135–36.

— In this year, copies of all the ferry leases still in force were published in the Docs., Bd. of Assts., No. 26, p. 129 et seq.

— In this year, Chas. Fredk. Grim published An essay towards an improved register of deeds. City and county of New-York, to Dec. 31, 1799. The compiler had planned a full and accurate guide to the deeds down to the year 1830, but was frustrated by the officiousness of the register of the county at the time. The arrangement is alphabetical by grantors and grantees named in county deeds, and there is a similar arrangement, on pp. 303–71, for the names found in deeds relating to the county of N. Y. on file in the office of the secretary of state, Albany.

— In this year, it was reported: "It is proposed to unite the contemplated railroad from New-York to Albany (the present N. Y. Cent. & Hudson River R. R.—see Ap 17) with the Harlaem railroad (see D 22, 1831) at the termination of the Fourth avenue."—Williams, N. Y. Ann. Register, 1832. See Ja 14.

— An English traveller in America writes of this city as follows: ". . . A contrast is exhibited in some houses built by the Dutch settlers with bricks brought from Holland, with high, sharp roofs; they are preserved on account of their antiquity. The modern houses have green lattices to the windows, and the rooms on the first floor communicate by folding doors.

"To obtain some idea of the commerce of New York, a stranger should view the Broadway, where the stores of the jewellers and mercers are situated. In Wall Street the bankers have their offices —in South Street the wholesale merchants transact their business—in Pearl Street the dry-good merchants have their warehouses—the East River the yards for ship-building—the North River, where the steam-boats depart.

"The port of New York is crowded with vessels of all descriptions; the sloops which sail on the North River, and those which carry on the coasting trade to the East and South, are very conspicuous. . . . Twelve hundred sloops are employed on the Hudson. They are painted with the most brilliant colors, and their white sails, and variegated flags and streamers, present a beautiful addition to the scenery of the river."

"The ship-yards are in a constant state of activity, and the 1832 merchant vessels sail very fast. Ships of war have been built at the — private yards. A builder contracted with the Columbian government to build four frigates, of sixty-four guns each, in eighteen months; in that time they were completed and fully equipped for sea. . . ."

"There are four manufactories of steam engines, which make annually about thirty engines for boats on the Hudson and Mississipi. Some are ordered for South America. A new era seems commencing in this important instrument of power.

"The conveyance of merchandise to the different warehouses employs two thousand carts. Their passing and repassing produces a continual noise. In the midst of this busy scene, there is one spot sacred from the intrusion of commerce, the Battery, situated at the south of New York, fronting the Bay. A sea wall has been erected, which has much enlarged its former boundary. It is one-third of a mile long, and two hundred yards wide. It has a broad flagged walk in front, and a row of seats extending the whole length of the promenade. Near the city is a grass-plot intersected with walks; on the sides are planted the platanus occidentalis or occidental plane. . . ."

"Among the literary institutions of New York the Athenaeum holds a distinguished rank, on account of the influence it possesses in the general diffusion of knowledge. Rooms are opened in Broadway, where newspapers of the United States and of Europe are taken; also the reviews, journals, and magazines. . . .

"The Historical Society meet at the Institution [but see Ap 19, 1832], in the Park, near the City Hall, where a range of buildings has been granted for the use of various societies. Their library is valuable and extensive . . .

"The Literary and Philosophical Society meet in an adjoining room. . . .

"In New York, the Parthenon, or Gallery of the Fine Arts, is in Broadway, opposite the Park. The Hall is one hundred feet long. . . ."

"A public subscription-library in Nassau Street contains sixteen thousand volumes . . ." (the Society Library—see L. M. R. K., III: 957).

"The Broadway is the fashionable promenade. Between one and three o'clock, it is frequented by the beauty and fashion of the city. . . ."

"The chief disadvantage of New York is the want of good water. From the great value of the ground, there are few open squares left to promote a free circulation of air. . . ."—Travels in the U. S. A. and Canada, by I. Finch (London, 1833), 16–21, 23–28, 34–35.

— In this year, the Downing St. meeting-house of the Society of Friends ("Hicksite"), called the Greenwich Meeting, was built. It was demolished after 1856, when the meeting removed to the north side of 27th St., between Broadway and Sixth Ave.—Cox, Catalogue of Records of the Society of Friends (MS.).

— In this year, a third French Protestant Episcopal Eglise du St. Esprit was erected, on the south-west cor. of Franklin and Church Sts. It was 100 ft. long, 50 ft. wide, and 50 ft. high.—Wittmeyer's Introduction in Vol. I of Collections of the Huguenot Soc. of Am., LXXVIII; Hone's Diary, I: 113. See N 29, 1834.

— About this year, the old parsonage of St. Mark's Church, the gift of Petrus Stuyvesant, was removed by the opening of new streets.—Man. Com. Coun. (1862), 692.

— In this year, the Chatham Theatre (see Ja 18, 1830) was converted into a church for the Second Free Presbyterian Congregation. It was known as the "Chatham Street Chapel."—Greenleaf, 174–75; L. M. R. K., III: 983.

— In this year, the street commissioners published Reports and documents [addressed to the common council] relative to the Stuyvesant meadows, from the year 1825 to 1831, inclusive.

— In this year was published Historic Tales of Olden Time: concerning the Early Settlement and Advancement of New York City and State, by John F. Watson. See also 1846.

— In this year, the following streets were widened: Ann St., between Nassau and William Sts.; Cedar St., between William St. and Broadway; Exchange Place, at William St.; Hanover St., at Exchange Place; William St., from Wall to Pine St.—Man. Com. Coun. (1857), 530.

— In this year, the Tontine Coffee House "was kept as a hotel by Lovejoy & Belcher, and was the scene of several brilliant Masonic dinners. The lodgers, in annual parade, would march from the City Hotel, on Broadway, down to Broad Street; through 1832
Broad to Pearl, and through Pearl Street to Wall and the Coffee- — house—which they thought a long tramp. After the banquet, the march would be resumed along Pearl to Beekman Street, up Beekman to Chatham Street, down Chatham to Broadway and the City Hotel."—Stone, Hist. of N. Y. City (1872), 323, citing Jour. of Com., Jl 25, 1871. See, further, 1834.

In this year, a "serious fire" occurred in the interior of Fraunces — Tavern, after which a new roof was added.—Drowne, A Sketch of Fraunces Tavern (1919), 21; and see Vol. III, pp. 850 and 978. See, further, 1837.

In this year was published in Washington, by order of the house — of representatives, as House Doc. No. 101 (1st sess., 22d cong.), a Report on Steam Carriages, by a select committee of the House of Commons of Gt. Britain: with the minutes of evidence and appendix. To this are added, as part of the published House Doc. No. 101, two other collections of documents: One is entitled Documents in relation to the comparative merits of canals and railroads, submitted by Mr. Howard, of Maryland, and appended by order of the committee on internal improvements of the house of representatives; the other is entitled Documents in relation to the comparative merits of canals and railroads. Published by order of the house of representatives of the 17th day of February, 1832, under the superintendence of the committee on internal improvement.

issued (erroneously dated "1831"). This timely paper is the first 2 railroad periodical published anywhere. It contains a list of nine railroads in the United States "now constructing, . . . several of which are in part finished, and in successful operation.". These are the Baltimore and Ohio (250 miles, 60 miles being completed and in use); Albany and Schenectady (16 miles, 12 miles in use); Charleston and Hamburg (135 miles, 20 miles completed on which the U. S. mail is carried); Mauch Chunk (9 miles, all in use); Quincy, near Boston (6 miles, all in use); Ithaca and Owego (29 miles); Lexington and Ohio (75 miles); Camden and Amboy (50 miles), and Lackawaxen (16 miles). A list of 19 others is given which "are now making, or soon to be commenced," among which is the Harlem road. "Applications will be made to the Legislature of New York, at its ensuing session, for Railroads in different sections of the State, with an aggregate capital of over forty-two millions of dollars." These include one "From Lake Erie, through the Southern tier of counties, to the Hudson River, crossing a ferry, and then down on the East side to the city of New York—Capital $10,000,000." Another is "From New York to Albany, on the East side of the Hudson." Another is "From the city of New York to Manhattanville and Westchester, Putnam and Dutchess counties—Capital $500,000 with privilege to increase."—Rail-Road Jour., I: 3 (in collection of Wm. Barclay Parsons). In the third issue of the Journal (Jan. 14, 1832), Col. J. Stevens, of Hoboken, who was still living, is credited as having been "the first American projector of Railroads," by reason of his views expressed in 1812, and the memorial addressed by him "in 1818 or 1819" to the Legislature of Pennsylvania, recommending "a Railroad from Pittsburg to Philadelphia."—Ibid., I: 37. See also Doc. No. 101, House of Reps., entitled Report on Steam Carriages (1832), explaining their early use in England.

The "dial plate of the City Clock" is illuminated.—N. Y. Eve. 12
Post, Ja 13, 1832. This probably marks the completion of the new public clock in the cupola of the city hall.—See My 2, 1831.

"The Harlaem Rail-road, . . . is now located by an ordinance 14 of the Corporation of this City [see D 22, 1831]. It is to commence at 23d street, and pass through the centre of the 4th, or Broadway avenue, to Harlaem River, at a point about 300 yards above the bridge. The distance is five miles. The contracts are all to be made by the 1st of February, when operations are [to] be commenced. It is intended that this road shall be constructed in the most permanent manner, with double track, and the cost to be about $50,000 per mile. Application will be made to the Legislature at its present session, for permission to continue the Rail-road down to 14th street, and to such other part of the city as the Corporation may permit. There is little doubt but this will prove a profitable investment to the stockholders, even if no other use should be made of it than for passengers. It is however so located as to meet the road now in contemplation from Albany to New York, on the east side of the Hudson river."—Rail-Road Journal, I: 33. See F 1.

1832 Jan. 18 John Stevens recommends that the Harlem Railroad be continued "through Broadway as far as Trinity Church, opposite Wall Street."—See a letter from him in the Rail-Road Journal, I: 52 (pub. Jan. 21).

In the issue of January 28, was published his elaboration of the idea, which appears to be the earliest suggestion for an elevated railroad. It is as follows: "My plan is to erect single posts on each side of the street in immediate contact with the curb stone.—These posts to rise ten or twelve feet high from the level of the pavement, and to be placed at such distances from each other as will ensure stability to the rails fixed thereon, which may be either single or double; I should, however, prefer double ones as being most out of the way. The posts, if thought necessary may be housed, but, I am inclined to believe, the pine from South Carolina or Georgia may be made sufficiently durable by burning and thereby charring the lower ends, and if thought necessary, by boring also. In passing through the lower part of Broadway, it will become necessary to elevate the rails in order to preserve the necessary approach to a level."—Rail-Road Journal, I: 68 (in the collection of William Barclay Parsons). See also descrip. of Pl. 133-a, III: 699.

24 In the course of executive proceedings in the senate on this and the following day, Senator W. L. Marcy of New York used the expression "To the victor belongs the spoils," declaring this to be a principle to which both political parties adhered and were expected to adhere.—Cong. Debates, VIII, part 1, 1325–26; Hone's Diary, II: 94; Alexander, Pol. Hist., State of N. Y., I: 389.

Feb. — The common council directs a committee to buy for $30,500 the gore of land on Sixth Ave., at its junction with Greenwich Lane, as the site for a market. This was the result of resolutions, petitions, and remonstrances, beginning Oct. 5, 1829 (see M. C. C., 1784–1831, XVIII: 275).—Market Book, 558–59. See Nov.

1 The common council authorises the "New York and Harlaem Rail Road Company" to "take possession of the ground owned by the Common Council, over which the line of said rail road is ordered to be constructed, and that they be permitted to use the same during the continuance of the present charter [see Ap 25, 1831], for the purpose of a rail road, and that only; and when they cease so to use it, it shall revert to the Corporation; provided always that said land shall be so used as not to interfere with the use of the cross streets, and on condition, however, that if the said Corporation shall not commence the said railroad, and complete the same within the time limited by their charter, then the privilege hereby granted shall cease and be void."—Proc., App'd by Mayor, I: 128. See F 23.

" In a speech before the U. S. senate on Feb. 2, 3, and 6, Henry Clay defended, with an array of historical data, the system of tariffs which he originated for the protection of American manufacturers.—See Speech in defence of the American System, against the British Colonial System, with an appendix of documents referred to in the Speech Delivered in the U. S. Senate Feby. 2, 3 & 6*th*, 1832 (Wash., 1832).

20 The board of aldermen resolves "That it be referred to the Committee on Arts and Sciences, to report to this Board a plan and the probable cost of a suitable monument to the memory of George Washington, surmounted with a statue of the Father of his Country, to be erected in the Park, in front of this Hall."—Proc., Bd. of Ald., II: 180. The committee reported on April 2 in favour of the proposal, and the board endorsed its recommendation that $200 be appropriated to procure plans, etc. The resolution was sent to the board of assistants for concurrence.—Ibid., II: 333. On April 16, the assistants referred the subject to their committee on arts and sciences.—Proc., Bd. of Asst. Ald., I: 406. For further steps in the efforts to procure a statue of Washington, see Ap 26, 1833.

22 The 100th anniversary of Washington's birth is elaborately celebrated.—N. Y. Eve. Post, F 22 and 23, 1832; Hone's Diary, I: 46.

23 Ground is broken on Murray Hill for the Harlem Railroad. "Yesterday [Feb. 23], pursuant to invitation, several members of the Corporation, visitors, engineers, contractors, &c. proceeded with the officers and directors of the Harlem Rail Road Company from their office in Chamber street in carriages to Murray Hill, on the fourth avenue, where the ceremony of breaking ground was to be performed. On their arrival at the elevated and commanding spot, a number of citizens and persons engaged on the work had already assembled, the rock had been bored and thirteen blasts were exploded, when John Mason, Esq. the Vice President of the company (Campbell P. White, Esq. the President being at his post in Congress) addressed the assembly. . . . This address was received with great cheering, after which the company and guests repaired to Hinton's, at the [Youle's] Shot Tower Hotel, where a cold collation was spread and success to the Harlem Rail Road was drank in sparkling Champaigne, with great hilarity and good feeling. "There are numerous schools of all kinds in the city, in which all classes and colors may be accommodated. . . . There are upwards of 100 churches in the city, of almost every denomination of believers. Of these, some are of a handsome order of architecture. The portico in front of the church of the Ascension, in Canal street, would do honor to any city. It is chaste and classical in the highest degree. . . . Of all the churches of the U. States, Trinity Church is the best endowed. It is restricted by its Charter, to annual revenue of £5,000 sterling a year [sic], and has been obliged to alienate a vast property in the city, in order to keep within bounds . . . Neither is New York behind her neighbors in the number of her literary and scientific institutions. The most ancient of these, it is believed, is the society library, founded in 1754, and containing upwards of 22,000 volumes, the historical society, incorporated in 1809. . . . The Clinton hall association is an incorporation for the promotion of literature, science and the arts . . . There are two academies of the fine arts in New York —the American and the National—the former supported by amateurs, the latter composed of artists, with a few exceptions. In 1827, the returns made, according to law, to the comptroller of the state, made the total of banking capital in New York amount to $15,960,403. Since that period, several new banks have been chartered, adding largely to this sum. The number of insurance companies is upwards of forty."—N. Y. Eve. Post, F 24, 1832. 24

A bust of Clinton by Causici, a pupil of Canova, is on exhibition in the N. Y. Institution.—N. Y. Mirror, IX: 271. 25

Money is appropriated for alterations and a new roof for the old almshouse, for the accommodation of the courts and other offices of the United States, by which part of the building is occupied. In Jan., 1833, a door was cut in the rear or Chambers St. side, leading into a garden; a portico and stoop were then erected, and a cistern was sunk there.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, I: 141, 150, 338, 368, 418. 28

The N. Y. Institution for the Blind (see Ap 21, 1831) opens a school in the almshouse. On May 19, in this year, the school was established at 47 Mercer St.—See First Ann. Rep. of the Institution (1836). See, further, O, 1833. Mar. 15

As usual, each year, the legislature passes an act to enable the common council to raise money by a tax to meet its contingent and other expenses.—Laws of N. Y. (1832), chap. 43. 16

"The public schools of this City are no longer liable to the objection which has hitherto been made against them, namely, that they were not in the proper sense free schools, open to the poorest class in the community, inasmuch as a small sum was required to be paid for every scholar attending. This requiration is now abolished, and the public schools are in every signification of the word free."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Mr 16, 1832. "

The New York Traveller, a weekly, the Franklin Daily Advertiser, the Youth's Companion, a weekly, and the Antiquarian, have recently been established in New York.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Mr 17, 1832. 17

The Walton mansion-house at 326 Pearl St., in Franklin Sq., is thus described: ". . . an antiquated, large three-story edifice, built in the English baronial style of the last century. . . . The entrance-hall is in the centre of the building, with large old-fashioned parlors and drawing-rooms on each side. The portal is in fine keeping with the style of architecture, which then distinguished the English patricians from the plebeians. "

"The portico is supported by two fluted columns, and surrounded with the armorial bearings of the Walton family, richly 1832 Mr 17 carved and ornamented; but like all insignia of nobility on this side the Atlantic, somewhat the worse for wear. . . .

"The Walton-house is . . . in the midst of a most dense population; but, when it was first erected [see 1752], there was but one building on that side of the street, between Peck-slip and the commencement of Cherry-street. The diagonal junction of the latter with Pearl-street, then created an acute point of land, which now constitutes Franklin-square. At the period to which we allude, there were not half-a-dozen buildings in Pearl-street north of Franklin-square. For many years afterwards, that region, comprising at present the populous streets called Roosevelt, James, Oliver, Catharine, and Oak, together with Batavia-lane, was an impassable bog, denominated 'Swamp Meadow,' being almost wholly covered with stagnant water, holding communication with the Collect by a stream which crossed Chatham-street.

"That section, of the city which is still called the 'Swamp,' extending from Beekman to Frankfort-street, was then literally a swamp, being a wet, boggy waste, covered with trees and bushes, where wild birds built their nests and laid their eggs, as they fondly thought, far from the invasions of wicked school-boys, who learned their a, b, abs, somewhere in Broad-street. Here, also, did sportsmen resort for game; here did whole herds of swine, not then employed as city scavengers, earn their own living by rooting up roots and ground-nuts; and here were luscious blackberries, far more plenty than satisfactory reasons for winding Pearl-street round the margin of this quagmire. The natural course of Pearl-street, from Peck-slip, is Cherry-street. But the whole city (modern improvements always excepted) is a labyrinth—a puzzle—a riddle—incomprehensible to philosophers of the present day.

"With these introductory remarks we publish the following description of the Walton-house, politely furnished by Mr. Pintard.

"This family dwelling-house was in its day—indeed still is—a noble specimen of English architecture a century ago. It is a brick edifice, fifty feet in front, and three stories high, built with Holland bricks, relieved by brown stone water-tables, lintels, and jams, with walls as substantial as many modern churches, standing along the south side of Pearl-street, formerly called Queen-street. The superb staircase in its ample hall, with its mahogany handrails and bannisters, by age as dark as ebony, would not disgrace a nobleman's palace. It is the only relic of the kind that probably at this period remains in the city, the appearance of which affords an air of grandeur not to be seen in the lighter staircases of modern buildings.

". . . It was erected in 1754 [error for 1752] by William Walton, Esq. who lived and died a bachelor, and bequeathed by him to his nephew, the late Honorable William Walton [who died June 28, 1806], whose son, advanced in years, now occupies the premises. . . .

"Boss Walton was a merchant. . . . He acquired an ample fortune by an advantageous contract with some Spaniards of St. Augustine, which enabled him to build by far the most expensive, capacious, and elegant house at that period in New York. When the foundation was laid, his fellow citizens all wondered that he should choose a site so far out of town, it being then almost at the eastern extremity of the city, but at the present time it is considerably west of the centre, between the Battery and Corlaers-hook. . . ." Accompanying this description is a wood-cut view of the house, engraved by Mason from a drawing by Davis.—N. Y. Mirror, IX: 289.

21 Frazee's bust of John Jay (see N 4, 1831) is on exhibition at the merchants' exchange.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Mr 21, 1832. See also ibid., Mr 23, 1832.

23 By act of legislature, the Fifteenth Ward is created. The former Ninth Ward is divided, the eastern portion receiving the new name. —Laws of N. Y. (1832), chap. 56.

29 "This city is every day putting forth new claims to the title sometimes bestowed upon it, of the London of America. The great metropolis of England seems to be a constant object of imitation with us. . . . One of the evils of which the sober and religious part of the community of London have had much cause to complain—the violation of the Sabbath by the regular publication of newspapers on that day—has not hitherto been adopted in New York. Henceforward, however, we are to exhibit this as an additional feature of resemblance to 'the common sewer of Paris and Rome.' An evening paper, we are sorry to perceive, announces an intention of issuing regularly hereafter, beginning on the 31st inst. a Sunday newspaper. . . . We should be well pleased if the experiment were to end in showing the persons who have undertaken the matter that there is too much moral sense in our community to allow of such a speculation proving profitable."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Mr 29, 1832.

The legislature passes an act to enlarge and alter Union Place, so as to include within its boundaries all the lands lying between 14th and 17th Sts., Fourth Ave. and Bloomingdale Road. Fourth Ave., by this act, was made to terminate at the northerly line of 17th St.—Laws of N. Y. (1832), chap. 89.

Apr. 5

On April 19, the common council directed that Union Square be "opened" (enlarged as the act requires); and ordered "that the proceedings heretofore commenced for opening Union place, anterior to the passage of the said Act . . . be discontinued."—Proc., App'd by Mayor, I: 170. See, further, Ap 4, 1833.

Referring to the early development of Union Square, the following account was published by Valentine in 1857: ". . . A few years since, and this now delightful spot was termed 'The Forks,' where the Bowery and the Bloomingdale road united. It then presented to the eye of the tourist and pedestrian a shapeless and ill-looking collection of lots, where garden sauce flourished—devoid of symmetry, and around which were reared a miserable group of shanties. The Manhattan Bank, at that period, owned a good part of the property; and when the yellow fever ravaged the lower part of the city in 1822, a temporary banking house was erected until the plague was stayed. In the latter part of the year 1831, the Common Council, on the petition of owners of property in the vicinity, resolved to have Union Place enlarged to its present space —forming an irregular parallelogram, something after the plan of the Rue De la Paix and the Place Vendome, Paris. In the report on this subject, we find the committee making use of almost similar arguments as those recently urged in favor of the Central Park. After noticing the gradual increase in the population of the city, and its favorable location for commercial greatness at the confluence of two magnificent rivers the report states:—

" 'That it is of the utmost importance to the present generation to locate, both for themselves and for those succeeding us, squares and public squares, now, while they can be obtained at a price comparatively small, . . .' The report in favor of the improvement was adopted, and the map of the city altered to conform thereto; but it was not until several years afterwards that the present 'palatial edifices,' which now adorn 'the place,' were erected. The Manhattan Bank put their lots in the market about 1845, and in 1847–8 the mansions to the left and centre of our sketch were finished and ready for occupation. The large building, the Everett House, is of more recent date, and stands partly on lots purchased of Dr. William B. Moffat, whose house adjoins it. The other buildings on the upper side of the place were erected, and are owned by Messrs. Miller, Henry Young, and the late Daniel Parish. . . .

". . . this improvement would perhaps have been delayed until it was too late, but for the energy and foresight of the majority of the committee of the then Board of Councilmen, whose names are appended to the report which lies before us—William H. Holly and James R. Whiting . . . Both gentlemen may be satisfied to go down to posterity as the founders of the plan of the Union Place—for, strictly speaking, the term Square is a misnomer."—Man. Com. Coun. (1857), 480–81. See also descrip. of Pl. 135, III: 702.

The legislature amends the act of April 25, 1831 (q.v.), which incorporated the N. Y. and Harlem R. R. Co., by authorising the president and directors, with the permission of the common council, "to extend their rail-road along the Fourth Avenue [southward] to Fourteenth-street, in the said city, and through such other streets in the said city as the mayor, aldermen and commonalty of said city may from time to time permit." After obtaining the consent of the common council, the company "shall not construct any rail-way in any street . . . below Prince-street, until they have completed four miles of their road above said street." Other provisions of this act are:

"No carriage or vehicle shall be drawn or propelled by any 1832 Apr. 6 other than horse power through any street . . . south of Fourteenth-street." Every carriage on this railroad shall have suitable "safeguards, projecting in a descending direction to near the surface of the rails in front of each forward wheel, in such manner as to insure the greatest safety against accidents." The speed limit for vehicles below 14th St. is fixed at five miles an hour.—Laws of N. Y. (1832), chap. 93. See My 1 and 10.

9 By concurrent resolution, the senate and assembly agree to furnish the N. Y. Society Library, and the N. Y. Law Institute, as well as each incorporated athenaeum in the state and the Albany Institute, with copies of the documents, reports, and journals of each house.—Laws of N. Y. (1832), 578.

10 The legislature introduces into the plan of the city a street 75 ft. wide running from 14th St. north to 30th St., nearly mid-way between Third and Fourth Aves. It is not named in the act.—Laws of N. Y. (1832), chap. 101. The section below 20th St. was named Irving Place on March 7, 1833 (q.v.). For the section above Gramercy Park (Lexington Ave.), see L. M. R. K., III: 1004.

14 In 1827, a memorial was presented to congress by about 75 prominent individuals and companies praying that an appropriation might be made for the construction of a ship canal through Hallet's Point, in order to avoid the dangers of "Hurl Gate." No appropriation was made, but, on April 15, 1828, a state act was passed incorporating the Hallets-Cove Railway. This act is now (April 14, 1832) amended to permit the company to construct the "Hurl-gate Canal." Later in the year, a report describing the proposed canal and its advantages, accompanied by an estimate showing that it could be constructed for about $50,000, was prepared by De Witt Clinton, C. E. See a pamphlet with map and key, entitled Hurlgate and the proposed Canal (N. Y., 1832).

16 The legislature provides for the appointment and government, of 14 pilots to conduct vessels through Hell Gate.—Laws of N. Y. (1832), chap. 156.

17 The legislature incorporates the New York and Albany Railroad Co. It gives it power "to construct a single, double or treble rail-road or way betwixt the cities of New-York and Albany, commencing on the island of New-York where the Fourth avenue terminates at the Harlaem river, and passing through the counties of Westchester, Putnam, Dutchess, Columbia and Rensselaer, and ending at some point on the said river Hudson opposite or near the city of Albany, with power to continue and extend the same to the city of Troy" and certain other localities. The corporation shall commence building the road within three years from this date, and shall spend at least $200,000 upon it, and, within ten years, shall put the road in operation, or nullify its charter.—Laws of N. Y. (1832), chap. 162; ibid. (1833), chap. 275. On May 9, 1836 (q.v.), the time was extended two years in which to commence construction; and, again, on May 12, 1837 (q.v.), two years more.

19 The N. Y. Hist. Soc. takes possession of the third floor of the new building erected by Peter Remsen, called the "Remsen Building," at the south-west cor. of Broadway and Chambers St. This was after a 16-years' tenancy of rooms in the N. Y. Institution, under a gratuitous lease from the city.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ap 18 and 19, 1832; Kelby, The N. Y. Hist. Soc. 1804–1904 (1905), 40, with view of the building opp. p. 50; N. Y. H. S. Coll. (1841); N. Y. H. S. Proc. (1848), 21. Hone mentions the formal opening, at which he presided as vice-president, as of "April 1." This is evidently a typographical error for 19. He states that the society's library-room is "over the one occupied by the Athenæum."—Hone's Diary, I: 51–52. See S 1, 1837.

24 The legislature incorporates the N. Y. and Erie Railroad Co., authorising it "to lay a single, double, or triple track from the city of New-York to Lake Erie, to transport property or persons by the power of steam, or of animals, or by any other power," or combination of them. The capital stock is limited to $10,000,000.—Laws of N. Y. (1832), chap. 224; amended by ibid. (1833), chap. 182; ibid. (1834), chap. 311; ibid. (1835), chap. 247; ibid. (1844), chap. 118.

The work of constructing the road began on May 23, 1834, the survey of the whole route from Piermont on the Hudson to Dunkirk on Lake Erie, covering a distance of 483 miles (subsequently reduced to 446). On Sept. 23, 1841, the first section of 46 miles, from Piermont on the Hudson to Goshen, was put into operation. On Jan. 23, 1843, the road was opened to Middletown; Apr. on Jan. 6, 1848, to Port Jervis; Dec. 28, 1848, to Binghampton; 24 Oct. 10, 1849, to Elmira; Sept. 3, 1850, to Hornellsville; and on April 22, 1851 (q.v.), the road was finally completed and opened to Dunkirk. The Erie was "the first trunk-line railroad to enter the city and to exert an appreciable influence on its commerce and prosperity."—Wilson, Mem. Hist., III: 415–18; N. Y. Tribune, April 25, 1851. Connection with Manhattan Island was early made by ferry.

The legislature incorporates the "Eastern Dispensary of the 25 City of New York."—Laws of N. Y. (1832), chap. 252. It was organized for work in June, 1834. Situated at 275 Division St. (see N. Y. As It Is, 1839, p. 64), it provided medical and surgical relief for the district bounded by the East River, E. 14th St., First Ave., Allen St., and Pike St. In 1834, it was described as situated at the corner of Essex Market Place.—Picture of N. Y. in 1846, 46. In 1882, it was described as situated in the Essex Market building, at the n. e. cor. of Grand and Essex Sts.—Lossing, Hist. of N. Y. City (1884), II: 455–56. For a review of the various city dispensaries as they existed in later years, see Man. Com. Coun. (1861), 372–89.

"The New-York City Marble Cemetery" is incorporated. 26 This cemetery is described in the act as "the cemetery recently constructed in the interior of the block formed by the First and Second Avenues, and Second and Third-streets in the eleventh ward."—Laws of N. Y. (1832), chap. 319. It therefore is situated in the block opposite that still occupied by "The New-York Marble Cemetery" (see F 4, 1831), and is east of Second Ave.—L. M. R. K., III: 927. The present city map shows it on the north side of 2d St. On March 13, 1843, the act of incorporation of this date was amended by an act permitting the trustees to purchase and add to the cemetery a gore of land fronting on 2d St. —Laws of N. Y. (1843), chap. 46.

The legislature amends the charter of the College of Pharmacy " so as to prohibit anyone from practicing the business of an apothecary in this city without attaining certain educational qualifications.—Laws of N. Y. (1832), chap. 326.

A long memorial, recently presented to the common council, May against granting a permit to the N. Y. & Harlem R. R. to extend 1 its lines through the streets is published in full in the N. Y. Com. Adv., My 1, 1832. See My 10.

About two-thirds of the new brick building of Messrs. Phelps 4 & Peck, at the corner of Fulton and Cliff Sts., falls to the ground, killing nine and injuring several others. Among the dead was Josiah Stokes, the junior member of the firm.—N. Y. Eve. Post, My 5–8, 1832. There is a rare lithograph depicting this accident, a copy of which is in the author's collection.

The common council passes an ordinance which permits the 10 N. Y. & Harlaem Railroad Co. to "extend their rails southerly, from the north line of 23d street, to Prince street," subject to the same conditions as heretofore imposed upon the company in respect to that part of the road above 23d St. The company "may forthwith proceed to lay down a single track through the 4th avenue, south of 23d street, Union Place, Bloomingdale road and Broadway, and another single track through the Bowery, both as far south as Prince street; and after two months use of a single track upon the whole distance, south of 23d street, on both Broadway and the Bowery, with convenient turnings at the several terminations as above mentioned, they may, unless otherwise directed by the Common Council, lay down a second track on each of the above mentioned routes." The track is to be maintained by the company, subject to the regulations of the common council, which may also impose the obligation to remove them.

The rails "shall be laid down in such manner, and in such parts of the said streets, as shall be approved by the Street Commissioner, so as to cause no impediment to the common and ordinary use of the streets for all other purposes." The "watercourses of the streets" shall be left free and unobstructed, and the company "shall pave the streets in and about the rails in a satisfactory and permanent manner, and keep the width of twenty feet of said paving, including the rails, in good repair at all times, during the continuance of their use thereof." The company shall cause the pavement of the streets to be repaired in case the common council deems it necessary to require that the rails be taken up.

The company is required to "have their single rail tracks above mentioned completed on or before the 1st day of May, 1834;"

1832 May 10 and is authorised "to charge and receive such tolls, rates, or fare, for the carrying of passengers or effects upon the said rail tracks, south of 23d street, as the said Common Council may prescribe."

To make the ordinance binding upon the common council, the company is required to execute an agreement, under seal, promising to abide by the terms of the ordinance.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, I: 207–9. See S 1.

15 The Acad. of the Fine Arts "has just been opened at the new rooms in Barclay street" (see N 14, 1831). Among many portraits shown is "a noble full length of Colonel Varick, by Henry Inman."—Hone's Diary, I: 53.

21 The first Democratic national convention assembles at Baltimore and nominates Gen. Jackson and Martin Van Buren. It adopts the two-thirds and unit rules.—McMaster, Hist. of the People of the U. S., VI: 143–44.

22 One of the new fire hydrants, in Wall St., is tested by the chief engineer of the fire department. "The head of water is fully equal to the force of a fire engine; the stream rose as high as the roofs of the highest houses in Wall street, and could be turned in any direction by means of a pipe similar to those of a fire engine."—N. Y. Eve. Post, My 23, 1832.

30 A public reception and dinner are tendered to Washington Irving at the City Hotel by his friends and fellow-townsmen on his return from Europe after an absence of 17 years. For full report of the event, the speeches, etc., see N. Y. Eve. Post, Je 2, 1832; N. Y. Mirror, IX: 386–87, 390; Life and Letters of Washington Irving, by P. M. Irving, II: 488–91; Hone's Diary, I: 53, 54–55. The original letter to Irving, dated May 23, from a number of his "townsmen," conveying to him this mark of their favour, is in the Seligman collection, in the N. Y. P. L. There is a lithographic view of the Irving dinner in the Eno collection, N. Y. P. L.

31 Louis McLane, secretary of the treasury, writes to the chairman of the committee on commerce of the house of representatives, answering the latter's inquiries regarding the New York custom-house. He says "that the building [at the n. e. cor. of Wall and Nassau Sts.—see L. M. R. K., III: 975], being found insufficient, and being deemed unsafe, authority has been given for renting other buildings for the temporary use of the custom-house. The removal is to take place at the beginning of the ensuing month of June; after which time the present buildings will be unoccupied. . . .

"It is ascertained that the present custom-house, in consequence of its having been formed by uniting two or more private houses, cannot, with safety, be altered so as to adapt it to the better transaction of business; and that, . . ., the site is too small to admit of the buildings necessary. . . ."

He recommends "that immediate provision be made for the erection of a new custom-house, and for the purchase of the requisite ground, and that authority be given to dispose of the present building, . . .

"The cost of an edifice, suitable to a port at which about two-thirds of the whole import trade of the United States is carried on, will be considerable; but, for . . . the present year, it is believed . . . two hundred thousand dollars will be sufficient."

On June 4, McLane transmitted to the same representative an extract from a letter of June 2, which he had received from S. Swartwout, the collector at New York, enclosing a petition from the principal merchants of New York for a new custom-house. Swartwout expressed the need of an appropriation of about $300,000. He said: "The buildings which we have leased for two years, are very dark, and the ceilings so low, as to afford but little chance for ventilation. . . ." The site of the present building he considers the most suitable, and it is desirable to commence building as soon as possible after the appropriation is obtained. "Two lots, with the buildings thereon, belong to Government. Two dwellings, east of our building, must be purchased, and four in the rear of us, in order to procure area sufficient for a building large enough to accommodate the present and prospective trade of this place." He estimates the probable cost of acquiring these, of pulling down the buildings, etc.—House Ex. Docs., Vol. VI, Doc. No. 256, 22d cong., 1st sess., 1832. See Jl 13.

June 8 About 1,000 people "who feel that an arrangement of the Tariff Question during the present session of Congress, on principles of mutual concession and embracing such modifications as may allay discontent and restore harmony to the different sections of the country, is absolutely necessary for the preservation of Peace and Union," meet in the old almshouse in the rear of the city hall and adopt resolutions favouring a revision of the tariff. Peter A. Jay makes the principal address. Several high tariff enthusiasts unsuccessfully attempt to break up the meeting.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Je 8, 9 and 11, 1932; Hone's Diary, I: 55. A pro-tariff meeting was held in the Park on June 11.—Ibid., Je 12, 1832. June 8

The mayor approves a resolution of the aldermen and assistants to carry into effect the resolution of the common council of March 23, 1829 (q.v.), which ordered that the freedom of the city be presented to Martin Van Buren.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, I: 221. But see Jl 5. "

17 The city is visited by a scourge of cholera. R. K. Wharton, an Englishman who was studying art here, gives this description: "More terrible than the landing of the fierce Dane—the dreaded Cholera has crossed the Atlantic and the Journals of today contain fearful accounts of its first ravages in Canada. The consternation of the city is universal—Wall street and the Exchange are crowded with eager groups waiting for the latest intelligence—the Courier and Enquirer has issued an extra with every detail—the event, in short, appears to engross the whole attention of the public—I have never seen so general and wide-spread an excitement."—Wharton's Diary (MS.), in N. Y. P. L. See also Hone's Diary, I: 56–57, 58; N. Y. Eve. Post, Je 18, 1832. See, further, Je 22, Jl 1, Ag 11, and O, 1832; and descrip. of Pl. 102-a, III: 601.

20 The mayor informs the common council that the U. S. senate has passed a law "ceding to John Jacob Astor Fort Gansevoort." The communication is referred to the law committee and counsel of the board, "with power to act."—Proc., App'd by Mayor, I: 228.

22 The legislature passes an act "for the preservation of the Public Health." It relates to quarantine regulations, with particular reference to cholera.—Laws of N. Y. (1832), chap. 333.

July — The famous Perkins Institution has its inception when Dr. Samuel Gridley Howe begins to teach a few blind children at his father's house in Pleasant St., Boston. In 1833, the Massachusetts legislature contributed to the work, and Col. Thos. H. Perkins, a prominent Bostonian, presented his mansion and grounds in Pearl St. for the school. This house was later sold, and the institution moved to a large building in South Boston; it was thenceforth known as the "Perkins Institution and Massachusetts Asylum for the Blind." Dr. Howe was the director. He opened a printing-office and organized a fund for printing for the blind—the first done in America. In 1837, he brought the famous blind deaf-mute, Laura Bridgman, to the school. The institution became one of the intellectual centres of American philanthropy.—Encyclop. Brit., XIII: 837.

1 The Asiatic or malignant cholera makes its appearance in Cherry St., near James St. It continued until the last of October, a period of nearly four months. Its principal ravages, however, were in July and August. There were 3,499 deaths from the disease. For the daily record of interments reported by the city inspector, see N. Y. As It Is, In 1833, 164. See also N. Y. Eve. Post, Jl 1, 1832 et seq.

Myndert Van Schaick, later a treasurer of the board of health, writing of the cholera, said: ". . . The numerous temporary hospitals in the City and its suburbs—perhaps as far out as 12th or 14th Sts, and the new Hall of Records [the old provost jail], used as a hospital, in the Park, were suffering from a deficiency of water. There was none for our streets, little for the extinguishment of fires except from the rivers—and scarcely any that was suitable for domestic use, save a very small amount from tea-water carriers." It was this condition that eventually brought about the establishment of the Croton Aqueduct.—Croton Aqueduct Report (1862), 125. This and previous epidemics hastened the settlement of the northern part of Manhattan Island where citizens sought refuge from the plague.—Report of the city inspector, in Docs., Bd. of Assts. (1832), Doc. No. 43, p. 261. See, further, Ag 11. The cholera again visited New York in 1834, 1849, and 1855.—Man. Com. Coun. (1858), 632.

2 The freedom of the city "in a gold box" is conferred upon Commodore Daniel T. Patterson at the city hall. For an account of the ceremony, with editorial comment, see Com. Adv., Jl 3; N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., Jl 3, 1832. This was due to action of the common council on June 27, when informed of the commodore's presence in the city, on his way to take command of the naval forces of the U. S. in the Mediterranean. The freedom is conferred "in token of his distinguished gallantry during the late 1832 July 2 war with Great Britain, and especially for the conspicuous part he bore in the glorious achievement at New Orleans."—Proc., App'd by Mayor, I: 256; N. Y. H. S. Coll. (1885), 425. For an historical account and the meaning of the freedom of the city, see The Charter of the City of N. Y., with Notes by Chancellor Kent (1836), 152. See also Je 27, 1702.

3 "Mr. Dunlap has opened two galleries for the display of his numerous paintings at the Picturesque Museum, corner of Broadway and Anthony street."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Jl 3, 1832.

4 "My Country, 'tis of Thee," having been composed in February by Samuel Francis Smith, a divinity student at Andover, is sung for the first time, at the Park Street Church, Boston.—Kobbé, Famous Am. Songs, 145–51.

" "The alarm about the cholera has prevented all the usual jollification under the public authority. There are no booths in Broadway, the parade which was ordered has been countermanded, no corporation dinner, and no ringing of bells. . . ."—Hone's Diary, I: 57–58.

5 The "Merchants Exchange Telegraph" sends word from Staten Island that the packet ship "New York" has arrived with Hon. Martin Van Buren on board.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Jl 5. Coming to the city in the evening, he declines a public reception (as proposed on Je 8, q.v.) as a festivity incompatible with the prevailing cholera.—Ibid., Jl 6, 1832. His "freedom" was not conferred until Nov. 21 (q.v.).

10 Pres. Jackson vetoes a bill to recharter the U. S. Bank, denouncing the institution as a monopoly, "unauthorized by the Constitution, subversive of the rights of the States, and dangerous to the liberties of the people."—Messages and Papers of the Presidents, II: 576–91.

This and other acts of Jackson served as a basis for the humorous "Major Downing's Letters," which first appeared in the N. Y. Daily Advertiser, in 1833–4. Subsequently they appeared in book form in several editions. The style of these letters, famous at the time, is indicated by the following extract. In one of them, under date of Sept. 10, 1833, the writer represents himself as commissioned by "the Gineral" (Jackson) to "look into Squire Biddle's Bank." He reports: The squire "was glad to see me, and was plaguy good-natured. He said he was sorry that 'the Government' continued to feel kinder wrathy agin the Bank; 'but,' says he, 'Major, we are ready for them.' Jest then our old Quaker friend come in—the same old gentleman, you remember, who came to see us one mornin and call'd you 'friend Andrew,' and kept his hat on all the while. He was as spunky as thunder; and when a Quaker gits his dander up, it's like a norwester. He said he was sore troubled, and that he was afraid that evil disposed folks were busy, and trying to inger you. He said he had been in trade over 40 years, and knew all about it, and Banks too; and that just so sure as his friend Andrew didn't put a stop to this war agin the United States Bank, it would bring more injury on the country than universal nullification. I tell'd him that you didn't want to injure nobody—that all you wanted was to git hold of the right eend of every thing, and then hold on like a snappin turtle. And then we sat down, and he talk'd for more than three hours, and till he couldn't talk no more. He is a rale friend of ourn; and the last thing he said was, he hoped you wouldn't let any one deceive you about the Bank, for though the change might give a few persons some cream, all the rest would git nothin but skim milk and bonny clabber. I am glad I met him, for he telled me more than I had any ide on; and the more I see, the more sartin I am that Banks and Trade and money matters are pretty considerable ticklish things; and when you think a thing must be jest so, it comes out jest tother way."—Major Downing's Letters (6th ed., 1834), 74–76. See also Ap 8, 1831.

13 An act of congress, making appropriations for a custom-house in the city of New York (see My 31), and for other purposes, provides that ". . . the Secretary of the Treasury shall be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed, with the approbation of the President of the United States, to purchase a site, and to cause a building to be constructed thereon to be used as a custom-house in the port of New York; and that the sum of two hundred thousand dollars be, and the same is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be applied to the purposes aforesaid."—U. S. Statues at Large, IV: 574. This was the first definite action leading to the erection of the building which is now the Sub-Treasury, at the north-east corner of Wall and Nassau Sts. For a brief history of the site, see description of Pl. 166, III: 848; also "City Hall (second)," in L. M. R. K., III: 973. See, further, S 16, 1833. July 13

The chief engineer has been authorised "to procure horses for the fire-department." Engines in London are so drawn. "The present mode has demoralized very many boys, who make a frolic of a fire, acquire habits of idleness and vice, and raise false alarms."—N. Y. Com. Adv., Jl 24, 1832. 24

"A proposition has been made by John L. Sullivan and L. Disbrow to supply the city with Rock water, procured from the earth by boring. Mr. Disbrow has obtained water in several places on the island by boring in earth and in rock. The greatest depth of the perforations in earth is one hundred feet, and the water is stated by Mr. Sullivan to be better than that obtained from the wells, though it cannot be expected always to remain so pure as at present. In rock the perforations have been carried much deeper, and have produced pure soft water. In Bleecker street near Broadway, Mr. Disbrow has bored 448 feet, of which 400 are in solid rock. The water obtained, as we understand from those who have visited the place, is of the finest quality; quite pure and as soft as rain water. A steam engine, of a six horse power, is employed to raise the water from this perforation into the depths of the earth, and brings up 44,000 gallons in 24 hours. 27

"The plan of Messrs. Sullivan and Disbrow proposes a single deep perforation for each ward, to be managed by a company in each, and incorporated for that purpose. The plan, from the experiment in Bleecker street, appears to be feasible."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Jl 27, 1832.

This is observed as a day of fasting, humiliation, and prayer on account of the cholera epidemic.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ag 2, 1832. Aug. 3

"The inhabitants and the authorities of the towns on the Eastern seaboard have rendered themselves contemptible in the eyes of the whole world, by the unfeeling and rude manner in which they have treated passengers in the steamboats from this city, that have dared, since the pestilence broke out here, to approach within gun shot of any of the usual landing places on the rivers over which they had jurisdiction. In some instances they have been driven off and refused a landing at all—in others they have been compelled to go ashore a long distance below the towns and travel back to the village with their baggage, through rye and corn fields, until they could reach the public road leading into the country. . . ."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ag 3, 1832. "

"The appearance which New York presents to one who views it [at] the present time from the midst of the Hudson or from the opposite shore of New Jersey, a spectacle scarce less unusual and solemn than to one who visits what were two months since its crowded and noisy places of business. The number of persons who have left the city is estimated at upwards of one hundred thousand people, including persons of all classes and occupations. So many domestic fires have been put out, and the furnaces of so many manufactories have been extinguished, that the dense cloud of smoke which always lay over the city, inclining in the direction of the wind, is now so thin as often to be scarcely discernible, and the buildings of the great metropolis appear with unusual clearness and distinctness. On a fair afternoon, the corners of the houses, their eaves and roofs appear so sharply defined as if the spectator stood close by their side, and from the walks at Hoboken you may count the dormer windows in any given block of buildings. The various colours of the edifices appear also with an astonishing vividness, while the usual murmer from the streets is scarcely heard."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ag 6, 1832. 6

On or about this day, William Dunlap wrote to J. Fenimore Cooper, who is in France: "The cholera [see Jl 1] appears to be leaving us and we begin to be reconciled to being killed. The city has been very much deserted and a great many are yet absent and hundreds of shops are shut up. . . . 11

"The Cholera, . . . having spread over all the Country and treated other Cities pretty much as it treats us, our streets are assuming the usual appearance of dollar hunting."—Correspondence of James Fenimore Cooper, ed. by his grandson (1922), I: 277. See also a letter from Wm. Jay to Cooper, dated Dec. 11, regarding the passing of the disease through the country.—Ibid., I: 303. See, further, Oct.

"The Board of Health have at length announced that the city 22

1832 Aug. 22 may be safely visited by strangers, and that those who have left it from fear of the disease may return without danger. The ravages of the epidemic have been so far stayed, that this measure has been expected for some days past. . . . Our business streets are again beginning to be thronged, the shutters of shops and ware-houses are thrown open, the rattle of drays and wagons is again heard, private carriages make their appearance in the streets, Broadway resumes from day to day somewhat of its former appearance, and a general air of cheerfulness and confidence has succeeded the aspect of gloom which lately prevailed. . . ."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ag 22, 1832. See also ibid., S 3, 1832.

29 Hone mentions riding (from Albany) to Schenectady on the "Mohawk and Hudson" railroad (see Ja 2).—Hone's Diary, I: 59. This was the "De Witt Clinton" engine and train.—See 1831.

Sept. 1 Workmen are laying the iron rails of the Harlem Railroad on that part of the road below 14th Street. The company intends "to have one mile of it compleated and in use by the 1st of October. The grading on the other parts of the road is progressing rapidly, and will be completed in time to receive the rails early next spring."—Rail-Road Journal, I: 561. See N 10.

The original construction work was begun on the Bowery by first removing the cobble stone pavement, when a trench about 18 in. wide and the same in depth was excavated. At intervals of about 8 ft., holes were dug to a depth of 3 ft., in which were laid stone foundations upon which rested the ends of granite stringers from 12 to 18 in. square, upon which flat rails one inch thick were laid. These were secured by means of bolts passing through holes drilled in the granite stringers, and were held in place by nuts on the under side of the stringer. A channel three-fourths of an inch deep was cut in the granite stringer on the inside of the rail to admit the flange of the wheel which was one and a quarter inches deep. The line was double track from Prince St. to 15th St. As soon as the tracks were laid to 14th Street the cars, some of which were built by the company while others were of English make, were put in operation. Owing to the rigid construction of the road-bed, the cars made a great deal of noise, which would be heard two or three blocks from the Bowery. This construction soon proved unsuitable owing to its rigidity. The blocks were taken up, and stringers of Georgia pine substituted, the granite stringers being sold to the City for gutter stones.—From data supplied by the company.

13 "The fifth number of Views of New York, with illustrations, by T. S. Fay, has been issued by Peabody and Co. It contains two neatly engraved views—one of Broad street, with the Custom House in the distance, and the other of Holt's new hotel at the corner of Fulton and Water-streets. Besides these, there is a map of the city, colored to show the boundaries of the different wards."—N. Y. Eve. Post, S 13, 1832. This series of views is described under Pl. 102-a, III: 599–603.

22 "A Citizen" writes to one of the papers that "another street of equal beauty and convenience to the citizens with that of Broadway" is much needed. He suggests a "plan of continuing the third avenue nearly in a direct line down to the City Hall. That is, start from the north corner of Bond street, cutting off the end of Bleecker street, passing south-easterly by St. Patrick's Cathedral, directly to the corner of Chamber street, and there unite with Chatham street, lowering the street where it crosses Orange street, and elevating it about the Five Points and where it crosses Pearl street.

"Opening such a street from the City Hall to the third avenue, of a width equal to Broadway, nearly on an inclined plane from Chatham street to the Bowery, it would form in a short time one of the most noble streets in the world, reaching in almost a direct line from the City Hall to Harlaem. Nassau street may also be improved, so as to make it very direct down to Wall street, and from thence down Broad street to the East river. . . ."—N. Y. Eve. Post, S 22, 1832.

25 Trinity vestry, being informed of a new project (see 1813) to extend Albany St. through the churchyard, adopts a resolution disapproving of "the opening of any street through the said Cemetery," and appoints a committee to remonstrate against it.—Dix, Hist. of Trinity Church, IV: 157, citing the church Records, III: 78. 26 The mayor approves a joint resolution that $1,000 be appropriated "toward an examination upon this island and elsewhere, for the means of bringing an ample supply of pure water into the City of New York, under the direction of the Joint Committee on Fire and Water."—Proc., App'd by Mayor, I: 129–32, 285–86. This was the beginning of the proceedings to build the Croton aqueduct, the complete account of which, up to 1862, was told by Myndert Van Schaick, one of the Croton board, to accompany the report of the celebration held on the completion of the new reservoir in Central Park, Aug. 19, 1862. See, further, D 22, 1832.

" "The Old Pearl Street House in this city has been established for twenty-five years, and is extensively known as the resort of merchants. . . . During the present summer it has been greatly extended by the erection of spacious additional buildings. . . . Its dimensions are 53 feet on Pearl, and 75 on Water street, and 142 feet from street to street. This area is covered with four story buildings, except a small court yard and a two story edifice on the roof of which is a flower garden. It is said to be the largest commercial boarding house in the United States . . . not being intended for the accommodation of families or ladies. . . . It is now kept by Messrs. Brown, of Clinton Co., and Mahon, late commander of the steamboat New Philadelphia. . . ."—Eve. Post, O 26, 1832.

10 "Two beautiful cars were placed on the Rail-way [N. Y. & Harlem R. R.] in the Bowery last week. On Saturday [Nov. 10] we saw them, each containing from 25 to 30 passengers carried off in fine style, with two horses to the car, and drawn with great apparent ease."—*N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. " "Harlaem Rail Road.—There is to be a ride of thirty or forty rods on the Harlaem Rail Road to-day, in the pleasure of which the Corporation is to participate. After the fatigues of the excursion, which, we believe will be along the whole line that is completed, say from Spring street in the Bowery, up to the Reservoir—over which, if the horses are fleet, it will take them nearly two minutes to pass—there is to be a grand Rail Road dinner. It is expected that the stock will rise with every fresh bumper—but will fall 1832 Nov. 14 to-morrow. Some of the buyers will fall to-night."—Com. Adv., N 14, 1832.

"Harlem Rail Road.—We mentioned yesterday [Nov. 14] that the Rail Road was completed from Prince street to 14th street and would be open for trial with the cars. The Company together with the Mayor, Corporation and strangers of distinction, left the City Hall in carriages to the place of depot near Union Square, where two splendid cars each with two horses, were in waiting. These cars are made low with broad iron wheels, which fit the flanges of the rail road after an improved model from the Liverpool and Manchester cars. They resemble an omnibus or rather several omnibuses attached to each other, padded with fine cloth, and handsome glass windows, each capable of containing outside and inside full forty passengers. The company was soon seated, and the horses trotted off in handsome style, with great ease, at the rate of about 12 miles an hour, followed by a number of private barouches and horsemen. Groups of spectators greeted the passage of the cars with shouts, and every window in the Bowery was filled. The distance was not far from the old residence or farm of Gov. Stuyvesant, . . . Those who made violent objections to laying down these tracks, and fancied a thousand dangers to the passing traveller, now look at the work with pleasure and surprise. Carriages of all kinds cross and recross the rail-way without impediment; and there exists not a single objection to bringing it down to the Park or Bowling Green, except the temporary inconvenience of breaking the paving and laying down the stone abutment.—Several sections of the Harlem Rail-Road are complete, and it is supposed that the whole line will be finished early in ensuing summer. The comfort and convenience of this rail-road to our citizens, will be inconceivable. Instead of being cramped and confined to a single lot of ground and a close atmosphere in the city, an acre or two will be purchased and a comfortable house built at a reduced expense, a garden, orchard, dairy, and other conveniences follow; and the train of rail-road carriages will start from Trinity Church at 3 o'clock, and convey passengers to Harlem and the intermediate stopping places, with as much facility and ease as they are now conveyed to Greenwich village. These are a few of the advantages which this small undertaking promises; and, in fact, it will make Harlem the suburbs of New-York. For fishing excursions to Harlem River, and pleasant summer rides, it is presumed the cars will be kept in constant motion.

"After the experiment, the company and guests dined at the City Hotel and teminated in a very agreeable manner, the first essay of New Yorkers on a rail-road in their own city."—Morn. Cour. and N. Y. Enq., N 15, 1832.

"We were highly gratified on Wednesday last [Nov. 14], as we were passing up the Bowery, with a view of the beautiful Cars of the Harlaem Railroad Company. We understand they were made by Miln Parker, coachmaker, of this city. They are spacious and convenient, being divided into three distinct apartments, each amply large enough for eight, and can accommodate very conveniently ten persons— or twenty-four to thirty passengers inside; and, when we saw them, there were at least, we should think, an equal number upon, and hanging round the outside, the whole drawn by two fine horses abreast, at the rate of ten or twelve miles an hour. . . ."—Rail-Road Jour., I: 737, cited by Dunbar in A Hist. of Travel in Am., 984–85. 18 "Harlæm Railroad—A section of the Harlæm railroad having been completed [see N 14], the members of the Corporation and other gentlemen were invited to take an excursion upon it yesterday [Nov. 18]. The morning papers profess themselves highly pleased with the road and the ride, and with the viands of the dinner with which, of course, the business was consummated."—N. Y. Eve. Post, N 19, 1832. See, for example, the Morning Courier and New York Enquirer, N 19, 1832 (in Society Library). See, further, N 20.

19 A public meeting is held at the merchants' exchange, and resolutions are adopted deploring the recent death of Sir Walter Scott. A committee is appointed to solicit subscriptions for a monument to be erected to his memory.—N. Y. Eve. Post, N 20, 1832.

20 The N. Y. & Harlem R. R. Co. begins to advertise the running of its cars: "The cars will run upon the rails from Prince Street to Fourteenth Street, in the Bowery, from 9 o'clock A. M. each fair day except Sundays, for the purpose of affording evidence to the public of the expediency of using rail-roads within the City."—Morning Courier and N. Y. Enquirer, N 20, 1832. "The introduction of a street railway into New York City in 1831–32 created a new mechanical business in the metropolis—the manufacture of tramcars, as the English call them, for the use of such roads. In that business John Stephenson was the pioneer. He had recently finished his apprenticeship to a coach-builder, and began manufacturing omnibuses for Abraham Brower on his own account, when he received an order from the New York and Harlem Railroad Company to build a street-car for them. Mr. Stephenson constructed it after a design of his own, and named it John Mason, in honor of the first president of the company and founder of the Chemical Bank.

"This was the first street-railway car ever built. It was made to hold thirty passengers, in three compartments. The driver's seat was in the roof, and it had passenger seats on the roof, which were reached by steps at each end. It was a sort of cross between an omnibus, a rockaway, and an English railway coach, and had four wheels. This was first put on the road between Prince and Fourteenth streets, on November 26, 1832 [see also N 10, 14, 18 and 20], carrying the president of the road and the mayor and common council of the city of New York. For this car Mr. Stephenson received a patent from the United States Government." Some of his later models are described.

". . . In 1836 he built a spacious factory in Harlem, and in 1843 he bought the land on Twenty-seventh Street, near Fourth Avenue, where his present establishment [1884] now is. . . .

"The street-railway car is a purely New York product. It was in successful operation in that city for twenty-five years before it appeared in any other city of the Union or elsewhere. . . ."—Lossing, Hist. of N. Y. City, I: 402–3. Cf. N 14.

The "two houses west of the U. S. Branch Bank in this city, and four in Pine street, have been purchased with the view of erecting a new Custom House, which, with the adjoining lots already occupied for that purpose, will make the building 104 feet on Wall and Pine streets, and 150 feet in depth. The building will, in addition to the offices for the Collector, Naval Officer, and Surveyor, contain the Post office, the offices of the District Court and Judge, the District Attorney, the Marshal, &c. The price paid for the house and lot contiguous to the U. S. Bank it is said was $92,000."—N. Y. Eve. Post, D 8, 1832; N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., D 18, 1832. 8

On Dec. 18, it was said: "The new Custom House for the city of New York which is to be erected partly on the site of the present one, will be a spacious and commodious building, differing from the one we now have by bearing some proportion to the trade of this great mart of the United States. The ground lately purchased is 104 feet on Wall and Pine streets, by 200. It is intended to open an alley for light and air on the side next the bank, and thus leave a front of 80 feet to the building. The Secretary of the Treasury intends procuring plans of the edifice from two of the first architects of the country—probably Strickland and Town may be applied to . . . The Material will probably be of marble, which is now one of the cheapest for solid structures. The building will probably have spacious and convenient porticos on Wall and Pine streets."—Ibid., D 18, 1832. See also ibid., D 21, 1832. The "present" custom-house on this site, referred to above, had been 1832 D 8 in use since 1816 (q. v., D 2), and stood on the site of the old city hall.

D 22 Col. De Witt Clinton, Jr., who had been sent, at the suggestion of Myndert Van Schaick, by the joint committee on fire and water of the common council to examine into the practicability of bringing water to New York City from the Croton River, reports in favour of this project. He proposes an open aqueduct at an estimated cost of $2,500,000.—Colden, Memoir Croton Aqueduct, 113; Man. Com. Coun. (1854), 219; Croton Aqueduct Report (1862). See F 26, 1833.

D 31 The city permits the Manhattan Gas Co. (see Feb. 26, 1830) to lay gas-pipes in any of the public streets north of Grand St.—Proc., App'd by Mayor; I: 319. Cf. O 25, 1830. — In this year, Great Britain passed the Factory Act, which prohibited "the employment in spinning and weaving factories of children under nine, made a maximum eight hour day for those from nine to thirteen, and of twelve for those from thirteen to eighteen. The bill also provided for the sanitary conditions of the factories, for a certain amount of recreation and education, and, most important, it created a system of factory inspectors, whose duty it was to see that this law was enforced."—Hazen, Europe since 1815, 440–42.

— In this year, Obed Hussey of Cincinnati received a patent for a reaping-machine. Cyrus Hall McCormick patented his harvester in 1834.—Butterworth, The Growth of Industrial Art (1892), Pl. 15. McCormick's was the first practical grain harvesting machine; but it was not until 1845 that the reaper was really introduced.—Scientific American, Je 5, 1915.

— "Great improvements have been made within a few years, in the compact part of the City, by widening, opening and straightening streets, to remedy in some degree, the irregular and inconvenient manner in which the ancient part of the City was built. . . . Most of the buildings are of brick; and many of the warehouses of the merchants are not surpassed for beauty, spaciousness, and convenience, by those of any other city. The style of building, with granite and marble fronts to the basements, has been recently introduced, and is now almost uniformly adopted in the erection of warehouses. . . . Some of the rows of houses in La Fayette-place, Bond-street, Bleecker-street, &c., may vie, for beauty and taste, with European palaces.

". . . Pearl-street . . . is the principal seat of the dry goods and hardware business. Front and Water streets, between Pearl-street and the East River, are occupied principally by the wholesale grocers, commission merchants, and mechanics connected with the shipping business. South-street, running along the East River, contains the warehouses and offices of most of the principal shipping merchants. Wall-street . . . is occupied by the Banks, Insurance Companies, Merchants' Exchange, Newspapers, and Brokers' offices, being the seat of heavier moneyed transactions than any other place in America. Canal-street . . . is a spacious street, principally occupied by retail stores. . . . The Third Avenue, extending from the Bowery to Harlaem, is Macadamized [see F 23, 1828], and is the principal avenue to the City from the east. . . . The streets are generally well paved, with stone or brick side walls lighted at night by lamps, and some of them supplied with gas lights."—New-York As It Is, In 1833 (ed. by Edwin Williams, author of the N. Y. Annual Register, and pub. by J. Disturnell, 1833), 12–13. 1833 —

The brick building in the rear of the city hall, formerly the almshouse and more recently the "N. Y. Institution," was at this time known as the "New City Hall" or "City Hall No. 2," and contained the following public offices: In the west end of the basement, the watch house; on the first floor, the police office, office of the clerk of the court of sessions, and district-attorney's office; on second floor, the sessions court-room, grand jury room, witnesses' room, and petit jury room; at the "centre door," the office of the almshouse commissioners, committee rooms, etc.; at the east end, the U. S. court rooms, clerk's office, marshal's office, and judges' chamber; on third floor, keeper's room.—Ibid., 14. By 1837, some changes had been made in this arrangement.—Cf. ibid. for that year. See he Dripps Map, Pl. 138, Vol. III.

"The New-York and Harlaem Rail Road Company are now constructing a Rail Road to extend from Prince-street, in the Bowery, along the line of the Fourth Avenue, 7½ miles, to Harlaem. At this time the custom-house extended from Pine to Cedar St. near Nassau St.—Ibid., 117. This was apparently a temporary arrangement while construction of the new custom-house was under way, the initial plans for which were laid as early as Aug. 5 (q. v.).

In this year, there were 45 licensed lottery offices in New York City, paying $250 each in license fees, amounting to $11,205, one-half of which was appropriated, by law, to the public schools, and one-half to the N. Y. Institution for the Instruction of the Deaf and Dumb. After Dec. 31 (q. v.), all lotteries in the state were to cease.—Ibid., 159. See the law of Ap 30, 1833.

Since 1827 (q. v.), the owners of the lots surrounding St. John's Park have enclosed the square with an iron fence (see Je 27, 1828), at an expense of $26,000, and adorned the interior with ornamental walks and shrubbery. At this time, the square was surrounded with "costly and valuable private dwellings, having St. John's Church on its eastern side."—Ibid., 179–80. The church itself is described. See also descrip. of Pl. 106-a, Vol. III; and L. M. R. K., III: 933.

"During the present year, 1833, a range of superb private residences has been erected on the north side of the square [Washington Square], and the name of the street, on the petition of the owners of those buildings, changed from Sixth-street to 'Waverley-place,' in honour of Sir Walter Scott. A street, 75 feet wide, called 'Washington-place,' (formerly Fifth-street,) leads from Broadway to the middle of the square; at the termination of which [bet.

1833 Washington Pl. and Waverly Pl.] the site of the University of the — City of N. Y. has been fixed."—Ibid., 180.

"Union Place, Situated at the former junction, or 'fork,' of the Bowery and Broadway, distant 1¾ miles north of the present City Hall, was originally laid out by the commissioners who devised the plan of the upper part of the City, in an oblique and irregular form, comprehending the narrow strip of land lying between Broadway and the Bowery, extending as far south as Tenth street; and subsequently reduced so as to include only the triangle or point of land lying north of Fourteenth-street. Upon the petition of the proprietors of lands in that vicinity, the Legislature, in the year 1832, passed an act greatly altering and enlarging the form and dimensions of this square; so that Union-place now forms a spacious rectangular square, embracing (in addition to its former limits, north of Fourteenth-street) a large triangle on the east, carved out of the 'Bowery Hill,' and another large triangle lying west of the present Broadway or Bloomingdale Road. The whole of the land was taken from individual proprietors, at an expense of $213,516, which was assessed upon and paid by the owners of lands in the immediate vicinity.

"Its length, N. to S., from Fourteenth to Seventeenth-street, is 877 feet; and its breadth, from the east line of the Fourth Avenue, westward, 503 feet. Its area is upwards of ten acres, being as large as the whole of the Park, and nearly three times as large as Hudson square. The City Corporation have recently directed all the buildings to be removed, and the area of the square to be reduced to the City level. It has been lately connected with Washington square by the extension and widening of Wooster-street, from Waverley-place to Fourteenth-street, which is hereafter to bear the name of 'Jackson Avenue.'"—Ibid., 180–81. The name University Place was adopted instead.—L. M. R. K., III: 1011, 1012. See Ap 22.

"Clinton Square, Laid out by an act of the Legislature, in the year 1833, upon the tract of low land in the north-eastern section of the City, called Stuyvesant's Meadows, is situated between Avenue A. and B., and between Seventh and Tenth streets." This became Tompkins Square.—See Ap 9. "The expense of forming this square is to be levied by assessment upon the lands in the vicinity. It is directly connected with the elegant range of buildings in Eighth-street, called 'St. Mark's place'."—Ibid., 182.

— In a description of the city, James Stuart says, in part: "The neatness, lightness, and cleanness of the hackney-coaches, which are numerous, and the rapidity with which they, and all carriages, whether for the conveyance of passengers or effects, are driven, was new to us. We saw no heavy horses for waggons or carts; all are driven at a trot.

"The hackney coaches are only constructed for four persons, very nice-looking without and within, generally driven by Irishmen, or men of colour, who are, we found, as apt to overcharge strangers as in other places. The carriages have heads, or tops, supported on light iron frames; attached to the tops are curtains of silk as well as of leather, which may be rolled up and buttoned, or let down at pleasure, so that the passengers may either have the space from the top of the carriage down to its middle altogether open, or enclosed with curtains of silk or leather. . . .

"The number of foreigners from all countries is great. One hears the French and Spanish languages almost in every street. Smoking cigars seems universal during the warm weather in the open air, the inhabitants being seated on the street, near the doors of their houses, or in their porticos or verandas. . . .

"Iced soda water from the fountain is the liquid in universal use by all descriptions of persons, and is admirably prepared,—the pleasantest beverage, as it appeared to me, that I had ever tasted in warm weather. It is frequently mixed with a small portion of lemon syrup; the price threepence sterling for a tumbler. It is prepared and sold in almost every street. The demand at the fountains is so great, that very large sums of money have been made by the manufacturers."—Three years in North America (N. Y., 1833), I: 22–32.

— Richard Weston, an Edinburgh bookseller, on visiting New York in this year, made the following comment on the treatment of emigrants then in vogue: ". . . I passed two . . . encampments of emigrants in Washington street; some of them were lying huddled together under carts, some within the recesses of doors, and some on the bare pavement. I enquired of a good looking elderly woman who was lying on the pavement—her head bare, and her long grey hair fluttering in the breeze—how long it was since she landed; and she answered in German that 1833 it was six nights, and that her party had lain all that time on — the streets. . . ."

Weston describes Grant Thorburn, the seedman, "the original of Galt's Lawrie Todd." The description accords with the well-known cartoon of Thorburn by the English artist, Daniel Maclise, published in London, in 1873, in A Gallery of Illustrious Literary Characters (1830–1838), . . . accompanied by notices . . . by Wm. Maginn (from Fraser's Mag.). Weston gives a full description (the best extant) of Thorburn's store.—The U. S. and Canada in 1833 (Edinburgh, 1836), 53–56, 65–67, 69.

In a description of New York, E. T. Cole makes the following — comment about the present condition of the Lawrence monument in Trinity churchyard: "It is a most shabby, economical structure, built of brick and faced with white marble. The column, of the Corinthian order, is broken short, with part of the capital lying at the base of the pedestal, emblematic of his premature death. Owing to the summit being exposed to the weather, the rain has gained admittance into the interior of the brick-work, and has given the column a considerable inclination to one side. Some of the marble front also, with two sides of that of the pedestal, have fallen down and exposed the shabby interior. Surely such a man deserves a monument of more durable material. . . ."—A Subaltern's Furlough (N. Y., 1833), I: 132–36. For over six years the monument has been in this condition.—See Ap 2, 1825; Ap 10, 1826. See, further, Ag 17, 1844; 1847.

In this year, Wm. Chapin made a map of the city from the — Battery to 125th St., and from the Hudson to the East River, with part of the Brooklyn shore.—See map No. 525, in bureau of topography, borough president's office.

In this year, Fourth Ave. was opened from 17th to 28th St.; — Irving Place was opened from 14th to 20th St.; Liberty Street was widened from Broadway to Greenwich St.; and Wooster St. was widened and extended to 14th St.—Man. Com. Coun. (1857), 530–31; ibid. (1865), 544.

In this year, the Bowery Amphitheatre, occupying Nos. 37–39 — Bowery, was built by the Zoological Institute.—Brown, Hist. of the N. Y. Stage, I: 236; L. M. R. K., III: 982.

In this year, the two so-called "Colonnade Houses" were — erected at 714 and 716 Broadway, which backed upon "Colonnade Row" on Lafayette Place. One of these, occupied by Philip Hone in 1836–7, was demolished in 1889.—See descrip. of Pl. 103-b, III: 605.

The following notes indicate some of the recent transformations — in the city's cemeteries: The burial-ground of the French Episcopal church (in Pine St.—see L. M. R. K., III: 932) was occupied at this time by stores.

The Presbyterian church and burial-ground in Nassau St., between John St. and Maiden Lane (since sold to the Baptists), has been converted into stores and dwellings, the dead having been removed.

On the former burying-ground of the Lutherans, at the corner of Broadway and Rector St., which was purchased by Trinity corporation, Grace Church has been built (L. M. R. K., III: 933) with a parsonage-house in the rear. "To accommodate these buildings, they carted the bones in open box carts promiscuously, and fragments of bones and coffins were dumped into the North River. This was done in 1805 or 1806."

"The Presbyterian church in Wall-street emptied the contents of several private vaults about ten years ago. The new offices on Nassau-street stand on part of this ground.

"The Quaker or Friends' burying ground was dug up, and bones and rubbish carried off in carts. It is now Thorburn's Garden. [Vide infra.]

"Christ Church, in Ann-street, sold to the Roman Catholics [L. M. R. K., III: 932]. Repaired, altered, and dug up.

"The Brick Church, (commonly called Dr. Spring's Church), vaulted and dug up two or three times, and lately they have taken down the wooden lecture room, with consent of the Corporation, and rebuilt it with brick, much enlarged it, dug up the bones and rubbish, and carried them off in open box carts.

"The Jews' ground, in Oliver-street, has also been dug up, and is now covered with buildings."—N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., F 25, 1833, citing transactions of the Bd. of Ald., F 4, 1833 (Doc. No. 76).

On Feb. 27, "Humanitas" replied concerning the Society of Friends, that "The remains were taken from the ground now

1833 occupied by Thorburn, and carefully put in boxes, not with the — 'rubbish'; and were decently deposited in a vault, built expressly for the purpose, in the burial-ground belonging to the Society in North-street." Part of this old burial-ground was converted into "a common cart-way."—Ibid., F 27, 1833.

— In this year, when the two boards of the common council failed to agree on the purchase of Rutgers Medical College by this city, the assistants published their reasons by a description of the situation of the property.—Docs. (No. 25 and 41), Bd. of Ald. and Assts., III: 143, 437.

— In this year, the "Washington Grays" and the "City Guard" were organized. Later, the former became the Eighth Regiment, and the latter the Twelfth Regiment.—Chas. S. Clark, in the Eve. Post, F 26, 1916.

— In this year, was published Laws of the state of New-York, relating particularly to the city of New-York.—See copy in the N. Y. P. L.

— In this year, the second American Monthly Magazine was established, by Herbert and Patterson, and subsequently edited by Park Benjamin. It terminated its career in 1838.—North, Newspaper and Periodical Press, 117.

— At this time, Wm. S. Mount was a successful portrait-painter in New York.—Dunlap (Goodspeed ed.), III: 263.

Jan. By this time, 34,646 ft. of pipes had been laid from the public — reservoir in 13th St. (see Mr 29, 1832).—N. Y. H. S. Bulletin (Oct. 1917), 70.

1 Secretary of the Treasury McLane advertises for plans for the new custom-house to be erected at Wall and Pine Sts., offering a premium of $300 for the best design. "The building will front on three streets, viz: 88 feet on Wall street, on the South, the like extent on Pine street, on the North, and 188 feet on Nassau street on the West. On the East it will be bounded by an alley of about ten feet. It is proposed to be built of marble. . . .

"It is to be observed that the level of Pine street is 8 feet 6 inches above that of Wall street."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ja 7, 1833.

" The Knickerbocker Magazine, a monthly edited by Charles F. Hoffman, makes its first appearance. Bryant and Paulding are among the contributors. Under the editorship of Louis Gaylord Clark it continued until 1860.—Hone's Diary, I: 71; Haswell's Reminiscences, 271; North, Newspaper and Periodical Press, 116, 117.

" The first penny newspaper, the Morning Post, is established by Horatio David Shepard, with Horace Greeley and Francis V. Story as partners, printers, and publishers. It survived only about one month.—North, Newspaper and Periodical Press, 89. See S 3.

2 The new mayor, Gideon Lee, is inducted into office, succeeding Walter Bowne (see D 29, 1828). In his address on this occasion, at the city hall, he recommends, among other things, substituting stone quays for the wooden docks of the city.—Eve. Post, Ja 3, 1833. Lee was re-elected Dec. 4, 1833.—Courier and Enquirer, D 5, 1833. For a sketch of his life, see Man. Com. Coun. (1853), 425–26; Lossing, Hist. N. Y. City, I: 312. He was succeeded by C. W. Lawrence.—See My 13, 1834.

3 Holt's Hotel, a marble building, six storeys high, which Stephen Holt began to build in May, 1831, on land which he had purchased in May, 1827, is opened. It extends 100 ft. on Fulton, 76 ft. on Pearl, and 85 ft. on Water St. The top of the dome, 134 ft. high, commands a panoramic view of the city. It is called "a wonder of New York."—N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., S 12, 1832; Ja 4 and 5, 1833. For description of it in 1831, see Fay's Views of N. Y., 41. Heavily mortgaged (Liber Mortgages, CXLIII: 562), the hotel failed, and was thereafter variously designated "Holt's Tower," "Holt's Pyramid," and "Holt's Folly." Holt turned it over to trustees.—Liber Deeds, CCCXIX: 623. On Jan. 15, 1839, it was reopened by Edwin R. Yale as the United States Hotel.—Com. Adv., D 29, 1838. See also Liber Deeds, DCLXXXVII: 495; L. M. R. K., III: 981; N. Y. Times, 1875, cited in Westervelt MSS. (in N. Y. P. L.). The building is remembered by many from the fact that, through its long, marble-paved corridor and up one of its stairways, lay a familiar approach to the Fulton St. station of the elevated railroad. It was demolished in 1902 (q. v.).

21 The board of aldermen makes record of the fact that: "New York, with a population of 220,000, does not possess one building devoted to scientific purposes." It proposes that the common council petition the legislature to release to them two lots of ground adjoining the New York Dispensary, in the possession of the state, to erect a building to accommodate the Lyceum of Jan.
Natural History, the Mechanics' Society, the Mechanics' Institute, 21 and the College of Pharmacy.—Doc. No. 68, Bd. of Ald., Ja 21, 1833.

The legislature passes an act enabling the High School Soc. of 22
N. Y. to sell its real estate or make application for dissolution, as the benefit of the stockholders may require.—Laws of N. Y. (1833), chap. 9. See Ap 24.

The board of assistant aldermen approves a resolution of the 28 aldermen for widening Pine St. and extending it to the North River, through Trinity churchyard. This caused much comment and opposition.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ja 26, 29, 30, 31, F 2, 4, 1833. The resolution was approved by the mayor "in direct opposition to public sentiment."—Ibid., F 9, 1833.

"It is not easy to say whether the project of extending Albany street through Trinity Churchyard is regarded by the disinterested portion of our fellow citizens with more of surprise or indignation. Beyond doubt the City Corporation betray on this, as they have betrayed on many other occasions, a most reprehensible disregard of Moral right, and of the true meaning of the laws, and a deliberate intention to make the best use of their time for the accomplishment of local and private interests and enterprises."—N. Y. Mirror, X: 253 (F 9, 1833). See also ibid., X: 262–63. The intended extension of Pine St. through the churchyard was not put into effect. Another attempt was undertaken in 1847 (q. v.), this time for the extension of Albany St. eastward through the churchyard.

Samuel B. Ruggles, having petitioned the board of assistants " to open Fourth Ave. from 17th to 28th St., the street committee, to whom it was referred, reports that extensive improvements are in progress there, that expensive houses are to be built during the coming summer, and that the construction of the railroad has already opened the avenue, and it should be legally opened in the usual formal manner as a matter of record.—Doc. R, Bd. of Assts., Ja 28, 1833.

An old Dutch house in New St., near Wall St., said to be the Feb.
last of the Dutch houses, is about to be pulled down. For wood-cut 2 view of it, engraved by Anderson from a drawing by Davis, see N. Y. Mirror, X: 211.

Mayor Gideon Lee informs the board of aldermen that he has 4 signed the resolution providing that, "in the extension of Canal street, the gore formed by the intersection of said street with Orange and Centre street, be thrown into the public street."—Mayor's Messages (1833), 23. This gore became Harry Howard Square.—L. M. R. K., III: 970.

A petition is introduced in the legislature praying that the 8 village of Brooklyn be incorporated as a city.—Assemb. Jour. (1833), 264. The bill passed the assembly but failed in the senate. Brooklyn was made a city on April 8, 1834 (q. v.).

The city acquired by condemnation proceedings the land now 11 comprised in Paradise Park, at Park and Worth Sts. and Mission Place (168.1 by 136.3 by 98.9 ft).—Prendergast, Record of Real Estate; L. M. R. K., III: 971. This "Five Points Triangle" was fenced and sodded with grass in this year, and was then called "Mission Square." It is now known as Paradise Park.—L. M. R. K., III: 971.

Philip Hone presides at a public meeting, held in Tammany 14
Hall, at which resolutions are adopted protesting against the franchise given to the N. Y. & Harlem R. R. Co. (see Ap 25, D 22, 1831; F 1 and My 10, 1832), and expressing opposition to "Railroads in the midst of our dense population as dangerous to the personal safety of our families and ourselves. . . ." The resolutions ask that the legislature reject the bill now before it which grants further privileges to the company, and repeal the law of the last session. They "disapprove of the permission already extended by the Common Council to said Company, to make said Rail-Road from Twenty-Third to Prince street." A standing committee of three from each ward is appointed, with power "to call general meetings, and to take such measures as may be prudent and wise to sustain our opposition to Rail-Roads on the streets of the city." The committee is to meet at the same place on Feb. 19. The resolutions are to be printed and copies sent to the legislature and common council.—N. Y. Com. Adv., F 16, 1833. See, further, Je 10.

Commenting on an application to the common council for an 19 appropriation of $500 "to carry on the working of 61st street," one of the newspapers says: "The same principle is at work here as in the case of the road made a year or two since from the Third 1833 Feb. 19 Avenue at Yorkville to Hellgate ferry, whereby a most beautiful vista to the country seat of a certain Alderman on the opposite bank of the East River was opened at the public expense. Sixty-first street, not road, passes through that property formerly called Smith's Folly, a part of which was lately bought and is still owned, as we are informed, by a member of the Board of Assistant Aldermen. If this kind of legislation is to go on unchecked, there will be no more safety for property in New York than in the most despotic country in the world. . . ."—N. Y. Eve. Post, F 19, 1833. See also ibid., F 25, 28, Ap 30, 1833.

26 The legislature passes an act for the appointment of five water commissioners for the city of New York. They shall examine and consider "all matters relative to supplying the city of New-York with a sufficient quantity of pure and wholesome water for the use of its inhabitants, and the amount of money necessary to effect that object." The act outlines their duties. Among these they are required to report which, in their opinion, is the best plan for furnishing this city with the desired supply of water, and their estimate of the expense involved in carrying it out. They shall present a copy of this report to the common council on or before Nov. 1 in this year, and to the legislature on or before the second Monday in January, 1834. The act shall continue in force for one year. The expenses incurred under this act shall be paid by the common council.—Laws of N. Y. (1833), chap. 36.

The act was drafted by Myndert Van Schaick, member of the state senate from this city. The commissioners appointed by the governor were Stephen Allen, Wm. W. Fox, Saul Alley, Charles Dusenberry, and Benjamin M. Brown. In the discharge of their duties, they engaged Canvass White and Maj. David B. Douglass to make the requisite surveys. White was prevented by sickness from performing his portion of the work, and it devolved on Maj. Douglass to make the necessary examinations. On June 5, the common council appropriated $5,000 for the work.—Doc. 12, Bd. of Ald., Ag 1, 1836; Colden, Memoir Croton Aqueduct, 115; Man. Com. Coun. (1854), 219. See N 1.

5 The legislature passes an act to terminate 9th and 10th Sts. at Sixth Ave., instead of continuing them west of Sixth Ave. as shown in the Commissioners' Map of 1811.—Laws of N. Y. (1833), chap. 49.

7 The common council resolves that the street lying between, and parallel to, Third and Fourth Aves., extending from the north line of 14th St. to the south line of 20th St., be opened and regulated, and named Irving Place in honour of Washington Irving.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, I: 380; II: 206, 238.

13 The name of Sixth St., from Broadway to Christopher St., is changed to Waverly Place.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, I: 384–85.

18 The mayor signs a resolution that the commissioners of the almshouse cause to be prepared stone blocks and broken stone for the purpose of laying 400 ft. in Broadway, south of Canal St. —Mayor's Message (1833), 41.

Apr. 1 Audubon is at work on his Birds of America. Hone describes it.—Hone's Diary, I: 73.

" Alderman Mandeville presents the following resolution to the board: "That the Superintendent of Repairs be directed to procure materials, and employ men to paint the brown stone of this building [the city hall] white." The board adopts it, and directs that it be sent to the board of assistant aldermen for concurrence.—Proc., Bd. of Ald., IV: 349. The assistants laid the resolution on the table.—Proc., Bd. of Assts., II: 403. The resolution was opposed by "Civis" who stated that the "north front of this building is allowed by good judges to be in better taste than any other part of this noble edifice."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ap 3, 1833. See My 13, 1890, when the work was actually contracted for and accomplished.

" Wooster St. is continued north from 8th to 14th St., striking the south-west corner of Union Place, and is widened in part.—Laws of N. Y. (1833), chap. 98; ibid. (1834), chap. 174. This extension became University Place.—L. M. R. K., III: 1011, 1012.

4 The city acquires by condemnation proceedings, at a cost of $116,051, the 3.483 acres comprising Union Square (see Ap 5, 1832).—Prendergast, Record of Real Estate Owned by the City of N. Y. (1814), 49. See Ap 20. Apr. 4

From April 9 to 15, the annual election for aldermen and assistant aldermen took place in all the fifteen wards.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ap 12, 1833. 9

The legislature passes an act creating a public square out of "All the land in the eleventh ward of the city of New-York, bounded northerly by Tenth-street, easterly by Avenue A, southerly by Seventh-street, and westerly by Avenue B," the name of which shall be given by the common council.—Laws of N. Y. (1833), chap. 130. This became Tompkins Square (see Jl 30). "

The legislature incorporates the "New York Protestant Episcopal City Mission Society."—Laws of N. Y. (1833), chap. 121. "

"Steel pens have lately been brought to market in great variety. They are all patent, and some 'double patent.' . . ."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ap 11, 1833, citing Jour. of Com. 11

The legislature incorporates "The New England Society in the City of New York," for the purpose of affording pecuniary relief to poor persons of New England origin, and establishing and maintaining a library.—Laws of N. Y. (1833), chap. 153. 15

The Jewish synagogue in Mill St., rebuilt in 1818 (q.v.), is sold. A new synagogue was erected on the west side of Crosby St., between Spring and Broome Sts.; this was consecrated in 1834. After the great fire of 1835, Mill St. ceased to exist as such, but South William St., which is Mill St. widened and extended, took its place.—Publications of the American Jewish Hist. Soc., No. 6, 135; Wilson, Mem. Hist. of N. Y., IV: 381. See, further, Jl 11, 1859. "

The common council orders "That Union place [see Ap 4] be opened on the 1st day of May next, and that the buildings and incumbrances thereon be removed therefrom within thirty days thereafter, and that the same be graduated to the city level, under the direction of the Street Commissioner," for which purpose a collector is appointed.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, I: 406. The square was opened in this year.—L. M. R. K., III: 971–72. 20

The legislature incorporates the "Am. Seaman's Friend Society."—Laws of N. Y. (1833), chap. 195. The objects of this society were very similar to those of the Y. M. C. A. of to-day. Among the incorporators were Anson G. Phelps, Stephen Van Rensselaer, and other public-spirited citizens of New York. 22

The legislature incorporates the Greenwich Savings Bank (cf. Ap 17, 1830).—Laws of N. Y. (1833), chap. 215. This bank was first opened at No. 12 Carmine St., where it remained until 1839, when it removed to No. 11 Sixth Ave. It has continued on this avenue ever since, having moved successively to No. 41 in 1846, to No. 75 in 1854, to No. 246 in 1892, and to its present building, extending from Sixth Ave. to Broadway, in 1924.—See inscription on entablature of present structure. 24

The "Mechanics' Institute of the City of New York" is incorporated by Alex. Masterton, Geo. Bruce, and others, with the object "to diffuse knowledge and information throughout the mechanical classes; to form lectures on natural, mechanical and chemical philosophy, and other scientific subjects; to create a library and museum, for the benefit of mechanics; and to establish schools for the education of their youth."—Laws of N. Y. (1833), chap. 209. This was not the General Society of Mechanics and Tradesmen, which survives to-day (see 1821, etc.), and which, in 1833, had a school in Crosby St.—See N. Y. As It Is, In 1833 (pub. by Disturnell, 1833), 45; Annals of the Society (1882), 83, 96, 108. The Mechanics Institute was founded in 1831, and its work is more fully described in N. Y. As It Is, In 1837 (pub. by Disturnell, 1837), 110–11, in which latter year it occupied rooms in the basement of the city hall, where it was also in 1839 (see ibid. for 1839), 110. "

The senate and the assembly, each by the two-thirds vote required by the constitution, propose to the people an amendment providing for a popular election of mayor hereafter in the city of New York.—Laws of N. Y. (1833), 514–15. This amendment was ratified by the electors, on Nov. 4–6 (q.v.). 25

The City Hotel, a "vast structure" on the west side of Broadway between Cedar and Thames Sts., a "splendid edifice, long known, and universally popular, as one of the best hotels in the country," is partly destroyed by fire. It is the scene of a thrilling rescue. The attic and top storey are gutted, and the contents of the building ruined. The house contains "one of the most spacious "

1833 and elegant apartments in the United States, chiefly used for Apr. public dinners, balls and concerts."—N. Y. Com. Adv., Ap 25,

26 The legislature passes an act "in commemoration of the services and in honor of the memory of George Washington." A large number of ward delegates, together with the mayor, recorder, and presidents of the two boards of the common council, are made directors of a corporation entitled "The New-York Washington Monument Association." This body is to continue for a term of 30 years. Its capital shall be $100,000, collected by subscription, grant, devise, or otherwise. Until required for this object, the association shall invest the money so collected in "U. S. government or state stock, or stocks of the city of New-York," or shall deposit it in, and make loans to, "any of the banks of this state, or to the life insurance and trust company of the city of New-York." As soon as $50,000 shall be collected, the association "may cause to be erected, in such part of the city of New-York as the contributors may by vote or otherwise direct, a monument in commemoration of the esteem and deep feeling of veneration entertained by the citizens of New-York, for the character and memory of George Washington." Other provisions of the act are: "Nothing in this act contained shall be construed to prevent the disbursing of moneys for models and drafts, and other necessary and preparatory measures, previous to the said amount of fifty thousand dollars being collected;" also "The said Washington monument shall not be placed or erected in any of the streets or public squares of the said city, without the consent or approbation of the corporation of the said city."—Laws of N. Y. (1833), chap. 240. Cf. Ap 18, 1843.

30 An act of the legislature requires that, at the end of this year, all lotteries in this state shall be ended.—Laws of N. Y. (1833), chap. 306. See also 1830; and D 31.

" The legislature modifies the Commissioners' Plan by introducing two new avenues in the Twelfth Ward. These, as afterwards named, were Lexington Ave. (from 30th to 34th St.) and Madison Ave. (from 23d to 42d St.).—Laws of N. Y. (1833), chap. 309. See 1838.

" A fire at Bank and Hudson Sts. destroys about 70 buildings.—N. Y. Eve. Post, My 1, 2.

May 9 "We do not believe that the people of this city are prepared to see the beautiful Park which has so long been the pride and ornament of New York broken up, its railings prostrated, its trees felled, and its spacious area covered with blocks of buildings. This is the scheme of some projectors, among the wild plans which the present rage for speculation has produced, but we venture to predict that it will not take. There is already deficiency of public squares in the lower part of the city for the purposes of health and refreshment. . . ."—N. Y. Eve. Post, My 9, 1833. It was also proposed to remove the custom-house to the Park, and the city hall to Union Square.—Ibid., My 9 and 10, 1833.

10 A proposal to sell the city hall and the adjoining ground to the federal government for a custom-house for $500,000 is rejected by the board of assistant alderman.—N. Y. Eve. Post, My 11, 1833. See also ibid., My 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 1833.

13 A traveller, writing of his tour through the U. S. in 1832–3, says of the trans-Atlantic packets: "The packets used for Liverpool, London, and Havre, are like floating palaces. The utmost ingenuity has been taxed to render the arrangements most perfect; the accommodations of every kind most admirable. . . ." He describes the Astor House in detail; and refers to "the splendid range of mansions erecting called La Fayette terrace" (error for La Grange Terrace—see Pl. 103-b, Vol. III) which are "buildings like the terraces in Regent's Park."—A Brief Account together with Observations made during a visit in the West Indies, and a tour through the U. S. A. 1832–3, by Dr. Thomas Ralph (Dundas, Upper Canada, 1836), 79–83.

14 "The delightful situation at the Shot Tower (the mansion of the late George Youle), kept as a house of entertainment by Mr. Hilton" in 1831, and closed in 1832, is opened for the season of 1833.—Com. Adv., My 14, 1833. Regarding Youle's shot-tower, see L. M. R. K., III: 963; and Pl. 102-a, Vol. III.

15 "The City Hotel, like a Phenix . . . is rapidly rising from its ashes, and is assuming an appearance of greater beauty and soaring to a grander height, than before the late conflagration. In plainer prose, carpenters, masons, &c. are actively at work repairing that building, and adding another story to the lofty pile."—N. Y. Eve. Post, My 15, 1833. See Ap 25. May 15

President Jackson visits New York. He reached Perth Amboy from New Brunswick by the steamboat "New York;" and was conducted with his suite on board the steamboat "North America," which went from this city to Perth Amboy to meet him. Arriving at Castle Garden at about five o'clock, the Garden was "filled to overflowing" when he was welcomed by the mayor "amid the shouts of spectators, and the roaring of artillery." He mounted a horse and reviewed the troops; then started in procession for the city hall. "Just after the President had crossed the bridge, which connects the garden with the Battery, being filled at the moment with the Procession, it gave way, and carrying with it the two Ticket offices standing on each side, fell into the water below. Gen. Jackson mounted, had that moment cleared the bridge, and was but fifteen or twenty feet from it when the accident occurred. . . . The end of the bridge resting on the battery wall gave way and fell into the shallow water resting on the loose stones below. The procession was thus cut off, leaving only about twenty persons behind Gen. Jackson. A large number of people were upon the bridge at the moment, and were thrown in a mass, into the shallow water. How it happened that no lives were lost and no more injuries incurred, it is very difficult to imagine. . . ." 12

The president alighted at the city hall, and was conducted to the governor's room, where he was received by Gov. Marcy and his military suite. "Shortly afterwards he made his appearance at the Balcony, and saluted the multitude that thronged the Park and streets adjacent. About sunset he proceeded with the Vice President and Governor Marcey to the American Hotel where lodgings were provided for him. . . ."—N. Y. Com. Adv., Je 13, 1833. See also Hone's Diary, I: 76–77. The repairs to the Castle Garden bridge cost $666.95.—Mayor's Message (1834), 146.

President Jackson receives several thousand ladies at the city hall and visits the Brooklyn Navy Yard. In the evening he went to Tammany Hall.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Je 14, 1833. 13

After a short visit to New Jersey, President Jackson is waited upon at the merchants' exchange by the Chamber of Commerce. He later visited Castle Garden, rode through several streets of the city, and went to Niblo's Garden.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Je 15, 1833. 14

" "The celebrated Indian chief, Black Hawk, and his companions, the prophet and his son, now occupy the place in the public curiosity which General Jackson filled during his recent visit here. They arrived yesterday [June 14], and witnessed the ascension of the balloon from the steamboat in which they arrived. They are in charge of Major Garland of the United States Army. The crowd was so great that they found it impossible to land and enter the garden, as was expected. They were afterwards taken to their lodgings at the Exchange Hotel, in Broad street. . . ."—Hone's Diary, I: 77.

President Jackson leaves New York for Bridgeport.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Je 15, 1833. 15

"A New-Yorker" writes to the editors: "There is no city in the United States, which, in my opinion, presents so many delightful and pleasant retreats, and so easy of access, as New York. We have our Hoboken, Weehawken, Bath, Coney Island, Flushing, &c. &c. But I know of none which combines more beautiful scenery than the Thatched House Garden at Jersey City. . . ."—N. Y. Gaz. & Adv., Je 20, 1833. 20

The mayor signs a resolution to fence in the triangular piece of ground at the Five Points with paling, and that it be laid with grass.—Mayor's Message (1833), 82. 24

A board of health is established consisting of the mayor, aldermen, and assistant aldermen.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, II: 15. 25

"The celebrated Colonel Burr was married on Monday evening [Jl 1] to the equally celebrated Mrs. Jumel, widow of Stephen Jumel. It is benevolent in her to keep the old man in his latter days. One good turn deserves another."—Hone's Diary, I: 78. See also descrip. of Pl. 167-a, III: 849. July 1

James Boorman gives to the N. Y. Institution for the Blind (see Ap 21, 1831; Mr 15, 1832) a lease of the premises on the east side of Ninth Ave., between 33d and 34th Sts.—Liber Deeds, CCCIV: 202; Laws of N. Y. (1836), chap. 226, 399; L. M. R. K., III: 955. By October, the institution was established in buildings standing 4

1833 July 4 within 32 lots of ground at this location, under this lease which is for the term of nine years.—First Ann. Rep. of the Institution (1836). See also Ap 30, 1836.

16 J. H. Colton & Co., No. 9 Wall St., publish a new map of the city, drawn by David H. Burr from the latest surveys of the city deposited in the street commissioner's office and from information obtained from several of the city surveyors. It is issued in a size convenient for the pocket, on thin paper, and also on rollers, or in a frame to hang up.—Com. Adv., Jl 16, 1833. This is one of the most beautiful plans of the city ever published. For the second state of this map, issued in 1841, see Pl. 124, Vol. III, and its description, III: 687–88.

" The corner-stone of N. Y. University is laid, on the east side of Washington Square. 24 "The proceedings of the Board of Aldermen on Monday [July 22], in relation to the Custom House, are so disreputable to a majority of that body, that the subject ought not to pass without notice. It is very apparent that there is no expectation in the majority of that board of widening Nassau street. The idea is perfectly absurd. There is no movement in favor of such a measure among the inhabitants of the First Ward, or even the persons who reside in the neighborhood of the old Custom House. Buildings of an expensive description have been very recently erected in Pine street, and one on the corner of Pine and Nassau street, which must be taken down if the street is widened, is not even now finished. The stir in the Board is obviously nothing more than a fetch, a mere trick, to postpone the erection of the Custom House, until opportunity shall be afforded to a number of interested men to try to remove the establishment to another place."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Jl 24, 1833, citing Daily Adv. See also Post, Jl 25, 27, 30, 1833. See, further, Aug. 5.

30 "The bay of New York is admitted to be, in point of the picturesque disposition of its shores and islands, the variety of its scenery, the neat appearance of the objects of art dotted over its banks, and the multitude of vessels of all shapes and sizes constantly gliding over its fine sheet of water, one of the most beautiful scenes in the world. There is no single feature in this noble panorama which combines greater and more various charms than the Quarantine Ground; and all of these, as seen through the atmosphere of a most auspicious day, Bennett—an artist well known for the great merit and fidelity of his water pieces—has contrived to portray most vividly and faithfully in a view of that beautiful spot, published a few days since by Messrs. Parker and Clover of this city."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Jl 30, 1833. See also descrip. of Pl. 116, III: 621.

" The square lying between 7th and 10th Sts., Aves. A and B, authorised by the legislature on April 9 (q.v.), is officially designated Tompkins Square.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, II: 32; L. M. R. K., III: 971. The land was acquired in 1834 (q.v., Mr 21).

Aug. 1 The Sailors' Snug Harbor on Staten Island is opened with appropriate religious services. "The centre building of the contemplated edifice is completed, and will accommodate about two hundred beneficiaries with comfort and convenience. . . ."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ag 3, 1833, citing Gazette. This will correct Man. Com. Coun. (1865), 640, which gives this as the corner-stone date. See also L. M. R. K., III: 951 (under "Minto"); and N. Y. Times, Mr 20, 1869.

5 Mr. Town, the architect, whose plan for the custom-house was the one chosen by Mr. McLane, has been sent for by the secretary of the treasury, and he is to leave for Washington on Aug. 6. Advertisements for contracts will be issued and building operations commenced immediately.—Eve. Post, Ag 5, 1833. The original perspective water-colour view of this building, by A. J. Davis, Town's partner, and one of the finest early American architectural drawings in existence, is now in the possession of Mr. J. Pierpont Morgan. It came from a splendid collection of several hundred drawings by Davis, acquired in 1924 by the Metropolitan Museum of Art from Mr. Jos. B. Davis, a grandson of A. J. Davis. See, further, S 2, 1833; Jl 4, 1834. Aug. 5

7 "The improvement which has recently taken place in the domestic architecture of this city, as respects external form and symmetry, has been the subject of remark by strangers. A style less tawdry and more in consonance with the rules of good taste has been introduced. Those ugly projections from the roofs, called dormant [!] windows, which in many streets disfigure almost every private building, have been generally banished from the new edifices. No one can hesitate as to the fine result which results from a simpler construction of the roof, who gives a single glance at those noble blocks of buildings which have been erected around Washington Square and elsewhere within a short time. . . . There is still in many places too much disposition among those who put up houses to build in a different style from their neighbors. . . . A modern dwelling of three stories in height, and of the ordinary width, is out of all proportion for a single building. Standing by itself it is a steeple rather than a house, and should be connected in a block with two or three others of the same height and of a uniform architecture, in order to possess a proper symmetry. . . . Another improvement which we should be glad to see carried into effect, is the employment of a nobler and more durable material in building. It is recorded to the honor of Augustus that he found Rome of brick and left it of marble. . . . There is scarcely any kind of stone, the effect of which in building, even when rudely hewn, is not superior to brick [!]. But to erect public buildings, intended for the use of successive generations, of such a frail and perishable material as brick [!], is decidedly in bad taste."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ag 7, 1833. See also 1833, supra.

9 The case of Bogardus vs. Trinity Church "has been decided by the Chancellor in favor of the Church—all the objections raised to the plea setting up the Church title under the title of Queen Ann, and the subsequent uninterrupted possession, being overruled. The complainants have a right to reply to the plea, by denying the facts contained in it, and unless this be done within thirty days, the bill is to be dismissed."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ag 9, 1833, citing American. The Trinity Church Pamphlets (collected for the corporation, 1857), relate to events of subsequent date in connection with Trinity's claim of title, which, from time to time, has been in dispute in the courts and legislature. 18 The "Royal William," built at Quebec in 1830–31, sails from Pictou, Nova Scotia, for London. She arrived at Gravesend on Sept. 12, and was soon after sold for £10,000.—Canadian Mag., XXIX: 10–15. The "Royal William" was the third steamer to cross the Atlantic, the earlier ones being the "Savannah" in 1819 (q.v., My 22) and the "Curaçoa" in 1828 (q.v., Ag 12). For the first trans-Atlantic steamships to arrive in New York—the "Sirius" and the "Great Western"—see Ap 22 and 23, 1838.

30 "The Red Rover.—A magnificent new omnibus, . . . has made its appearance recently in Wall-street, drawn by four beautiful and spirited crops. Its route and hue seem to justify its title; it is of rich crimson, tastefully gilded, and its course is through Chatham-street and the Bowery to Fourth-st., thence across the city to Military Hall, Sixth Avenue, and then down to 273 Bleecker-street . . . The route is performed every hour . . ."—N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., Ag 30, 1833, citing the Standard. See also Ap 16, 1831.

Sept. 2 "Several meetings have been held in different wards of this city, at which resolutions have been passed in favour of removing the Custom House up town and widening Nassau street. . . .

"The object of getting up these meetings is manifestly to make a show of public opinion in favor of the project. We protest, however, against their being taken as any evidence of public opinion. . . . Those who are busiest in favor of the removal of the Custom House are well known to be speculators, persons 1833 Sept. 2 who own property up town, the value of which they think will be enhanced by having a Custom House in their neighborhood, and men who want to make themselves popular by their zeal in the upper wards. . . .

"Should the Custom House be removed, it is clear to us that those who expect to be benefited by it will be disappointed. It will not change the seat of business for the city, and of consequence will not increase the value of property in the upper wards as is idly imagined. The merchants will not leave their old and convenient places of business in the neighborhood of the wharves and of Wall street and the Exchange. . . . The place in which the business of the city was transacted for years before the revolution is the place in which it is transacted still, and is likely to be so for half a century to come. . . ."—N. Y. Eve. Post, S 2, 1833. See also ibid., S 4, 7, 10, 11, 12, 17, O 26, 29, N 4, 27, 29, 1833.

3 The publication of The Sun begins. It was a daily, and the first successfully established paper which sold for a cent. The publisher was Benjamin H. Day.—See the first issue; also North, Newspaper and Periodical Press, 89; and King's Handbook, 612.

16 The boundary-line between New York and New Jersey is settled by treaty. Ellis and Bedloe's Islands were on the Jersey side of the line, but New York retained jurisdiction.—Gerard, City Water Rights, Streets, and Real Estate, 66–69. See F 5, 1834.

" The mayor transmits to the common council a letter from the secretary of the treasury signifying the intention of the U. S. government to adopt measures for erecting a custom-house at the north-east corner of Wall and Nassau Sts.—Mayor's Message (1833), 101. See, also descrip. of Pl. 166, III: 848. See, further, F 27, and Jl 4, 1834.

The government added to the property, taken for this purpose, two lots, Nos. 3 and 4, which had been acquired respectively from the Delaware & Hudson Canal Co. in Dec., 1832 (Liber Deeds, CCXC: 292), and from the National Bank, in Jan., 1833 (ibid., CCXC: 462).

18 President Jackson reads to his cabinet an elaborate paper, drafted by Atty.-Gen. Taney, setting forth his reasons for deciding upon the removal of government deposits from the U. S. Bank after Oct. 1. Secretary of the Treasury Duane refused to give the order or to resign, and he was therefore dismissed, Taney appointed in his place, and the deposits removed to certain state ("pet") banks. This caused great agitation throughout the country, and Jackson was censured by congress.—Macdonald, Select Docs., etc., 289–303, 306–17.

19 The "specification of the materials and mechanical execution of the proposed new Custom House in this city" is described.—N. Y. Eve. Post, S 19, 1833.

26 Congress having failed to erect a monument to Washington in accordance with its resolutions of Aug. 7, 1783 (q.v.) and Dec. 24, 1799, a public meeting is held in the city hall at Washington, D. C., to take up the matter and carry it into execution by means of private subscriptions. This meeting resulted in the organization of the Washington National Monument Society whose object was the erection of "a great National Monument to the memory of Washington at the seat of the Federal Government." Contributions were at first limited to one dollar, but this restriction was afterwards removed. The progress of the fund was very slow, and it was not until 1848 (q.v., Ja 31 and Jl 4) that enough money was raised to justify the society in commencing work.—Harvey, Hist. of Washington Nat'l Monument and Washington Nat'l Monument Soc. (1902), 12–41.

Oct. 2 An "Anti-Slavery Society of New York" is formed, and abolition riots begin. The following are the principal incidents: On Sunday, Sept. 29, the following notice was given from the pulpits of most of the Presbyterian churches, and on Oct. 1 and 2 was published in most of the daily papers: "The friends of immediate abolition of slavery in the United States are requested to meet at Clinton Hall on Wednesday evening, 2d October, at half past seven o'clock, to form a New York City Anti-Slavery Society. Committee: Joshua Leavitt, John Rankin, William Goodell, William Green, Jr., Lewis Tappan." Oct. 2

One paper makes the comment that the truth is "The notorious Garrison has returned among us, and the good people of this city are called upon to partake of his mad schemes for exciting the South against the North, by an interference with their slaves, and the revival of those sectional jealousies which, mixed up with the slave question, are calculated to destroy the Union of the States and bring upon us all the horrors of civil war."—Morn. Courier and N. Y. Enquirer, O 2, 1833.

The following placard is posted: "Notice to all persons from the South.—All persons interested in the object of a meeting called by J. Leavitt, W. Goodell, W. Green, Jr., J. Rankin, and L. Tappan, at Clinton Hall, this evening at seven o'clock, are requested to attend at the same hour and place. [signed] Many Southerners "N. B. All citizens who may feel disposed to manifest the true feeling of the State on this subject are requested to attend."—Annals of N. Am., 569–70.

The trustees of Clinton Hall, becoming alarmed, refused to open the hall (see Hone's Diary, I: 79). The organizers of the society therefore met, 53 in number, in the Chatham Street Chapel, of which Rev. Chas. G. Finney was minister (which stood just east of the present Brooklyn Bridge terminal); here they quickly organized and adjourned. The crowd that had gathered at Clinton Hall, hearing this, rushed to the chapel, but were just too late. Garrison, then 28 years of age, was among the organizers.—See William Lloyd Garrison, 1805–1879, by Wendell Phillips Garrison and Francis Jackson Garrison (Boston, 1894), I: 382.

The next day, the Courier-Enquirer published an account of the opposition meeting under the heading, "Great Public Meeting. The Agitators Defeated! The Constitution Triumphant." Those opposed to the anti-slavery movement, it appears, assembled on the 2d, organized, and adjourned to Tammany Hall, not less than 5,000 being present, who adopted the following resolution:

"Resolved, That our duty to the country, and our Southern Brethern in particular, render it improper and inexpedient to agitate a question pregnant with peril and difficulty to the common weal.

"Resolved, That it is our duty as citizens and Christians to mitigate, not to increase the evils of slavery by an unjustifiable interference, in a matter which requires the will and cordial concurrence of all to modify or remove.

"Resolved, That we take this opportunity to express to our Southern brethern, our fixed and unalterable determination to resist every attempt that may be made to interfere with the relation in which master and slave now stand, as guaranteed to them by the Constitution of the United States."—Morn. Cour. and N. Y. Enquirer, O 3, and O 4, 1833. See also Winsor, VII: 287; McMaster, VI: 180.

Mayor Lee sends a communication to the common council respecting the application of the village of Brooklyn to become a city. He recalls the fact that the application was not voted upon favourably at the last session of the legislature (see F 8), but will undoubtedly come up again at the next session. He questions if "two commercial cities, under two distinct and separate governments, located on one harbour, may not prove to be mutually injurious," and he recommends the subject be submitted to the consideration of a proper committee.—Docs., Bd. of Ald. (1833–4), III, Doc. No. 30. A special committee was named and a report submitted (see Ja 6, 1834). 14

Henry Clay arrives in New York. On Oct. 16, he was visited at the city hall by the Chamber of Commerce and the merchants and attended the performance at the Park Theatre. An offer of a public dinner was declined.—N. Y. Eve. Post, O 15 and 17, 1833. Lodgings were prepared for him at the American Hotel.—Hone's Diary, I: 80. 15

The common council resolves to use the triangular block of ground, bounded by Canal, Hoboken, West, and Washington Sts., on which to build a market for country produce, as part of Clinton Market (see D 8, 1828). This was made ground, a part of which was used at this time as a place of deposit for fuel for the city's poor, and another part for paving-stone.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, II: 57–58; De Voe, 530. An aggregate of $4,455 was appropriated the next year to carry the resolution into effect.—Ibid., II: 233, 270. 22

In the advertising columns of the Evening Post of this day and several days following appears an "Address of the New York City Anti-slavery Society [see O 2] to the People of the City of New 25

1833 O 25 York" on "Immediate Emancipation."—N. Y. Eve. Post, O 25 and 26, 1833.

29 Wm. B. Astor advertises for sealed proposals "for building The Park Hotel, on Broadway, to extend from Barclay street to Vesey street."—N. Y. Eve. Post, O 29, 1833. This was later named the Astor House. By April 4, 1834, the demolition of the residences on this block front was under way. The expected cost of this new "palais royal" was five or six thousand dollars.—Hone's Diary, I: 99. Other accounts attribute the enterprise to John Jacob Astor.—See Ibid.; and My 1, and Jl 4, 1834.

Nov. 1 Maj. David B. Douglass, who had been appointed by the commissioners to make a survey and examine the various routes for an aqueduct to bring water to New York City (see F 26), makes his report, which is in favour of using Croton water.—Doc. 12, Bd. of Ald., Ag 1, 1836; Colden, Memoir Croton Aqueduct, 116. See also N. Y. Eve. Post, N 15, 1833. See My 2, 1834.

4 On this and the two following days an amendment to the state constitution providing for the election of the mayor in New York City by popular vote (see Ap 25) was ratified by a very large majority.—N. Y. Eve. Post, N 11, 1833. For the first election under the modern plan, see Ap 10, 1834.

8 "Our streets are again in an uproar, and once more for a laudable object. . . . We found the Bowery lined with men and gas-pipes yesterday morning, and on our return in the evening, both had vanished, the men to their homes . . . and the pipes snugly under ground. On inquiry we learned that the Manhattan Gas light Company had commenced . . . piping for up-town. The city north of Grand and Canal streets has . . . hitherto been denied the advantage of the modern improvements in Gas Lights. . . . The works of the Manhattan Gas Light Company are now erecting on the margin of the North River adjoining Mr. West's Turpentine Distillery, at the foot of Eighteenth street, and a part will be under cover within sixty days, within which time the gas holder and machinery are expected from England The company have already received about three miles of mains and pipes, which with others daily expected, will enable them to lay a line through the Bowery, Broadway, Grand, Canal, Bleecker, and some other streets, before the 1st December coming, and get into successful operation early next summer."—N. Y. Eve. Post, N 8, 1833.

18 Da Ponte's Italian Opera House, on the north-west corner of Church and Leonard Sts., is opened for the first time—Hone's Diary, I: 81–82; Haswell's Reminiscences, 277–78; N. Y. Eve. Post, N 16, 18, and 19, 1833; L. M. R. K., III: 984.

19 Henry Clay is in New York, the guest of Chancellor Kent, and Philip Hone.—Hone's Diary, I: 82, 83.

Dec. 3 The common council refuses to permit the trustees of N. Y. University "to project buttresses, &c. on Washington place," it being deemed "not expedient to authorize any encroachment upon the streets." The street com'r is directed to see "that the towers and buttresses of the University are conformed to the laws in this respect."—Proc., App'd by Mayor, II: 80.

" The common council adopts the joint report of the committees on markets, on wharves, and on public lands and places, in favour of filling up Old Slip to South St. (the exterior line), erecting a new market-house on the ground filled in, and when this is finished removing the old Franklin Market which fronts the slip.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, II: 82.

9 "The Bank of the United States has published an elaborate and able report in vindication of its measures, as a reply to the charges against it in the report of the Secretary of the Treasury. . . ."—Hone's Diary, I: 83.

" The mayor signs a resolution to refer to the alderman and assistant of the Twelfth Ward, with power, the subject of designating some suitable place on the Bloomingdale Road for the sale of horses, etc. at public auction.—Mayor's Message (1833), 127.

10 The special committee appointed to consider the subject of the application of the village of Brooklyn to become a city (see O 14) confers with delegates from Brooklyn (both village & town) and King's Co. in the city hall.—Docs., Bd. of Ald. (1833–4), 535–36. This was the first conference of such a nature in the history of either locality. The result of the conference was stated in full in a report to the common council on Jan. 6, 1834 (q.v.).

17 The name of North St. is changed to Houston St.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, II: 85.

27 A fire breaks out at Vauxhall Garden, which destroys or injures "all the buildings on the premises."—N. Y. Eve. Post, D 28, 1833.

Dec. 30 "The times are dreadfully hard. The supererogatory act of tyranny which the President exercised in removing the deposits has produced a state of alarm and panic unprecedented in our city. The friends of the United States Bank on the one side, and the whole array of Jackson men, together with the friends of the Pet Banks, on the other, mutually accuse each other of being the cause of the pressure. . . ."—Hone's Diary, I: 84–85.

31 The ban against lotteries (see Ap 30) goes into effect. The Am. Art Union was one of the enterprises thus proscribed.—See Ja 29, 1844; D 15, 1853.

" ". . . Never in any year did the 31st of December fail so completely to redeem the pledges of the 1st of January."—Hone's Diary, I: 86.

— Early in this year, a meeting of artisans and mechanics sent a delegation to President Jackson in Washington to petition him for relief from the hard times resulting from his policy towards the United States Bank.—McMaster, Hist. of the People of the U. S., VI: 202. For the results of separate petitions to the president by merchants and mechanics, see Courier and Enquirer, F 7, 17, and 25, 1834.

In this year, the first volume of The Congressional Globe, containing the debates and proceedings of congress, was published. The name was changed to The Congressional Record with the issue of March 4, 1873.

— In this year, William Dunlap published, in two volumes, his History of the Rise and Progress of the Arts of Design in the United States. A new, illustrated edition of this work, edited with additions by Frank W. Bayley and Chas. E. Goodspeed, was published in 1918, in three volumes, by C. E. Goodspeed & Co. of Boston.

Dunlap's concluding paragraphs are on the subject of American collections of paintings. He gives the lists of paintings owned by Robt. Gilmor of Baltimore, and Philip Hone of New York. He mentions several other collections of his time, owned by New York citizens, notably those of Michael Paff, Miss Douglass, Dr. Hosack, Myndert Van Schaick, Jas. Renwick, and Luman Reed. Of collectors of prints, he refers to John Allen and Ithiel Town whose treasures in this line are "magnificent."—Hist. of the Arts of Design (Goodspeed ed.), III: 270–80. For later painters and private collections of paintings, see Tuckerman's Book of the Artists (1867).

— At this time, Francis Alexander, of New York, was one of the most successful of American portrait-painters. For an account of his work, see Dunlap (Goodspeed ed.), III: 232–40.

— In this year was shown in London, at The Panorama, Leicester Square, a view of New York, painted by Robert Burford from drawings made by him in the autumn of 1832. At the same time, a pamphlet was published describing the city and the landmarks shown in the view, and containing two wood cuts of the view in outline. These two views are seen from the centre of Broadway opposite Ann St., looking respectively north and south. A copy of this pamphlet is in the author's collection. For a news report of the exhibition, see N. Y. Mirror, XII: 63 (Aug. 23), and N. Y. Eve. Post, Jl 25, 1834.

— In this year, 883 new buildings were erected in New York.—Eve. Post, Ja 27, 1835, citing Jour. of Com.

— In this year, the residence of Henry Brevoort, Jr., was erected at the north-west cor. of Fifth Ave. and 9th St. It was sold to Henry de Rham in 1850 (q.v., Ja 21) for $57,000, and by his family to Geo. F. Baker, Jr., in 1921 for $450,000, thus changing hands but twice in 90 years.—See N. Y. Tribune, Je 29, 1919. The house was still standing in March, 1925, when Mr. Baker sold the property to Bing & Bing, Inc. who resold it in April to the Morris White Holding Co., whose purpose it was to improve this corner at once with a 15-storey hotel.—The Sun, Mr 18, 1925; N. Y. Times, Ap 28, 1925. It was demolished in the summer of 1925.—Ibid., O 25, 1925. See, further, F 24, 1840.

— In this year, the restrictions governing the use of the Tontine Coffee House as a tavern or coffee-house were removed by the Court of Chancery, and the building was leased for general business purposes (see description of Pl. 69, I: 453).

By 1835, the "balcony had been removed, and the interior of the building somewhat changed." During the fire, in Dec. of that year, the cornice of the Tontine caught fire three times, but was extinguished.—Ibid., 323–24. See, further, 1836.

— In this year, the "N. Y. Opthalmic Dispensary" was founded.

1834 On May 15, 1837, it was incorporated.—Laws of N. Y. (1837), chap. 437.

— In this year, the Murray homestead, from which Murray Hill takes its name, was burned. The country-seat of Robt. Murray was near Fourth Ave. and 37th St., "amid spacious grounds, the present Grand Central Station occupying what was then one of his corn-fields." The farm lay between the Bloomingdale and Boston Post Roads and as far as Kip's Bay.—Haswell, Reminiscences, 21–22, 291; Wilson, Mem. Hist. of N. Y., III: 299; L. M. R. K., III: 951.

— In this year, the "Naturalization Office" was in the Rotunda. For an outline of this building's history, see Howe's Hist. of the Metropolitan Museum of Art (1913), 80–84.

— In this year, Fulton St. was widened from Broadway to Ryder's Alley; Pine St. was widened from Broadway to Nassau St.; and 28th St. was opened from Third to Fourth Ave.—Man. Com. Coun. (1857), 531; ibid. (1865), 544.

— Probably in this year was made the profile of 155th St. from the Hudson to the Harlem River, filed as Map No. 610 in bureau of topography, borough president's office.

— The following views, depicting New York in 1834, are found in Vol. III of the present work: the Garneray view (Pl. 110); the Maverick view of Wall St. (Pl. 111); Manhattanville (Pl. 112); the Horner view of Broadway (Pl. 113); view of New York from the bay (the Chapman-Bennett view—Pl. 116); baptizing scene on the shore of the North River, below Fort Gansevoort (Addenda Pl. 20-b); Park Hotel (the Astor House—A. Pl. 22-a).

— In this year was published the first, and, so far as known, the only, part of Megarey's Street Views in the City of New-York. The three views in this issue are reproduced and described as Pls. 98 and 104 (a and b), Vol. III (not 103, as stated in the description of Pl. 98, III: 589). These views are: "Fulton St. & Market," "Broadway from the Bowling Green," and "South St. from Maiden Lane."

— For view of the bridewell, in the Park, about 1834, see Man. Com. Coun. (1859), 180. For view of Broadway at Cortlandt St., 1834, see Man. Com. Coun. (1859), 264.

— In this year, a new edition of the city's Laws and Ordinances was published.

— In this year, the Staats-Zeitung was established as a German weekly newspaper. It became a tri-weekly in 1842, and a daily in 1845.—North, Newspaper and Periodical Press, 127.

— By this year, the "Harlæm Rail Road" had been completed from Prince St. to Yorkville, 5 miles. See F —. "For several months cars drawn by horses have been in operation from Prince-street to Yorkville, and they now run as often as once in each half hour every day in the week. The fare for each passenger is 12½ cents, and the daily expenses of each car is computed at $2.75, exclusive of wear and tear. . . .

"At Yorkville the company have erected a splendid Hotel, which at present is kept by George Nowlan. It is a spacious two story building, 80 feet in length by 30 feet in width, having a piazza around both stories. The elevation is 125 feet above tide water, commanding a view of the surrounding country, Hell-gate, and the East River, that has no equal on the Island."—N. Y. As It Is, In 1834, 21–22.

— According to Lossing, steam was first introduced as a motive power on the N. Y. & Harlem R. R. in 1834, Wm. T. James, the machinist of the road, being the inventor of the first steam motor for city railways.—Lossing, Hist. of N. Y. City, I: 402.

— By this year, the Manhattan Gas Light Co., whose works were on the North River, foot of 18th St., had laid its main pipes through 18th St., Ninth Ave., Hudson St., Bleecker St., Sixth Ave., Waverly Place, Broadway, Bowery, Broome, Centre, and Grand Sts. It expected "to furnish the citizens in the upper parts of the City with a full supply of pure Gas within the current year."—N. Y. As It Is, In 1834, 21.

— In this year, the Stuyvesant Institute was organized.—N. Y. As It Is, 1839, p. 69. For the erection of its building on Broadway, see L. M. R. K., III: 986, and S 1, 1837.

Jan. The common council adopts a report of the market committee
— favouring the demand of petitioners who have reminded the board of the latter's promise to erect a market-house on West St. between Christopher and Amos Sts., on which promise they relied when they bought lots near by. Some time later, a resolution was passed to build a house extending on Christopher St. 30 ft., on West St. 197 ft. 10 in., on Weehawken St. 197 ft. 10 in., and on Amos St. 30 ft. The board appropriated $3,475 for the purpose. This became known as the Weehawken or Greenwich Market.—De Voe, Market Book, 576 et seq. See Jl 6, 1835. Before the grounds were filled in, however, the fire of 1835 (q. v., D 16) destroyed the old wooden market-house.—De Voe, 520. Jan. —

— The grand jury calls the attention of the city authorities to the "filthy, dilapidated and comfortless" condition of the bridewell. This has been a theme of grand jury presentments for the last twenty years.—Courier and Enquirer, Ja 21, 1834. For view of the bridewell at this time, see Man. Com. Coun. (1859), 180.

1 The mayor approves a committee report, adopted by the common council on Dec. 16, 1833, to extend Washington Market. An appropriation in March shows the cost of this was $3,325. De Voe, writing in 1861, said of it: "This is the present market-house, directly on the east side, and adjoining West Street, running from Vesey to Fulton Street, afterwards known as the Country and Fish Market; . . ."

The old fish market being now much out of repair, and disconnected from the old market buildings, the common council, in July, authorised the supt. of buildings "to cause the Washington Fish Market to be removed and repaired," at an expense not exceeding $1,400, to be paid out of the general appropriation for markets. "The removal and rebuilding of this old market house caused a connection of the old market-houses with this new 'Country and Fish Market' only on the Vesey Street side; and on the Fulton Street side a large vacant space, for country wagons, carts, &c., was left for their accommodation."—Market Book, 435–36; L. M. R. K., III: 960. See Je 18, 1847; Je 4, 1851.

3 The publication of "Peabody's Parlor Journal," No. 1, is advertised under the caption "The Cheapest Periodical In The World." Each weekly issue costs six cents.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ja 3, 1834.

6 The special committee to whom was referred the subject of the application of the village of Brooklyn to become a chartered city (see O 14, 1833) makes its report to the common council. They tell of a conference with delegates from the village and town of Brooklyn, and the county of Kings, at city hall on Dec. 10, 1833 (q. v.). "Great diversities of opinion difficult to reconcile, existed in the conference." While the King's County delegates "insisted, that the provisions of the bill were necessary for them and could not injure New-York," the committee held that the erection of a new city "adjoining another ancient one, under such circumstances as will expose the parties to a commercial rivalship," was "incompatible with the prosperity of either," and invited the delegates "to take into their consideration the propriety of uniting the city and county of New-York and the village of Brooklyn, or, if more satisfactory, the whole county of Kings, into one city, under one chartered government." The reply was that the mere communication of such a proposition to their constituents "would cause great irritation, and deep and lasting disquietude." The committee reports, therefore, that nothing was accomplished by the conference, but they present to the common council in a masterful fashion the unfortunate aspects of the charter Brooklyn desires. Attention is called to the riparian rights of the city of New York extending to low water mark on the Brooklyn shore, as a "high demonstration of the propriety of an entire conservative jurisdiction over the whole of these waters, that there may not be different and conflicting regulations in the same port and harbour, interfering and clashing with each other to the great detriment of commerce and good neighbourhood." It is observed that this bill "is far more incursive in its provisions" than the act of 1827 (see Ap 3, 1827) incorporating the village of Brooklyn, and, "if it should be found impracticable to modify the bill in a satisfactory manner, it will be necessary to remonstrate against its passage," and "against every other charter or law, which shall infringe upon the rights, privileges, or immunities of the city of New-York."—Docs., Bd. of Ald. and Assts. (1833–4), Doc. 56. The report was "laid on the table and ordered to be printed."—Proc., Bd. of Ald. (1833–4), 6: 101. The legislature granted a city charter to Brooklyn on April 8 (q. v.).

8 The prices brought at the sale of the Cedar St. Presbyterian Church, and the four lots it occupied, are published, and show an aggregate of $74,850.—N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., Ja 8, 1834. The church was taken down during the year. In 1835, the congregation built "an elegant house of worship" at the corner of Duane and Church Sts., which was opened for worship on Jan. 3, 1836 (q. v.).—Greenleaf, 137–38; L. M. R. K., III: 930.

1834 Jan. 14 The common council appropriates $4,794.95 "to defray the expenses of graduating Union place to the city level."—Proc., App'd by Mayor, II: 106. See, further, N 12.

" Rev. John Stanford, D. D., dies in his 81st year. He had been for so many years chaplain of various city institutions (see Je, 1813) that the following newspaper notice seems readily explicable: "The members of the Corporation, the Governor of the New York Hospital, the Commissioners of the Alms House, the Managers of the House of Refuge, and of the other humane and charitable institutions of the city; such of the Clergy as through accident may not have received a special invitation, and his friends generally, are invited to attend the funeral."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ja 15, 1834. For Dr. Stanford's career, see Sommers, Memoir of John Stanford; Sprague, Annals of Am. Pulpits, VI: 244–51.

15 A deranged condition of the currency produces a money crisis throughout the country.—See editorial in Courier and Enquirer, Ja 15, 1834, and passim. See, further, F 8.

" At a time when the newspaper columns are reporting daily the debates in congress concerning the removal of deposits from the U. S. Bank to the state banks, a resolution is passed by the "Democratic Republican Young Men's Ward Committee" for the Sixth Ward, reading: "Resolved, that we have unremitted confidence in the unshaken firmness, integrity and patriotism of our worthy chief magistrate, Andrew Jackson, and no act since he first received the helm of government into his hands has given us more cause to rejoice that our constitution has an independent supporter, than his late one of withdrawing the countenance of the government from a dangerous monied monopoly in the hands of a few selfish individuals who, to gratify their own ends, would bring institutions fraught with evil to the liberties of the country, in array against the will of the sovereign people."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ja 16, 1834. However, at a meeting of "Merchants and Dealers" three days later, a different view was voiced in a "Memorial," declaring that "a general want of confidence, and fearful apprehension of greater impending evils, are undeniable facts, and may, if necessary, be substantiated by the extravagant premium required for obtaining money on the best security; by the fall in every species of public stocks, without excepting the most solid State Banks and State Loans; and by the effect already produced on the cash sales of Real Estate, and above all, by the interruption of the ordinary remittances, and the almost entire cessation of every branch of business connected with the inland exchanges, and the purchase and exportation of the produce of the country." These difficulties are ascribed "principally, if not exclusively, to the unfortunate change which has taken place in the relations between the Government and the Bank of the United States, and to the probably unforseen consequences which have flown therefrom." The memorialists maintain that "a sound, secure, and stable currency cannot be sustained without the agency of a Bank of the United States;" and "with a view to that all-important object" they pray that "either the charter of the present Bank be renewed, or another be substituted, to take effect upon the expiration of the present charter; but in either case with such modifications, and under such restrictions as experience may suggest."—N. Y. Morning Courier and Enquirer, Ja 20, 1834.

20 The mayor signs a resolution appropriating $3,400 to defray the expense of placing posts and chains around plots in the Park.—Mayor's Messages (Gideon Lee), 145.

21 "The commercial distress caused by the derangement of the relations between the Government and the Bank of the United States does not appear to be alleviated. . . ."—Hone's Diary, I: 87.

" "We learn that the Commissioners for continuing Albany street, fifty feet in width through Trinity Church yard into Broadway have completed their assessments. The total amount of their estimate of expense is $96,500; of which nearly two-thirds are awarded to the Church—which latter retains also a slip of land nine feet in width on the north side of the projected street, and extending from Broadway to Lumber street. . . .

"As the Grounds of Trinity Church were given to it to be used solely as a place for burial, it is questioned whether it can dispose of the slip of nine feet, north of the new street, and that hence the gore will ultimately form part of the latter."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ja 21, 1834. Although the extension of streets through Trinity Churchyard was contemplated at various times, it was never carried out.

23 Hone describes a fête at the home of "Mr. Ray," who, he says, "has the finest house in New York, and it is furnished and fitted up in a style of the utmost magnificence,—painted ceilings, gilded mouldings, rich satin ottomans, curtains in the last Parisian taste, and splendid mirrors which reflect and multiply all the rays, great and small. . . ."—Hone's Diary, I: 88–89. Jan. 23

The "Knickerbockers" of New York celebrate their first anniversary at a banquet in the "City Saloon, in Broadway." Among the toasts is one in Dutch, offered by Hermanus A. Vedder, which, translated, reads: "To the memory and virtue of the true Hollander William the Third, Prince of Orange and King of Great Britain and Ireland; he triumphed over the House of Stuarts, laid the foundation of the present Government of England, and also that of abolishing religious persecutions." A committee was appointed by the meeting to take measures for the formation of "a Knickerbocker Society" in this city, "with the avowed purpose of preserving some of the festive customs of our Dutch ancestors, and that the annual meeting be held hereafter on the Eve of St. Nicholas, (the 6th of December)."—Courier and Enquirer, F 1, 1834. Cf. the organization of the St. Nicholas Society, F 14, 1835 (q. v.). 24

"New Custom House.—The workmen have broken ground, and the old buildings are about being removed."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ja 28, 1834. 28

A committee report of the N. Y. & Harlem R. R. shows that a single track was laid by this time, on granite sleepers, from Prince St. to Union Place, where a double track commences, similarly built, to 23d St., and on wooden sleepers from there to 84th St. or Yorkville, except that portion between 33d and 56th Sts., where there was as yet only one track. Feb. —

The expense for building the road from Prince St. to Observatory Place (Yorkville), was $220,000; and for excavations, embankments, etc., between Observatory Place and Harlem, about $92,000. The real estate consisted of 6 lots at the corner of Fourth Ave. and 25th St., on which car-barns, stables, shops, &c., had been partly erected, and 10 acres at Observatory Place, where the company built an $8,000 hotel.

The road was in use in June, 1834, as far north as Murray Hill. The company owned five "pleasure cars," but only three were in use at a time. The total number of passengers carried up to this time was 89,094; fare, six cents for adults and three cents for children.—N. Y. Ann. Register, 1834. See 1834, p. 1724; and My.

The New York State legislature ratifies an agreement entered into by commissioners appointed by this state and those appointed by New Jersey (see Ap 16, 1827) to settle the boundary-line between the two states in New York Bay and the Hudson River.—Laws of N. Y. (1834), chap. 8. See S 16, 1833. 5

Cadwallader D. Colden, grandson of the colonial governor, and formerly mayor of the city, dies at the age of 65.—N. Y. Eve. Post, F 8, 1834. In December, a mural monument to his memory was erected in Grace Church, the inscription being written by Gulian C. Verplanck.—N. Y. Mirror, D 20, 1834. 7

A great non-partisan public meeting of over 20,000 persons is held in the Park in front of the city hall, upholding the principle of a national bank, and declaring in favour of re-chartering the U. S. Bank, with such modifications and restrictions as congress may deem expedient. Philip Hone acts as president of the meeting.—Courier and Enquirer, F 10, 1834; Hone's Diary, I: 91. See F 11. 8

A meeting of merchants and traders is held at the exchange, and resolutions passed for the purpose of combining mercantile influences for commercial, not party, ends.—Courier and Enquirer, F 12, 1834. Hone describes it.—Hone's Diary, I: 92. 11

The common council permits the erection of a liberty-pole in the open space at the junction of Chapel (West Broadway) and Franklin Sts., in the Fifth Ward, to be surrounded with a circular iron railing, 10 ft. in diameter.—Proc., App'd by the Mayor, XI: 122. See also F 22. "

The water commissioner makes a report to the common council showing the height of buildings in various parts of the city above tide-water.—N. Y. Com. Adv., F 16, 1834 (with illustrations). 16

The common council resolves to erect a flagstaff at the Battery.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, II: 130; Mayor's Message (1834), 164. On March 31, a flag was raised on a flagstaff erected there by the city.—See Grand Opening of the New Armory of the Eighth Regt. (1890), 12. 18

A liberty-pole called "Riley's," 137 ft. high, is erected by the Democratic party on the south-west corner of West Broadway (formerly Chapel St.) and Franklin St. (see F 11). It was shattered by lightning the following year, and another immediately erected. 22

1834 F 22 The latter remained until 1858.—Costello, Our Firemen, 192–94.

27 The building on Wall St., erected in 1814 by Eastburn, Kirk & Downs as a store, and used since 1816 as the custom-house, is being demolished.—N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., F 27, 1834; descrip. of Pl. 166, III: 848. For the new custom-house, on the same site, see My, and Jl 4, 1834.

Mar. 3 The city charter is amended by act of the legislature so as to permit the election of the mayor (see N 4, 1833) by electors qualified to vote for charter officers.—Laws of N. Y. (1834), chap. 23. See Mr 19, 21; Ap 2, 8, 10, 11, 15.

19 The following memorandum by Philip Hone sketches briefly the political issues involved in the impending election for mayor—the first election of a mayor by the people since Delanoy's on Oct. 14, 1689 (q. v.), and the first fruits of the charter amendment of March 3, in this year (q. v.). Hone's observations also illustrate very strikingly the adherence of a party man to his convictions and his party irrespective of the merits of the candidate for office:

"The Committee of National Republicans appointed to nominate a mayor met last evening, and nominated for that office Gulian C. Verplanck. This gentleman was ousted from his seat in Congress by the Jackson party, because he would not go all lengths in his opposition to the United States Bank. In that point of view he is a good candidate, and his success will be a triumph for the bank party; but I do not think him a popular man, or by any means well qualified for the office. He is not a practical man; learned he certainly is, and an able writer on subjects connected with belles-lettres and the fine arts; but he knows little of mankind, and his political course has been unsteady as the wind. Still he must be supported. The Tammany men have sent a deputation to Albany to obtain Charles L. Livingston's consent to run as their candidate for the mayoralty. He is more suited for the office, and if he had not committed himself against his judgment in the approval of the ruinous course of measures pursued by the administration in relation to the bank, I would have supported him with all my heart. As it is, I shall have to make some sacrifice of feeling in voting for Mr. Verplanck against him. But it cannot be helped; the salvation of the country depends in a great measure upon the defeat of the Jackson party in the struggle which will come on next month, and personal predilections must give way to the public good."—Hone's Diary, I: 97. See, further, Mr 21.

21 "Mr. Livingston [see Mr 19] refuses, it is understood, to run as mayor. Mr. Cornelius W. Lawrence has been applied to, and consents to run as the candidate of the Jackson or Tammany party. This is a bold measure on the part of the Jackson men. Mr. Lawrence is now their congressman, and circumstances have placed him on prominent ground as an opposer of the bank and supporter of the measures of the administration (against his conscience, as I believe on mine). He has been vilified by the delegates of the merchants for refusing to present their memorial, and his name has been hissed when it occurred in their report. He is most heartily sick of his present situation, but he is compelled by his party to accept the nomination of mayor. This will be a fair trial of the issue,—Mr. Lawrence, the man who has for the sake of party proved recreant to the interests of the merchants, of which profession he is a member, on the one side, and Mr. Verplanck, who lost his seat in Congress because he would not pursue the same course, on the other. The personal characters of both these gentlemen are irreproachable. Verplanck at first declined the nomination, but it is now understood that he consents to serve."—Hone's Diary, I: 98. " The city acquires by condemnation proceedings the land now comprised in Tompkins Sq. Park (see Jl 30, 1833) from 7th to 10th St., Aves. A and B (10.508 acres).—Prendergast, Record of Real Estate. See Je 1.

29 The contract for excavating for the custom-house bears this date. It is for $750, and is signed by William Beard, the contractor, and the commissioners.—From the original document, sold with the Joline collection (item No. 375), at Anderson Art Galleries, Feb. 23, 1915. See also 9th Ann. Rep., Am. Scen. and Hist. Pres. Soc., 58. This building, in 1863 (q. v.), became the sub-treasury of the U. S. See, further, My and Jl 4, 1834.

Apr. 2 Hone records in his diary a reception to Daniel Webster at Hone's house. Webster confirms a declaration which he had previously made to Hone in Washington, "that the hopes of our friends there to bring about a favourable change in the affairs of the country rely mainly upon the success of the great struggle which is to take place in New York next week."—Hone's Diary, I: 98. See, further, Ap 8. Apr. 2

The mayor approves a law to regulate the city prison and bridewell. The eastern wing and basement of the jail, the cells connected with the first district watch-house, the basement of the building at the corner of Third St. and the Bowery, and also such portion of the House of Refuge as may be appropriated by the managers of that institution for the confinement of persons under the age of 15 accused of offenses, are designated as the "City Prison and Bridewell."—Laws and Ordinances of the City of N. Y. (1833), 237. 6

The town of Brooklyn is incorporated as a city by an act of the legislature defining its corporate powers and duties.—Laws of N. Y. (1834), chap. 92. As a village it had been incorporated on April 12, 1816 (q. v.). 8

Cornelius Lawrence (see Mr 19), the Jackson and Tammany candidate, is chosen mayor of New York by a small majority over Gulian Verplanck. The election, which continued for three days beginning Tuesday, April 8, was accompanied by great excitement and by disturbances so serious that the militia had to be called out to restore order. The common council was carried by the Whigs.—Hone's Diary, I: 99–101; N. Y. Eve. Post, Ap 9, 1834. Cf. Lossing, Hist. of N. Y. City, I: 312 et seq. 10

"Such an excitement! So wonderful is the result of this election that all New York, has been kept in a state of alarm; immense crowds have been collected at Masonic and Tammany Halls, but the greatest concourse was in front of the Exchange. The street was a dense mass of people. Partial returns were coming in every few minutes, and so close has been the vote that the Whigs at the Exchange and the small party for Jackson in front of the office of the 'Standard' opposite shouted alternately as the news was favourable to one or the other; and up to the last moment the result was doubtful, when, at the close of the canvass, the majority for Mr. Lawrence, the Jackson candidate, out of the immense number of votes—thirty-five thousand one hundred and forty-one—was found to be one hundred and seventy-nine. There is no doubt, however, that we have elected a majority of aldermen and assistants. The Common Council is reformed, and we shall succeed in the great fall election. It is a signal triumph of good principles over violence, illegal voting, party discipline, and the influence of office-holders."—Hone's Diary, I: 100–1. See also N. Y. Eve. Post, Ap 11, 1834. 11

This day is one of celebration for the triumph of the Whig party in the recent charter election (see Ap 10), with a fête at Castle Garden and other notable events.—Hone's Diary, I: 101–2; N. Y. Eve. Post, Ap 16, 1834. 15

"Though the Democratic Mayor was elected, a Whig Common Council was chosen, and the Whigs deemed it a triumph, which they celebrated by a banquet at Castle Garden, . . . After the banquet a portion of the company was addressed by Daniel Webster from a window of Mrs. Edgar's house in Greenwich Street.

"It was during the Mayoralty election of this year that the term 'Silk Stocking' party was applied by the Democrats to their opponents, arising from the circumstance that the excitement of the campaign was such as to draw many retired and hitherto non-partisans into it in opposition to the Democrats."—Haswell's Reminiscences, 288–89.

The legislature passes an act to convey to the city by condemnation proceedings the title to two large parcels of land, one in the Seventh Ward, bounded on the north by Grand St., east by Corlaer's St., south by Lombardy (Monroe) St., and west by part of the Geo. Lorillard estate; the other, in the Eleventh Ward, bounded north by 2d St., east by Avenue D., south by North (Houston) St., and west by the continuation of the easterly side of Sheriff St.—Laws of N. Y. (1834), chap. 150. In the former, Monroe Market was afterwards built; and in the latter, Union Market.—See L. M. R. K., III: 959, 960. 22

In support of its opinion that investments for market purposes are advantageous to the city, it is stated that Fulton Market, which cost $200,000, produces an annual revenue of $19,077.10, or 9½ percent on the investment.—De Voe, Market Book, 580–81. See Mr, 1835.

The legislature incorporates the Long Island Railroad Co., giving it authority to construct its road.—Laws of N. Y. (1834), chap. 178. This is one of the few railroad corporations which has operated continuously under its original charter and name.—N. Y. Times, Ap 24, 1924. 24

1834 Apr. 26 The legislature passes an act "to provide for deepening the waters adjacent to the wharves, piers, docks, bulkheads and shores in the city of New York."—Laws of N. Y. (1834), chap. 186; ibid., (1835), chap. 122.

May — In this month, construction of the new custom-house on Wall St. (see Jl 13, 1832; S 16, 1833; F 27, 1834) was commenced, on the site of the old one which had just been demolished.—N. Y. Com. Adv., Jl 13, 1842; Hone's Diary, II: 138. Regarding the progress of the building, see Jl 4, 1834; Mr 14, 1835; My 1 and 21, 1842.

The old building on this site had been used as a custom-house since Dec. 2, 1816 (q. v.).—See "City Hall" in L. M. R. K., III: 973, and "Custom House," III: 974, and authorities there cited. During the decade from 1832 to 1842, while the old building was being demolished and the new one erected, the customs offices were in the building at Nos. 20–22 Pine St. and 64–66 Cedar St.—N. Y. City Directory (1832–3), 738; ibid. (1841–2), 801. The new building was completed and occupied May 1, 1842 (q. v.).

— The N. Y. & Harlem R. R. is opened as far as Yorkville.—From data supplied by the company. Cf. F—; and see, further, Je —. Soon after, work was commenced on the cut at Snake Hill in Harlem from 116th to 124th Sts., which was nearly all rock, and on a wooden truss-bridge between 106th and 109th Sts. The bridge having been completed before the tunnel, the tracks were laid on the bridge, and over the Snake Hill section to 125th St., where a temporary station was built. In this construction the rails were laid on Georgia pine stringers, resting on chestnut ties, this being the origin of the stringer construction, which has ever since been followed in building horse railways. Cars for this section were transported on trucks from 42nd St. over Third Ave., and were run from the north end of the tunnel to Harlem, the fare being a sixpence, so that passengers from downtown in going to Harlem had to walk over the tunnel hill, the fare from Walker St. to Harlem being eighteen pence. The cars on this section, some of which were double deckers, continued to run by horse-power until the tunnel was completed. The tunnel, including the open cut, when completed, was 596 ft. long, and cost about $96,000.—Ibid.

1 "Mr. Astor commenced this morning the demolition of the valuable buildings on the block fronting Broadway from Barclay to Vesey street, on which ground his great hotel is to be erected. The dust and rubbish will be almost intolerable; but the establishment will be a great public advantage, and the edifice an ornament to the city, and for centuries to come will serve, as it was probably intended, as a monument of its wealthy proprietor."—Hone's Diary, I: 103. For the landmark history of this site, where the Astor House was built, see L. M. R. K., III: 976; and N. Y. Times, My 11, 1913. The buildings which formerly occupied this block, and were demolished at this time, are shown on Pls. 85, 100, 108, Vol. III. One of these, No. 221 Broadway, was occupied by Paff's gallery (see 1811).—Descrip. of Pl. 108, III: 611. See, further, My 15. The south half of the Astor House was demolished in 1913. The north half, unoccupied since that date, stood until 1926.—Sun, My 30, 1913; N. Y. Tribune, S 3, 1913; 19th Ann. Rep., Am. Scen. & Hist. Pres. Soc. (1914), 142–43; L. M. R. 2 The legislature passes an act "for supplying the city of New-York with pure and wholesome water." It provides for the appointment of five "water commissioners of the city of New York," whose duty shall be to examine and consider all matters in this connection, with power to employ engineers, surveyors, etc., and who shall adopt the plan which they think most advantageous for procuring such supply of water. They shall report their contracts, etc. to the common council before Jan. 1, 1836. If the plan is approved by the common council, the commissioners shall provide for a referendum on it, to be determined at the time of the next general election of charter officers. If a majority of the electors favour it, it shall be lawful for the common council to raise by loan from time to time, in such amounts as they think fit, a sum not exceeding $2,000,000 by the creation of a public fund or stock called "The Water Stock of the city of New York." The money so raised shall be applied to carry out the plan.—Laws of N. Y. (1834), chap. 256; Colden, Memoir Croton Aqueduct, 120, 123.

Gov. Marcy re-appointed the same commissioners he had named under the act of Feb. 26, 1833 (q. v.), and they employed David B. Douglass, John Martineau, and George W. Cartwright as engineers.—Man. Com. Coun. (1854), 219. Myndert Van Schaick, who drafted the act of 1834, described, in his report of 1862, the financial difficulties on the one hand and the great need on the other caused by the cholera epidemic of 1832.—Croton Aqueduct Report (1862). The act of 1834 was amended on April 27, 1840.—Laws of N. Y. (1840), chap. 175. The senate and assembly concur in a resolution to ask the governor to open negotiations with the common council, "with a view to an exchange of the present site and buildings occupied as the state arsenal [see L. M. R. K., III: 993, 994], for a more convenient and eligible location thereof, in the upper part of the city."—Laws of N. Y. (1834), 593–94. 5

The following "Notice to Firemen" is published: "The large bell on the City Hall has, (under the direction of the Committee of Public Buildings and Repairs,) been so fixed that it will be rung for fires, and the city laid out, or divided into districts, for the purpose of informing Firemen the direction of fires . . ." The notice defines the bell strokes and the respective districts to which they refer.—Com. Adv., My 10, 1834. Both the bell and the system of alarms are criticised in ibid., May 16, after a destructive fire. See also descrip. of Pl. 143-a, III: 712, which appears to be in error in stating that a new bell was placed on the roof of the city hall in 1834. "

"The unsightly wooden railings in the park have been removed and chestnut posts erected in their place, from which iron chains are to be appended, which will improve the prospect from my house. "Harlem Railroad—One of the most interesting rides which both citizens and strangers can take in this city, is that on this railroad. For 12½ cents a ride of five miles to Yorkville is obtained. It is true that the route affords no beautiful view of cultivated fields and gardens, but conveys an idea of the great amount of labor bestowed in cutting the track through hills of solid rock from 20 to 60 feet high, affording a correct idea of the geological structure of the island. At the termination of the ride is a spacious hotel, on very elevated ground, affording one of the most extensive, varied and richest prospects to be seen in our country."—N. Y. Farmer, and Am. Gardener's Mag., VII: 173. The hotel was Nowlan's Prospect Hall.—See Jl 30; also N. Y. H. S. Bull., Ja, 1926. — —

Tompkins Square (see Jl 30 1833, and Mr 21, 1834) is ordered to be opened on this day.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, II: 183. See also ibid., II: 235, and L. M. R. K., III: 971. See, further, Jl 23. 1

The N. Y. Mirror says of the jail (the old bridewell—see Ag 23, 1830): "This abominable blemish upon the beauty of the Park, still 'cumbers the ground,' although an almost universal desire for its removal has been expressed over and over again [see Je 20 and O 24, 1829]; actually dinned into the ears of the authorities [see N 22 and D 6, 1828]. Everything about it is bad and out of place; in appearance, it is hideous; in its purposes, ungracious and afflicting; in its associations, a perfect nuisance. It rears its ugly front in the midst of beauty, and splendour, and cheerfulness, with an effect not unlike that produced by the sight of a gallows, surrounded by a smiling and verdant landscape."—N. Y. Mirror, Je 7 1834. See Mr 21, 1835 7

1834 June 26 Ceremonies in honour of Lafayette, who died on May 20 (q.v.), take place under the direction of a joint committee of the common council. "It was the last tribute of New York to the last major-general of the Continental army, the hero of the American Revolution, the ardent apostle of liberty, the benevolent, the virtuous Lafayette. . . . An urn, covered by the wings of the American eagle, well done in bronze plaster, was drawn by four white horses in the center of a hollow square, formed by the Lafayette Guards and followed by the pall bearers in barouches. These were members of the Cincinnati, associates of Lafayette in the War of the Revolution."—Hone's Diary, I: 108. For full account of the pageant and ceremonies, see N. Y. Eve. Post, Je 26 and 27, 1834, and Courier and Enquirer, Je 27, 1834.

July 4 Progress in building the new custom-house, at the north-east corner of Wall and Nassau Sts. (see Jl 13, 1832; S 16, 1833), is in about the same stage of forwardness as that of the Astor House, the corner-stone of which is laid on this day.—Jour. of Com., Jl 4, 1834. Regarding custom-house, see Ag 23, 1834; Mr 14, 1835.

In laying the corner-stone of the Astor House, a box is deposited beneath the stone, "with a silver tablet in it, containing the following inscription,

"'Corner-stone of the Park Hotel, Laid the 4th of July 1834. The Hotel to be erected by John Jacob Astor. Builders, Philetus H. Woodruff, Peter Storms, Campbell & Adams; Superintendents, Isaiah Rogers and Wm. W. Burwick; Architect, Isaiah Rogers.'" —Eve. Post, Jl 8, 1834. Another publication of the same date refers to it as "the celebrated Astor Hotel, so called from . . . John Jacob Astor, who at the age of about 80, is devoting a fraction of his immense wealth to the accomplishment of this enterprise. . . ." —Jour. of Com., Jl 4, 1834. Thereafter, the name Astor House was used, probably from the frequent reference to "Astor's hotel."—See My 31, 1836. For Wm. B. Astor's connection with the enterprise, see O 29, 1833. For outline of the landmark history of this site, see L. M. R. K., III: 976. See also descrip. of Pl. 99, III: 591, and Pl. 120, III: 625. For a lithographic view of the "Park Hotel," drawn by Schmidt in 1834 from the architect's plans, and issued in this year, see A. Pl. 22-a, Vol. III. See, further, D 6.

Isaiah Rogers must have come to New York to supervise the construction of the Astor House in this year, instead of in 1835, as stated in descrip. of Pl. 118, III: 623. He was later the architect of the Bank of America (in 1835), the Middle Dutch Church on Lafayette Pl. (in 1836), and the Astor Place Opera House (in 1848).

7 A race riot occurs at the Chatham St. Chapel, when a coloured congregation disputes with members of the N. Y. Sacred Music Soc. the right of the latter to use the building on this evening.—*N. Y. 9 From July 9 to 11, inclusive, riots against the abolitionists occurred. The following places were sacked or damaged: Chatham St. Chapel, Bowery Theatre, Dr. S. H. Cox's church and house, Zion's Church (coloured), Rev. Mr. Ludlow's church, St. Phillip's Church (coloured), African Baptist Church, and the residences of Arthur and Lewis Tappan.—Courier and Enquirer, Jl 9, 10, 11, 12, 14, 15; *N. Y. 17 The following description of New York is published in Charleston: "From Philadelphia, we came to this great theatre of life, business, bustle and pleasure, taking the steam boat to Bordentown, N. J. (near which we saw the fine mansion and grounds of Joseph Bonaparte) the rail road, 36 miles to Amboy, and the steam boat again through Staten Island Sound to this place, accomplishing the whole route in about 7 hours. Here we have been since Monday last, enjoying the various sights with which the vast metropolis charms the eye, and excites the wonder of the stranger. Here the world itself almost seems to be congregated for people of all nations, including the resident, the passing traveller, and the recent emigrant, meet the eye in every direction.—The shops in Broadway spread out their temporary stores in rich and varied profusion, and seem to concentrate the wealth of the world. . . . The Battery and Castle Garden on the one hand, with refreshing breezes and brilliant spectacles, and Niblo's on the other, with enchanting concerts of vocal and instrumental music, and grand pyrotechnical pagents, invite enjoyment, after the labors of the day. . . . Omnibuses, exceeding a hundred in number, roll incessantly over the paved streets, administering equally to the purposes of business and pleasure, adding to noise and bustle, and forming an object of such prominent attraction, as to cause New York, not inaptly to be termed 'The City of Omnibuses.' The spirit of enterprise which animates the citizens of New York is commensurate with and on as grand a scale as their city. As an instance of this may be noticed, the great Hotel to be erected, on Broadway, by Mr. Astor, preparations for which, consisting, at present, in the pulling down of large and commodious houses, are now in active progress—for one of the corner lots and buildings (already demolished) Mr. Astor is said to have paid the enormous sum of $65,000. To show the grand scale of expense which prevails here, I state a few particulars, gleaned from good authority. The rent of City Hotel is $15,000 per annum; of the American Hotel $9,000; of the private boarding house in which I reside $5,000, and of a single room in Broadway, occupied as a Barber's shop, $500. How vast must be the rental of the whole city."—N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., Ag 5, 1834, citing Charleston Courier of Jl 17. July 17

23 The mayor approves a resolution of the common council that "Tompkins square [see Je 1] be filled up to the city regulation, and enclosed with a good and sufficient fence," and that $20,000 be appropriated for the work.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, II: 211. See, further, O 3.

30 Geo. Nowlan's hotel, "Prospect Hall," at Observatory Place, on the line of the Harlem R. R. at 93d St., is described in a published notice.—Courier and Enquirer, Jl 30, 1834.

Aug. — Work on the N. Y. University building in Washington Square (see Jl 16, 1833) is interrupted by a stone-cutters' riot, caused by the use of stone dressed by the convicts at Sing Sing.—Lossing, Hist. of N. Y. City, I: 341; Headley, Pen and Pencil Sketches of the Great Riots, 95; Haswell's Reminiscences, 290. Consequently the building was not opened for classes until 1835 (q.v.).

1 A bill passed by parliament in Aug. 1833 provided that slavery should cease in Great Britain on this day.—Hazen, Europe since 1815, 440. Slavery was not abolished throughout the U. S. until the adoption of the 13th amendment in 1865 (q.v., D 18).

12 The church at 49 Ann St., which was erected in 1794 (q.v.) as Christ Church (Episcopal), but, after 1825, was sold to the Roman Catholics, is destroyed by fire.—Mag. Am. Hist. (1888), XIX: 61; Cour. & Enq., Ag 13, 1834; L. M. R. K., III: 932. See, further, Jl 30, 1847.

23 A wood-cut view of the proposed new custom-house (see Jl 4), at the north-east corner of Wall and Nassau Sts., drawn by A. J. Davis and engraved by Mason, is published, with a brief statement of its dimensions and internal arrangements. The building will be 180 ft. long and 90 ft. wide, and will occupy the entire plot of ground from Wall to Pine St., with a passage 10 or 12 ft. wide along its eastern side next to the Branch Bank of the U. S. (later the Assay Office). This building, which still stands, was originally projected, as here described, to have its "great hall for business" in the form of a cross, with a dome over the intersection. This dome appears in the view, rising high above the roof. The cost of the building, it was expected, would be "much less than $500,000," and the time required for its erection "nearly four years."—N. Y. Mirror, XII: 57.

" "As to Broadway, we will make no mention of that, for we doubt much if there is another street in the world which presents such a confused assemblage of high, low, broad, narrow, white, grey, red, brown, yellow, simple and florid. . . . The private houses, lately erected, particularly in the new parts of the city, are for the most part, spacious and elegant; as for example, those in about St. Mark's Place, and the Lafayette buildings."—N. Y. Mirror, XII: 57.

25 Delegates from trades' unions in Boston, Philadelphia, Poughkeepsie, Newark, Brooklyn, and New York meet in the city hall to perfect a national organization (see Ag 28). During the convention, a committee on resolutions, that was to be "expressive of the views" of the delegates "on the social civil and intellectual condition of the laboring classes," presented a noteworthy report. At the outset, the fundamental principle is declared, that "the actions and pursuits of man have for their object the possession of happiness, that this object is attained in proportion to the ratio of the intelligence and virtue of man individually and collectively, . . . and whereas society is conducive to happiness, it being good for man to associate with his fellow man, moral justice of necessity

1834 Aug. 25 becomes the Keystone to the arch of social compact." It is maintained that the conditions of the labouring classes at present, here and abroad, "exhibit the most unequal and unjustifiable distribution of the produce of labor, thus operating to produce a humiliating, servile dependency, incompatible with the inherent natural equality of man."

Therefore, it is recommended that "such of the working classes . . . as have not already formed themselves into societies for the protection of their industry, do so forthwith, that they may by these means be enabled effectively to make common cause with their oppressed brethren, and the more speedily disseminate such knowledge as may be most conducive to their interests in their respective trades and arts, as well as their general interests as productive laborers."

The report deprecates "the systems of education now in operation" because of their "exclusive character in giving instruction to the wealthy few at the expense of the industrious many."

The report also deprecates "the system now practised in the disposal of the Public Lands," because it debars the labouring class "from the occupation of any portion of the same, unless provided with an amount of capital which the greater portion of them . . . cannot hope to attain."

"Serious alarm" is felt at "the deplorable condition of the male and female children employed in the cotton and woolen manufactories . . . arising from the early age they are put to work . . . and the enormous length of time allotted for a day's labor." It is suggested that "lawful security should be exacted from the proprietors of manufactories, for the education of every child employed."

Further, the report urges upon the consideration of every labouring man the repeal of laws existing in some states under which "Trades' Unions . . . are declared illegal Combinations." Such laws are avowed to be "a manifest violation of the Constitution . . . and an infringement of the lawful rights of every citizen."

The report concludes with the resolution that hereafter "it should be the first as well as the last duty of every laborer, to inform himself on the subject of his equal rights and labor to promote the good of the whole community, rather than to confer privileges on a favored few." The report was unanimously adopted.—A Documentary Hist. of Am. Industrial Society (Cleveland, 1910), VI: 205–9. See Ag 28.

This was the first National Trades' Union in the United States. "It continued through three years of remarkable success and disappeared only with the panic of 1837."—Ibid., V: 22–23.

28 The trades' unions' delegates, in convention assembled (see Ag 25), adopt a constitution as an association "styled the National Trades' Union of the United States." This Union is to be composed of delegates "from the several Trades' Unions in the United States, the number not to exceed one from each Association or Society, and to be elected in such manner as the several Unions may direct, and to hold office for one year." Annual meetings are to be held. The objects of the organization are thus defined: "To recommend such measures to the various Unions represented herein as may tend to advance the moral and intellectual condition and pecuniary interests of the laboring classes; promote the establishment of Trades' Unions in every section of the United States; and also to publish and disseminate such information as may be useful to Mechanics and Working Men generally; and to unite and harmonize the efforts of all the productive classes of our country."—A Doc. Hist. of Am. Indust. Soc., VI: 225–27, and authorities there cited.

Sept. 13 The First Presbyterian Church, in Wall St., is destroyed by fire. This was the edifice erected in 1810 (q. v., Mr 21). The tower or cupola and bell fell into the church, only the thick walls of the building remaining.—Courier & Enquirer, S 15; N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., S 15; N. Y. Com. Adv., S 15, 1834; and descrip. of Pl. 105, III: 607; and Pl. 111, III: 615. The church was rebuilt in 1835 (Greenleaf, Hist. of the Churches, 134), the new edifice having a spire. —See Pls. 105, 111, 117, 123-f, Vol. III; L. M. R. K., III: 931. See, further, Jl 20, 1844.

" The N. Y. University building "is now nearly at its height, and will be ready for occupation in May next." For detailed description of it, see N. Y. Mirror, XII: 81. Cf. D 31.

25 "Some idea of the immense amount of labor required in the construction of the new Custom House, may be gathered from the fact that although some 30 or 40 hands have been employed upon it for six months past, it has not yet risen above the surface of the ground. Astor's great Hotel is somewhat more advanced, but the walls of the first story are not yet completed. A still greater number of hands we should think, are employed on this building, than on the Custom House."—N. Y. Eve. Post, S 25, 1834, citing Jour. of Com. Sept. 25

" "On the East side of Cedar street, which has been recently widened by an act of the Corporation, a range of five story brick houses has been erected, or is erecting, almost the whole distance from William street to Broadway. . . . The improvements which have taken place in the lower part of the city within the last six or eight years, are truly astonishing. Almost all the old buildings have been torn down, and new ones erected in their stead, very few of which are less than four stories high, and many of them five, and even six stories."—N. Y. Eve. Post, S 5, 1834, citing Jour. of Com.

Oct. 3 The sum of $62,000 is appropriated "for paying the expenses and awards for ground, taken in the opening of Tompkins square." —Proc., App'd by Mayor, II: 241. See Je 1, 1834 and F 11, 1835.

13 A resolution is approved by the mayor that the wooden fence enclosing Duane Park be taken down, and that a stone coping, surmounted by an iron railing, be placed there, an appropriation of $1,820 being made for the purpose.—Mayor's Message (1834), 25.

16 The common council permits the erection of a liberty-pole in the Fourth Ward.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XI: 247. For one in the Fifth Ward, see F 11.

27 The mayor signs an ordinance to fill in a pond at Manhattanville in the rear of St. Mary's Church, between Tenth and Eleventh Aves.—Mayor's Message (1834), 28.

31 The Whigs are raising liberty-poles in all the wards.—Hone's Diary, I: 116.

Nov. 12 The common council resolves "That the Corporation of the City of New York are lawfully authorized to enclose, regulate, and improve all the lands lying within the limits of Union place, as defined by the statute of April 5, 1832, in like mode with other public squares of the city; and accordingly it is ordered, that so much of the area of the said square, as shall be comprehended within the eliptical figure laid down on the plan deposited in the Street Commissioner's Office, containing not more than 677 feet in length, and not more than 302 feet 9 inches in breadth, be enclosed with an iron fence and stone coping, with convenient and appropriate gates. That the surface of the enclosure be reduced to proper and sufficient levels, and prepared to receive grass and shrubbery, with convenient footwalks; that a flagged sidewalk be laid around the exterior of the enclosure, not exceeding 15 feet in width; but the flagging around the exterior of the enclosure shall not be laid until the further order of the Common Council; that in the meantime, and until the further order of the Common Council, in respect to the permanent paving of the carriage ways around the exterior, such portion thereof, as may be necessary, be rendered passable for carriages and vehicles. That the Street Commissioner, under the direction of the Joint Committee on Wharves, Lands, and Places of the two Boards, carry this resolution into effect, and $15,000 is hereby appropriated for this purpose."—Proc., App'd by Mayor, II: 259–60. See, further, My 14, 1835.

24 A committee of the common council selects, as the site for a house of detention, debtors' prison, criminal court-room, etc., the block of made ground, embracing an area of about 200 by 250 ft., which has been redeemed out of the Collect Pond, and is bounded by Elm, Center, Leonard, and Franklin Sts. At this time it was occupied as a public yard. The plan proposed was to build the foundation of the new house of detention, etc. on piles driven into the ground. The boundaries and general character of this made ground are described in the committee's report.—Doc. No. 29, Bd. of Asst. Ald., N 24, 1834. See 1836; Ag, 1838.

29 The new French Protestant Episcopal church (L'Eglise du Saint Esprit), at the south-west corner of Franklin and Church Sts., built by the congregation that formerly worshipped in Pine St., and recently completed (see 1832), is described, with views, in the N. Y. Mirror, XII: 169, 178, 185; L. M. R. K., III: 932. It is a white marble building, costing $60,000.—Man. Com. Coun. (1862), 757, and see view in ibid., 284. See also Vol. I, p. 244–45.

Dec. 1 Pres. Jackson, in his annual message to congress, announces the extinguishment of the national debt. The money for this purpose was produced from duties on imports and the sale of the public lands.—Messages and Papers of the Presidents, III: 1326–27; Annals of N. Am., 574.

1834 Dec. 6 "The foundation of the Custom-house [until recently the sub-treasury building] is completed, with all its vaults, abutments, etc.; the huge blocks for the columns are ready, and the workmen are now engaged in erecting them. . . ."

The Astor House "is in a still more forward condition. The granite slabs of the first and second stories are all in their places; the pillars all stationed, and the partitions of the first floor completed. . . ."—N. Y. Mirror, XII: 183. See My 31, 1836.

19 A society, having for its object to collect and rescue from oblivion every unrecorded action and incident of the Revolutionary and late wars, is established, and named the "Am. Historical Society of Military and Naval events." In 1837, its officers comprised some of the most distinguished men of the time in New York.—N. Y. As It Is, In 1837, 74.

31 "The New York University [see S 13] is a mountain of white marble and brick, with Italian details, more incongruous than those of Wren's towers of Westminster Abbey; it is more indebted to the woodcutter (Mr. Mason, from London) than any work I have ever seen. In London it would be termed 'Carpenter's Gothic;' but even that can give you no idea of its hideous abortions and monstrous absurdities. With such a specimen as this before their eyes, no wonder that the Greek, 'the classic and simple Greek,' is preferred by the people, who will not be gulled into admiration, of any thing so outré as this university."—The Architectural Mag. (London, 1835), 493. Cf. My 20, 1837.

— The second Seminole War began in this year and continued until 1842.—Winsor, VII: 407, 408, 439.

— In this year, a patent for a revolving pistol was granted to Samuel Colt.—Encyclop. Brit., VI: 736; Annals of N. Am., 574.

— In this year, Audubon published his work on the Birds of America.

— The population of New York City in this year was 270,089.—Disturnell, N. Y. As It Is, In 1837, 11.

— "The ideal of quiet and genteel retirement in 1835 was found in Washington Square, where the Doctor [a "Dr. Sloper" in James's story] built himself a handsome, modern, wide-fronted house, with a big balcony before the drawing-room windows, and a flight of white marble steps ascending to a portal which was also faced with white marble. This structure, and many of its neighbors, which it exactly resembled, were supposed, forty years ago, to embody the last results of architectural science, and they remain to this day very solid and honorable dwellings. In front of them was the square containing a considerable quantity of inexpensive vegetation, enclosed by a wooden paling, which increased its rural and accessible appearance; and round the corner was the more august precinct of the Fifth Avenue, taking its origin at this point with a spacious and confident air which already marked it for high destinies. I know not whether it is owing to the tenderness of early associations, but this portion of New York appears to many persons the most delectable. It has a kind of established repose which is not of frequent occurrence in other quarters of the long, shrill city; it has a riper, richer, more honorable look than any of the upper ramifications of the great longitudinal thoroughfare—the look of having something of a social history."—Washington Square, by Henry James (N. Y., 1894), 23–24. See also 1831.

— The condition of the N. Y. & Harlem R. R. is thus described: "About 4 miles of the road are now in use, upon which pleasure cars constantly run, for the accommodation of those who desire to get out of the city for a short time. When completed, there will be a tunnel of some length through a rock, at Yorkville, after which there will be a gradual descent to Harlaem river. . . . At present horse power is used. A locomotive engine was provided and used for a short time, but the boiler burst, and the engine was laid aside."—Williams, N. Y. Ann. Register, 1835.

Above 14th St., at this time, there was open country. See, further, Ap 18 and O 3.

— In this year, instruction was commenced in the unfinished building at N. Y. University on Washington Square.—Chamberlain, N. Y. University (1901), I: 67; Eve. Post, My 19, 1837; descrip. of Pl. 139, III: 708. For the dedication, see My 20, 1837.

— In this year, a vane and a cock were added to the steeple of St. Mark's Church.—Memorial St. Mark's Church (1899), 54–55.

— In this year, the First Presbyterian Church, on Wall St., which was burnt out in 1834 (q. v., S 13), was rebuilt.—Greenleaf, Hist. of the Churches of N. Y., 134; see also Vol. I, p. 295, and descrip. of Pl. 105, III: 607. 1835 —

— In this year was erected the "Sixth Free Presbyterian Church," on Broadway between Anthony St. and Catharine Lane. It opened for worship in April, 1836, possessing the largest auditorium in the city at that time. Its name was afterwards changed to "The Tabernacle."—Greenleaf, 179; Man. Com. Coun. (1865), 591. Both this church and another Presbyterian church called the "Tabernacle," on Catharine near Madison St. (Greenleaf, 192), were of comparatively short duration.

— The Bank of America erected, in this year, a handsome bank-building, with two columns in front, at 30 Wall St. This remained until 1887, when it was torn down, and the present edifice erected in 1887–8, Clinton & Russell being the architects.—Information obtained at the bank, correcting L. M. R. K., III: 924; descrip. of Pl. 147, III: 718. Duer, in his Reminiscences (1847), 5, states that, in 1783, there stood on this site a large, 3-storey double house, the family mansion of the Marstons, which was at that time occupied by Van Berckle, minister from the States-General of Holland. Cf. L. M. R. K., III: 924.

— In this year, Anson G. Phelps bought the old Henry Coster house, cor. First Ave. and 30th St.—Descrip. of Pl. 107, III: 610; descrip. of Pl. 153-d, III: 775; Man. Com. Coun. (1860), 276.

— In this year, Chatham St. was widened from Pearl to Mott St.; also Liberty St. from Nassau to William St.; Wall St. from Pearl to Merchant St.; and William St. between Wall St. and Maiden Lane. Ninth Ave. was opened from Bloomingdale Road to 45th St.; 116th St. from Fourth Avenue to Harlem River; Second Ave. from 109th to 123rd St., and from 28th to 86th St.; and Seventh Ave. from 21st to 129th St.—Man. Com. Coun. (1857), 532.

— Views of New York in this year, reproduced in the present work, include (besides those cited under specific dates): the Chapman-Bennett view of the city, "Taken from the Bay near Bedlows Island" (Pl. 116); and the Horner view from Brooklyn (Pl. 120), both in Vol. III.

— For view of Pearl St., bet. Franklin Sq. and Oak St., 1835, see Man. Com. Coun. (1859), 372.

For view of the Geo. Hazzard house, Third Ave. and 84th St., 1835, see ibid. (1859), 599. This house, named from its proprietor, was "for many years, and until the introduction of more expeditious modes of conveyance, the first stopping-place, on the route of the 'Danbury Post-coaches,' the only mode of public conveyance between the upper and lower portion of the city, until about the year 1835. . . ." Third Ave. "was one of the most magnificent drives in the world, being macadamized from Twenty-eighth street to the Harlem Bridge; and, taken in connection with 'Cato's,' or the 'Old Post Road,' which intersected the Third avenue at Forty-fifth street, and also at Sixty-fifth street, was much used by our sporting citizens of that period, as a drive . . ." About 1845, the "Hazzard House" was enlarged and entirely changed in appearance.—Ibid.

Jan. — A "Map of Spring Valley in the Twelfth Ward of the City of New York belonging to the Estate of George Youle dec'd," surveyed by Thomas R. Ludlam, city surveyor, and signed by him, bears this date. It is owned by the Title Guarantee & Trust Co.

19 The mayor approves an ordinance for filling in Burling Slip.—Mayor's Message (1835), 52.

28 Washington Irving has purchased about 10 acres on the bank of the Hudson, three miles south of Tarrytown. "On the premises . . . there is still standing an old stone house, built in the ancient Dutch style of architecture during the French war. . . . We also understand that it is the identical house at which the memorable tea-party was assembled so faithfully and admirably described in the inimitable Legend of Sleepy Hollow, on that disastrous night, when the ill-starred Ichabod was rejected by the fair Katrina and also encountered the fearful companionship of Brom Bones in the character of the headless Hessian. . . ."—*Eve. 1835 Feb. 14 The St. Nicholas Society is organized by "several gentlemen, residents and natives of New York," at a meeting held at Washington Hotel.—From "Extract from the Minutes" of the society, pub. in the 1907 ed. of its Charter, Constitution, By-Laws, and List of Members, 3. It was incorporated April 17, 1841 (q.v.). See also the "Chronicle" of the society's events in ibid., 7–19; and D 5, 1848. This society is now at 43 Cedar St. Cf. Ja 24, 1834.

16 The commissioners, appointed to investigate the possible means of supplying New York City with water (see My 2, 1834), report to the common council in favour of building the Croton aqueduct. This was referred to a committee of the board, which approved the plan and recommended that the subject be voted upon by the electors at the next election. The common council concurred in the committee report.—Eve. Post, Mr 20, 1835; Colden, Memoir Croton Aqueduct, 124; Man. Com. Coun. (1854), 220–21. See Ap 14.

20 "The Merchants News Room, corner of Wall and Pearl street, is now in full operation. We understand that the proprietor receives two hundred and fifty different newspapers."—Eve. Post, F 20, 1835.

28 A plan of Harlem, showing the Harlem Canal, and giving street lay-out, bears this date.—See map No. 711 in bureau of topography, borough president's office. Cf. a plan of the proposed Harlem Canal, made by Edw. Smith, and bearing date of Jan. 22, 1836, filed as map No. 719 in same office.

Mar. — The common council resolves to contract for the building of a market "on the ground lately taken for market purposes in the 11th Ward [see Ja 6, 1834] of the same dimensions as the Jefferson Market." In May, it was named Union Market. This, De Voe says, was "no doubt from the fact that the Corporation intended to unite the Manhattan Market [see Mr 26, S 10, 1827] with this, as that market-place had proved a failure." When the building was finished the transfer of the butchers was made.—Market Book, 526, 580, 581; L. M. R. K., III: 960. See O 24, 1835.

14 Writing from New York, William Ross describes in detail the architecture of the custom-house, now in course of erection at the north-east corner of Wall and Nassau Sts. (see Jl 4, 1834), in which he gives an account of alterations in the plans of the interior design, which he has made for the commissioners. He says a description of the approved (original) design may be seen in the N. Y. Mirror (q.v., Ag 23, 1834).—The Architectural Mag. (London, 1835), 525–33 (with wood-cut reproductions of the architects' drawings). See, further 1837; My 21, 1842. A beautiful water-colour perspective drawing of this building by A. J. Davis is owned by J. P. Morgan, Esq.

16 Hone joins a so-called "Book Club," which meets every other Thursday evening for supper at the Washington Hall.—Hone's Diary, I: 134. Rev. Dr. Wainwright was the founder.—Ibid., I: 143.

" The mayor signs a resolution for filling in the bulkhead on the southerly line of South St., from Pike St. Slip to Rutgers Slip.—Mayor's Message (1835), 66.

21 "As for the Bridewell, that still remains in a high state of preservation. There is talk, now and then, of sweeping it off from the ground which it cumbers, but as yet it is talk only, and we are prepared, though by no means willing, to see it remain in all its unmatchable ugliness for the next ten or twelve years. By way of increasing its charms—making it a still more agreeable object of sight—a small wooden building has lately been stuck just behind it, for what purpose we are not advised; it has somewhat the look of an engine-house. Altogether the Bridewell or Jail, with its grated windows, its dingy stone walls, its high fence, its contemptible little belfry, and its kitchen, or stable, or engine-house in the rear, is quite an attractive object, and gives to the Park a very distinguished appearance."—N. Y. Mirror, Mr 21, 1835. See Ag 25, 1838, for its final demolition.

28 "Statue of Alexander Hamilton—The merchants of this city raised a subscription several years since [see My 18, 1826], for the purpose of employing a sculptor to execute a statue of General Alexander Hamilton, to be placed in the Hall of the Merchants' Exchange. The execution of the work was entrusted to Ball Hughes, an artist of celebrity, now a resident of this city, who has just completed the work.

"The statue was placed on the pedestal in the centre of the large Exchange Room several weeks since and the finishing touches having been gone through with, the enclosure was removed on Saturday, and the statue is now exposed to public view. . . . The statue is chisseled from a block of beautiful Carera marble. The figure is represented in a standing posture, with the Roman toga suspended over the left shoulder, and falling in graceful folds down the back. In the right hand is a baton, representing a parchment certificate of membership of the Cincinnati, resting on a square pedestal. . . ."—N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., Mr 28, 1835. See Ap 20. Mar. 28

The South Ferry is established, to run from Whitehall to or near the foot of Atlantic St., Brooklyn.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, II: 377, 412, 413; Eve. Post, Mr 24, Ap 4, 1835. This closed a contest which lasted ten years to secure a charter for a ferry to Brooklyn south of Fulton Slip, the attempt to do so being blocked by the owners of the Fulton Ferry Co.—See D 23, 1825. Apr. 9

Cornelius W. Lawrence is reëlected mayor, the Whigs presenting no candidate in opposition.—Man. Com. Coun. (1854), 487. Ex-Mayor Hone, an active Whig, comments in his diary: "The Jackson people have renominated Mr. Cornelius W. Lawrence as Mayor, and the Whigs will not oppose him. I am glad of it, for if we do not take him we shall have a worse man; indeed, I have been well pleased with his conduct during the first year of his mayoralty, and he would have my cheerful support but for the circumstance of his having recently vetoed a resolution of the Common Council which recommended to the legislature the passage of a law to register the votes. This is a measure so obviously proper to secure the purity of our elections, and so loudly called for, especially in this city, by all who desire to preserve the peace and good order which ought to prevail at such times, that nothing but a blind devotion to party could have influenced the Mayor in his opposition to a measure so salutary."—Hone's Diary, I: 136–37. 11

The legislature modifies the Commissioners' Map by widening Ave. C from 60 to 80 ft. between 3d and 15th Sts.—Laws of N. Y. (1835), chap. 66. 13

In the election held on this day and the two succeeding days, the voters of New York City cast 17,330 ballots in favour of building the Croton aqueduct (see F 16) and 5,963 against it.—Colden, Memoir Croton Aqueduct, 138; N. Y As It Is, In 1837, 17; Man. Com. Coun. (1854), 220–21. See My 7. 14

Geo. Repelye and wife cede to the city the following parts of streets: 35th St. from Ninth to Tenth Ave.; 37th St. from Fitzroy Road to Ninth Ave. and from Ninth to Tenth Ave.; 38th St. from Ninth to Tenth Ave.; 39th and 40th St. from Ninth to Tenth Ave.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, II: 381. "

The legislature passes an act to extend the time two years from this date for completing the N. Y. & Harlem R. R. The company is authorised to increase its capital stock $250,000, and to borrow from time to time sums aggregating not over $400,000. Authority is given to alter or repeal the act of incorporation of April 25, 1831 (q.v.), or its amendment of April 6, 1832 (q.v.).—Laws of N. Y. (1835), chap. 101. Time was again extended in 1837.—Ibid. (1837), chap. 55. See, further, My 12, 1836. 18

"Statue of Hamilton.—We have just returned from a visit to the Exchange where a most attractive object is drawing together crowds of admiring citizens. It is the statue of Alexander Hamilton, for the execution of which a fund was raised some two or three years ago by subscription among the merchants of this city [see Mr 28]. They have reason to congratulate themselves upon the admirable manner in which their intention has been fulfilled. The statue is carved from a single block of Carrara marble, the upper and anterior portions of which are purely white, and the back slightly veined with clouds or shades of an exceedingly pale blue. This should, perhaps, be considered a defect, but the artist has ingeniously contrived to hide it by such an arrangement of the folds in the drapery as makes the clouding of the marble almost imperceptible. The figure is standing with one foot slightly advanced and the weight of the body resting upon the other, the head erect and turned a little to one side as in the act of speaking. The left arm hangs in the easy natural position by the side, while the other is somewhat raised, the hand grasping a scroll, the end of which rests upon a table. The costume is that 20

1835 Apr. 20 of the time in which Hamilton flourished as a statesman and public orator; a coat with upright collar, small clothes, silk stockings, and the perscriptive oratorical mantle or toga, knotted upon the left shoulder and falling away behind in a rich mass of flowing drapery; thus obviating the trim formal appearance of the close-setting garments peculiar to enlightened nations.—The resemblance is perfect—so pronounced by those who knew Hamilton well, and moreover identical with all the good portraits of him we have ever seen. The execution is in the highest style of art; the attitude natural and unconstrained yet full of dignity; and it is evident that an immensity of labor has been bestowed upon the details not only of the face and figure, but also of the drapery. It is a magnificent production, worthy of the man in whose honor it was formed, of the liberality to which the city of New York is indebted for its possession, and of the talents and high reputation of the sculptor, Mr. Hughes."—N. Y. Com. Adv., Ap 20, 1835. Cf. My 18, 1826.

On this day, the committee of inspection, "appointed by the original agreement between the building Committee of the Merchants' Exchange . . . and R. Ball Hughes, Esq, to examine, inspect and express an opinion upon the statue . . .," certify that they have done so, and that it meets their "unqualified approbation . . ." This is signed by John Trumbull, David Hosack, William Dunlap, Philip Hone, and J. Delafield.—N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., Ap 29, 1835. The statue stood on a pedestal of gray granite.—*N Y. May 6 The first number of the New York Herald appears, James Gordon Bennett being the publisher. The second number was issued on May 11. Many of the features of the modern newspaper, and many of the methods of modern journalism, were first introduced by the Herald. Among these were: The financial articles; the system for gathering news; the publication of maps and illustrations (in 1838), and the arrangements made the same year for foreign correspondence; and the general spirit of enterprise which in 1845 led to the establishment of expresses from Texas to Mexico.—North, Newspaper and Periodical Press, 90; *Annals of N. 14 The common council passes an ordinance "To regulate and pave Union place, agreeably to a plan adopted by the Common Council, the 12th of November, 1834," and assessors are appointed.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, II: 410. See Jl 29.

23 Palmo's Saloon at the corner of Broadway and Reed St. is opened.—Eve. Post, My 25, 1835, citing Gaz.. Until 1840, the café was popular after which Palmo abandoned this occupation, and erected an opera house in Chambers St. This afterwards became Burton's Theatre, and, in 1865, was occupied by the United States Court.—Man. Com. Coun. (1865), 572.

30 There is published, with a detailed description, an engraved design of the "stand of colours voted to the National Guard by the corporation of the city of New York," which in a few days will be presented by the governor in the city's behalf.—N. Y. Mirror, My 30, 1835.

June 2 The water commissioners appoint David B. Douglass their chief engineer and direct him to organise a corps of assistants. In accordance with his report, four additional engineers, five rodmen, and seven labourers and chainmen were appointed.—Doc. 12, Bd. of Ald., Ag 1, 1836. See Jl 6.

3 The Society Library, in conjunction with the Athenaeum, buys two lots on the east side of Broadway, bounded by Leonard St. and Catharine Lane. Here a building was later erected, which was first occupied by the library on April 30, 1840 (q.v.).—Keep, Hist. of the Society Lib., 341, 343, 381.

8 A fire breaks out in the rear of 209 Elizabeth St., in the centre of the block bounded by Prince, Elizabeth, Houston, and Mott Sts., opposite the Catholic cathedral. "About 20 houses were destroyed or badly damaged, including the whole block on Prince and about half that on Mott street. The buildings were almost all of wood and occupied by a great many families, together with taverns, 'porter houses' and groceries."—Eve. Post, Je 8, 1835, citing Jour. of Com.; Costello, Our Firemen, 220.

16 The mayor approves a plan for widening Wall St. between Pearl and Hanover Sts.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, III: 12.

20 On board the U. S. frigate "Constitution," at sea, the "Commissioned and Warrant Officers" of the ship draw up resolutions, expressing the need of a military school, and outlining a method of establishing it. It was probably the first organized movement looking to the establishment of a naval academy in this country. The resolutions name a committee of ten "to take charge of the subject and conduct it to its final disposition," and require that the resolutions be printed; that the secretary of the navy be requested to lay a copy before the president of the United States; that copies be sent to the chairman of the committee on naval affairs in the senate and in the house of representatives, to each naval station, squadron, and U. S. ship in commission; that a copy be furnished "to the Hon. Edward Livingston, now on board the Constitution;" and that one be sent "to the commander of this ship, inviting his aid in furtherance of the object of this meeting."—N. Y. Times, Ap 20, 1925, which gives the full text of the circular, contributed in a letter from Lieut.-Commander E. S. R. Brandt, U. S. N., in connection with the subject of raising a fund to preserve the frigate "Constitution."

The Naval Academy at Annapolis was founded ten years later.—See 1845.

21 A riot occurs in Chatham St. between a number of native citizens and Irishmen. About 20 or 30 are arrested.—Eve. Post, Je 22, 1835, citing Daily Adv. See also ibid., Je 23 and 24, 1835. The dissensions were caused by an attempt to raise an Irish regiment to be called the O'Connell Guards.—Ibid., Je 25, 1835. See also ibid. Je 26, 27, and 30, 1835. Haswell says that Dr. McCaffrey was killed during the encounter and that this was known as "the Five Points Riot."—Haswell's Reminiscences, 298.

22 The committee on public lands and places, to whom was referred a memorial from a large number of proprietors of lands at Harlem, asking the common council to lay out a public square (Mount Morris Square) between Fourth and Sixth Aves., 120th and 124th Sts., makes a report favouring the proposal. The rocky eminence here, 70 ft. high, is "crowned with various kinds of forest trees, many of them of great antiquity and possessing altogether a very peculiar and distinctive character." The place is unsuitable for building lots, because of the immense cost to level the height. It is, however, adaptable for the purpose proposed, on account of "its insular situation, its great height, its conical figure the trees with which it is covered," and the possibility of converting it into a place of ornament and beauty. No public place has yet been laid out at Harlem, and this ground is not too large for the purpose. The whole cost will be assessed on the surrounding property. A resolution is therefore approved "That application be made to the Legislature . . . for the passage of a law authorizing such alteration in the map or plan of the City as will permit the forming and laying out of a Public Place between 120th and 124th Street and between 4th and 6th Avenues . . ."—Proc., Bd. of Ald., IX: 81, citing Doc. No. 10. On Nov. 5, the mayor signed a joint resolution that such application be made to the legislature.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, III: 96. This was reinforced by another joint resolution, approved by the mayor on Jan. 22, 1836, that such new square be laid out.—Ibid., III: 162. See also Mr '17, 1836. For the desired legislative act, see My 10, 1836.

23 The U. S. frigate "Constitution" ("Old Ironsides") arrives at New York with Edward Livingston, minister to France, on board. "An immense concourse of citizens was assembled on the Battery

M. R. K., III: 959. See the Weehawken Market, Ja, 1834.

29 "Trees in Wall Street.—The subscription for planting this street with a row of Ailanthuses, or 'tree of heaven,' goes on swimmingly. . . . The mode of subscribing is—for so many trees each,—already there are about 90 trees on the list,—but nearly twice that number will be required. . . ."—N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., Jl 29, 1835.

" The common council appropriates "a further sum of ten thousand dollars . . . to complete the necessary expenditures for granite coping, iron railing, and otherwise improving Union Place." —Proc., App'd by Mayor, III: 45; Docs., Bd. of Ald., II: 73 (*Doc. " The mayor approves a joint resolution for forming and opening the public square between 31st and 34th Sts., on both sides of Fourth Ave.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, III: 45.

Aug. The mayor signs resolutions as follows: For opening Ninth Ave.
3 from 45th St. to the Bloomingdale Road; adopting the plan presented by the street commissioner for regulating the avenues and streets of Harem from 109th to 135th Sts., and from Ninth Ave. to Harlem River; and providing for an exterior line on the Harlem River; and directing the street commissioner and street committee to employ persons to prepare a plan for the grade of this Island.—Mayor's Message (1835), 25.

13 "Great excitement prevails in all parts of the country on the subject of the attempts made by the friends of immediate emancipation to excite the slaves of the South to resist the authority of their masters; at least, such is the alleged tendency of the indiscreet measures of those fanatical persons who have engaged in that cause. . . ."—Hone's Diary, I: 155.

15 "One of the stones of the new Custom House weighs twenty-seven tons. It was drawn to this city from the quarry in Westchester County, on a carriage made for the purpose, by a team composed of two pair of horses and sixteen yoke of oxen."—Eve. Post, Ag 15, 1835.

24 The Dutch frigate "Mars" and the brig-of-war "Sneeneid" arrive from Curaçoa. "In passing through the Narrows, they exchanged salutes with fort Lafayette. On board the frigate is His Royal Highness Prince Henry, son of H. R. H. the Prince of Orange."—Eve. Post, Ag 25, 1835.

25 "The beginning of panick operations in this city.—The evils which we have long predicted begin to be wreaked upon this devoted metropolis by the United States Bank. The New York Branch yesterday drew half a million of dollars in specie from the state banks. . . . The transaction of yesterday may seem to some but like a little cloud on the verge of the horizon. Yet let them remember that it is in that way that the tornado makes its first threat, but soon after wraps the heavens in a pall and spreads the ocean with wreck."—Eve. Post, Ag 25, 1835.

26 "The abolition question continues to agitate the public mind, and acquires hourly a most alarming interest. A great meeting is to be held to-morrow afternoon, in the Park, of those opposed to the incendiary proceedings of the abolitionists. . . ."—Hone's Diary, I: 156–57. See Ag 27.

27 At the meeting in the Park (see Ag 26), resolutions are adopted against the abolition society, and against the interference of individuals between the masters and the slaves in the Southern States. —Hone's Diary, I: 157.

The news report thus describes the event: Pursuant to a public Aug.
notice signed by about 200 prominent New Yorkers, a large public 27 meeting is held at the city hall to express the attitude of the city toward the proceedings of the abolitionists and the anti-slavery societies. Mayor Lawrence is chosen chairman. Resolutions are adopted declaring that while they deplore the existence of slavery, New Yorkers disapprove of the "extravagant proceedings and violent recriminations" of the abolitionists and "dissent from their indiscriminate condemnation of all those who sustain the relation of masters to slaves, as being equally guilty, whether that relation is a part of their inheritance under existing laws or has proceeded from their voluntary conduct." It is also resolved that "the citizens of the North have no political right to interfere with the slavery of the Southern states, nor moral right, under any circumstances, to adopt violent or aggressive measures for the purpose of abolishing it," and that "a legal, peaceful, and temperate expression of opinions and arguments tending to induce the parties to the relation of slavery to perform their moral and social duties, is all that can with propriety be done by individuals who do not sustain that relation."—Eve. Post, Ag 28, 1835.

New York, says the Alexandria Gazette, "is a great and in 19
some sense, already an overgrown and overstocked city. Who can look at its crowded streets—its thronged alleys—its forests of masts—and all its paraphernalia of business and pleasure, without wonder and amazement? Its population and progress have already outstripped in reality the imaginations of the boldest and no one can calculate their further extent. In commerce, in manufactures—in trade—in speculation—in show, in bustle and noise, New York cannot easily be even approached by a comparison with any other city.

"It is supposed in the New York Evening Star that the census of the city will not fall short of 300,000—and it is stated elsewhere, that every foot of ground facing on Wall street and lying between Pearl and Broad streets, is worth two thousand dollars per foot. The amount of foreign importations in the city for 1835, will exceed those of 1834 nearly twenty millions of dollars."—N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., S 19, 1835. The "forest of masts" is also referred to by J. Logan in his Notes of a Journey through Canada, The U. S. of Am., and the West Indies (1838), 144–45.

Hone records: "The plan for macadmizing the street before 22 my house not having fully answered public expectation, the corporation have been trying a new experiment in Broadway, in front of the block between Warren and Chambers streets, copied from a plan of paving in St. Petersburgh, Russia. The street is excavated to the depth of about two feet; a layer of broken stone is placed, such as is used for macadamizing, on the top of which a regular pavement of round stones, the whole covered by a compact course of wooden blocks, sexagonal, one foot in length, and placed vertically. These are made to fit very nicely, the interstices (which of course are small) filled with liquid tar, and covered with a thin coat of gravel. The street was used yesterday for the first time, and the multitudinous train of omnibuses, carriages, carts, and wagons which infest Broadway appeared to pass over the new Appian way 'pretty tolerably slick.' But it remains to be seen whether hemlock timber is less destructible than Nyack stone, and whether three distinct layers of road may not peradventure cost more than one."—Hone's Diary, I: 164. See also Eve. Post, S 22, 23, N 27, 28, 1835.

In a series of letters to his brother Peter, who is at Havre, 26
Washington Irving, writing on several occasions between Aug. 24, 1835, and Feb. 16, 1836, records his progress in writing Astoria. This work was written at the residence of John Jacob Astor, which was situated at 88th St., near East River.—See view in Man. Com. Coun. (1864), 208. In a letter of Sept. 26, 1835, he thus describes the place:

". . . For upward of a month past I have been quartered at Hellgate, with Mr. Astor, and I have not had so quiet and delightful a nest since I have been in America. He has a spacious and well-built house, with a lawn in front of it, and a garden in rear. The lawn sweeps down to the water edge, and full in front of the house is the little strait of Hellgate, which forms a con-

1835 Sept. 26 stantly moving picture. Here the old gentleman keeps a kind of bachelor hall. Halleck, the poet, lives with him, but goes to town every morning, and comes out to dinner. The only other member of his family is one of his grandchildren, a very fine boy of fourteen years of age [Charles Astor Bristed]. . . . I cannot tell you how sweet and delightful I have found this retreat; pure air, agreeable scenery, a spacious house, profound quiet, and perfect command of my time and self. . . ."—Life and Letters of Washington Irving, by his nephew, Pierre M. Irving, III: 78.

30 Hone writes: "I took Mr. Brevoort, Mr. Louis McLane, and Washington Irving out in the carriage to dine with old Mr. Astor, at Hell-gate. We had a pleasant, easy, sociable dinner, and returned home at nine o'clock."—Hone's Diary, I: 165.

Oct. — In this month, a meeting of eight persons was held at the house of Knowles Thomas, in Bond St., and a movement started "to establish a theological seminary in this city," which eventually resulted in the founding of the Union Theological Seminary of to-day. A seminary fund was raised, amounting to $61,000 in Jan., 1836.—Lossing, Hist. of N. Y. City, II: 447–48. See, further, Ja 18, 1836.

1 The second convention (for the first, see Ag 25, 1834) of the "National Trades' Union of the United States" assembles at 15 Park Row, an application for the use of a room in city hall having been refused. The sessions continued through Oct. 6. Among the reforms discussed by the delegates and concerning which resolutions were presented and adopted, were: A universal ten-hour day for government workers; abolishing the system of employing convict labour in competition with other labour; a more adequate compensation for female labour; checking the multiplication, for females, "of all description of labor." The last is deemed a "moral injury" to the "youthful female," in forcing her "to associate with the men of all descriptions," and thereby "acquire the ruder habits of the males;" further, the competition it creates with the males "tends inevitably to impoverish both."—A Doc. Hist. of Am. Indust. Soc., VI: 228–63, and authorities there cited.

3 On invitation of the directors of the N. Y. & Harlem R. R., a party is shown the new road from the city hall to Harlem. The members of the senate and common council are among them. They view, from Prospect Hill, the discharge of several hundred blasts for excavating the tunnel. The embankment, arched carriage-ways, etc. are described.—N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., O 5; Com. Adv., O 5, 1835. See 1837.

" "An Old Citizen" writes to one of the papers: "The increase of our population, owing to the commercial prosperity of the last few years, has so far exceeded all expectation, that no adequate provision has been made to meet the future or even present demand for building lots. The graduation of streets, as established by the Corporation ordinances, does not extend beyond 33d street and very few of the streets above 21st street have been opened by law, and several even below that line are not distinguishable from the adjacent pasture fields. It is computed, on the best authority, there are not more than 3,000 lots in a situation now to be built upon which are unoccupied. This does not exceed a single year's supply. . . . The effect of this state of things is that no lots, suitable for occupation, can be obtained under $1500 or $2,000, and that our enterprising and industrious young merchants and mechanicks are expelled from the city in which their business is transacted, and compelled to remove to the neighbouring shores of Long Island and New Jersey. . . .

"The only efficient means of retaining our citizens on the island is to graduate forthwith the city at least as far as Harlaem Bridge, as well as the intermediate space between 33d and 108th st. as that which lies within the village, and to open at once all the streets, as high as 44th street, and such other streets and avenues beyond that line, as may be applied for by the adjacent owners or are required by the general convenience. . . . Carpenters and masons can cover the three thousand lots now ready for occupation with magnificent edifices, long before the commissioners will be prepared to report on the damages and benefit to owners from opening these streets below 42d street; a Custom House and a new City Hall can be much more easily erected than, judging from the progress made in enclosing Union Square and paving the adjacent streets, the new avenues can be regulated. The prosperity of the city calls for an efficient organization of the Street Commissioner's department. The present Corporation, and particularly the able Chairman of the Street Committee of the Board of Aldermen, and the Alderman and Assistant of the 12th Ward in which the proposed improvements are precisely situated, have done all that can be expected from them. Legislation is, however, of little avail without the co-operation of the executive officers, and the resignation of the present street commissioner will enable the Common Council to place that department on a footing commensurate with its importance, and the variety of details entrusted to it."—Eve. Post, O 3, 1835. See D 2.

Oct. 3 Clinton Country Market at the foot of Canal St. is opened.—Eve. Post, O 27, 1835.

29 A general meeting of Democrats takes place at Tammany Hall to determine party principles and nominations. The regulars are outnumbered by the "Anti-Bank" or "Anti-Monopoly" faction. When the former turned out the gas, "in the twinkling of an eye, hundreds of candles were pulled from the pockets of the people, which by the aid of loco foco matches were immediately lighted."—Eve. Post, O 30, 1835. This incident gave cause for calling this wing of the Democratic party the "Loco-Focos."—Cf. Byrdsall, Hist. of Loco-Foco Party, 23–28; also Pl. 126-b, "The Times," and its descrip., III: 690–91.

" "We understand it is ascertained by actual survey, that this island comprises thirteen thousand acres, and it is estimated that one thousand acres will eventually be added to it by extending into the rivers and filling up of marshes. The first thousand acres is comprised in the line below Grand street, from river to river—from Grand street to twenty-first street there are two thousand acres. In these three thousand acres, it is supposed there are yet vacant lots sufficient to accommodate not only the whole present population of the Island but enough more to make up the number of 600,000—or the number of 100,000 inhabitants to one thousand acres, allowing about the same density of population that now exists below Canal street.—It may be seen from this, that the whole Island is capable of accommodating nearly a million and a half of inhabitants—and if our population continues to increase in the same ratio it has done for the last thirty or forty years, the Island will be filled to its whole extent, in a period of less than half a century."—N. Y. Com. Adv., O 29, 1835, citing Merc. Adv.

Nov. 11 Hone writes: ". . . the Italian opera does not succeed, and the proprietors are about selling their opera-house (the neatest and most beautiful theatre in the United States, and unsurpassed in Europe); but there are two reasons for this, both of which savour much of the John Bullism which we have inherited from our forefathers. The first is, that we want to understand the language; we cannot endure to sit by and see the performers splitting their sides with laughter, and we not take the joke; . . . The other is the private boxes, so elegantly fitted up, which occupy the whole of the second tier. They cost six thousand dollars each, to be sure, and the use of them is all that the proprietors get for their money; but it forms a sort of aristocratical distinction. Many people do not choose to occupy seats (more pleasant and commodious than they can find in any other theatre) while others recline upon satin cushions, and rest their elbows upon arm-chairs, albeit they are bought with their own money. . . . I like this spirit of independence which refuses its countenance to anything exclusive. . . ."—Hone's Diary, I: 170.

13 Hone describes eccentric conduct exhibited by Booth, the tragedian, at the Bowery Theatre, which indicates a partial derangement of mind.—Hone's Diary, I: 171. This was Junius Brutus Booth, a lineal descendant of John Wilkes, and the father of Edwin Booth and John Wilkes Booth. "His irregular habits shortened his life."—Lossing, Harpers' Popular Cyclopædia of U. S. Hist. (1893), I: 143.

19 "A vessel will depart to-day for Texas, with nearly two hundred 1835 Nov. 19 volunteers. She goes direct to New Orleans, which is to be the rendezvous for four other vessels also with volunteers—immediately after their arrival they will leave in a body for Texas."—Eve. Post, N 19, 1835, citing Merc. Adv. These volunteers were to help Texas in her struggle for independence.

20 A news item reads: "Astor's Hotel.—The exterior is nearly completed and the appearance far surpasses expectation, for size and solidity no building in the United States will compare with it. The building and the ground cost over half a million of dollars. The upper part, not including the stores, is rented for twenty thousand dollars per annum. Mr. Astor to furnish it; to do which he is to expend Eighty thousand dollars; the tenant is to pay an interest on this sum of six per cent. making four thousand eight hundred dollars, together with the taxes on the same, amounting to sixteen hundred dollars. The rent will therefore be twenty-five thousand four hundred dollars. There are eighteen stores on the basement, on Vesey and Barclay streets, and on Broadway. These will rent for at least five hundred dollars each—making in all a rent of thirty five thousand dollars in round numbers; yielding over six per cent. for the first lease. The interior of the house is in a rapid state of finish, the furniture is in contract, and every effort making to open the doors on the first of May next."—Eve. Post, N 20, 1835, citing Daily Adv.

28 Some surprising prognostications are published concerning improvements in New York and elsewhere by the year 3,000. Bridges over the two rivers; quays extending two miles up each river; gunpowder antiquated, and in its place a machine "by the breath of which an army of a million men may be destroyed in an hour," and which "has decided for ever against all future appeals to force, for the settlement of international differences;" a tunnel from New York to Staten Island abandoned in favour of an aerial ship; New York City with a population of 10,500,000,— are some of the features of the prophesy.—N. Y. Mirror, XIII: 172–73.

Dec. 2 "There appears to be a serious move in the City Councils, towards laying out streets and Avenues in the Twelfth Ward. A large portion of the owners of lots in that section of the city, reside in the lower part of the city. The great facilities offered to the inhabitants to reside at Brooklyn, Staten Island, Jersey City and Williamsburg, begins to alarm land owners, who at length see that unless equal facilities are afforded to reach the Twelfth Ward, that portion of the city will not be benefitted by the great increase of population. The crowded state of Broadway is such, that Avenues ought to be opened to relieve it. Hudson street should be brought down in a strait line to the intersection of Courtlandt street and Broadway; this would be a great accommodation to persons residing on the west side of the city. William street should be widened and extended to Chatham street, Henry street opened into William street. The Third or Fourth Avenues should be opened into Centre street, so that Rail Road cars could start from the rear of the City Hall. These improvements which have long been talked of, should be done without delay, they can be made at a less expense now, than any other time, and when done, would increase the value of Real Estate in the Twelfth Ward, twenty to fifty per cent."—Eve. Post, D 2, 1835, citing Daily Adv.

7 The St. Nicholas Society celebrates its first anniversary with a dinner at the City Hotel.—Eve. Post, D 7 and 8, 1835.

16 & 17 A fire, starting in a store on Merchant St. (later called Hanover St.), corner of Pearl, rages along Water, South, Front, Pearl, Stone, Beaver, Mill, Hanover, Merchant, William and Wall Sts., Hanover Square, Coenties Slip, Old Slip, Jones' Lane, Gouverneur Lane, Guyless Alley, and Exchange Place, and consumes nearly 700 houses in 17 blocks, chiefly large shipping and wholesale dry-goods and grocery houses. It is the section which contained the banks, the Stock Exchange, and the post-office, the very heart of the city. The merchants' exchange on Wall Street, built in 1825–1827, and the South Dutch Church in Garden St., are destroyed. With the latter is also destroyed the corner-stone of the old church in the fort, unearthed in 1790 (q.v.) by workmen digging up the foundation of Fort George, and placed for preservation in the Garden St. church. (See, further, F 15, 1836.) Certain buildings were blown up with gunpowder to stop the spread of the flames (see Mayor's Message, 1836, 71).

The white marble statue of Hamilton, which stood 15 ft. high with its pedestal, in the rotunda of the exchange, is lost. It had been erected "by the munificence of our merchants during the present year;" but now "is mixed with the ruins of the ill fated structure it was erected to adorn."—N. Y. Com. Adv., D 17, 1835. Dec. 16 & 17 "A gallant effort was made to save the statue of Hamilton by a young officer from the navy yard with a party of four or five sailors. They had actually succeeded in removing it from the pedestal, when the danger from the approaching fall of the roof, compelled them to seek safety in flight."—Ibid., D 21, 1835. See also descrip. of Pl. 115, III: 619.

Ball Hughes retained possession of the original model of his Hamilton statue, the destruction of which left New York without any public statue.—N. Y. Mirror, XIII: 303, 327 (Mr 19, Ap 9, 1836).

During the progress of the fire, Alexander Robertson made a sketch of it. He "placed himself among the smoking ruins of the once magnificent City Hall [error for merchants' exchange], close to one of the great marble columns of its portico," and remained until his drawing was finished.—The Art of Seeing, by an Artist [Andrew Robertson], ed. by his daughter, Emily Robertson, the title-page of the work being Elementary and Practical Hints as to the Perception and Enjoyment of the Beautiful in Nature.

The Chamber of Commerce, which was in the exchange, lost the manuscript of its charter. In this building were the board of brokers, the post-office, and several mercantile offices. The Franklin Market at Old Slip was also destroyed.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, III: 133.

For full accounts of the disaster, see the newspapers of the next few days,—for example, the N. Y. Eve. Post, D 17; N. Y. Herald, D 18, 1835; also Hone's Diary, I: 180–88; N. Y. H. S. Collections (1849), 419, 440; Costello, Our Firemen, 270–302; and MS. letters in the "Sylvester" papers at N. Y. Hist. Soc. An 8vo pamphlet was published by C. Foster in 1835, and again in 1836, entitled An Account of the Conflagration of the Principle Part of the First Ward of the City of New York. With numerous etchings and a plan Showing the State of the Ruins, with a list of names of the persons burnt out, etc. (containing 4 views and plan). Other accounts are found in Stone's Hist. of N. Y. City, 471–86; Lossing, Hist. of N. Y. City, I: 345–55; Watson's Annals, 369–82.

Scenes during the fire are shown on Pls. 114 (a and b) and 115, Vol. III. See the descriptions of these (III: 617–19), and authorities there cited; and see references to the fire in the descriptions of Pl. 110, III: 614; Pl. 123-a, III: 685; and Pl. 146-a, III: 717. A view of the fire from Weehawk, "Drawn on Stone by A. Picken from a Sketch taken on the spot by Lieutenant Westbrook," is found in the N. Y. P. L. (Emmet 11512). Another lithographic view of the fire is in the Eno collection.

On Dec. 21, 1835, the Herald described the burned territory, with an account of the property destroyed, and a ground plan of the region devastated (Emmet 11515). See also the map published in the Eve. Post, D 22, 1835.

The members of the N. Y. Stock and Exchange Board, which had held its sessions in the merchants' exchange, meet "at John Warren's office," and vote "to suspend all operations for the present week, and appoint a committee to secure rooms." On Dec. 19, the committee reported that they "had engaged temporarily a room at Howard's Hotel, No. 8 Broad Street, at three dollars a day." A portion of the site of that hotel is included in the site of the Stock Exchange building as it stood in 1894. The records of the board were saved from the fire (see D 16) in an iron chest. On Dec. 23, the committee reported that they had engaged "the back room of the basement story in John Warren's building, of Mr. Pepoon, at the rate of 750 Dollars per annum, for the use of the Board."—Eames, The N. Y. Stock Exchange, 29–30. Dec. 17

The common council requests the mayor to call a meeting of the citizens to devise measures "for remedying the effects of the serious calamity with which this city has been visited." A joint committee of the two boards is appointed to inquire into the causes of the fire.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, III: 126–27. Dec. 19

A large public meeting is held with Mayor Lawrence in the chair, and it is resolved that a committee consisting of the mayor and 125 citizens be appointed "to ascertain the extent and probable value of property destroyed, and how far the sufferers are protected by insurance: Also, with power to make application to Congress for relief by an extension of credit for debts due the United States, and a return or remission of duties on goods destroyed: And also to ask for such other aid from the General, State, and City Governments as may be deemed expedient: Also to ascertain the origin "

1835 Dec. 19 and cause of the fire, and what change if any should be made, either in the regulations of streets, the erection of buildings, or the arrangement of the Fire Department, to prevent a recurrence of similar calamities, and to take such other measures as the emergency may demand."—Eve. Post, D 19 and 21, 1835.

" "The Merchants' Exchange is held at the Mechanics' Exchange in Broad Street; the post-office removed to the rotunda in Chambers street. The printing-offices, of which a large number are burned out, are distributed into different places, and it is amusing to see the holes and corners into which the merchants have stowed themselves."—Hone's Diary, I: 186. On Dec. 21, the Post said: "The Rotunda in the Park is fitting up for the Post Office, to which place it will probably be moved this day."—Eve. Post, D 21, 1835. See D 28.

21 The common council requests the mayor, in connection with the president of the board of trade, and Chamber of Commerce, "to apply forthwith to the proper departments of the Government of the United States, . . . to extend every possible facility to all the Banks in this city, and especially by loaning to said Banks a large proportion of the surplus revenue of the United States, and of affording relief to the citizens who have sustained loss by the late fire . . ."—Proc., App'd by Mayor, III: 128.

It is "referred to the Committee on Fire and Water, of both boards, with power to confer with a committee of citizens, to take such effectual measures as they may deem proper, to rescure the property now buried under the ruins of the late fire in the First Ward."—Ibid., III: 129.

" The mayor signs a resolution that the lease of Castle Garden, held by H. Marsh, be renewed for five years, preserving the conditions of the old lease, excepting that the rent will be $1,000 per annum. The lease will be void in case the "Castle" should be wanted for the defence of the harbour.—Mayor's Message (1835), 63.

" The mayor signs a resolution appropriating $3,000 for the purchase of a lot and erecting a justices' court-room and house of detention at Harlem in the Twelfth Ward.—Mayor's Message (1835), 65.

22 As the fire of Dec. 16 "was increased . . . by the narrow streets and high stores on each side thereof, and the total destruction of all the buildings in that section of the city renders it expedient and advisable to alter the route and width of the streets through the same," the common council therefore recommends "to the owners of lots in that section of the city, to meet together on Wednesday next at 12 o'clock, in the Superior Court Room of the City Hall, and take the necessary measures for the adoption of a suitable plan for altering the same before commencing any buildings."—Proc., App'd by Mayor, III: 129.

" "We believe every citizen will rejoice that the Corporation have promptly come to the relief of the citizens. A plan was adopted last night by the Common Council for creating a stock of six millions of dollars, bearing an interest of five per cent. which shall be exchanged for Bonds and Mortgages held by the Insurance Companies. This will enable the Companies to pay promptly; and all the sufferers will be relieved. We believe the simple fact that the city will take these bonds and mortgages, will induce capitalists to come forward and take the mortgage at once; so that before the loan is even consummated, all the mortgages will be taken up, and the city saved from any expense or trouble."—Eve. Post, D 22, 1835, citing Daily Adv.

" Dr. Hosack dies.—Hone's Diary, I: 188–89.

30 The common council orders "That an iron railing be placed round the basement of the City Hall, similar to the one on the west side of the Hall of Records, with stone wall and coping [described in a filed report] . . . that the Superintendent of Building be directed to advertise for estimates for the same, and carry the same into effect, under the direction of the Building Committee."—Proc., App'd by Mayor, III: 136; Mayor's Message (1836), 69.

31 For the year ending on this day (cf. S 30, 1820; 1825; 1830), 32,715 passengers arrived at the port of N. Y.—Arrivals of Alien Passengers and Immigrants (1891), 64.

— In this year, John Ericsson patented the screw-propeller, which he had invented and operated in 1833–1835.—Mag. of Am. Hist. (1891), XXV: 11; ibid. (1892), XXVIII: 173–74; Church, Life of John Ericsson, I: 89 passim, 98–99.

A report, in 1838, presented the following concerning American manufactures: "American Institute.— . . . 'The late annual fair,' says the writer, 'was closed by an able and elegant dissertation on the rise, progress, and present prospects, of the various manufactures within our borders. . . . The single article of iron, manufactured and vended in this city in 1836, amounted to seven millions of dollars; and although a temporary stagnation of business has somewhat diminished the trade, the manufacture is still on the increase, some articles having even been largely required for the London market. . . . In 1828, the American Institute introduced the culture of silk within our borders, and by the exertions of its members, the question as to whether its growth was adapted to our climate, was speedily solved in the affirmative. The importations of this one article, for the last sixteen years, amount to one hundred and sixty-seven millions, and in the year 1836, to twenty millions. . . .'"—Knickerbocker Mag. (1838), XII: 545. 1836 —

Joseph Henry, one of those who claimed to have invented the electro-magnetic telegraph—in Albany in 1830 (q.v.)—wrote, in 1876: "I think the first actual line of telegraph, using the earth as a conductor, was made in the beginning of 1836. A wire was extended across the front campus of the College grounds [Princeton] from the upper story of the Library building to the Philosophical Hall on the opposite side, the ends terminating in two wells. Through this wire signals were sent from time to time from my house to my laboratory."—From Henry's letter to Rev. S. B. Dod, author of "Princeton and Science," in The Princeton Book (1879), 96. —

In this year, Mrs. Ernestine L. Rose, a Polish lady, began lecturing through the United States, one of her subjects being "Equal Rights of Women." She sent a petition with five names to the New York legislature concerning property rights of women, and another later with 30 names; but the legislature took no notice of either of them.—Annals of N. Am., 575. —

In this year, the city charter was published with annotations by James Kent, chancellor of the state, together with a treatise by him on the power, duties, and authority of the mayor, aldermen, and assistant aldermen. —

In this year, the Manhattan Company extended its system of water-works northward along Broadway as far as Bleecker St., and it then had about 25 miles of mains and supplied about 2,000 houses. The company continued to operate its system until the introduction of the Croton water in 1842.—20th Ann. Rep., Am. Scen. & Hist. Pres. Soc. (1915), 207–8. —

In this year, 1826 buildings were erected in New York.—Eve. Post, O 10, 1837. —

In this year, the College of Physicians and Surgeons removed to the building of the Girls' Normal School, at 67 Crosby St.—See L. M. R. K., III: 940. See, further, 1855. —

In this year, the erection of the edifice known as the "Halls of Justice," and later as "The Tombs," was commenced, on ground selected in 1834 (q.v., N 24) by the common council. It was finished in the summer of 1838 (q.v.). —

In this year, St. Bartholomew's Church on Lafayette Place was opened. The site was later occupied by the Roman Catholic Mission of the Immaculate Virgin.—Mrs. Lamb in Mag. of Am. Hist. (1886), XVI: 11. —

In this year, a stone portico, clock, weather-vane, and other improvements, were added to St. Mark's Church.—See descrip. of Pl. 119, III: 624; Memorial of St. Mark's Church (1899), 55, 139. —

In this year, the third church of the Scotch Presbyterians (see 1756) was erected, at the corner of Crosby and Grand Sts. Five lots were purchased there for $30,000. This edifice was larger than the Cedar St. building (see 1768), and was constructed of bluestone and Morrisania marble. The congregation occupied it only about 16 years. It was then sold, for $55,000, to a sister congregation, now known as the Fourth Presbyterian Church.—Wylie, Our Jubilee. The 150th Anniversary of the Scotch Presbyterian Church, New York 1756–1906, 15–17; Greenleaf, Hist. of Churches in City of N. Y., 205–6; see also L. M. R. K., III: 932. The Scotch Presbyterians next established themselves on 14th St. (see 1853). —

In this year, the library of the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions was started.—Man. Com. Coun. (1856), 566. It is still in active operation, being situated in the Metropolitan Life Bldg. —

In this year, the "Mulberry St. Church" (Baptist) went "under the hammer," and became the "Tabernacle Church" (Baptist), —

1836 with seats free.—Life of Wm. Wallace Everts, D.D., by his son
— (Phila., 1891), 14, 18.

— In this year, the Shakespeare Tavern, at the s. w. cor. of Fulton and Nassau Sts., was demolished, when Fulton St. was widened. William L. Stone wrote in 1872: "It was originally a low, old-fashioned, massive edifice, built of small, yellow bricks, two stories high, with dormer-windows on the roof. . . . The building was erected many years before the Revolution, by John Leake, a commissary in the French war [L. M. R. K., III: 980] but, in 1822, a modern extension on Fulton Street, three stories high, was added.

"On the second story there was a room for public meetings and military drills, and on the third story there was also another room, arched, for concerts and balls, and for the accommodation of the political, literary, and musical patrons of the house. It was kept in its palmiest days by Thomas Hodgkinson. . . . and under his management it became and long continued a great resort for the wits of the day, and was celebrated for the superiority of its wines and the quiet comfort and elegance of its private suppers.

"The 'Shakespeare Tavern,' in fact, was to New York what the 'Mermaid' was to London in the days of Shakespeare and Queen Bess, or, later, the 'St. James Coffee-house' and the 'Turk's Head' in the time of Reynolds, Garrick, and Goldsmith. . . ."—Stone, Hist. of N. Y. City, 487–92. For a view of it, see item No. 4944 in Emmett collection, in N. Y. P. L.

On its site, the "Commercial Advertiser Building" was erected. This was destroyed by fire Sept. 15, 1891.—Harper's Weekly, S 26, 1891; Stone, op. cit., 487.

— In this year, the widening of Fulton St. required cutting off eight ft. from the front of the Moravian Church on the south side of this street between William and Dutch Sts.—Greenleaf, Hist. of the Churches, 278. See 1829.

— In this year, John St. was widened from Broadway to Pearl St. —Man. Com. Coun. (1865), 544.

— In this year, Astor Place was opened.—See L. M. R. K., III: 992. For description of the neighbourhood, see Man. Com. Coun. (1865), 608.

— At this period, there was unusual activity in opening and widening streets (see 1830). In 1836, the following were among the streets opened: Fifth Ave. from 21st to 42d St., and from 42d to 129th St.; Lexington Ave. from 31st to 42d St.; Tenth Ave. from 71st St. to Kingsbridge Road; Madison Ave. from 23d to 42d St.; 42d St. from river to river; 125th St. from Third Ave. to Harlem River; 130th St. from Third to Fifth Ave.; 116th St. from Fourth to Tenth Ave.; 23d St. from Third to Eighth Ave.; and 33d St. from river to river. Mt. Morris Square, Manhattan Square, and the public place at Art and 8th Sts. and Lafayette Place were also opened. The following were among the streets widened: John St. from Broadway to Pearl St.; Maiden Lane at Nassau St.; Pine St. between Nassau and William Sts.; and Stone St. from William to Broad St. The streets in the burned district were also improved, at a total cost of $394,728. For the entire list of streets provided for in this year, and the cost involved, see Man. Com. Coun. (1857), 532–35.

— In this year, the so-called "Colton Map" of the city and county of New York (first state), was published by J. H. Colton & Co. It was accompanied by a descriptive pamphlet entitled A Summary Historical, Geographical, and Statistical View of the City of New York; together with some notices of Brooklyn, Williamsburgh, &c in its Environs. For reproduction and description of the second state of the map, depicting the city in 1840, and published in 1841, see Pl. 124, III: 687. This is the last of the fine large copper-plate maps of Manhattan Island, and one of the most useful and beautiful.

— In this year was printed, in part 2 of The Picturesque Beauties of the Hudson River and Its Vicinity, illustrated in a series of views (pub. by Disturnell), 3, a small wood-cut vignette having in the foreground a windmill, and in the distance a train of cars with locomotive. It is entitled "View from Jersey City, engraved on wood by J. A. Adams." It is probably one of the earliest views of a locomotive and train in the neighbourhood of New York.

— Between 1836 and 1839, the engraved Horner view of New York, as seen from Brooklyn, was issued. It is reproduced and described as Pl. 120, III: 625–28.

— In this year, Edwin Smith made a survey of a proposed "Murray Hill Square," in the vicinity of Fourth Ave. and 24th St.—See map No. 148 in real estate bureau of comptroller's office.

— In this year, Luman Reed died; he had been a patron of American art, "whose name is never mentioned in the annals of the time without respect and admiration." Inman, Mount, Morse, Durand, Cole, Flagg, and many other artists were aided by him. In his lifetime, his paintings were displayed in his house in Greenwich St. After his death, they were deposited with the N. Y. Hist. Soc., in whose galleries they still remain.—Isham, Hist. of Am. Painting (1905), 208, 218. 1836 —

Jan. — In this month, plans for a new market were agreed upon (reported by the market committee on Jan. 6, 1834) which should be in the nature of an extension of the Grand Street Market, now become an obstruction to traffic. The site selected was that bounded on the north by Grand St., on the south by Monroe St., and on the East by Corlaers St., comprising the eastern section of the block, and containing 140 ft. on Grand St., 125 ft. on Monroe St., 119 ft. on Corlaers St., and 225 ft. on a line running through the centre of the block. In Sept., it was named Monroe Market.—De Voe, 586–87; L. M. R. K., III: 959. See Jl 12, 1847.

3 The new Presbyterian church at the corner of Duane and Church Sts. is opened for worship. The congregation had worshipped in the "Cedar Street Church" until 1834 (q.v., Ja 8). The corporate name of the new church had already been changed to "The Presbyterian Church in Duane St."—Laws of N. Y. (1835), chap. 53; Greenleaf, 137–38.

5 The mayor approves a resolution suspending the operation of every city ordinance, etc., which permits or directs omnibuses, stages, or stage-coaches "to stand in any part of Wall-street."—Proc., App'd by Mayor, III: 141.

" The mayor approves the following resolution, passed by both boards of the common council: "Resolved, That it be referred to the Committee on Public Offices and Repairs of both Boards, to have a building erected adjoining the Rotunda, fronting on the Park, on the site where the Soup House and Hook and Ladder Company now are, to correspond with the front on Chamber street, for the accommodation of the Post Office."—Proc., App'd by Mayor, III: 140–41. See also descrip. of Pl. 115, III: 618.

" The common council directs the street commissioner "to cause surveys and profiles of the several streets in that part of the first Ward, which suffered by the late conflagration, to be made; also the streets which intersect them, with a view to form a new grade of said streets, as speedily as possible, so as to facilitate the rebuilding upon the same."—Proc., App'd by Mayor, III: 142. For plan of the Exchange Place extension, and the Merchant St. (Hanover St.) widening, see maps No. 720 and 721 in topographical bureau, borough president's office.

" The common council passes resolutions of appreciation for the sympathy and aid extended by the citizens of Philadelphia, Baltimore, Boston, Lancaster, Albany, Utica, Troy, and Brooklyn on account of the late fire.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, III: 144–47. On Feb. 3, 1836, an account of the proceedings of the citizens of these and various other cities in reference to the fire was printed by order of the common council.—Eve. Post, F 3, 1836.

6 The common council empowers the committee on public offices and repairs "to make all the necessary preparations and alterations to render the Rotunda convenient for the use of the Post Master, and commodious to the public."—Proc., App'd by Mayor, III: 140.

A report of the secretary of state of the state of New York, relating to a geological survey, gives an account of the stone and marble quarries from which building-stone is derived for public buildings in New York City.—Assemb. Docs., (Doc. No. 9) I: 17.

7 A joint committee of senate and assembly reports to the governor on his special message regarding the fire of Dec. 16–17, 1835, certain facts obtained from a committee delegated to represent the views of the citizens of New York to these officials of the state government. These facts (condensed) are:

"The loss sustained in buildings, including several public edifices, is supposed to be about 674. Immense ranges of capacious and valuable stores and warehouses have been levelled, and nearly 1,000 mercantile firms dislodged. These firms employed, it is estimated, from 3,500 to 4,000 clerks, besides cartmen, porters and labourers, many of whom depend for their support upon their daily and monthly earnings. The total amount of property destroyed is believed to be from $18,000,000 to $20,000,000. The fire burned over an area of 52 acres, comprising a densely built and exclusively mercantile portion of the city, and destroyed all within that compass, except three or four buildings.

1836 Jan. 7 "Before the fire, there were 25 fire insurance companies in the city, nearly all prosperous. Their aggregate capital was $8,170,000. Fourteen of them are now [Jan. 7, 1836] believed to be insolvent; four have their capital very much impaired, and several of the others are losers to a heavy amount. The total loss (estimated) sustained by these companies is about $7,000,000 leaving a little over $1,000,000 of sound capital.

"The following bills are reported by the committee in the belief that their passage will enable the city to retrieve its losses in great measure, and retain its commercial relations in full activity:

"First. 'An act to authorize the mayor, aldermen and commonalty of the city of New York to raise money by loan, &c.'

"Second. 'An act to enable the insolvent Fire Insurance companies more conveniently to adjust their affairs.'

"Third. 'An act to enable the stockholders of the said companies, and others, to replenish their stock, revive and continue their charters.'

"Fourth. 'An act for the relief of the city of New-York.'

"The first of these comes from the common council."—From Docs. of the Assembly (1836), Doc. No. 7. The text of the common council's memorial, asking for the passage of an act authorising the city corporation to raise moneys on loan, is found in ibid., Doc. No. 8; also a memorial of Cornelius W. Lawrence, chairman of a committee of citizens asking for the passage of two bills relating to the fire insurance companies, and another memorial from Lawrence, as chairman, asking for the repeal of the law subjecting to taxation debts due to non-residents.—Ibid., Doc. No. 8. See Ja 18.

18 At a meeting, held at the rooms of the Am. Tract Society, the "New York Theological Seminary" is organized by the choice of officers for the year. For the beginning of this work, see O, 1835. "A lot of ground belonging to the Sailors' Snug Harbor estate, two hundred feet square, was bought. It was on the east side of Wooster Street, then recently extended to Fourteenth Street, and which, having been widened above the university, had been named Jackson Avenue. This name was soon afterward changed to University Place. On that plot of ground a home for the seminary was finally erected, and there it still stands" (1884). For the development of this work, which subsequently became the Union Theological Seminary, see Lossing, Hist. of N. Y. City, II: 448–49. See, further, Mr, 1837.

30 The domestic architecture in the Bowling Green section of Broadway is for the first time varied by the introduction of tall stores.—N. Y. Mirror, XIII: 247. See also My 28.

Feb. 1 The mayor signs resolutions as follows: That the Twelfth Ward be divided by a line running through the centre of 40th St., forming a new ward to be called the Sixteenth Ward, the residue to be the Twelfth Ward; and that application be made to the legislature for a law to alter the map of the city so as to take for public purposes the gore of land between Art St., Eighth St., Lafayette Place, and the Bowery.—Mayor's Message (1836), 83. See, further, March 16.

" The common council orders that Mill St. be opened between Broad and William Sts.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, III: 111.

3 The Chamber of Commerce, after the fire of 1835, met, on this day, and thereafter until 1858, in the Merchants' Bank, on the north side of Wall St., the third house west of William St.—Bishop, A Chronicle of 150 Years. The Chamber of Com. of the State of N. Y. (1918), 60; and see Pl. 147, Vol. III.

6 The legislature authorises the commissioners of the land-office to sell to the United States certain state lands on Staten Island, heretofore used for military purposes, to enable the federal government "to construct and maintain proper defences for the protection of the harbor of New York."—Laws of N. Y. (1836), chap. 19. On May 4, 1844 (q.v.), the legislature appropriated the revenue from the sale of these lands to building a new arsenal in the city of New York.

10 "Business Extending.—We are glad to see a disposition to enlarge the circle of business. . . . Already the whole of Cedar st., east of Broadway, is built up.—Liberty street is rapidly following. John street will come next. Several jobbers have commenced in Broadway, the south side of which, from Wall st., to the Bowling Green, will soon be changed. The Brinckerhoff property, 40 feet front, running through to New st., is sold for $50,000. Gov. Jay's, known so long as Mrs. Keese's boarding house, 50 feet front, sold for $100,000. These, with many others, are soon to be taken down to accommodate the mercantile community."—N. Y. Com. Adv., F 10, 1836. The same paper advertises the forthcoming sale, on Feb. 13, of the "Banking house and lot of the United States Branch Bank," on Wall St.; the Society Library building and lot, at No. 33 Nassau St. (see F 13), and other parcels. Feb. 10

Philip Hone writes: "I think the merchants are wrong in opposing so strenuously the wishes of the up-town people to have the Post-Office somewhere in the vicinity of the City Hall park. The Custom-House and the Exchange are properly located in Wall street, for they are exclusively devoted to the merchants, and their wishes should alone be consulted on the subject; but it is not so with the Post-Office. Many persons in the upper wards are in the habit of receiving letters,—not so many, certainly, as the Howlands and the Griswolds, but enough to give them a right to a say in the matter. But the strongest argument is one of policy, and in disregarding it the merchants are short-sighted; the numerical strength of the upper wards is so great that they control our elections, and have on all municipal questions a controlling voice. They have been foiled in one or two affairs of this kind, and are somewhat savage at this determination of the 'money-eyed aristocracy' . . . to keep the Post-Office to themselves; they would consent to a compromise which would place this establishment near the park (the site of the present Bridewell would be a grand place, and a building similar to the Record Office would make a splendid finish), and that location would be permanent; whereas there is danger that, if Wall street is now agreed upon, the pertinacity of the people of the first ward would be punished by its removal, before five years, to the Bowery or Union Place."—Hone's Diary, I: 198–99. 13

" The Society Library building on Nassau St. (see Ap, 1795) is sold to Wm. W. Townsend for $44,200.—Keep, Hist. of the N. Y. Society Lib., 381. See also Je 3, 1835.

At this time, it was not decided whether the South Dutch Church in Exchange St. would be rebuilt on the same site or moved up town.—See letter of this date with "Sylvester" group, in N. Y. H. S. Its services were temporarily held in the chapels of the First Presbyterian Church on Wall St., and the Brick Presbyterian Church on Beekman St.—Hist. Sketch, 27. In 1837, the congregation divided into the Murray St. branch (1837–1848), and the Washington Sq. branch (1837–1876), occupying new churches in those localities.—Corwin's Manual, 1004. In 1849, the former of these moved to its new church building at the south-west corner of Fifth Ave. and 21st St., after temporarily worshipping in the chapel of the Union Theological Seminary in University Pl.—Hist. Sketch, 27, 29, 31, 37. In 1890 (q.v.), the congregation bought Zion (Episcopal) Church, at the south-east corner of Madison Ave. and 38th St., the latter church then joining with the Church of St. Timothy. See also L. M. R. K., III: 936. 15

A committee of the trustees of the merchants' exchange announces, regarding the new exchange, that "It is proposed to occupy the whole space, between Exchange Place, Wall, Hanover and William streets, (if the land can be obtained upon reasonable terms,) and to erect thereon a building, suitable in architectural design, and in appropriate accommodations, to the prosperous condition and growing wants of this mercantile community, provided that six thousand shares of one hundred dollars each, shall be subscribed within thirty days. It is intended that every room shall be vaulted and rest upon arches, and be made completely fire proof: and it has been estimated, by competant judges, that the nett revenue from the proposed building, will make dividends of at least six per cent. per annum, and by some it is believed, that the dividends may amount to seven or eight per cent. per annum." Half the subscriptions were obtained by Feb. 23, and books were opened on the three succeeding days to secure the remainder.—Eve. Post, F 23, 1836. See Mr 1. 18

" The Methodist Book Concern's printing and publishing establishment in Mulberry St. is destroyed by fire.—Eve. Post, F 18, and 19, 1836; Costello, Our Firemen, 223.

Extensive street openings were provided for on this day (see also 1836), including all the streets from 28th to 39th, inclusive, from river to river. The total cost for opening the entire length of 34th St. was $15,374.42.—Man. Com. Coun. (1857), 534–35. The assessments for opening 34th St. were levied in 1838 (q.v.). 19

A serious labour riot occurs, due to strikes by trades unionists.—Hone's Diary, I: 200–1. 23

1836 Feb. 23 "Twenty lots in the 'burned district,' the property of Joel Post, deceased, were sold at auction this day, . . . at most enormous prices, greater than they would have brought before the fire, when covered with valuable buildings. This, at least, is the opinion of the best judges of the value of the down-town property. . . . The lots . . . for which he [Mr. Post] gave $93,000 . . . fronted on Wall, William and Merchant streets and Exchange Place, in the immediate vicinity of the site of the old Merchants' Exchange, and where a new one is to be built, on a larger and more magnificent plan. The whole brought $765,100."—Hone's Diary, I: 200.

24 "The subscription for the new Exchange, on the enlarged plan, has been filled with a liberality which does great honour to our merchants. It will embrace the whole front on Wall street from Exchange place to William street, taking in the whole block, and will cost from $1,000,000 to $1,200,000."—Hone's Diary, I: 201.

Mar. 1 "The Merchants Exchange Company have taken the lot of Mr. Benedict, on the corner of Wall and William streets, at 82,000 dollars. It is something like twenty-five feet on Wall by thirty-five on William. Mr. Benedict bought it for 56,000 dollars, we believe, within a year, and with a good building on it; and it was sold some two years ago for a little over 40,000 dollars. Yet this immense advance on what was deemed an immense price, is not greater than has been generally experienced by other estates in the neighbourhood."—Eve. Post, Mr 1, 1836. On March 10, the company bought the lot of the Fulton Fire Insurance Co., 18 ft. on Wall St. and 40 ft. deep, for $40,000.—Ibid., Mr 11, 1835.

2 Texas declares itself independent.—Winsor, VII: 505, 551; McMaster, Hist. of the People of the U. S., VI: 256.

4 The common council resolves that the ground between Hudson, Troy (present W. 12th), and Bleecker Sts. and Eighth Ave. "be enclosed as a public Park," and appropriates $3,000 for the expense thereof.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, III: 208. This was Abingdon Square.—L. M. R. K., III: 968.

7 The first national convention of the organizations of a single trade, that of the cordwainers, is held in the 14th Ward Hotel; delegates are present from New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Connecticut, and New York. The objects are "to endeavor to equalize the wages as nearly as possible—to create that concert of action necessary to ensure a steady and sufficient price for our labor, and to transact such other business as shall be considered requisite."—Doc. Hist. of Am. Indust. Soc., V: 316–31.

9 Philip Hone has just sold his house at 235 Broadway, opposite the Park for $60,000, the ground floor of which is to be converted into shops and the upper floors to be used as an extension of the American Hotel.

Regarding this, he says that all the dwelling-houses down town are being "converted into stores." No one can resist the tempting prices offered, "and the old down town burgomasters, who have fixed to one spot all their lives, will be seen, during the next summer, in flocks, marching reluctantly north to pitch their tents in places which, in their time, were orchards, corn-fields, or morasses a pretty smart distance from town . . . but which constitute at this time the most fashionable quarter of New York." He refers to Second Ave., St. Mark's Place, Tompkins Square, and Lafayette Place.—Hone's Diary, I: 203–4. On March 24, he bought of Samuel Ward the corner lot at Broadway and Great Jones St. for $15,000, where he expected to build.—Ibid., I: 205. Meanwhile, on April 22, he hired a "marble house" in Broadway, opposite Washington Place, for $1,600 per annum.—Ibid., I: 207. In September, 1837, when his own house was nearly completed he recorded: "I finished my job of removing the Madeira wine to the garret room in the new house, . . . The quantity of Madeira and sherry removed is 2,023 quart bottles and 237 gallons."—Ibid., I: 269, 285.

" The mayor signs a resolution providing "that the Superintendent of Repairs cause to be prepared two flagstaffs of suitable length, to be erected on the centre of the right and left wings of the City Hall, together with two American flags, corresponding in size, with the heighth of said staffs, and that said flags be left with the keeper of the City Hall, whose duty it shall be to cause them to be displayed on all public occasions."—Proc., App'd by Mayor, III: 216.

16 The legislature creates the Sixteenth Ward (see F 1) out of part of the Twelfth Ward.—Laws of N. Y. (1836), chap. 49. See also Man. Com. Coun. (1864), 510, where, however, the date March 16, 1835, for this act, is an error.

Mar. 17 The mayor approves a resolution ordering that Fifth Ave. be opened from 21st to 129th St., except such portions as are already opened, and the portion between 120th and 124th Sts., which, as proposed on June 22, 1835 (q.v.), is to be made a public square.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, III: 221. See My 6.

22 The legislature passes an act which makes such portion of the fifth and sixth brigades of artillery as reside in the city and county of New York subject to the order of the mayor, whenever their services shall be required to aid the civil authorities to quell riots, suppress insurrection, property, or preserve the peace.—Laws of N. Y. (1836), chap. 66.

23 The New York branch of the Bank of the United States (see 1825), at Nos. 15–17 Wall St. (present Nos. 30–32 Wall), closes, this being the last day of discount. The removal of government deposits from the Bank of the United States had been the occasion for many public mass-meetings in a number of cities.—Hardenbrook, Financial N. Y., 177–78. See, further, S 9, and O 8.

26 The ruins of the merchants' exchange had not been removed at this date, and were considered a menace to public safety.—See N. Y. Mirror, Mr 26, 1836.

The new edifice was commenced, however, in this year, on the same site, and was completed in 1842 (q.v.), although opened for use (Nov. 17, 1841, q.v.). See also descrip. of Pl. 118, III: 623; and descrip. of Pl. 152-a, III: 772.

During the period of construction, the business of the exchange was conducted in a building at the corner of New and Exchange Sts.—See "Classified Mercantile Directory," 120, at back of Disturnell's N. Y. As It Is, In 1837. See also descrip. of Pl. 99, III: 591.

Apr. 5 Miss Harriet Martineau is in New York.—Hone's Diary, I: 206.

"J. Disturnell, of this city, has published a Guide to the City of New York, containing an alphabetical list of streets, with the census, the division of the city into wards and fire districts, and other matters, accompanied with a map of the city."—Eve. Post, Ap 5, 1836.

9 The northward trend of the city's growth is thus described: ". . . Broadway has ceased to be Broadway. It is nearly as much of a mere crowded thoroughfare as Fleet-street, London. During the winter, it has been almost blocked up with omnibuses, carts, sleighs, carriages, barrows, etc. etc. Most of the boarding-houses below Wall-street have been converted, or are about to be, to other purposes. It is said, that N. Prime's house is to give place to a hotel; and that, in one year, there will be scarcely a private residence or a boarding-house below Wall-street. The rise in rents and the price of bread, there, have already driven many up town. Mr. Astor thinks, properly enough, that a great portion of the retail business, drygood stores, etc., will soon reach as far as Prince-street. Ladies will, hereafter, scarcely extend their promenades farther down than the Park; and what will become of the Battery, heaven only knows."

Referring to New York's growth in population, this writer expatiates prophetically regarding the expected building extension. He even predicts "tunnels," and expects that this will become "one of the most wealthy, populous and splendid cities of the globe."

He compares New York of 50 years ago, when it had "contracted limits, its insignificant streets, its corn-fields about St. Paul's, its swamps and ponds by Tammany-hall, its heaths where now stands West Broadway, the water washing against Trinity-church, and all the almost incredible characteristicks of the city in seventeen hundred and eighty, and which have now so completely passed away before the broad and universal spirit of wealth and improvement." He expects that, in another 50 years, transformations more striking and important will be effected, with "new churches, squares and streets, coping with all the gorgeousness of London and Paris, where now spread only barren heath and unbroken solitude."—N. Y. Mirror, XIII: 327. See also descrip. of Pl. 98, Vol. III.

12 Mayor Lawrence is reëlected a second time (see Ap 11, 1835). Candidates of the Whig, Equal Rights, and Native American parties, were in the field, but the mayor's majority was decisive. However, the Whigs elected half the members of the common council.—Man. Com. Coun. (1854), 489–91.

14 "The pressure in the money market is daily increasing. The rate of discount on the best paper is from thirty to forty per cent.

1836 Apr. 14 per annum. Exchanges are far below par, but no importation of specie will take place until the rate of exchange is sufficiently in our favour to cover not only the expence and risk of importation, but also the interest of the money while it is necessarily lying idle on the voyage. . . ."—Eve. Post, Ap 14, 1836. See also ibid., Ap 15, 1836.

15 The legislature passes an act "to provide for a geological survey of the state."—Laws of N. Y. (1836), chap. 142. Five annual reports were made by the commissioners, the full report comprising several volumes. See Ja 6.

16 "A plan has been formed in this city to collect in one building, models, specimens, and drawings of all the important improvements in the mechanick arts of which our country can claim the honour. It will go into effect under the auspices of the American Institute, who have taken a hall for the purpose in Broadway, to be opened on the 1st of May. It is to be called the Repository of Arts of the American Institute."—Eve. Post, Ap 16, 1836.

20 The legislature incorporates a company to build a macadamised turnpike from Harlem to New Rochelle.—Laws of N. Y. (1836), chap. 167.

" The legislature authorises the dissolution of the "Masonic Hall Association," which was formed under an act of April 16, 1825, passed for the purpose of enabling masonic lodges to take and hold real estate for their affairs. It also authorises this association "to sell and convert into cash the lands and buildings of the said association known as the masonic hall, situated on Broadway, and in the rear on Pearl-street," a detailed description of which is contained in the association's certificate of incorporation.—Laws of N. Y. (1836), chap. 169. Some years later it became Gothic Hall.—See descriptive catalogue of Eno prints, pub'd by the N. Y. P. L., item 177. For the beginning of Masonic Hall, see Je 24, 1826.

21 The Texans, under Samuel Houston, defeat the Mexicans at San Jacinto, killing 630 and wounding 208. Santa Anna was captured the next day.—McMaster, Hist. of the People of the U. S., VI: 258–59.

23 The legislature passes an act "to expedite the construction of a rail-road from New-York to Lake Erie." It relates to the issuance of stock, and to other matters in this connection.—Laws of N. Y. (1836), chap. 170; see also ibid., chap. 296.

28 The mayor signs an ordinance to pave 14th St. from Union Place to the Hudson River.—Mayor's Message (1836), 113.

30 The legislature passes an act (amended on May 20) to aid the Institution for the Blind to acquire full title to the grounds and buildings of the institution (situated on the east side of Ninth Ave., between 33d and 34th Sts.).—Laws of N. Y. (1836), chaps. 226, 399. See also Jl 4, 1833. A brief report of the work done here in 1836 is found in N. Y. As It Is, In 1837 (pub. by Disturnell), 104. See, further, Ap 18, 1839.

May — Mayor Aaron Clark, reporting to the common council on My 22, 1837, said that in 1827 the Public School Society consisted of 9 schools, containing 4,558 boys and girls; in May, 1836, there were 15 schools containing 9,182 scholars of both sexes, 26 primary schools containing 2,946 children, and public primary schools for 1,171 coloured children.—Mayor's Message, 10.

2 The legislature amends a part of the Revised Statutes relating to quarantine regulations.—Laws of N. Y. (1836), chap. 230.

4 The legislature passes an act directing the governor to appoint commissioners to settle differences as to boundaries with persons who acquired title from the city to parts of the Common Lands prior to April 1, 1811.—Laws of N. Y. (1836), chap. 244.

" The legislature passes an act to alter the plan of the city in respect to certain streets in Manhattanville. Old streets named Manhattan St. and Lawrence St. are involved in this alteration.—Laws of N. Y. (1836), chap. 251; Doc. No. 109, Bd. of Ald. Mayor's Message (1835), 102. See also Pl. 112, Vol. III.

" The Union Market (see O 24, 1835) burns.—Eve. Post, My 5, 1836, citing Courier & Enquirer. It was rebuilt, and used until a larger one was erected in 1853 (q. v.).—De Voe, Market Book, 582–83, 586; L. M. R. K., III: 960.

" Manhattan Square, bounded by 77th and 81st Sts., Eighth and Ninth Aves., is directed to be opened.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, III: 270; L. M. R. K., III: 970. See Mr 11, 1839.

5 That part of the House of Refuge occupied by females is entirely destroyed by fire.—Eve. Post, My 6, 1836. See 1838.

6 The legislature authorises the common council to raise by loan, from time to time, a sum not exceeding $500,000, by the creation of a public fund or stock, to be called "The Public Building Stock of the City of New-York." The almshouse at Bellevue, and the lots of land and the water rights attached thereto (excepting such as the city may reserve for public purposes) are pledged as security for the payment of the debt. The money raised is to be spent for erecting and completing such public buildings and improvements in the city as may be authorised by the common council.—Laws of N. Y. (1836), chap. 255. May 6

9 In an act amending the act of incorporation of the N. Y. & Albany R. R. Co. (see Ap 17, 1832), the legislature extends for two years from this date the time for commencing the construction of the road. It also authorises the company, "after it shall have completed not less than thirty miles of said road in the county of Westchester, to commence the said road upon the island of New-York," with the consent of the common council; "to construct the same in such sections as they may deem most eligible, and as fast as they may obtain means for so doing." The rights of the Harlem Bridge Co. are not interfered with. The railroad's powers and obligations are more fully defined.—Laws of N. Y. (1836), chap. 268. See My 12, 1837.

" The common council resolves that the ground bounded by 23d and 26th Sts., Fifth Ave., and "a contemplated street in the centre of the block on the east," be set apart as a public place (Madison Square), and directs the corporation counsel to apply to the legislature for a law altering the map of the city so as to conform thereto.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, III: 278, L. M. R. K., III: 970. The law was passed on April 10, 1837 (q. v.).

10 The legislature establishes a public place at the intersection of Art St., 8th St., and Lafayette Place, in the Fifteenth Ward.—Laws of N. Y. (1836), chap. 279.

" The legislature passes an act creating a public place in Harlem (in the Twelfth Ward), bounded on the north by the southerly line of 124th St., east by a line parallel with Fourth Ave. and 425 ft. west from its westerly side, south by the north side of 120th St., and west by a line parallel with Sixth Ave. and 425 ft. east of its easterly side.

The act therefore discontinues the following parts of streets and avenues as laid down in the Commissioners' Map of 1807–11: Fifth Ave. between 120th and 124th Sts.; and 121st, 122d, and 123d Sts. between the easterly and westerly bounds of the public place above described. See Je 22, 1835; Mr 17, 1839; S 4, 1839.

Not until Oct. 21 did the mayor sign a resolution to carry this law into effect for taking and setting apart land to form Mount Morris Square.—Mayor's Message (1836), 42; L. M. R. K., III: 971. See, further, S 4, 1839.

The law also discontinues "Harlaem Square" shown in the Commissioners' Map, bounded by Sixth and Seventh Aves., 117th, and 121st Sts.; and 118th, 119th, and 120th Sts. are therefore continued through between Sixth and Seventh Aves. The owners of lands included in the blocks created by this extension of these streets shall possess their lands as they would have been entitled to do if the streets had been originally so extended on the Commissioners' Map, and when the streets are opened they will be assessed accordingly.—Laws of N. Y. (1836), chap. 280; Proc., App'd by Mayor, III: 96.

" The common council provides for widening William St. from Maiden Lane to Frankfort St., and extending it from Frankfort to Chatham St., in conformity to a map in the street commissioner's office.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, III: 282.

12 The legislature passes an act to amend the act incorporating the N. Y. & Harlem R. R. and the act of April 18, 1835, which amended it. The new law makes it a duty of this railroad to carry the mails.—Laws of N. Y. (1836), chap. 305.

" The American and Foreign Bible Society, an outgrowth of the Am. Bible Soc., is organized in the Oliver St. Baptist meeting-house, for the translation and distribution of the Bible.—Life of Spencer Houghton Cone, by his son (1856), 329. Cf. the American Bible Society, which was formed on May 8, 1816 (q. v.), and had its seat of operation at 115 Nassau St. See Jl 19.

14 Nassau St. is fast becoming the "Paternoster Row of New York," on account of the number of papers published there.—For a list of these, see N. Y. Mirror, XIII: 363.

17 The Post comments on the "excellent order" in which Third Ave. is kept. "As soon as a part of the surface is ground into dust by the wheels of carriages, it is carefully scraped away and its place

1836 May 17 supplied by fresh earth. Numbers of labourers are constantly employed upon it, and so uniformly even is the surface preserved by this daily care, that scarce a hollow is to be found on the whole length of the road. . . . Carriages pass over it so swiftly, noiselessly and easily, that it seems as if the horses drew them without an effort." William St., on the other hand, is "never cleared;" it is "a passage still choked by the filth of last November."—Eve. Post, My 17, 1836.

18 The legislature passes an act to alter the Commissioners' Map by the introduction of a public square to be called Stuyvesant Square, in the Sixteenth Ward, to be bounded as follows on the two sides of Second Ave.: north by 17th St., south by 15th St., east by a line parallel to Second Ave., 190 ft. east of its easterly side, and west by a line a like distance west of the westerly side of Second Ave. Public ways, each 36 ft. wide, shall be opened from 15th St. to 17th St. on the east and west sides, respectively, of this public square; and 16th St. between these two public ways is discontinued. The act shall take effect when the land within the limits of this square shall have been ceded by the owners to the corporation of the city.—Laws of N. Y. (1836), chap. 361. Cf. Mr 16, 1850.

" The legislature incorporates "The Bank of the State of New-York," to continue until Jan. 1, 1866. Its powers and obligations are fully defined in the act.—Laws of N. Y. (1836), chap. 365.

25 The legislature incorporates the Stuyvesant Institute of the City of New York, "for the diffusion of useful knowledge by popular lectures, the establishment of a library, a museum or cabinet of natural history, and a reading room, and by such other means as the board of directors may judge expedient."—Laws of N. Y. (1836), chap. 466. See, further, S 1, 1837.

28 The Battery is still a delightful promenade. For a description of it, see N. Y. Mirror, XIII: 383.

". . . The Bowling-green is an omnibus stand! The boarding-houses are all gone or going. You can scarcely get along for dust, piles of brick, bales, boxes and vehicles of business. The proposed pier in the north river will cause the whole southern end of the island to be abandoned to business. . . ."—Ibid.

31 "Astor's hotel" (the Astor House) is opened "for the reception of company."—N. Y. Mirror, XIII: 399; Eve. Post, My 30 and 31, 1836; and see ibid., N 20, 1835; Com. Adv., My 31, 1836; Albion, Je 4, 1836; L. M. R. K., III: 976; and descrip. of Pl. 99, III: 591. See also a view of this hotel in The Magnolia, 1837, p. 352. The hotel had a block frontage of 200 ft. from Vesey to Barclay St., and 150 ft. on the side streets. It was built of Quincy granite, five storeys high, forming a hollow square, with a paved court in the centre. This interior space was afterwards roofed. There were ten stores on Broadway and five on the other streets. The main entrance, at the centre of the Broadway front, flanked by Doric columns, opened into a large vestibule, the floor of which was laid with Mosaic squares of alternating blue and white marble, the same kind of flooring being used in the corridor or hall of the office floor above. —N. Y. Times, Ja 31, 1875. The hotel was finally closed in 1913. For fuller description and history of this famous hotel, see ibid., My 11, 1913; Sun, My 30, 1913; 19th Ann. Rep., Am. Scen. & Hist. Pres. Soc. (1914), 142–43. See also L. M. R. K., III: 976.

June 6 Twenty journeymen tailors have been convicted "of a conspiracy to raise their wages and to prevent any of their craft from working at prices less than those for which they struck." This led to the publication of an inflammatory handbill, entitled "The Rich against the Poor," directed against the judge as "the tool of the aristocracy, against the people!" The board of aldermen authorises the mayor to offer a reward for the discovery of the author, printer, publisher, or distributor.—Hone's Diary, I: 210–11.

9 The Orphan Asylum grounds and buildings on Bank St. (see Jl 11, 1807) having been sold, and nine and a half acres purchased at Bloomingdale, the corner-stone of a new building is laid there on this day. This building, on the Bloomingdale Road near 71st St., was completed in 1840.—Belden, New-York. Past, Present & Future, 98. See view in Man. Com. Coun. (1852), 310.

11 No. 1 Broadway was at this time occupied by "Mr. Bard, father-in-law and tenant of the younger Mr. Prime, its only proprietor." Mr. Prime "recently purchased it, and also two houses and lots in the rear on Battery Place, of his father, for one hundred thousand dollars." He wishes to obtain also Nos. 3 and 5, on which to erect a hotel. Broadway below Wall St. "is putting on as fast as possible the livery of a driving trade, and the aspect of an Old-slip and a Chatham-square."—N. Y. Mirror, XIII: 399.

The ground belonging to the South Reformed Dutch Church in Exchange Place is sold for $285,400. The building was destroyed in the fire of 1835.—Eve. Post, Je 15, 1836; L. M. R. K., III: 936. June 14

The common council authorises the "Water Purveyor" to issue proposals "for pipes to be laid down from Chatham-street to Nassau-street, through Nassau-street to Broad-street, through Broad-street to Pearl-street, agreeable to the size as adopted by the Water Commissioners."—Proc., App'd by Mayor, IV: 8. See Jl 28. 16

"A new club is about being established, at the head of which are a number of our most distinguished citizens, to consist of four hundred members, and to be similar in its plan and regulations to the great clubs of London, which give a tone and character to the Society of the British metropolis. A meeting was held this evening, at the Athenæum, to organize the club."—Hone's Diary, I: 212. This was the initial step in forming the Union Club. See D 7. 17

Ex-President James Madison dies.—Eve. Post, Jl 1, 1836. The common council adopted resolutions of regret on July 1.—Ibid., Jl 2, 1836. 28

"The part of the city consumed last winter by fire, now presents a curious and animated spectacle. The bustle and activity of the labourers bringing in and adjusting to each other the materials of construction, the rapid erection of spacious buildings in different stages of progress, on each side of the numerous and irregular streets which run through this quarter, remind the spectator of what he has read concerning cities built up suddenly in waste places. . . . 29

"In another part of the city a different spectacle may be seen. Chapel street, demolished on each side, looks as Jericho or Troy might have done after their siege."—Eve. Post, Je 29, 1836. See also ibid., N 11, 1836.

The mayor signs resolutions that members of the board of aldermen be supplied with copies of "Colton's new map of the city" (Vol. III: Pl. 124), and that Manhattan Square (bounded by Eighth and Ninth Aves., 77th and 81st Sts.) be opened.—Mayor's Message (1836), 3. July 6

The mayor signs a resolution providing that ground shall be set apart for a public place, bounded on the south by 23d St., north by 26th St., west by Fifth Ave., and east by a contemplated street mid-way between Fourth and Fifth Aves.; and that application be made to the legislature for the passage of a law to alter the map of the city so as to conform thereto.—Mayor's Message (1836), 6. See, further, Ap 10, 1837. This was Madison Square. "

The "Specie Circular" is issued upon an order of Pres. Jackson to the secretary of the treasury. It requires receivers of public money and deposit banks, after Aug. 15, "to receive in payment of the public lands nothing except what is directed by the existing laws, viz, gold and silver, and in the proper cases Virginia land scrip." Under some circumstances the time is extended to Dec. 15, "for actual settlers or bona fide residents."—Messages & Papers of the Presidents, X: 104–5; cf. McMaster, Hist. of the people of U. S., VI: 325–26; also Shepard, Martin Van Buren, 260–61. 11

The four-storey brick building of the American Bible Society, at 115–117 Nassau St., burns.—Eve. Post, Jl 20, 1836; Costello, Our Firemen, 228. 19

"The Vice President has arrived in our city and is at the Astor Hotel."—Eve. Post, Jl 21, 1836. 21

The common council empowers the committee on public offices and repairs "to provide a suitable bell and fixtures forthwith to be placed in the Hall in lieu of the present bell, which is so injured as to be unfit for use."—Proc., App'd by Mayor, IV: 20; and descrip. of Pl. 143-a, III: 712. The old bell was hung in 1831 (q. v.). For the new city hall bell, see O 3, 1836. 22

1836 July 28 — The common council resolves "That a line of water pipes, be laid in Barclay street, from the intersection at Chapel street, down Barclay to Greenwich street, through Greenwich to Cedar street, up Cedar street, to Broadway, agreeable to the size as adopted by the Water Commissioners, and that the Purveyor be instructed to advertise for estimates for furnishing pipes and fixtures for the same."—Proc., App'd by Mayor, IV: 31–32. See Ag 3.

Aug. 3 — The water purveyor is directed to advertise for estimates "for pipes and fixtures, sufficient to lay a line of pipes from the present termination of the water pipes at the junction of Houston and Essex-street, up Avenue A to 2d-street, through 2d-street to Avenue D, agreeable to Water Commissioners map."—Proc., App'd by Mayor, IV: 39.

" — The common council orders that the street commissioner "contract for an iron railing around Union Place;" and appropriates $11,000 therefor, "in addition to appropriations heretofore made" (see N 12, 1834; Jl 29, 1935).—Proc., App'd by Mayor, IV: 41.

4 — The common council directs the committee on public offices and repairs "to cause the Governor's room to be new furnished."—Proc., App'd by Mayor, IV: 51. See also A. Pl. 31-a, Vol. III, showing the room as it was in 1830–1.

23 — A collision between a ferry-boat and the steamboat "Boston," in the East River, results in the drowning of eight people and the destruction of the ferry-boat.—Eve. Post, Ag 23, 24, 25, 1836.

29 — The Italian Opera House, at the corner of Leonard and Church Sts. (see N 18, 1833) becomes the National Theatre.—Brown, Hist. of the N. Y. Stage, I: 241. See Nov.

Sept. 3 — The "New York City Marble Cemetery" and the "New York Marble Cemetery," which face each other on Second Ave. (the former bounded by 2d and 3d Sts., the Bowery, and Second Ave., and the latter by 2d and 3d Sts., First and Second Aves.), are described in the N. Y. Mirror, of this date. See also L. M. R. K., III: 927.

6 — The "building lately occupied as a branch of the United States Bank in this city" is purchased by the Bank of the State of New York for $245,000, "an advance of fifty-six thousand dollars on the price it was sold for only a few months ago."—Eve. Post, S 7, 1836. See also ibid., S 10, 1836.

8 — Harvard College celebrates the 200th anniversary of its founding.—Eve. Post, S 14, 1836, citing Boston Courier. See 1840.

" — The Williamsburg and Peck Slip Ferry is opened.—Eve. Post, S 9, 1836. See also ibid., S 15, 1836.

9 — The Bank of the U. S. conveys to the Bank of the State of N. Y. title to the old Verplanck property in Wall St., including alleyways, which was purchased in 1822 (q. v., Mr 23) for the U. S. Branch Bank.—Liber Deeds, CCCLXVII: 179; and ibid., CCCXIV: 579, 580. From 1837 to 1842 (q.v.), the Bank of the State of N. Y. was at this address, 15 Wall St.—See City Directories. See also description and history of the Assay Office, I: 430; descrip. of Pl. 99, III: 591; Rep. of Am. Scenic & Hist. Pres. Soc. (1918), 592–620; and L. M. R. K., III: 924, under "Branch of the Second Bank of the U. S. (second site)," and 975.

12 — Charlotte Cushman makes her first appearance in New York, at the Bowery Theatre as Lady Macbeth.—Brown, I: 114.

13 — "The subterraneous passage in the rail road from this city to Harlem is now opened from end to end, and will shortly be completed. The last remaining part of the rock was pierced yesterday morning. The rock is exceedingly hard, and the work difficult, but the promise by the undertakers of this enterprise to finish it before the 15th of September has been fulfilled."—Eve. Post, S 13, 1836.

" — Aaron Burr dies at New Bristol, Staten Island.—Eve. Post, S 14, 1836. See also ibid., S 16, 1836. He was buried at Princeton on Sept. 16.—Ibid., S 19, 1836.

22 — The Bowery Theatre (see Ag 20, 1828) is burned for the second time.—Eve. Post, S 22, 1836; Costello, Our Firemen, 228; N. Y. As It Is, In 1837, 224; L. M. R. K., III: 982. It was immediately rebuilt.—Brown, Hist. of the N. Y. Stage, I: 114.

" — Peter G. Stuyvesant and wife grant to the city the land comprised in the present Stuyvesant Park, at Second Ave. and East 15th st.—Prendergast, Record of Real Estate (1914), citing Liber Deeds, CCCLX: 350. See also L. M. R. K., III: 971.

Oct. 3 — The new bell on the city hall, weighing 6,000 lbs., is praised by the newspapers of the day.—Com. Adv., O 3, 1836. See Jl 22, 1836; S 12, 1837.

13 — The Athenaeum Hotel has just been opened in Broadway at the corner of Leonard St.—Eve. Post, O 13, 1836.

Oct. 21 — The mayor signs a resolution that the supt. of repairs cause the building occupied as Essex Market to be taken down and rebuilt as a market for country people at Tompkins Market.—Mayor's Message (1836), 43. For the changes in Essex Market at this time, see De Voe's Market Book, 484–85; L. M. R. K., III: 958. See Je 4, 1851.

24 — The third annual convention of the National Trades' Union assembles in Military Hall. Delegates are present for the first time from localities so far distant as Ohio. Subjects considered at the earlier conventions (see Ag 25, 1834, and O 1, 1835), such as education, state prison labour, the factory system, female labour, the ten-hour day, are presented before the convention in committee reports. An interesting recommendation is made that "a portion of the National Fund be set apart to supply members with means for the purpose of enabling them to remove to such places as are not overstocked with numbers." The conservative character of the delegates is evidenced by a resolution that "it is the opinion of this Convention, that if Trades' Unions and Trade Societies were to apply their funds to the establishing of Co-operation in Societies suffering aggression, instead of exhausting their funds by supporting strikes, a much more permanent benefit would be rendered." The report was "read and accepted." The sessions of the convention continued through Oct. 28.—A Doc. Hist. of Am. Indust. Soc., VI: 264–307, and authorities there cited.

" — The mayor signs resolutions as follows: That the macadamising on the Eighth Ave. between 42d and 59th Sts. be completed by covering the avenue with a layer of hard stone; also that the street com'r be authorised to lay down a wooden pavement in Broadway as an experiment, not to exceed 200 ft. in length.—Mayor's Message (1836), 38. This experiment was made between Chambers and Warren Sts.—10th Ann. Rep. of Bd. of Com'rs of the Cent. Park (1866), 113. On Dec. 5, the mayor signed an ordinance for paving William St. with blocks of wood from Wall to Pine St.—Mayor's Message (1836), 56. The wooden pavement was tried again in 1838 in front of the hall of records (the old jail).—The 10th Ann. Rep., &c., 113.

26 — The corner-stone of the present St. Peter's Church was laid on the south-east corner of Barclay and Church Sts. The first church of the same name which stood on this site (erected in 1785, q.v., O 5) was demolished earlier in the year. In September, 1837, worship was commenced in the basement. The principal auditory was consecrated Feb. 25, 1838 (q.v.)—Greenleaf, Hist. of the Churches, 335.

Nov. 7 — The mayor signs resolutions as follows: That 110th, 111th, 112th, and 113th Sts. be graded from the Old Road, west of Fourth Ave. to Second Ave.; that Fifth Ave. be graded, and the curb- and gutter-stones be placed therein from 125th to 130th St.; and that 116th St. be opened from Fourth Ave. to Tenth Ave., and regulated and worked from Third Ave. to the Harlem River.—Mayor's Message (1836), 47.

8 — Martin Van Buren and Richard M. Johnson are elected president and vice-president. The National Republicans or Whigs had three candidates for president—Wm. H. Harrison, Daniel Webster, and Willie P. Mangum; and three for vice-president—John Tyler, Francis Granger, and John McLean.—McKee, National Conventions and Platforms, 34–39. See Mr 4, 1837.

14 — The Bowery Theatre (see S 22) is being rebuilt. "The workmen have already put on a part of the roof, and it is the intention of the proprietors to finish it by the first of January next. The project of extending Canal street through to the Bowery, by which the theatre would have been cut up, appears to be abandoned."—Eve. Post, N 14, 1836.

24 — The National Theatre (see Ag 29) is sold at auction for $75,000 to O. Mauran and James H. Hackett. They leased it to James W. Wallack.—Eve. Post, N 25, 1836; Brown, I: 243. See S 23, 1839.

Dec. 3 — The first number of the Plain Dealer is issued.—Eve. Post, D 3, 1836.

" — "The Corporation are mending the Macadamized portion of Broadway. They would be better to dig it up at once, and supply its place with the wooden pavement which wears so well and preserves itself in such admirable order in a neighboring part of the same street. The Macadamized portion is full of hillocks and hollows, it needs perpetual repair; it is very expensive and very dirty. It is even worse than the old method of paving with small round stones."—Eve. Post, D 3, 1836.

SECOND AND THIRD PAGE OF BILL SHOWN ON PL. 70.

1836 Dec. 6 tectural association in New York, is organized at the Astor House, with A. J. Davis chairman, and Thos. V. Walter secretary. It was not very active after the first two or three meetings but was never disbanded.—Proc. of the Am. Institute of Architects; King's Handbook (1893), 834. See, further, 1857.

7 Hone dines "with the governing committee of the Union Club at Windust's." The committee numbers 35 out of the present membership of 250, "not a sufficient number to organize properly," he says, "but it was resolved to procure a house and commence immediately. A sub-committee of seven was appointed to carry the plan into effect and to admit members."—Hone's Diary, I: 237. For Windust's Hotel, see Je 17, and ibid., I: 269. See Ap 25, 1837.

9 Ellen Tree makes her first appearance in America, at the Park Theatre, as Rosalind in "As You Like It."—Haswell's Reminiscences, 320; Hone's Diary, I: 238.

14 The finance committee of the consistory of the South Reformed Dutch Church, writing to Hon. Stephen Van Rensselaer to ask for a loan to enable them to rebuild the church, which was destroyed in the fire of 1835, states that "The pew-owners unanimously agreed that owing to the removal of families from that part of the City, it was inexpedient to rebuild there;" also that, on sale of their church property in Exchange Pl., an equal division of the proceeds would be made between the families which had removed to the vicinity of Washington Sq. and those that remained in the lower part of the city. The letter continues: "The means would have been ample, to furnish each of these parties with a Church. Unhappily a question has arisen with regard to the power of the Church to give a clear title to the old ground and the question has gone into the Court of Chancery and may not be decided in a long time. In the mean time, a new arrangement has been made between the parties. The Consistory of the down town Church is to retain all the present available funds of the Church, and five of the lots in Exchange place are to be disposed of as follows—Three to be taken by the Church uptown and two by that below.

"By individual subscription, money is to be raised, by each party for erecting stores on these five lots, which will thus be made to produce a considerable income. But this will not furnish either with a place of worship.

"Happily for the uptown enterprize, they have obtained the splendid Chapel of the University and will open it for public worship on New Year's day,—while our Church below must continue as now, holding its sabbath services morning & afternoon in the Lecture room of the Brick Church at the Park and its evening services in the Session room of the Presbyterian Church in Wall Street. In this condition we must remain until after the termination of the suit respecting the old ground, unless relieved by a loan. . . .

"We have purchased a piece of ground at the corner of Murray & Church Streets—50 feet on Murray by 75 ft. on Church St. We wish to obtain one lot adjoining on Murray St. and then to proceed as early in the Spring as practicable to build 'a House for the Lord.'" The committee asks Mr. Van Rensselaer for a loan of $20,000.—From the original MS. in the N. Y. H. S. See 1837.

15 The building in the central part of Washington, D. C., occupied by the general post-office, the patent-office, and the city post-office, is destroyed by fire. The entire contents of the two latter offices are lost, including the "curious models and papers, comprising all the inventions of American ingenuity for half a century past."—Eve. Post, D 17, 1836.

16 "A new pavement of wood is laying down in William street, between Pine and Wall streets. The progress of this work attracts considerable attention."—Eve. Post, D 16, 1836.

19 "The great number of fires that constantly happen in New York, shows the necessity of procuring a better supply of water than we now have. . . . It is useless to wait for the Croton or any other water, if it cannot be obtained immediately. It will take from five to ten years to effect it.

"Until the Croton water can be brought into the city, we propose that the Corporation erect Reservoirs in four different places, on the East and North Rivers, at points below Grand and Canal streets, and fill them with the waters of those rivers by means of steam engines. These Reservoirs, or receptacles of water should be equal in capacity to the one on Fourteenth [13th] street, and the water conducted through every part of the City, in pipes like those now laid by the water commissioners."—Eve. Post, D 19, 1836. Dec. 19

During 1836, 1,621 buildings were erected in New York City, an increase of 362 over 1835.—N. Y. As It Is, In 1837, 20. 31

During this year, 2,285 merchant ships entered this port, an increase of 250 over 1835.—Ibid., 162.

In this year, rebellions broke out in Upper and Lower Canada, which lasted until 1838. They were caused by a demand for more representative government and an executive responsible to the colonial legislature, not to the king.—Winsor, VIII: 150–62, 180–81; Hazen, Europe since 1815, 523–25. —

In this year, publication of the American Archives, edited by Peter Force, was begun with the first volume of the fourth series. The six volumes which constitute this series were completed in 1846. In 1848, the first volume of the fifth series appeared, and the third was issued in 1853; then congress refused to make any further appropriation, and the work was suspended. It was originally intended to form six series:—I, to 1688; II, to 1763; III, to 1774; IV, to 1776; V, to 1783; VI, to 1787. As published, the work consists of nine volumes, from March, 1774, to Dec., 1776.—Winsor, VIII: 425–26; Lossing, Cyclo. of U. S. Hist., I: 501. —

In this year, the first successful introduction of the screw in steam navigation was made, by Captains Ericsson and F. P. Smith on the steamer "Thames."—Annals of N. Am., 579. —

In this year, the first steam-launch was designed by, and constructed under the direction of, Chas. Haswell at the New York Navy Yard, and named the "Sweetheart." The engine was subsequently transferred to the U. S. Naval School at Philadelphia.—Haswell's Reminiscences, 329–30. —

An English traveller, writing of New York, comments:

"A custom prevails, in the principal streets for shops, of having wooden pillars planted along the outer edge of the pavement, with horizontal beams reaching from pillar to pillar, not unlike the stanchions and cross pieces of a rope-walk. On these pillars, usually painted white, are pasted large printed placards, announcing the articles sold in the shop before which they stand; and from the under side of the horizontal beam are suspended, by hooks or rings, show-boards with printed bills of every colour. This is especially the case opposite the bookstores. Another purpose which these pillars and beams serve, is that of suspending awnings from the houses to the end of the pavement in summer, . . ." He also observes:

"A great defect in the municipal arrangement is the want of sufficient light in the street by night. The lamps are so far apart, and so scantily supplied with gas, that it is impossible to distinguish names or numbers on the doors from the carriages, or even on foot, without ascending the steps to examine; and as no uniform plan seems to be laid down for the order in which the numbering of the houses shall be made, the difficulties and delays are vexatious to the most patient."—J. S. Buckingham, America, Historical, Statistic, and Descriptive (London, no date), I: 44–50, 221–22.

J. Disturnell published, in this year, another New York City guide-book; calling it New-York As It Is, In 1837. The title-page states that this was the "fourth year of publication." See 1833 for extracts from his guide for that year. The N. Y. Hist. Soc. owns copies of the work for 1833, 1834, 1835, 1837, and 1839. Some of the new features in the city's growth, mentioned in the 1837 edition, are as follows: —

The "Introduction," dated May, 1837, remarks: "The sad reverse which the City of New-York, and the country at large has recently experienced, owing to the derangement of our currency, and a too anxious desire to accumulate wealth, ought to teach us a lesson of moderation, . . . Too long has the unfeeling usurer, the greedy speculator, and the selfish politician had the ascendency. . . ."—Ibid., iv.

"A Telegraph is established on the heights of Staten Island, communicating by signals with one in the City on Holt's Hotel" (cf. 1828).—Ibid., 11.

The Rotunda was now used as the post-office.—Ibid., 13.

The works of the N. Y. Gas Light Co. were situated at the corner of Canal and Centre Sts. Already, 26 miles of iron gas-pipes had been laid in the principal streets. The price of gas was 1837 — 70 cents per 100 cubic feet; or, for a store, having four lights, $60 a year.—Ibid., 13.

The account of the development of the New York and Harlem Railroad is as follows: "This company was incorporated in 1831 [q.v.], and has since been so amended that its capital, originally $350,000, is now $1,150,000.

"The route selected for its road is from Prince-street, in the Bowery, through the 4th Avenue, to Harlaem River, with a branch through One hundred and Twenty-fifth-street to Ninth Avenue, and thence to the Hudson River at Manhattanville landing.

"The first running of the cars upon this road was in November, 1832, and they travelled no further than Fourteenth-street. In June, 1833, their route was extended to Murray Hill. In May, 1834, the route was further extended to Yorkville, where it has continued ever since." The number of passengers and the amount of fares received each year from 1834 to the end of 1836 are given.

"When the route shall be extended through the tunnel over the beautiful embankment and bridge constructed to Harlaem, the number of passengers will, probably, greatly increase.

"The tunnel commences at the southerly side of Ninety-first-street, and terminates at the northerly side of Ninety-fourth-street, and will be, when completed, 844 feet in length, 24 feet wide, and 21 feet high in the centre. Each end of the tunnel will be finished with a handsome stone facing, so as to give it a conspicuous and pleasing appearance. The embankment commences at One hundredth-street, and extends to One hundred and sixth-street. This will be a most substantial work, as the whole will be supported by slope walls of dry masonry. At the crossing of the streets there are handsome arched carriage-ways, supported by stone pillars. At the northern termination of the embankment, the bridge commences, extending from One hundred and sixth-street to One hundred and eighth-street.

"This tunnel is said to be as spacious as any other excavation of solid rock made in modern times, not excepting the excavation of the Simplon, made under the Emperor Napoleon; and the approach to it at both ends through a rock, 52 feet in depth, is an object not less interesting than the tunnel itself.

"There is scarcely to be found a more beautiful and picturesque scenery in any part of the world, than the view Hell Gate and its neighbourhood presents, in riding over the bridge and embankment, north of the tunnel, at an elevation of thirty feet above the level of the avenue.

"It is expected that this road will be travelled by the cars to Harlæm some time in the month of July, 1837.

"Passengers' Ticket Offices, at No. 241, Bowery; and at the corner of Eighty-sixth-street and Fourth Avenue."—Ibid., 14–15.

(It was in this year that the N. Y. & Harlem R. R. Co. acquired the block between 26th and 27th Sts., Madison and Fourth Aves., and erected on the southern half a depot, stables, machine-shop, and superintendent's office.—From chronology supplied by the company.)

May Day is moving-day in New York.—Disturnell, 19.

During 1836, Beaver St. was extended through the "Burnt District," intersecting Pearl at the corner of Wall St.; Mill St. was connected with William St. in the same neighbourhood, and it was proposed to change the name of Mill to South William. Fulton St. was widened on the south side between Broadway and Gold St. Gold St. was widened between Fulton and Frankfort Sts. Spruce St. was widened from Gold St. to Nassau. Chapel St. was widened between Murray and Franklin St., and it was proposed to change its name to West Broadway.—Ibid., 20.

N. Y. University, on Washington Square, just completed, is described, with view (frontispiece).—Ibid., 21.

The district burned over by the fire of Dec. 16 and 17, 1835, is already nearly all rebuilt. Most of the stores are occupied, and many of them are "entirely fireproof, constructed in the most durable manner, principally of brick."—Ibid., 22.

The construction of the new merchants' exchange, the new custom-house, and the halls of justice is now under way. These are described in detail. The merchants' exchange is the building of Quincy granite which still stands on the block bounded by Exchange Place, Wall, William, and Hanover Sts. (reconstructed in 1907–8, q.v., for the National City Bank). The custom-house also still stands, on the east side of Nassau St., between Wall and Pine Sts. (which became the sub-treasury). The halls of justice (or "Tombs"), built in the Egyptian style of architecture, were erected on made ground where once was the Collect Pond. Every precaution has been used "to render the foundation secure by the introduction of iron ties, inverted arches, and heavy timbering." The ground "was excavated several feet below the water level, large timbers were placed together, and range timbers at right angles with these laid several feet wider than the respective walls." The superstructure was erected "during the past season."—Ibid., 24–27. 1837 —

It is worthy of note that the Brooklyn city hall, at the intersection of Fulton, Court, and Joralemon Sts., was also in course of erection at this time.—Ibid., 27.

The National Academy of Design has the following lecturers: Samuel F. B. Morse, painting; Horatio Greenough, sculpture; William C. Bryant, mythology; Robert W. Weir, perspective; William Dunlap, historical composition; Thomas S. Cummings, miniature painting; Gulian C. Verplanck, history; A. J. Mason, wood engraving.—Ibid., 66–67.

The meeting place of the N. Y. Sacred Music Soc. (established in 1823, and incorporated in 1829, q.v.), was at this time in the Chatham St. Chapel (formerly the Chatham Theatre).—Ibid., 72.

Views of New York in this year reproduced in the present work include (besides those cited under specific dates) the Hill-Bennett-Clover view from Brooklyn Heights (Pl. 117), and the Merchants' Exchange (Pl. 118), both in Vol. III. —

A survey of the Common Lands is made this year by Francis Nicholson.—See map No. 80 in real estate bureau of comptroller's office. See, further, Ag, 1838. —

In this year, the cross-streets in the Forties and Fifties were being extensively opened. For example, the cost of opening 57th St. from river to river was provided for on March 16 to the amount of $11,310.—Man. Com. Coun. (1857), 535–37. —

In this year, 840 buildings were erected in New York.—Eve. Post, F 8, 1838, citing Jour. of Com. —

"The house still remains [1837] in William street, New York, in which he [George Whitfield] instructed his hearers. Its peaked front and roof marks its antiquity, although it has been modernized. The street was then called 'Horse and Cart street,' from a sign of a horse and cart at a tavern door, opposite the house in which Whitfield discoursed, he occupying the upper story, which was then a sail loft."—Dunlap, Hist. of the New Neth., II: Appendix, CLXVI. This was the so-called "rigging loft" at 120 William St.—See description of Pl. 43, I: 344; and L. M. R. K., III: 930. —

In this year, the congregation of the South Church (Reformed Dutch) separated into two branches, one going to a church on Murray St., which was completed and opened on Dec. 24 (q.v.), and one to Washington Square, to worship in the chapel of N. Y. University until its own building, which was being erected beside the University, should be completed, in 1840 (q.v., O 1; see descrip. of Pl. 139, III: 708). This congregation remained in the Washington Square church until 1876.—Corwin's Manual, 1004; Historical Sketch of the South Dutch Church, 27, 29, 31, 37; Greenleaf, 20–21; Trow, The New Metropolis (1851), 66. Pl. 139, Vol. III, shows the Reformed Dutch Church, on the s. e. cor. of University Place and Washington Place; it was erected in 1837–40 and demolished in 1895. —

In this year, the city granted to the Soc. for the Reformation of Juvenile Delinquents a plot of ground between 23d and 24th Sts., Ave. A and First Ave., in exchange for a re-conveyance to the city of land owned by the society at the lower end of Madison Square.—L. M. R. K., III: 954; Man. Com. Coun. (1870), 762. In 1854, the city gave the society a quit-claim deed of the entire block at First Ave. which contained the 1837 land-grant.—Ibid. (1870), 762. —

In this year, assessments were levied for opening streets, including the following: Fifth Ave. between 21st and 42d Sts; 42d and 57th Sts. from river to river; 86th St. from Eighth Ave. to the Hudson River; 125th St. from Third Ave. to the Harlem River; and 155th St. between the Hudson and Harlem Rivers.—Index to Assessment Rolls, Vol. I, in comptroller's office. —

In this year, the firm of Tiffany & Young was established at 259 Broadway. In 1845, it introduced its first stock of standard gold and gem jewelry. In 1847 (then styled Tiffany, Young & Ellis), the firm moved to 271 Broadway; in 1853, when first called by the now familiar name Tiffany & Co., it erected a store of exceptional elegance at 550 Broadway; and, in 1870 (q.v.), it moved to Union Square.—From data supplied by the company; and Lossing, Hist. of N. Y. City, II: 797–99. —

In this year, the store now familiarly known as "McCreery's" —

1837 had its beginning, at 102 Canal St., under the firm name of Ubsdell & Peirson. For its history, see Eve. World, Ag 4, 1925.

— In this year, Bangs, Merwin & Co. began business as auctioneers of literary properties. Andrew M. Merwin died in 1871. F. H. Bangs continued the business under the firm name of Bangs & Co.—Derby, Fifty Years among Authors, Books and Publishers (1884), 660. The good-will of Bangs & Co. was afterwards purchased by John Anderson, Jr., who gave his name to the business, and which, in 1903, became the Anderson Auction Co. In 1915, this company, with the Metropolitan Art Ass'n, became The Anderson Galleries, Inc., its rooms being then on East 40th St., at the n. w. cor. of Madison Ave. In 1917, the business occupied the Arion Society's building, at the s. e. cor. of Park Ave. and 59th St.—From data supplied by the company.

— In this year, another fire (see 1832) occurred in Fraunces Tavern.—Drowne, A Sketch of Fraunces Tavern (1919), 21. See, further, 1844.

— In 1837–8, Franklin Market at Old Slip was rebuilt, of brick (L. M. R. K., III: 958), a temporary shed having been erected on the site after the burning of the old market in the great fire of Dec. 16, 1835 (De Voe, Market Book, 521).

— In this year, the New York Review was established.—North, Newspaper and Periodical Press, 118.

— In this year was published A History of New York, in 2 vols., by Wm. Dunlap.

Jan. 10 "The chapel of the New York University is now nearly completed. It is small, of course, not being intended for the accommodation of a large audience, but it is uncommonly beautiful. The Gothick carvings in wood with which it is embellished are probably finer than any thing we have in this country.

"The stranger who visits our city would do well to repair to Washington Square, were it only to see how nobly the University overlooks that spacious park. This building, which is of the simplest style of the Gothick sometimes called Byzantine[!], is the finest publick edifice of New York, and one of the finest in the whole country. Its proportions fill and satisfy the eye. The visitor should ascend the massive marble stair case, and peep in at the chapel door, which is politely left ajar. He will admire the effect of the two large windows, of the quaint Gothick tracery, of . . . the richly wrought pendants, and pannelings and groinings, thickly intersecting each other, and the kneeling angels, with psalters in their hands, whose station is near the top of the large window back of the pulpit."—Eve. Post, Ja 10, 1837.

14 Wm. Abbott announces that "Proposals will be received in the course of next week, for the erection of a splendid new Theatre, on the site of Masonic Hall, and lot adjoining, devoted to Italian and French Opera and Ballet, as well as the Legitimate Drama."—Eve. Post, Ja 16, 1837.

30 The mayor approves assessments for laying the sidewalks of Fifth Ave. from Waverly Place to 17th St.; and for grading 42d St. between Bloomingdale Road and the Hudson River.—Mayor's Message (1837), 68.

31 The mayor approves a joint resolution that the widening of Centre St. commence on May first, and that 20 days thereafter be allowed for the removal of the buildings which encroach upon it.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, IV: 173. This necessitated the destruction of the first public school building.—Halsey, Pictures of Early N. Y. on Dark Blue Staffordshire Pottery, 51. For the demolition of Free School No. 1, see 1839.

Feb. 1 The legislature passes an act creating the Seventeenth Ward out of a part of the Eleventh Ward.—Laws of N. Y. (1837), chap. 16.

3 The name of the "Great Kiln Road" (commonly known as the Great Kill Road) is changed to Gansevoort St.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, IV: 175; L. M. R. K., III: 1000, 1001.

6 Wm. Dunlap, Richard Riker, and others, present to the board of assistant aldermen a petition "relative to translating and preserving the Dutch records now remaining in a dilapidated state in the office of the Clerk of the Common Pleas of this County."—Proc., Bd. of Asst. Ald., IX, 110. This was the initial step toward the publication, in 1897, of the Records of New Amsterdam. For the action of the board on this petition, see April 21.

10 The following notice appears in a handbill and a newspaper:

"Bread, Meat, Rent, Fuel! Their Prices Must Come Down. The Voice of the People Shall be Heard, and Will Prevail!

"The People will meet in the Park, Rain or Shine at 4 o'clock, on Monday Afternoon [Feb. 13] To inquire into the Cause of the present unexampled Distress, and to divise a suitable Remedy. All Friends of Humanity, determined to resist Monopolists and Extortioners, are invited to attend." The document bears the names of eight citizens.—Eve. Post, F 10 and 11, 1837; and descrip. of Pl. 126-b, III: 690–91. See, further, F 13. Feb. 10

"Vanderbilt is building a splendid steamer to run on the Sound in opposition to the Transportation Company's boats to commence on the 1st of March. He is the greatest practical anti-monopolist in the country."—Eve. Post, F 10, 1837. "

The legislature authorises the establishment of a medical faculty in the University of the City of N. Y., which shall have power to confer the degree of doctor of medicine. The act requires the agent of the state prison at Sing Sing to deliver, at the prison, to the medical faculty of this university, "such dead bodies of convicts as are by law authorized to be dissected, not exceeding one half of the number of such bodies."—Laws of N. Y. (1837), chap. 25. 11

"Disgraceful Riot and Destruction of Property.—Our city was yesterday [F 13] the scene of a riot and outrage upon private rights of citizens. . . . A short time after the adjournment of the meeting in the Park yesterday afternoon [see F 10], a mob of Several hundred repaired to the extensive flour warehouse of Eli Hart & Co., No. 175 Washington street, and commenced violent proceedings upon it and those who were in it." The police were sent for but were overpowered, and after a short struggle left the rioters complete masters of the field. The doors and windows of the store were smashed, and nearly 200 barrels of flour and 1,000 bushels of wheat were brought out and their contents thrown into the street; and other damage was done. Then they proceeded to Coenties Slip, and assailing the warehouse of S. B. Herrick & Son, on the corner of Water St., broke in the principal doors and windows and threw 20 barrels of flour into the street. By this time a posse of marshals and watchmen arrived, and the leading rioters were seized and lodged in the watch-house. Mr. Lawrence, the mayor, repaired to the store of Hart & Co., while the mob was there, and attempted to speak to them, but was assailed with a shower of barrel staves, stones, etc., and was compelled to retreat for his life. Several others were treated in the same manner.—Eve. Post, F 14, citing The Times; see also N. Y. Com. Adv., F 14, 1837. 13

It was estimated that Mr. Hart's losses would exceed $10,000. The opinion was expressed that the demonstration was organized to give certain persons political consequence, although it could not succeed in reducing the price of flour.—Morn. Chron., F 14, 1837. In the reference to the event in Vol. III, p. 525, line 32, "January" should be February.

See also the cartoon, "The Times," which was published in connection with the "Loco Foco" campaign of 1837, and which is reproduced and described in Vol. III (Pl. 126-b). See Ap 10.

The mayor approves an assessment for paving the sidewalks of the Bloomingdale Road from 13th to 21st St.—Mayor's Message (1837), 76. "

The common council permits John and Peter A. Delmonico, who are erecting "an elegant and expensive building" on the triangular piece of land situated at the junction of William, Beaver, and Mill Sts., fronting on each of these streets, to build "an iron balcony in front of the windows on the second and third stories."—Proc., App'd by Mayor, IV: 180; Mayor's Message (1837), 77. See also descrip. of Pl. 118, III: 623; and D 18, 1830. 17

A committee representing the Democrats of New York presents to Pres. Jackson a phaeton made of the wood of the frigate "Constitution" ("Old Ironsides").—Eve. Post, F 27, 1837. 22

Friction or "Locofoco" matches are introduced.—Com. Adv., F 22, 1837. "

The mayor signs a resolution that the sidewalks around Washington Square be flagged.—Mayor's Messages (C. W. Lawrence), 78. 27

Proposals are invited, until April 26 (q. v.), "for furnishing the materials and completing the construction of twenty-three sections of the Croton Aqueduct, including the dam in the Croton, the aqueduct bridge over Sing Sing Kill, and the necessary excavations and tunnelling on the line of about 8½ miles from the Croton to Sing Sing village."—King, Memoir of the Croton Aqueduct, 144–45. 28

In this month, the erection of the seminary building on Jackson Ave. (University Place)—see O, 1835; Ja 18, 1836—was begun. Suspended by the financial distress of the period, and hampered by a controversy which disrupted the Presbyterian denomination, the building was not finished and dedicated until Dec., 1838.—Lossing, Hist. of N. Y. City, II: 448–49. See, further, Mr, 1839. Mar. —

1837 Martin Van Buren's term as president begins.—Winsor, VII:

" Chicago is incorporated as a city.—Currey, Chicago: Its Hist. and Builders, I: 223–24.

13 "A very important improvement is going on in Chatham street. They are tearing down the houses on the west side between Mulberry street and Orange, with a view of widening Chatham street, which has hitherto been too narrow at that point for the accommodation of the immense travel through it."—Eve. Post, Mr 13, 1837.

" "A memorial of Richard Bartlett, praying that the archives of the Common Council may be arranged, classified, indexed, and bound, was referred to the Committee of Arts and Sciences."—Proc., Bd. of Ald., XII: 365. The "archives" referred to are probably the so-called "filed papers," now preserved in the city clerk's record-room, and which to this day remain loose, unbound, and not in perfect chronological order, although in file-cases.

15 Daniel Webster arrives in New York and is welcomed "by a deputation of Whigs in a becoming manner. He was escorted to Niblo's saloon, where he made a speech, which all the Whig journals praise as usual."—Eve. Post, Mr 16, 1837.

It was afterwards published in pamphlet form. It is "a plain statement of the measures of the late administration [Jackson's], and a history of the causes which led to the present unparalleled state of distress and embarrassment here, and in all parts of this once prosperous country."—Hone's Diary I: 253.

16 The water purveyor is authorised to lay a line of pipes from the corner of Bowery and Walker St., through Walker to Allen, and from the corner of Grand and Allen Sts., through Allen to Division St., through Division to Pike St. and down Pike to East Broadway; also from the reservoir in 13th St. up Third Ave. to 28th St.; also through Madison St. from Pearl to Grand St.; also through Leonard St. from Broadway to Hudson St.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, IV: 209.

17 "There has been a general panic in Stocks to-day, occasioned by the failure of a large house, J. L. Joseph & Co. The circumstance has created an unusual degree of excitement, as the house is under an immense amount of liabilities. . . .

"The immediate cause of their stoppage is said to be the large amount of bills returned from the South yesterday, which came upon them all at once."—Eve. Post, Mr 17, 1837. See also ibid., Mr 18, 20, 21, 22, 23, 1837. See, further, Mr 24.

23 The American Academy of the Fine Arts, at No. 8½ Barclay St., near Broadway, is partly destroyed by fire. Several valuable paintings and the Napoleon library are consumed, and other works of art damaged. The statuary, however, is only slightly injured.—Eve. Post, Mr 24 1836; N. Y. As It Is, In 1837, 65. See also Ap, 1839.

24 There are three more failures in Wall St. They increase from day to day.—Eve. Post, Mr 25–Ap 10, 1837. See Ap 17.

30 The booksellers of New York, at the close of their semi-annual trade sale, give a dinner at the City Hotel to "their brethren from other cities, and to numerous guests of this city, principally authors, artists, and literary men." The guests include Washington Irving, Chancellor Kent, Albert Gallatin, Col. Trumbull, James K. Paulding, and Fitz-Greene Halleck.—Eve. Post, Mr 31, 1837. Philip Hone calls this "the greatest dinner" he ever attended, "with the exception, perhaps, of that given to Washington Irving on his return from Europe." This association has "a great annual or semi-annual feast, at which eminent literary and scientific men are invited to join the trade."—Hone's Diary, I: 249–50.

Apr. "The House of Detention [The Tombs], now building in Centre
1 street, is sufficiently advanced to enable the spectator to judge of the effect of the architecture. It promises to be one of the handsomest of our public buildings. It is in the Egyptian style, a style well suited, by its massiveness, severity, and appearance of prodigious strength to edifices of this kind. . . . we have no other example in the city."—Eve. Post, Ap 1, 1837.

5 The city acquires by condemnation proceedings the land comprised in Christopher St. Park, at Christopher, West 4th, and Grove Sts.—Prendergast, Record of Real Estate (1914), 49.

" By this time, 125th St. was opened from Manhattan St. to the Bloomingdale Road.—Man. Com. Coun. (1857), 536. In 1849, the cost of this work was recorded as $2,650.59.—Ibid., 538. See 1854.

10 The legislature passes "An Act to alter the map or plan of the city of New York, by establishing a public square or place in the sixteenth ward." The land is described as bounded on the north by 26th St., west by Fifth Ave., south by 23d St., and east Apr.
by "a certain street established by law, being seventy-five feet 10 wide, and lying between the Fourth and Fifth Avenues."—Laws of N. Y. (1837), chap. 177. The land thus acquired, consisting of about 4½ acres, was part of the Common Land granted to the city by the Dongan Charter. This act was one of a series of acts whereby the area of the proposed "Parade," as laid down on the Commissioners' Map of 1807–11, was reduced. For the earlier acts in the series, see Mr 31, 1828; Mr 16, and Ap 25, 1829. See also descrip. of Pl. 148-a, III: 720; and of Pl. 168, III: 851.

On April 12, 1837, the city acquired an additional piece of real estate from Richard R. Ward (recorded in Liber Deeds 377, p. 251); in 1845, another, from Francis B. Cutting (Liber Deeds 528, pp. 192, 197), and in 1847 another by condemnation proceedings, all of which together comprise the present Madison Square.—Prendergast, Record of Real Estate (1914), 49. See also descrip. of Pl. 124, III: 687.

" "One of the signs of the times is to be seen in the sales of rich furniture. Men who a year ago thought themselves rich, and such expenditures justifiable, are now bankrupt.

"Markets continue extravagantly high; meat of all kinds and poultry are as dear as ever. The farmers (or rather the market speculators) tell us this is owing to the scarcity of corn; but the shad, the cheapness of which in ordinary seasons makes them, as long as they last, a great resource for the poor, are not to be bought under seventy-five cents and a dollar. Is this owing to the scarcity of corn, or are the fish afraid to come into our waters lest they may be caught in the vortex of Wall street? Brooms, the price of which, time out of mind, has been twenty-five cents, are now sold at half a dollar; but corn is scarce. Poor New York."—Hone's Diary, I: 250. On the following day the Post, in its "Commercial Record" says: "More failures were announced yesterday after Bank hours—the number of houses stopped up to this time is said to be one hundred and twenty. Such a state of things is unexampled, and we fear the worst is to come. It is really painful to hear of the distress of business men, who have always lived in affluence. This will be appreciated by those who know that the furniture of the Joseph's was sold at auction yesterday."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ap 11, 1837. Cf. McMaster, Hist. of the People of the U. S., VI: 395. See also Ap 18.

In the election held on this day and the two succeeding days, 11
Aaron Clark, a Whig, was elected mayor.—Eve. Post, Ap 11, 1837.

The legislature establishes Thirteenth Ave. as the permanent 12 exterior street along the Hudson, between Hammond and 135th Sts., as laid down in a map made by Geo. B. Smith, city surveyor, dated March 10, 1837, approved by the common council on March 28, and filed in the street commissioner's office. The act also provides for the extension of the streets south of and including 135th St. westward to Thirteenth Ave.; Eleventh Ave. shall be extended south from 33d St. to 19th St.; and Twelfth Ave. shall be extended north from 36th to 135th St. The act gives the city control of the water lots along the line of the proposed extension of the exterior street, subject to the pre-emptive right secured to their owners.—Laws of N. Y. (1837), chap. 182; amended by ibid. (1846), chap. 268.

" The legislature passes a very full act "for the licensing and government of the pilots of the port of New-York, by the way of Sandy-Hook."—Laws of N. Y. (1837), chap. 184.

Columbia College celebrates the semi-centennial anniversary 13 of the reconstruction of the college under the act of the legislature passed April 13, 1787. The honorary degree of master of arts is conferred on Fitz-Greene Halleck, Wm. Cullen Bryant, and Chas. Fenno Hoffman.—Eve. Post, Ap 15; N. Y. Com. Adv., Ap 14, 1837; Hist. of Columbia Univ. (1904), 118.

" The assistant aldermen go on record in favour of translating and preserving certain Dutch records (see F 6). These records, reported to be "lying in the office of the Clerk of Common Pleas, . . . in a dilapidated state," consist of "wills, deeds, the acts and doings of Governor P. Stuyvesant and Council, and the proceedings of the Burgomasters, while this city was under the 1837 Apr. 21 Dutch governor." They are written, the report continues, "in characters, some words contracted, and many in French, English and Latin words, Dutchified" and difficult to translate, but Dr. Westbrook, of Peekskill, is "acquainted with this kind of writing," and should be employed "in rescuing these papers from the oblivion which they must soon fall into." An appropriation of $500 is made.—Jour. & Docs., Bd. of Asst. Ald., IX: Doc. 151. The aldermen concurred, and the resolution won Mayor Clark's approval on Aug. 2 (q.v.). While the matter was under discussion in the board of aldermen, "a foreign gentleman" in that board, says a correspondent in the Evening Post, "rises and opposes the measure—nay, treats it with ridicule.

"This is just what might be expected. A foreigner can feel no interest in the history or the honor of New York. His feelings are engaged in the transactions of the present day, or if he looks back to the annals of any country with interest it is to those of the land of his nativity. We cannot blame him—we blame those who placed him in a seat that ought to be occupied by one who has the feelings of an American."—N. Y. Eve. Post, My 9, 1837.

25 A meeting of merchants is held in Masonic Hall, presided over by ex-Mayor Hone, "to take into consideration the causes of the existing distress, and to devise suitable measures of relief." A committee is appointed "to repair to Washington and remonstrate with the Executive against the continuance of 'the Specie Circular' [see Jl 11, 1836]; and in behalf of this meeting, and in the name of the merchants of New-York and the people of the United States, urge its immediate repeal."—Morning Courier & N. Y. Enquirer, Ap 25 & 26, 1837; Hone's Diary, I: 251–52, 254–55. See My 4.

" Hone again attends a dinner of the governing committee of the Union at Windust's (see D 7, 1836). He records in his diary that "The executive Committee are engaged in preparing the house and laying in stores and furniture. They expect to be ready in about three weeks." He adds: "This club will be well suited to the times. A single gentleman will be able to get a good dinner and his wine for half the price he would have to pay at a hotel."—Hone's Diary, I: 252. See, further, My 27.

26 Contracts for building 13 sections of the Croton aqueduct are let, and the work of construction is begun.—Colden, Memoir Croton Aqueduct, 145; King, Memoir of the Croton Aqueduct, 145; Man. Com. Coun. (1854), 221.

27 The legislature incorporates "The society for the relief of half orphan and destitute children in the city of New York," the object of which is "to relieve, provide for, instruct, and protect such children."—Laws of N. Y. (1837), chap. 272.

" The following parts of streets are discontinued: 41st St. from Fifth to Sixth Aves.; 68th St. between Third and Fourth Aves.; 80th, 81st, 82d, 83d, 84th, and 85th Sts. between Sixth and Seventh Aves.—Laws of N. Y. (1837), chap. 274.

May 3 About 4,000 or 5,000 people attend a Loco Foco meeting in the Park and adopt resolutions advising a general retrenchment of expenses during the present financial panic, recommending to the common council, in the present scarcity of work, to employ as many labourers as possible "in the construction of the works for bringing water to this city, and other public works in progress," suggesting that the city set an example of economy by reducing official salaries, and providing for the appointment of ward committees "to attend to the condition of destitute emigrants and others who may desire to remove to the country."—Eve. Post, My 4, 1837.

4 Pres. Van Buren replies to the committee of merchants (see Ap 25) who urged "an immediate repeal of the order requiring specie in payment on sales of public lands" that he has not been able to satisfy himself that he "ought, under existing circumstances, to interfere with the order referred to."—N. Y. Eve. Post, My 6, 9, 1837; cf. Hone's Diary, I: 253–56.

" The common council permits the N. Y. & Harlem R. R. Co. to continue its rails by single or double track southerly from the north line of Prince St. to the north line of Walker St., subject to the same conditions and restrictions as imposed upon the company in respect to that part of the road between Prince and 23d Sts. (see My 10, 1832).—Proc., App'd by Mayor, IV: 252; Mayor's Message (1837), 105; Doc. No. 79, Bd. of Ald., Dec. 7, 1836. See S 20; Mr 12, 1838.

" "There is great excitement to-day, occasioned by the sudden death of Mr. Fleming, Cashier of the Mechanics' Bank. He only resigned yesterday, and in consequence there was a run for specie this forenoon, and depositors are withdrawing their funds. . . . May

"The crowds in Wall-street betoken the interest felt in the affairs of that bank. New-York never saw such a time. There is no parallel for the occasion."—Eve. Post, My 4, 1837. See also ibid., My 5, 1837. 4

The mayor signs a resolution "That a reservoir be constructed on the ground on 13th street, near the Bowery, similar to the one now in use under the direction of the Joint Committee on Fire and Water;" and $10,000 is appropriated for the work, which is to be done by contract after the common council has approved the plans, etc.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, IV: 258–59. See also Disturnell, N. Y. As It Is, In 1837, 16–17, and L. M. R. K.; III: 976. A view showing the roofs of the two reservoirs is in the Eno collection, N. Y. P. The Dry Dock Bank stops payment.—Hone's Diary, I: 254. 8

Aaron Clark, Whig, takes office as mayor, succeeding Cornelius W. Lawrence, Democrat.—Eve. Post, My 9, 1837. Immediately, "There was quite a scrambling for the 'spoils' among the whig members of the Corporation. . . . City officers were removed by dozens, and their places supplied by those who had voted the whig ticket."—Ibid., My 11, 1837. He was succeeded by Isaac L. Varian, Democrat in 1839 (q.v., Ap 9 and My 14). 9

The legislature authorises the commissioners of the land-office to surrender to the common council the lease for the present site and buildings in this city occupied as the state arsenal, and to receive in exchange a safer and more eligible location, by lease or deed-in-fee to the state, to be agreed upon by the commissioner and the common council.—Laws of N. Y. (1837), chap. 364. "

All the banks in the city suspend specie payments. In the "Notice to the Public" that appears in the press, it is stated that "the indebtedness of the community to the Banks exceeds by three times the amount of their Liabilities to the public," so "it is hoped and expected that the notes of the different banks will pass current as usual, and that the state of the times will soon be such as to render the resumption of specie payments practicable."—N. Y. Eve. Post, My 10, 1837. "The experiment [see Jl 11, 1836] has succeeded; the volcano has burst and overwhelmed New York; the glory of her merchants is departed. After a day of unexampled excitement, and a ruthless run upon all the banks, which drew from their vaults $600,000 in specie yesterday, nearly as much having been drawn on Monday, the officers held a meeting last evening and resolved to suspend specie payments."—Hone's Diary, I: 256. 10

"A few days before some banks in lesser cities of the Southwest had stopped. On the day after the New York suspension, the banks of Philadelphia, Baltimore, Albany, Hartford, New Haven, and Providence followed. On the 12th the banks of Boston and Mobile, on the 13th those of New Orleans, and on the 17th those of Charleston and Cincinnati fell in the same crash. There was now simply a general bankruptcy."—Shepard, Martin Van Buren, 274.

The legislature extends for two years more the time for commencing the construction of the N. Y. and Albany Railroad (see Ap 17, 1832).—Laws of N. Y. (1837), chap. 411. See Ag 5, 1840. 12

The legislature authorises the inhabitants of Morrisania, in Westchester Co., "to build a free bridge for their private use across the Harlaem river, between Harlaem and said Morrisania." The act requires that "Such bridge shall be constructed with a draw or slide for the passage of vessels with standing masts, and be so attended as not to obstruct or hinder the free passage of vessels navigating said river." The right granted by this act must be used in conformity with the right reserved to the inhabitants of Morrisania in the act of March 31, 1790 (q.v.), which granted to Lewis Morris, his heirs and assigns, the right of a toll-bridge across the Harlem River.—Laws of N. Y. (1837), chap. 423. 15

The legislature incorporates "The American Society for the Diffusion of Useful Knowledge," to advance the cause of general education "by obtaining and publishing statistics and facts relative to the history, the progress and the improvements of the school systems of our own and other countries; of promoting associations among professional teachers for purposes of mutual improvement and co-operation; and for the establishment more generally throughout our country of libraries and reading-rooms for popular use; of establishing correspondence with similar institutions in Europe, with a view to procure facilities for promoting by all laudable means, the general interest of literature, education, science 16

1837 May 16 and the arts." The society is "to be located in the city of New-York." Among the incorporators are Thomas De Witt, Alonzo Potter, Jacob Abbott, Sam'l F. B. Morse, and Gorham D. Abbott. —Laws of N. Y. (1837), chap. 459; amended Ap 18, 1838, by ibid. (1838), chap. 256.

19 Hamilton Square is rented out as a pasture land by the commissioners of the almshouse, bridewell, penitentiary, etc.—Minutes of the Com'rs of Almshouse, Bellevue and Bridewell, etc. (MS.) in office of the sec. of the dept. of public welfare.

20 N. Y. University, on University Place, on the east side of Washington Square, between Washington Place and Waverly Place, is dedicated. For an account of the ceremony, and a description of the building, see Eve. Post, My 19, 1837; N. Y. Mirror, Je 10, 1837; Chamberlain's N. Y. University (Boston, 1901), I: 67–69; *N. Y. For criticism of the architecture, see D 31, 1834. See also L. M. R. K., III: 941. When the university moved to University Heights, in The Bronx, in 1894 (q.v.), the building on Washington Square was demolished. The law school and certain other departments, however, are still maintained in a building since erected on the old site.

" Capt. Marryat is in New York. For Hone's estimate of him, see Hone's Diary, I: 260, 262.

22 Hone comments on the shocking loss of life in steamboat accidents, "especially on the Western waters."—Hone's Diary, I: 260.

26 "A deadly calm pervades this lately flourishing city. No goods are selling, no business stirring, no boxes encumber the sidewalks of Pearl street; stocks have fallen again, but not back to the prices at which they were before the suspension of specie payments. . . ."—Hone's Diary, I: 261.

27 Hone records: "I dined with the governing committee of the Union Club, the first dinner in the club house, No. 343 Broadway [see Je 17, D 7, 1836; Ap 25, 1837]. The house will be open to the subscribers on Thursday next. It is well fitted up, the furniture neat and handsome; the servants are good, and, above all, there is a most recherché chef de cuisine. Subscribers will get a better dinner and pay less for it than at any hotel in town. It is a great resource for bachelors and men 'about town;' but I do not see how we married men can be induced to leave our comfortable homes and families to dine 'en garçon' at the club, even under the temptation of Monsieur Julien's bon diners à la Paris."—Hone's Diary, I: 261–62.

The City Directory of 1836 shows that 343 Broadway was the residence of Jacob R. Le Roy, after which time Le Roy lived in Lafayette Place. According to the Directory, the club-house stood on the west side of Broadway, just below Leonard St.; from which it appears that Wilson (Mem. Hist., IV: 234) is in error in stating that the Le Roy house was "near White Street." See also L. M. R. K., III: 939. The club's handbooks for 1912 and other years are, apparently, in error in stating, in a condensed chronology, that this first club-house was "opened" in "1836." For the second club-house, see My 13, 1842.

June 8 "Upwards of one hundred and thirty removals and appointments were made last evening by the Common Council. This is doing work by wholesale."—Eve. Post, Je 8, 1837.

12 Referring to Prince Louis Napoleon Bonaparte (see Ap 17), Philip Hone writes: "This youthful scion of the Bonaparte stock, who was exiled for ten years from France for a silly attempt at revolt made by him at Strasburgh, after walking Broadway during the last three or four weeks, sailed to-day in the 'George Washington' for Liverpool. . . ."—Hone's Diary, I: 263.

15 James Ryan, of Boston, announces that he has leased "the large building in Duane street, six doors from Broadway, known as Rutgers's College, for the purpose of a Hotel and Restaurant.

"The interior of the building has been entirely taken out, and refitted expressly to suit the business of the present occupant." The place is called the Manhattan House.—Eve. Post, Je 15, 1837.

16 The liberty-pole at the corner of Houston and Allen Sts., in front of Hawkins' Tammany Branch Hotel, is destroyed by lightning.—Eve. Post. Je 17, 1837.

17 The new merchants' exchange "is now going up as rapidly as possible. The basement is laid up to a level with the street, and the inner circle showing the outlines of the great room for the meetings of merchants, can already be distinguished from the rest of the mason work. . . . June 17

A descriptive account of the Bellevue almshouse, hospitals, and prisons, the Blackwell's Is. penitentiary, and the city's Long Island farms, is published.—N. Y. Com. Adv., Je 24, 1837. 24

"The mode of arriving at the eastern part of Long Island has hitherto been by means of small sailing vessels, or by stage coaches. A more rapid and direct means of conveyance is now provided. Captain Vanderbilt has made arrangements for running the fine steamboats Cleopatra and Clifton from this city to Oyster-pond Point and Sag Harbour."—Eve. Post, Jl 15, 1837. July 15

"The contractor is at work repaving South William street, a new street formed out of part of Mill street, with wooden blocks, like Broadway, opposite the City Hall. This is a great improvement and should be extensively adopted in streets of greater importance. Chatham street, from the American Museum, should be immediately commenced in this way. It is now quite out of order, and the improvement would be seasonable."—Eve. Post, Jl 18, 1837. 18

"The number of scholars in the public schools of this city is 12,837, of whom 7,200 are boys. These are all white. There are 1276 colored children at separate schools. Although education is afforded free of expense to the parents, there is a great indifference on the part of many to the advantages of the institution. Children are suffered to roam about the streets without any definite object, and some cannot go to school for the want of bread to eat."—Eve. Post, Jl 28, 1837. 28

Mayor Clark approves a resolution of the common council (see Ap 21) instructing the clerk of that body "to procure the translation of such of the Dutch Records remaining in the office of the Clerk of Common Pleas" as the committee on arts and sciences may designate, and appropriating $500 for the purpose.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, V: 55. 2

"Under this resolution a translation was made by Doctor Westbrook, from May, 1647, to the 31st of August, 1654, comprising a manuscript volume of about four hundred and fifty folios. The above appropriation having run out, the further prosecution of the work was discontinued, and nothing further in relation thereto was done until the year 1847" (see Ja 22, 1848).—Proc., Bd. of Ald. (1849), XXXVI, part 2, 537. This was Rev. C. D. Westbrook, of Peekskill.—Eve. Post, My 23, 1838, citing Albany Daily Adv.

" After some changes in plan, the common council adopts a resolution to rebuild Franklin Market at Old Slip, extending it 50 ft. on its northern end toward Front St.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, V: 53. A brick market-house was erected soon after. In less than twenty years, the business had nearly all left this market.—De Voe, Market Book, 523–24.

The Broadway Theatre, on the east side of Broadway at the corner of Canal St., is opened. The building was formerly known as Euterpean Hall.—*Eve. 2 Prof. Charles G. B. Daubeny, a distinguished botanist, from Oxford, writes of New York, where he arrived on this day: ". . . I must indeed confess that the Broadway, as a single street, eclipses in certain respects anything that I can call to my mind in London; there are, it is true, no such public edifices as those in Regent Street, but there is in it a longer line of shops and of merchandise; it may not equal the stir and hurry of the Strand, but it is much cleaner, and contains many better houses. If compared to cities purely commercial, such as Liverpool, the superiority of New York strikes me as even greater, for it must be admitted there is nowhere such a street as the Broadway in any one of our provincial emporiums. We remark, however, an absence of taste, an indifference to what is merely ornamental, in all that appertains to the city and neighbourhood. The Battery, for instance, is a promenade which in point of situation might compete with any in Europe, even with the boasted Villa Reale of Naples, commanding as it does the most extensive views of the beautiful Bay, enlivened by the numerous vessels constantly passing and repassing. It is kept, however, in a slovenly manner, and laid out with no sort of taste: nor are picture galleries or museums, on the plan of European cities, to be met with. The only public buildings that rank above mediocrity, are the City Hall, (which, however, would cut but a mean appearance by the side of any of the rich, though antiquated looking buildings of the kind in the Netherlands, or by that of the Bourse at Paris,) and the new University in Washington Square, which seems to be an imitation externally of C. C. College, in Cambridge."—Jour. of a Tour through the U. S. and in Canada, made during the years 1837–38 (Oxford, 1843), 13–14.

4 "Wallack opened the National Theatre (late the Italian Opera House) this evening, with the comedy 'The Rivals,'" writes Hone, in describing the production. "The National is the prettiest theatre in the United States; but it is not in Broadway and the New Yorkers are the strangest people in the world in their predilection for fashionable locations. . . .

"It is almost incredible that in these times of distress, when the study of economy is so great an object, there should be nine of these money drains in operation: The Park,—the old Drury of New York which has done well during the whole of the hard times; the Bowery, . . .; the Franklin, in Chatham square; Miss Monier's Theatre, in Broadway, opposite St. Paul's,—little and weakly, and likely to die; the Euterpean Hall, Broadway, below Canal street,—short-lived, also, I suspect; the Broadway Theatre, next to Tattersall's, which has been handsomely fitted up, and is to be opened next week; Mrs. Hamblin's Theatre, formerly Richmond Hill, where the Italian opera first placed its unstable foot in New York; the Circus, in Vauxhall Garden, nearly in the rear of my house [see Mr 9, 1836]; and Niblo's Vaudevilles,—the best concern of the whole at present, with a strong company playing little pieces à la française. Concerts, and rope-dancing, and other performances of the Ravel family, consisting of eight or ten of the most astonishing performers in their line who have ever appeared in this city. If Wallack can stand all this, he is immortal."—Hone's Diary, I: 266. See, however, S 23, 1839.

7 Hone records: "There never was a nation on the face of the earth which equalled this in rapid locomotion. The President's message was brought on to this city by railroad, steamboat, and horsemen, and carried from hence to Boston, which place it reached in the inconceivably short period of twenty-four hours from Washington, a distance of five hundred miles."—Hone's Diary, I: 268.

11 The crowded and filthy condition of the bridewell compels the commissioners of the almshouse to urge the common council to push to completion the new house of detention.—Doc. No. 32, Bd. of Ald., S 11, 1837.

12 The brick wall around the grounds of St. Paul's Church is being removed, to be replaced by "a handsome iron railing."—N. Y. Com. Adv., S 12, 1837.

13 The Olympic Theatre, at 442–444 Broadway, is opened. At first it was not successful.—Haswell's Reminiscences, 328; Brown, I: 264; L. M. R. K., III: 985. Cf. Man. Com. Coun. (1865), 635. See D 9, 1839.

16 "We are gratified to perceive that the streets of this city begin to present a cheerful aspect. We learn that trade has very sensibly improved within a few days, and jobbers now have hopes of doing a respectable fall business. This, though not sufficient to relieve merchants wholly from the existing pressure, is still encouraging for the future. . . . Sept. 16

"That business will in a short time recover from its present depression, we have no doubt; and the step most essential in hastening such an event will be the resumption of specie payments by the banks, which we hope will be undertaken as speedily as possible."—Eve. Post, S 16, 1837. See also ibid., S 21, 1837.

19 "The pavers are engaged in laying down a new kind of pavement in the Bowery, between Hester and Walker streets. The pavement is formed by laying close to each other pieces of stone, like curbs, and placed in the manner of curb stones, so that the narrow edges are uppermost, thus presenting a smooth surface, but sufficiently rough to make a firm footing for horses.

"This is said to promise more durability than any mode hitherto adopted, though not so free from noise and rumbling as the wooden one in Broadway."—Eve. Post, S 19, 1837.

20 The N. Y. & Harlem R. R. "is laid with a double track in the Bowery as far south as Walker street, and in a short time it is intended to lay the road down to the City Hall, and ultimately to Whitehall. The construction of the road even in the Bowery was and is in defiance of the opposition of nearly all interested in any way in property on that thoroughfare."—Eve. Post, S 20, 1837, See also ibid., S 23, 25, 28. See, further, O 26.

" The ground between Sixth and Seventh Aves., 79th and 86th Sts., is appropriated for a reservoir; also the ground between Fifth and Sixth Aves., 40th to 42d Sts.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, V: 73. The Yorkville or receiving reservoir was begun on the former site in 1838, and the Murray Hill or distributing reservoir on the latter.—16th Ann. Rep., Am. Scen. & Hist. Pres. Soc. (1911), 434–35; 22d Ann. Rep. (1917), 534–35. The statement in L. M. R. K., III: 976, that the Yorkville reservoir begun in 1838 extended from 86th to 96th Sts., is erroneous, as the one on this site was not authorised until 1853 (q. v., Je 30).

26 "The fire district, has among other improvements, been the occasion of the restoration of Delmonico's establishment, with many additions to recommend it to public favor." The new restaurant, a three-storey building, was opened last week.—Eve. Post, S 26, 1837. It was at the intersection of South William and Beaver Sts.—L. M. R. K., III: 978.

Oct. 7 Washington's coffin in the old vault at Mt. Vernon is opened, and the remains are deposited in a marble sarcophagus in a new vault on the estate. The lid of the sarcophagus is from a design by Wm. Strictland (1787–1854), architect and engineer, whom Dunlap thought he remembered as once "in the scene shop of the Park Theatre [New York], a companion of Hugh Reinagle and a pupil of John Joseph Holland. . . ."—Hist. of the Arts of Design (Goodspeed ed.), III: 173; Lossing, Mount Vernon and Its Associations, 354–58; Wilstach, Mount Vernon, 248–50. Cf. D 30.

26 The directors of the N. Y. & Harlem R. R. invite the common council and other citizens "to celebrate the completion of the great tunnel at Harlem Heights." The tunnel and other features of the route are described in the news report. A "most sumptuous entertainment" was served at "Nolan's great house, near the tunnel." Those who carried out the project, and who were called "a band of speculators," will be called "public benefactors."—N. Y. Com. Adv., O 27, 1837, citing the Express. The "whole course" of the road "is for the first time opened to the public." This includes "the Tunnel on the Fourth Avenue," described as an "artificial ravine that has been cloven down, some seventy feet, through the solid rocks of Mount Prospect."—N. Y. Mirror, XV: 151; and see ibid. for Nov. 4; and N. Y. H. S. Bull., Ja, 1926, 117. See, further, N 22.

31 "The old pear tree on the Third Avenue planted by Governor Stuyvesant has lately been surrounded by a wooden paling to protect its trunk. . . . The venerable tree yet annually drops its fruit on the side walk, and if not destroyed by accident or wantonness, will probably continue to do so for a century to come."—Eve. Post, O 31, 1837. 22 "The fare [on the N. Y. & Harlem R. R.] all the way through from the city to Harlem, is now reduced to 18¾ cents, one third

1837 (six cents) of which is for that portion of the route from Yorkville
N 22 to Harlem."—Eve. Post, N 22, 1837.

26 The Unitarian Church on Prince St., west of Broadway (see D 7, 1826), is destroyed by fire.—Eve. Post, N 27, 1837; Greenleaf, Hist. of the Churches, 376. The congregation engaged the large hall of the Stuyvesant Institute on Broadway, and used it for a place of assemblage for a year and a half. The site of the burned church was sold, and "a substantial building of rough granite," erected "on Broadway, nearly opposite Washington Square," was opened for worship May 2, 1839 (q.v.), and named "The Church of the Messiah."—Ibid., 376.

Dec. 2 A news item reads: "Croton Water Works.—There are more than twenty miles of this work under contract and in progress. About twelve hundred men are employed on the various parts of the line, and the expenditure for the month of November alone amounted to nearly $45,000. Of the aqueduct about 2500 feet is completed. We learn that laborers are still in demand in Westchester. About three thousand will be employed in the spring."—Eve. Post, D 2, 1837.

4 The Apollo "is a new amusement opened by Messrs. Bragaldi and Palmo, at 410 Broadway, where a house has been elegantly fitted up. The performances are by figures worked by machinery called Italian Marionetts."—Eve. Post, D 4, 1837. This was formerly the Broadway Theatre (see Ag 28).—Haswell's Reminiscences, 328; L. M. R. 6 The corner-stone of a new building for the N. Y. Institution for the Blind is laid on the premises occupied by the institution, between Eighth and Ninth Aves., 33d and 34th Sts. "The building now commenced is intended as the wing of a beautiful edifice of the Gothic order, spacious enough to accommodate all the blind of the state of New York. This wing will be built of stone, three stories in height, and will measure 130 feet in length and 35 in breadth. Another wing will be erected when the funds shall be procured, and next the main building, by which the wings are to be united."—Eve. Post, D 5 and 7, 1837. See also L. M. R. K., III: 955.

19 A new bell is placed on the city hall, in place of the one broken on Nov. 29 (q.v.). It weighs between 5,000 and 6,000 lbs.—about 800 lbs. heavier than the old one. It was made by Messrs. Allaire.—N. Y. Com. Adv., D 20; Eve. Post, D 22, 1837. See Ja 1, 1838.

22 Carlton House "is an entirely new establishment, made by the union of two large brick front houses on the east side of Broadway at the corner of Leonard street, and extending along Leonard street to Benson street, forming as extensive a building as can be desired for the purpose of a public house. . . .

"One advantage this house will have over others is its location, being in the very centre of fashion. The lower part of Broadway is fast falling into neglect by the promenaders, whereas further up, near the Carlton, the street is gaining daily as a public resort."—Eve. Post, D 22, 1837. See also ibid., My 23, 1838.

27 A large public meeting is held at Vauxhall Garden "in favour of the Canadian Patriots." Resolutions are adopted declaring that "the majority of the people of Canada have, by the election of their delegates to the Assembly of the Colony, evinced their desire to reform the abuses under which they have suffered for years; that Great Britain has despised the petitions of the Colonies as she despised those of these States prior to 1776, and that the grievances of the Canadians have not been redressed;" expressing "the abhorrence with which we have witnessed the slaughter of men struggling for freedom—the destruction of their property—the burning of their villages and churches, and the persecution of our fellow men for the supposed crime of daring to ask for enfranchisement;" characterising "the rising of the Canadians as the effort of an enslaved people to obtain those rights which God and nature intended that they should exercise;" appointing ward committees to solicit subscriptions "to assist the Canadians who have taken refuge among us in every manner not forbidden by our treaties with Great Britain or by the Laws of Nations." Dec. 27 Dr. E. B. O'Callaghan, "Member of the House of Assembly of Lower Canada, and Editor of the Montreal Vindicator, for whose arrest the British Government has offered a reward of $2,000," addresses the meeting amid great applause.—*Eve. 31 By the end of this year, a chain of canals and railroads joined New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Wilmington, and Pittsburg, thus bringing the interior of the country along the Ohio and Mississippi Rivers into closer commercial relations with the Atlantic seaboard.—See "Railway Development in the U. S.," in the Papers and Discussions of the Am. Soc. of Civil Engineers, XXXVII: 868.

In this year, the English Public Record Office was established. —
—Winsor, VIII: 459.

In this year, Lord Durham made his important report on — the state of Canada. He recommended the union of Upper and Lower Canada into a single colony with a single government and the organization of an executive council which should be responsible to the assembly.—Hazen, Europe since 1815, 525–27.

In this year, the library of the Union Theological Seminary — was founded. In 1839, the Van Ess library was added to it by purchase (the collection of Leander Van Ess, of Germany, the editor of the Septuagint and Vulgate), which thereafter gave its name to the entire library.—Man. Com. Coun. (1856), 561.

In this year, the New York University Law School was estab- — lished in the building on Washington Square. Benjamin F. Butler, who was attorney-general in Jackson's cabinet, was elected principal of the faculty, with William Kent and David Graham, Jr., as professors. When Butler was appointed U. S. district attorney by Van Buren in 1839, the instruction lapsed.—N. Y. University Bulletin, Je 30, 1911. See also Eve. Post, F 28 and Ap 19, 1838.

In this year and the next, the house of refuge (see Ja 1, D 25, — 1825) moved to Bellevue. First, a building was erected for the female delinquents, 150 by 42 ft., and three storeys high; then the building known as the "Fever Hospital" (see 1824) was altered for the use of the boys, and the premises were enclosed by a wall. —14th Ann. Rep. of the Managers of the Soc. for the Reformation of Juvenile Delinquents, 1839; L. M. R. K., III: 954. See My 21, 1839. The Perris Insurance Map, Vol. VI (1854), shows these buildings on the East River, between 23d and 24th Sts.

In this year, an iron railing was erected around St. Mark's — churchyard, replacing the wooden picket-fence which was built in 1800. This fence is still standing.—Memorial of St. Mark's Church (1899), 55, 143.

In this year, Common Lands in the Twelfth Ward were sur- — veyed by Wm. Whitlock.—See map No. 86, in real estate bu. of comptroller's office. In 1852, a survey of lots in the same ward was made by John Callaghan.—See map No. 93, in same office.

In this year, Francis Nicholson made a survey of New York's — squares, parks, and public places.—See map No. 89, in real estate bureau of comptroller's office.

In this year, John J. Serrell surveyed the city corporation's — property between 23d and 42d Sts.—See map No. 78, in real estate bureau of comptroller's office. He surveyed also the city market grounds.—See map No. 200, in ibid.

In this year, assessments were levied for opening Fifth Ave. — between 42d and 129th Sts., and 34th St. from river to river (see also 1836).—Index to Assessment Rolls, Vol. I (comptroller's office).

In this year, the car-shops of John Stephenson were on the — east side of Fourth Ave. between 128th and 129th Sts. Among the cars purchased of him for the N. Y. & Harlem R. R. were two large passenger coaches having diamond-shaped windows, built for the Erie R. R. but not delivered owing to the failure of that company. These were made originally with 6 ft. gauge, but were altered to 4 ft. 8½ in. to suit the gauge of the Fourth Ave. road.—From notes by W. S. Carman, supplied by the company. See also My 4.

In this year was published Conveyances on record in the Register's —

1838 Office . . . from the 1st January, 1825, to the 1st January, 1838, — by Dudley Selden, with a Map of the Harlem Commons or Yorkville, compiled by J. F. Bridges, Jan., 1825, in four sections. The conveyances described are of lots in the Harlem Commons, mainly as laid down on a map by Chas. Clinton in Dec., 1824. On pp. 117–75 are patents or confirmations issued by Gov. Richard Nicolls in 1666, and by Gov. Thos. Dongan in 1686, as well as much original matter relating to the establishment of the division line between Harlem and New York, and to the title of the Harlem Commons. Some of this matter is from the original Harlem records, now in the N. Y. P. L.

— From 1838 to 1852, the Democratic Review was published. From 1853 to 1855, it was called the United States Review, and was subsequently revived by Florence and Lawrence as the National Democratic Quarterly Review.—North, Newspaper and Periodical Press, 118.

3 "A report is current in the streets this forenoon . . . that the British had crossed over to Fort Schlosser, on the American side, and burnt the steamboat Caroline, which had been chartered by the patriots. There were thirty persons on board, nine of whom were missing—supposed to have been drowned or, burnt. If this be true, our neutrality has been violated most signally by the British Canadians."—Eve. Post, Ja 3, 1838. This created great excitement in New York.—Ibid., Ja 4, 1838. See also ibid., Ja 5 et seq.

The report was true. The "Caroline" was burned by the British early in the morning of Dec. 30, and at least one man, Amos Durfee, was killed and several wounded. Gen. Scott was at once dispatched with letters asking the governors of New York and Vermont to call out a military force, and a correspondence was opened with the British Minister, Henry S. Fox. Sir Francis Head, lieutenant-governor of Upper Canada, justified the attack on the ground that U. S. citizens had been aiding the Canadian rebels. The federal government did not consider this a sufficient excuse for the act of aggression and protested to Great Britain. Nothing further was done until the autumn of 1840, when a Canadian named Alexander McLeod crossed the border and boasted, in taverns, that he had killed Durfee. He was at once arrested and indicted. The British minister Fox protested against these proceedings, claiming that "the destruction of the steamboat Caroline was a public act of persons in her Majesty's service obeying the orders of their superior authorities," and that an individual could not be held responsible for an act done by order of the constituted authorities. The discussions over the case led to popular excitement in both countries, and there was at one time prospect of war between the U. S. and Great Britain. McLeod was finally tried in the Autumn of 1841, and declared not guilty. The destruction of the "Caroline," however, having been admitted by the British to be a "public act," an explanation and defence was demanded, and the affair was finally settled in 1842 by Lord Ashburton's assurance that "no slight to the authority of the United States was ever intended," that it was "a violation of courtesy," and that an earlier apology should have been made.—McMaster, Hist. of People of U. S., VI: 439–42, 610–23; VII: 277. See also Hone's Diary, I: 310.

" The significance of the name "High Bridge" appears in a report of the water commissioners respecting the relative merits of a high bridge, "163 feet in height, on seven immense stone piers, sunk in the water and mud, on an average of 25 feet below tide, with 80 feet span of arches," and those of "a low bridge, requiring only one pier in the river, with an abutment," the latter being recommended because the expense would be about half a million less.

In the light of modern developments, the following paragraph from this report is noteworthy. "If the [Harlem] river should ever be made navigable, by the removal of the mills at Kingsbridge, and the obstruction of the dam at Macomb's Bridge, the facility afforded by the low bridge, of an archway of 80 feet in width, and 50 feet in height above full tide, will admit the passage of vessels of sufficient burthen and capacity, for every useful and necessary purpose, and the high bridge could do no more."

It is also interesting to observe the commissioners' admission "so far as architectural display is involved, that the high bridge has the preference."—Proc., Bd. of Ald., XIV: 179–81. See Jl 9.

5 President Van Buren issues a proclamation exhorting all Americans to refrain from interfering unlawfully in Canadian affairs, and declaring that "any persons who shall compromit the neutrality of Jan.
this Government . . . will render themselves liable to arrest and 5 punishment under the laws of the United States."—Eve. Post, Ja 8, 1838.

Washington Irving is considered as a candidate for several political offices, and he takes occasion to write to his friend Gouverneur Kemble, who is a member of the house of representatives in Washington, setting out his articles of political faith, and indulging in some criticism of the administration of President Van Buren. 10

A few weeks later President Van Buren wrote to Irving that the secretary of the navy was intending to resign, and tendered him the appointment. Irving declined, saying: "I shrink from the harsh cares and turmoil of political life in Washington, and feel that I am too sensitive to endure the bitter personal hostility and the slanders and misrepresentations of the press which beset high station in this country. . . . I really believe it would take but a short career of public life at Washington to render me mentally and physically a perfect wreck and to hurry me prematurely into old age."—Life and Letters of Washington Irving, by Pierre M Irving (N. Y., 1862), III: 119–27.

The common council appropriates $2,000 for another bell for the 24 city hall (see Ja 1) which shall be "warranted by the maker to answer all intended purposes for at least one year."—Proc., App'd by Mayor, V: 130; descrip. of Pl. 143-a, III: 713. See F 14.

The new alarm bell (see Ja 24) is placed on the city hall. Al- Feb.
though one of the largest, of Spanish manufacture, weighing about 14
1,700 pounds, and placed with mouth upward, with springs on each side for the clapper to rest against, it is feared that the tone will not be loud enough to reach the distant parts of the city.—Eve. Post, F 15, 1838. See Ag 1.

The Bowery Theatre (see S 22, 1836) is destroyed by fire for the 18 third time.—Eve. Post, F 19, 1838; Haswell's Reminiscences, 335; Costello, 229; Brown, I: 115; L. M. R. K., III: 982. It was rebuilt and opened on May 6, 1839 (q.v.).

When the Bowery Theatre was destroyed, the old Bull's Head Tavern, at that time known as "The Theater Hall," and "kept as a porter-house by Bradford Jones, with an oyster-cellar under it, and known as No. 50 Bowery," was gutted, and portions of its walls were overthrown. Repaired and reoccupied as a porter-house, a portion of its walls serving in the new structure, the old tavern, in 1867 and later, was known as the Atlantic Garden.—Hist. Mag., 2d ser., II: 43.

Consideration of Washington Irving as a candidate for mayor of Mar.
New York becomes general, and Irving writes to his friend Gouver- 12
neur Kemble in Washington, about it: "There is no truth in the rumor of my having consented to become a candidate for the Mayoralty. I have not even been applied to on the subject; but if I had been, nothing could induce me to undertake an office for which I feel myself so little fitted. Besides, I value my peace of mind too highly to suffer myself to be drawn into the vortex of New York politics; which, not to speak profanely, is a perfect political Hell-gate." However, a few days later he recorded that he "had a full deputation from Tammany Hall at the cottage" (Sunnyside), informing him that he "had been unanimously and vociferously nominated a Mayor," and he concludes: "of course I declined."—Life and Letters of Washington Irving, by Pierre M. Irving (N. Y., 1862), III: 124, 126.

"A line of steam vessels to run between this city and London, 24 touching at Cork, in Ireland, has been established in England. The first trip will be made by the Sirius, a new steam vessel of seven hundred tons and three hundred and twenty horse power, which has been chartered by the company engaged in this 1838 Mar. 24 enterprise, and is expected to arrive here in April. This vessel is said to possess great recommendations for speed and seaworthiness. Messrs. Wadsworth & Smith, of this city, are the agents of the company. We believe that this is a different company from that which sends out the 'Great Western' steamboat, and is likely to anticipate it in the enterprise."—Eve. Post, Mr 24, 1838. See also ibid., Ap 19, 1838. The "Sirius" arrived on April 22 (q. v.).

29 An act of the legislature, amending that of May 2, 1834 (q. v.), for supplying the city with pure and wholesome water, authorises the common council to raise a further sum of not more than $3,000,000 by loans, thereby creating a public fund or stock called "The Water-Stock of the city of New-York."—Laws of N. Y. (1838), chap. 127; Proc., App'd by Mayor, V: 159.

10 In the election held on this day and the two succeeding days, Mayor Clark was reëlected.—Eve. Post, Ap 10, 1838, et seq. "The election . . . was contested with great animation. The three parties in the field were the Democratic, Whig and Conservative. The former adopted as their candidate for Mayor, Isaac L. Varian . . . The Whigs renominated Mr. Clark, and the Conservatives brought up Richard Riker, for many years Recorder of the city." Clark received 19,723 votes, Varian, 19,204, and Riker, 395. The Whigs "perpetuated their political power for another year" in the common council by "a majority of one ward."

" The N. Y. Hist. Soc. passes a resolution to memorialize the legislature on the subject of collecting materials in Europe illustrative of the history of New York. The draft of the memorial was not approved by the society until Jan. 8, 1839; and in that month it was presented to the legislature, followed by a special message from Gov. Seward on Feb. 5, and adopted.—Kelby, The N. Y. Historical Soc., 1804–1904, 41. See, further, My 2, 1839.

" The legislature incorporates the "Rutgers Female Institute in the city of New York."—Laws of N. Y. (1838), chap. 192. See Ag 29.

16 The legislature passes an act "to lay out a new street in the twelfth and sixteenth wards." This defines the line of Broadway northward from 21st St., including its intersections with Sixth and Seventh Aves. That part of the Bloomingdale Road which lies north of its intersection with Seventh Ave., the act states, shall remain open as a public road until closed by city ordinance.—*Laws of N. 17 The University of the City of New York becomes one of the beneficiaries under an act of the legislature, passed this day, "to appropriate the income of the U. S. deposit fund to the purposes of education."—Laws of N. Y. (1838), chap. 237. Apr. 17

The "Sirius," the first ship to cross the Atlantic under the power of steam alone, arrives at New York from Cork, having made the voyage in 18 days. Her arrival "is an event of so great an interest that the corporation of the city appointed a joint committee to receive and visit her on her arrival." She is anchored off the Battery.—Hone's Diary, I: 303; Pasko's Old N. Y., II: 234. The "Sirius" is shown on A. Pl. 23, Vol. III. See Ap 23. 22

The "Great Western," a much larger steamship than the "Sirius," arrives at New York from Bristol, the second to cross the Atlantic by steam alone. She anchors at Pike Slip. "The city was in a ferment during the day, from the arrival of these two interesting strangers. The Battery and adjacent streets were crowded with curious spectators, and the water covered with boats conveying obtrusive visitors on board."—Hone's Diary, I: 303–4; N. Y. Com. Adv., Ap 24, 1838. See also ibid., Ap 25, 27, 28, My 1, 8, Jl 5, Ag 1, 2, 3, 1838. The arrival of the "Great Western" is shown on Pl. 121, Vol. III. 23

The mayor and common council and other invited guests pay a visit to the "Sirius."—Eve. Post, Ap 25, 1838. 24

The common council and a number of invited guests make a visit to the "Great Western," examine her "stupendous machinery," and dine with Capt. Hoskin and his officers. Philip Hone writes of it: "The vessel exceeds my expectation. Her steam-engine of four hundred horse power and the other machinery are upon a magnificent scale, and the accommodations for passengers in the best possible taste; the principal saloon is surrounded by forty-two state-rooms, sufficiently capacious. The ornaments are of the quaint, old-fashioned style, and the panels are decorated by exquisite paintings, in the costumes of the reign of Louis XV., which give to the whole of this beautiful apartment the appearance of a cabinet of old Dresden china. One of the greatest advantages which this saloon has over the cabins of the packets consists in the height of the ceiling, which affords light and air equal to a well-proportioned dining-room or parlour on shore. All that is now wanting to confine to the steam-vessels the patronage of all the passengers going to Europe is the assurance of safety, and that will be obtained by one or more passages across the Atlantic."—Hone's Diary, I: 306–7; Eve. Post, Ap 28, 1838, citing Jour. of Com. 27

The corner-stone of the Leake and Watts Orphan Asylum, on 111th St., east of Amsterdam Ave., is laid.—From inscription on corner-stone in possession of Cathedral of St. John the Divine; Message of Mayor Clark, My 14 (1838), 14; L. M. R. K., III: 954. The building was completed and occupied on Nov. 1, 1843 (q. v.). 28

Early this month, resolutions are passed by the common council to rebuild Centre Market on grounds intended for its occupation, described as 88 ft., 6 in. on Grand St.; 35 ft., 7 in. on Broome St.; 389 ft., 6 in. on Orange St.; and 382 ft., 10 in. on Centre St.—De Voe, Market Book, 471–72. The law permitting this was passed May 2, 1836.—Laws of N. Y. (1836), chap. 232. A brick market-house was built, which was opened on Jan. 17, 1839 (q. v.). —L. M. R. K., III: 958. May —

The common council adopts a resolution that application be made to the legislature for a law authorising the taking of a plot of ground on the west side of Third Ave. between 120th and 121st Sts., running back 275 ft., for public purposes—meaning for a market-house, engine-house, etc. The city acquired the land, which for many years had been a market-place, and a building was erected two years later (see 1840).—De Voe, Market Book, 588–90. —

The "Sirius" sails from New York. "The Battery was filled with spectators, who gave repeated cheers to the interesting stranger, and she was saluted from the forts on her progress down the bay."—Hone's Diary, I: 307; Eve. Post, My 2, 1838. 1

The common council permits the N. Y. & Harlem R. R. Co. to continue its rails, similar to those laid between 13th and 14th Sts., by a double track from the Bowery through Broome to Centre St., and from Broome St., through Centre to Chatham St. When such rails shall be laid through Centre and Broome Sts., the company shall cause so much of the rails as are laid in the Bowery south of Broome St. to be removed, and the street repaved. —Proc., App'd by Mayor, V: 200; ibid., VII: 91; Doc. 74, Bd. of Ald., Mr 12, 1838. See also Doc. 54, Bd. of Ald. Under this regulation, the line was extended to the city hall. See 1839. It was the first intention of the company to reach the city hall by way of Chatham Square, but, through the influence of Henry Erben, 4

1838 May 4 alderman of the Sixth Ward, the route was changed through Broome and Centre Sts., Mr. Erben's purpose being to cause the cars to pass his organ-factory on Centre, near Walker St.—From notes by W. S. Carman, supplied by the company.

7 Hone writes: "This has been a gala-day in New York. The British steamer 'Great Western,' Captain Hoskin, sailed at two o'clock from Pier No. 1, North River. All the city went to behold the sight. The Battery was a mass of living witnesses to this event. Castle Garden was filled, and all the adjacent wharves and houses were thronged with spectators. When the steamer started she was accompanied by a dozen large steamboats with crowded decks and ornamented by flags, among which the loving embraces of St. George's Cross and the Stars and Stripes were conspicuous in every instance. I went with a party on board of the 'Providence.'

"Having reached the bay below Staten Island, the 'Great Western' stopped, and the 'Providence' went alongside and took off a large party of gentlemen who went down in her, among whom were Governor Marcy, Mr. Seward, and many other distinguished persons. We then left her with shouts and good wishes for her safe and speedy return. . . . She pursued her course in fine style, and we returned to the city and got home to a late dinner. There was a great crowd on board the 'Providence,' in which were many ladies, and the excursion was quite a pleasant one. An interesting incident occurred whilst we lay alongside of the 'Great Western,' in the bay. The ship 'Colon,' from Havana, came in with a number of passengers, with all sails set. Sailing beautifully on the wind, she passed through the fleet of gay steamboats, cheered the 'Great Western,' went close under our bows, almost touching the bowsprit, and passed triumphantly rejoicing on her way to the renowned city of Gotham; it was a fine offset of sails and rigging against steam and paddles."—Hone's Diary, I: 311–12; Eve. Post, My 7 and 8, 1838. The "Great Western" made 70 trips across the Atlantic during her connection with the New York-Bristol and New York-Liverpool lines.—Bullock, "First Steamships to Cross the Atlantic," in Conn. Mag. (1907), II: 49 et seq.

" The total cost of widening Art St. from the Bowery to Broadway amounts to $88,794.75.—Man. Com. Coun. (1857), 537.

16 "The Suspension Law of this State expired yesterday [May 16], and all the banks are now bound to pay specie for their bills."—Eve. Post, My 17, 1838.

22 "The existing prosperous condition of our city in pecuniary affairs affords convincing evidence of the justness of our position. The resumption of specie payments [see My 16] has realized every reasonable expectation of the friends of that policy. We need not extend our observations beyond the city of New York, in search of the benefits arising from an honest policy on the part of banking institutions. We see commerce reviving—mechanics actively employed—buildings erecting—and in fact every avenue to prosperity filled with renewed enterprise. Witness the crowded thoroughfares of this city—the wharves filled with merchandise from every quarter of the globe—ships loading and unloading—the restoration of confidence in capitalists—the investments in various stocks."—Eve. Post, My 22, 1838.

24 "Progress of the Croton Aqueduct.—It is gratifying to witness the zeal, industry and perseverance with which this great work is prosecuted by the several contractors and the men in their employment, and, without any unforeseen or untoward hindrance, there is a good degree of certainty that it will be completed within the time specified within the respective contracts. The whole line through this county, we believe, is now under contract, and may be reasonably expected to be completed before the expiration of the year 1840. . . ."

Near the village of Westchester "work is progressing remarkably well. On Mr. McGregory's section, north of the village, a few hundred feet of the Aqueduct were completed last season, and attracted much attention. Mr. Clark's section, south of it, is rapidly preparing for receiving the massy trunk of masonry for the water course. Messrs. Scott & Young's tunnel through the hill has been some time excavated, and the great frame work, on which the stupendous arch over the Kill in this village is to be constructed, is in a good state of forwardness. A large quantity of cut stone, from the quarry of Mr. Jesse Ryder, in this town, is also on the ground ready for the masons. The section of Messrs. Carmichael & Delano, is also advancing with surprising rapidity; within a few weeks past about four hundred feet of the work has been completed except the embankments, and presents a specimen of what the appearance of the Aqueduct will be when finished. . . . Mr. Appleton's sections are also in fine progress, as well as the sections of Mr. Brayton, Mr. Riddle, and others further south. More than 600 men, we think, are at work in and about this village at the present time."—Eve. Post, My 24, 1838, citing Westchester Herald. May 24

"The new American Hotel at the corner of Barclay street and Broadway, opposite to the Astor House, has been taken by Mr. Cozzens, long and very favorably known to visitors at West Point. . . . It will be opened for the reception of guests on Tuesday next [June 12]. The building has been lately rebuilt, and so enlarged as to make it one of the most spacious and commodious hotels in the city."—Eve. Post, Je 8, 1838. June 8

Hone describes the famous Stuyvesant pear-tree: ". . . This tree was the subject of conversation at Mr. Stuyvesant's table to-day. There is no doubt of the fact, I believe, which I now record, that it was brought out from Holland by Governor Stuyvesant, and planted with his own hands on the spot where it now stands. Governor Stuyvesant came to New York in . . . May, 1647; the pear-tree is, therefore, one hundred and ninety-one years old."—Hone's Diary, I: 317. 15

The Prince de Joinville, on his arrival from France, is received by the mayor at the city hall. A party of French gentlemen entertain him at dinner at the Astor Hotel.—N. Y. Com. Adv., Je 18, 1838; and see ibid., Je 25, 1838. 16

"Three Cameleopards, the first ever brought into this country, are now exhibiting at the upper part of Broadway. They are imported from Southern Africa where multitudes of them are caught with the noose and used for food. It is said that the Cameleopard or Giraffe on being brought into northern climates is subject to a kind of consumption, and dies in a short time."—Eve. Post, Je 26, 1838. 26

Victoria is crowned queen (see Je 20, 1837). A detailed account of the ceremonies was published in the N. Y. Com. Adv., Jl 25 and Ag 8 (with illustrations), 1838. 28

The board of assistants resolves: "That it is inexpedient to adopt the plan proposed by the Water Commissioners, for crossing the Harlem river by means of a low bridge or syphon, and that the plan of the high bridge referred to in the Report of the Commissioners [see Ja 3], should be adopted."—King, Memoir of the Croton Aqueduct, 156. Among citizens also, there was much opposition to the low bridge.—Eve. Post, Ag 9, 15, 16, 25, S 26, 1838. The opposition to the low bridge was so persistent that it finally prevailed. See, further, S 7. July 9

It is resolved by the board of assistant aldermen "That the Street Committee be directed to give notice to Mr. Butler, that he cause the materials of the Old Bridewell to be removed on or before the 18th of September next, or that the same will be removed by the Common Council at his expense, and that in case of the neglect or refusal of Mr. Butler so to remove the same, the Street Com'r is hereby directed to remove the same; the said Butler being hereby regarded as liable for the expenses."—Jour. and Docs. of the Board of Assts., XII: 83. Concurrence in such action was recommended in the meeting of the board of aldermen, on Aug. 1 (Proc., Bd. of Ald., XV: 215). See, further, Ag 25. 23

"Mr. John Jacob Astor, with an enlightened and liberal spirit, which does him immortal honor, has made to the corporation of the city of New York, a donation amounting to $350,000, for the establishment of a Public Library, including a lot of land, most eligibly situated, for the erection of a building, for the accommodation of the institution."—Eve. Post, Jl 28, 1838. See Ag 22, 1839. 28

In this summer, the building called the "Halls of Justice," or "Tombs," was completed.—N. Y. As It Is, 1839, p 27. For description, see 1837; see also N 24, 1834; 1836; Proc., App'd by Mayor, VI: 11, 19, 36, 80; L. M. R. K., III: 973. The exact position of the Tombs in relation to the borders of the Collect Pond, which formerly covered its site, is shown in Pl. 58-b, Vol. I, which reproduces a lithographic map of the region, issued in 1846. Cf. Ag 25. 1 The new bell is "put in its place on the top of the City Hall, and will in future give the alarms for fire as heretofore. This bell, which was cast by Messrs. Ames, of Springfield, Mass., is of a very fine tone, and we think can be heard at a greater distance than any bell which has as yet been tried. It is struck upon a new plan, the invention of Messrs. Ames, and the clapper instead of striking in one spot constantly, is carried around the rim of the bell by machinery at once simple and ingenious."—Eve. Post, Ag 2, 1838, citing Courier.

" Fire breaks out in a soap factory, in the rear of 160 Hammond St., and large portions of the block bounded by Hammond, Washington, Perry, and West Sts., are burned, about 50 buildings in all. —Eve. Post, Ag 1, 1838; Costello, Our Firemen, 230.

25 The bridewell is at last being demolished. The editor of the Mirror calls the building "the New York Bastile."—N. Y. Mirror, Ag 25, 1838; and descrip. of Pl. 97, III: 588. Valentine states that it "became quite a stone quarry for the builder then engaged in erecting the 'Tombs,' in Centre Street" (see Ag, supra).—Man. Com. Coun. (1855), 491. The corner-stone was found on Sept. 3 (q. v.).

On the destruction of the bridewell, the fire-alarm bell which had been on it "was placed in a cupola on the roof of Naiad Hose Co., in Beaver street." It had been in the belfry of the old provost jail during the Revolution, and when that building was converted into a hall of records (see Jl 12, 1830) it was placed on the bridewell. It was lost in the extensive fire of July 19, 1845, which destroyed the hose company's house.—Ibid. (1855), 492.

27 Richard Rush, who had been sent to England in 1836 as agent of the U. S. for the purpose, brings from London a legacy left by James Smithson of England to the United States. Amounting to over $50,000, it was in the court of chancery there, having been left by Smithson for the advancement of knowledge in this country. It was used for establishing, in 1846, the Smithsonian Institution at Washington.—Eve. Post, Ag 29, 1838; Annals of N. Am., 583, 596.

29 The corner-stone of the Rutgers Female Institute, at 262–266 Madison St. (see Ap 10), is laid, on ground given by Wm. B. Crosby who named the Institute after Col. Henry Rutgers, the former owner of the land.—N. Y. Com. Adv., Ag 30, 1838; Man. Com. Coun. (1870). The money required for the erection and furnishing of the buildings was raised by subscription.—Belden, N. Y. Past, Present & Future (1849). For its removal to Fifth Ave., see Je 18, 1860.

Sept. 3 The city inspector reports to the common council "that the corner stone of the Old Bridewell in the Park was found this day, at the southwest angle. It is a red sand or free stone, about twenty-six inches by fourteen; on it is engraved, 'Whitehead Hicks, Esq. Mayor, 1775.' He has caused it to be deposited in his office."—Proc., Bd. of Ald., XV: 234–35. This stone was later placed in the keeping of the N. Y. H. S.

7 "There are full four thousand men employed on the line of the Croton Aqueduct, which is to supply the city of New York with pure and wholesome water. About six of the sections will be completed this fall. The Commissioners will now proceed to contract for the 'Low Bridge' across the Harlem river, according to the original plan [see Ja 3]. The whole, when finished will be the most magnificent works in the United States."—Eve. Post, S 7, 1838. The opposition to the low bridge over the Harlem River was great, and the landowners in that vicinity threatened to apply to the U. S. Circuit Court to restrain any such construction in or over that river, as "should impede or obstruct the navigation thereof, and particularly from filling up the channel of the said river."—King, Memoir of the Croton Aqueduct, 160; descrip. of Pl. 137-b, III: 706. The commissioners, however, resolved to adhere to their original plan, and entered into a contract for a low or syphon bridge. For this and the opposition, see O 1.

19 The corner-stone of the new Society Library building, at the south-east corner of Broadway and Leonard St., is laid.—Keep, Hist. of the N. Y. Society Lib. (1908), 398; L. M. R. K., III: 957. The building was occupied on April 30, 1840 (q. v.). The land on which the building was erected (two lots, presented in 1836 and 1838 respectively) was confirmed to the society by act of the legislature on Feb. 14, 1843.—Laws of N. Y. (1843), chap. 16.

O 1 The water commissioners open the bids from the various iron masters in England and the United States for supplying the iron pipes for the Croton water supply. There were three offers from England and seven from the United States. The West Point Foundry Association was the lowest bidder, and the contract was awarded to them. "The Commissioners also let out upon advantageous terms the difficult and important sections from 86 to 97, part of the fourth division. These included the bridge to support the syphons across the Harlem River, the work to support the pipes across Manhattan valley, the bridge over Clendining valley, the receiving reservoir at Eighty-sixth-street, and the distributing reservoir at Murray Hill. Oct. 1

"This completed the contracts, from the dam at the Croton to the distributing reservoir, a distance of about 41 miles."—King, Memoir of the Croton Aqueduct, 160.

Landowners and others, however, protested to the legislature against the construction of a low or syphon bridge over the Harlem, and, on May 3, 1839 (q. v.), an act was passed definitely prescribing that the river be crossed by a high bridge.—Ibid., 163.

"In Broadway, in front of Dr. Brandredth's Office, an experiment is making in laying down the foot-walk on the west side of the street, with a composition formed of asphaltum and pounded stone. The asphaltum is said to be from Switzerland, and is a natural production of the earth. The pavement, so far as it is made, has a neat appearance."—Eve. Post, O 5, 1838. 5

A ferry is established, and is to be leased, from the foot of Houston St., East River, to the foot of Grand St., Williamsburgh.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, VI: 64. 18

Ten gentlemen, dining at the home of John Ward, Bond St., organize (with two others) a club, "to dine at each other's houses every Monday, at five o'clock." Philip Hone records: "The members did me the honour to name the club 'The Hone Club,' and I was appointed the President."—Hone's Diary, I: 325, 333. Its declaration of principles is found in an ode, written by Hone and set to music.—Ibid., I: 245–46. 22

Hone records the text of a circular letter issued by a committee of abolitionists. In commenting upon it he says: "This new enemy to the peace of mankind [abolition], which I fear is destined to overthrow the institutions of our country, has of late raised its head proudly in this State. . . ."—Hone's Diary, I: 326–28. 26

Nov. 6 At the state election on this and the two days following, the Whig candidates were successful. Wm. H. Seward was elected governor.—N. Y. Com. Adv., N 9, 1838. The editor of the Post charged that great frauds were practised at this election. "Besides letting out the inmates of the city prison on condition of their voting the whig ticket, arrangements were made for procuring a large number of whig voters from Philadelphia."—N. Y. Eve. Post, N 8, 1838. See also Testimony relating to the great election frauds of 1838, Taken in the Recorder's Court, New York, in October, 1840, in N. Y. P. L.; and D 20. Hone gives an account of a preliminary Whig meeting in Wall St.—Hone's Diary, I: 329.

" "The house at the corner of Wall and Hanover streets has been sold to the North American Trust and Banking Company, by Thomas E. Davis, for the enormous sum of $223,000; higher than anything which has yet been heard of. This building is somewhat notorious from its having been erected upon the site of one built by J. L. and S. Joseph, which, about the time it was completed, fell to the ground one night with a crash which shook Wall street; and its fall was the precursor of a much more tremendous crash in that celebrated street, commencing with the failure of the firm that erected it, and ending with the suspension of specie payments, and the bankruptcy of one half of the merchants and traders of New York."—Hone's Diary, I: 336.

Dec. — The common council resolves "That it be referred to the Committee on Public Offices and Repairs to inquire into and report the propriety of appropriating a suitable portion of the second story of Centre Market, now in progress of being built [see My, 1838; Ja 17, 1839] for the use of the several uniform military companies of the city." The committee reported favourably, saying: ". . . There are four rooms connected together, by openings of twelve feet, which can be closed at pleasure, and 1838 Dec. — used separately or otherwise, as may best suit their convenience. There are two separate entrances from the street, which will permit the Artillery and Infantry to occupy separate apartments, without incommoding each other. . . ." It is therefore resolved: "That the room fronting on Grand Street, in the second story of Centre Market, and the room next adjoining, be given to the officer commanding the Division of Artillery of this city [Maj.-Gen. Sandford], for the purpose of drilling and exercising the men under his command, under the following regulations, viz.: no arms, ammunition, or accoutrements shall at any time be kept in these rooms; meetings for any other purpose than those mentioned above shall not be allowed.

"Resolved, That the use of the two remaining rooms, extending up to the keeper's apartments, be given to the officers commanding the several Divisions of Infantry in this city [Maj.-Gen. Doughty, Maj.-Gen. Stryker, Maj.-Gen. Jones, and Maj.-Gen. Lloyd], for the accommodation of their several Divisions, for the purpose and under the restrictions mentioned in the preceding resolution."

A glimpse at New York's military history, at this time, is found in the following statement by De Voe, himself an active participant:

"The 'rooms' were divided up among the several Regiments composing the eight Brigades, to be used as drill-rooms, meetings, &c. The necessary arrangements were made by a Committee called the 'Drill-Room Committee,' consisting of one Colonel from each Brigade, organized as follows:

Colonel George H. Biddle, 59th Brigade.
" Thomas F. De Voe, 63d "
" William Mitchell, 45th "
" H. M. Schieffelin, 58th "
" John Ewen, 10th "
" S. Jones Mumford, 63d "
" Nicholas Carroll, 3d "
" Robert C. Morris, 64th "

"For several years the commandants of regiments ordered their officers and non-commissioned officers to drill on certain evenings . . ."—De Voe, Market Book, 475–76, 478. See also L. M. R. K., III: 958.

In 1862, the Centre Market accommodated the Sixth, Eighth, and Seventy-first Regiments.—De Voe, 478.

20 A marble tablet, about 3 ft. square, is inscribed with the words: "Erected by the Whigs & Conservatives to commemorate their glorious triumph in 1838 Wm H. Seward Govnr elect 10421 Majority New York Decr 20, 1838." See N 6. It is now preserved in the N. Y. Hist. Soc., to which society it was presented on June 4, 1907, by J. Charles Engles. This society has no record as to where the tablet was "erected."

1839

— In this year, the "Liberty Party" was formed by certain Abolitionists who believed in political action.—Winsor, VII: 288.

— In this year, at N. Y. University, Dr. John W. Draper perfected Daguerre's system of photography and became the pioneer in the art of photographing from the life. Professors Draper and Morse installed the first photograph gallery, on the roof of the university. —N. Y. Univ. Bulletin, Je 30, 1911. See 1846.

In Stokes Records, Vol. I, Pt. 2, p. 151, my father relates how his uncle, Anson G. Phelps, in 1841, on his return from abroad, where he had met Daguerre, said to his father: "Father, I saw a strange thing in Paris. There is a man there who polishes a plate of metal so that when you look at it your likeness remains on it." Mr. Phelps, Sr., replied: "My son, if you are weak enough to believe such a thing, you ought to have sense enough not to tell it." (Instead of 1841, however, it must have been a couple of years earlier, I think; as daguerreotypes were well known in New York before the end of 1839.—See N 22, 1839.)

— In this year, anti-rent troubles in New York began. They lasted several years.—Winsor, VII: 353. See also Mr 11, 1841.

— In this year, a volume of the city's Laws and Ordinances was published.

— "The city of New York, . . . at present covers about three miles. . . and has a population of three hundred thousand inhabitants. Building lots were marked out for the other seven miles; and, by calculation, these lots, when built upon, would contain an additional population of one million and three-quarters. They were first purchased at from one hundred to one hundred and fifty dollars each, but, as the epidemic raged, they rose to upwards of two thousand dollars. . . . 1839 —

"There are some fine buildings in this city, but not many. Astor House, although of simple architecture, is perhaps, the grandest mass; and next to that, is the City Hall, though in architecture very indifferent. . . .

"At the corner of many of the squares, or blocks of buildings, as they are termed here, is erected a very high mast, with a cap of liberty upon the top. . . . Broadway . . . being wide, three miles long, and the upper part composed of very handsome houses; . . . Many of the shops, or stores, as they are here called, . . . have already been fitted up with large plate-glass fronts, similar to those in London, and but for the depression which has taken place, many more would have followed the example. . . .

"The New York tradesmen do all they can, . . . to attract the notice of the public by handbills, placards, advertisements, etc. . . . Placards, etc. may be read by those who look upwards or straightforward, or to the right or to the left; but there are some people who walk with their eyes to the ground, and consequently see nothing. The New Yorkers have provided for this contingency, by having large marble tablets, like horizontal tomb-stones, let into the flag pavements of the trottoir in front of their shops, on which is engraven in duplicate, turning both ways, their names and business; so, whether you walk up or down Broadway, if you cast your eyes downwards so as not to see the placards above, you cannot help reading the inscription below."—A Diary in Am., by Capt. Marryat (Phila., 1839), I: 32, 35–37.

— "Corporal Thompson's Madison Cottage" dates from this year. "Fifth Avenue," says Hopper Striker Mott, in his New York of Yesterday, 6, "was ordered opened in 1837 . . . In 1839 . . . the Mildeberger homestead was removed to the corner where the Fifth Avenue Hotel stands [n. w. cor. 23d St.], and was used as a tavern known as Madison Cottage . . . for 13 years (1839–1852)." See 1852.

— In this year, stages left the Bowery from the corner of Bayard St. several times a day, for Bloomingdale, Yorkville, Harlem, and Manhattanville.—Disturnell, New York As It Is, 1839, p. 186.

— A comparative statement shows that, in 1837, 840 buildings were erected in N. Y. City; in 1838, 781; in 1839, 674.—From Mayor Varian's Message, My 27, 1840, p. 14.

— In this year, during the presidency of Samuel R. Brooks, the N. Y. & Harlem R. R. purchased two locomotives from Norris Bros. of Philadelphia. These were put in operation on that part of the line between 32d St. and Harlem River. After the purchase, and before the engines were delivered, a frame engine-house was erected on the north-east corner of Fourth Ave. and 32d St. where the stables of the company afterwards stood. A number of accidents occurred with these locomotives (see Jl 4).—From notes by W. S. Carman, supplied by the company.

In 1839, the cars were scheduled to leave every 20 minutes from the Bowery, opposite Prince St., for Harlem, a distance of 7 miles. The ticket offices were at 241 Bowery, and at the corner of Fourth Ave. and 86th St.—N. Y. As It Is, 1839, p. 184.

In this year, the company made over a dilapidated building at the corner of Centre St. and Tryon Row, and fitted it up as a depot and principal office. Here were the ticket-office and waiting-room.—Ibid. At some time in this year, the company removed its business office from 241 Bowery to No. 18 Wall St., on the site later occupied by part of the Mills building.—Ibid. See Je 10.

— In this year, Free School No. 1, at Tryon Row, was demolished. —See L. M. R. K., III: 940. See also Ja 31, 1837.

— In this year, the Orchard St. meeting-house of the Society of Friends (Orthodox) was built, and the meeting moved from Rose St.—John Cox, Jr.'s Cat. of Quaker Records (MS.). See 1857.

— In this year, an assessment was levied for opening Mt. Morris Square.—Index to Assessment Rolls, Vol. I (in comptroller's office). See, further, S 4; Mr 4, 1841.

Also, one for grading 42d St. from Fifth Ave. to the Bloomingdale Road; and another assessment in 1840 for grading this street between Third and Fifth Aves.—Ibid.

Jan. 1 A branch post-office is opened at the north-west corner of William St. and Exchange Place.—N. Y. As It Is, 1839, p. 166–67.

7 The common council resolves that the part of the Old Post Road that lies south of 31st St. be closed under the direction of the corporation counsel.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, VI: 98; Man. Com. Coun. (1857), 537.

10 "The taste for improvement in our city churches appears to be increasing, if we are to judge from the fact that the different congregations are rapidly introducing organs into their churches. The South Dutch Church at the corner of Murray and Church streets, has recently procured a very fine instrument, with two sets of keys, and pedals, finished in the most beautiful manner, and in perfect keeping with the building.

"Grace Church in Broadway . . . has likewise had a large new organ erected, which contains upwards of 1500 pipes, and has three sets of keys, pedals, coupling movements, combination pedals, and all the modern improvements in organ building. These instruments are from the manufactory of Mr. Henry Erben of this city." —Eve. Post, Ja 10, 1839.

12 "New publick buildings.—The workmen continue busily engaged upon the new Exchange, . . . A short distance above, in Wall-street, the new Custom-house lifts higher and higher, every day, its white marble front. . . . The foundation has been laid for the erection of the new building for our Athenaeum library in Broadway, opposite the Athenaeum Hotel. This structure is to be of brown freestone, a very appropriate and beautiful material, obtained from the quarries of our own state."—N. Y. Mirror, XVI: 231.

17 The new Centre Market (see May, 1838) is opened with a supper and a "butchers' ball," arranged by Mr. and Mrs. Niblo. One report of the event says: "It should be known that this market, after the design of Mr. [Thomas] Thomas, the architect, is the first in this country which may be deemed a complete building. Faneuil Hall, Boston, is something like it, but the London markets of the first class come nearer to it. . . ."—De Voe, Market Book, 472–74, citing the Eve. Star, Ja 8 and 18, 1839; Eve. Post, Ja 9, 12, 17, 1839. L. M. R. K., III: 958.

21 "It is said that one of the front rooms in the new building now erecting for the Bank of the United States, has been leased for $4,000 per annum.—This is a great price, and the demand for offices in Wall street is doubtless owing to the concentration of all kinds of monied business in that quarter, which renders a location there more than commonly desirable."—Eve. Post, Ja 21, 1839. The rents obtained for rooms in the merchants' exchange, in "John Warner's building" (opposite Hanover St.), and in other buildings in Wall St., are listed in a news item in ibid., Ja 26, 1839.

Feb. — In this month, a patent for vulcanized India rubber was granted to Charles Goodyear of New York.—Bishop, Hist. of Am. Manufactures, II: 418.

23 The legislature incorporates "The American Atlantic Steam Navigation Co." The incorporators include James De Peyster Ogden, Archibald Gracie, James Boorman, Moses Taylor, and other leading merchants and financiers of New York. The corporation is "for the purpose of carrying on the business of navigation and transportation on the ocean to foreign parts by steam, and of building and owning vessels for that employment."—Laws of N. Y. (1839), chap. 35.

" "The Association to promote the Fine Arts in the United States, hold a meeting this evening at the Apollo. The gallery of Paintings, which is now open, contains the works of more than a hundred of the best Artists of our country. . . . the object of the Association is to raise a fund by small annual subscriptions, for the purchase of American pictures, which at the end of the year are to become, by lot, the property of individual subscribers. It is said that nearly $3000 is already subscribed."—Eve. Post, F 23, 1839.

Mar. 6 The legislature incorporates "The New-York Museum of Natural History and Science," for the purpose of diffusing knowledge in the various branches of natural history, the arts, and in general science.—Laws of N. Y. (1839), chap. 57. See F 8, 1842.

9 Prof. S. F. B. Morse describes, in a letter to the editor of the N. Y. Observer, a visit he has recently paid to M. Daguerre, and the latter's invention or discovery of the so-called Daguerreotype. This is re-printed in the N. Y. Com. Adv., Ap 22, 1839, citing the Observer of Ap 20. Regarding this new invention, see also Eve. Post, Mr 15, Ap 22 and 25, 1839.

Mar. 9 ". . . Around Union-Place new blocks of houses, capacious and stately, are springing up with surprising celerity. At the corner of Broadway and Eighth-street, a beautiful square, extending to the Bowery, and occupying some acres of ground, is soon to be enclosed. On the East River, the wharves, from Coffee-House Slip to Corlaer's Hook are to be enlarged and improved in a manner that will much enhance the value of property in that direction. It is proposed to extend Broadway some miles beyond Union-Place. . . . Fourteenth-street will doubtless be considered the heart rather than the extremity of the town in the course of a few years. . . ."—N. Y. Mirror, XVI: 295.

11 The legislature incorporates a "State Hospital, of the city of New York," to be located in this city. Among the governors named in the act, from the large number of incorporators, are William Bard, Moses H. Grinnell, Robert B. Minturn, Moses Allen, Thomas A. Emmet, Henry Brevoort, Jr., Samuel B. Ruggles, Joseph Delafield, Francis B. Cutting, and S. S. Howland.—Laws of N. Y. (1839), chap. 7; ibid. (1840), chap. 82.

On April 25, 1840, the legislature provided for the payment to this hospital of a sum not exceeding $15,000 a year out of "hospital money collected from passengers in vessels from a foreign part, and on board coasting vessels," during a period of twenty years. The governors of the hospital, with this grant from the state, shall "promote and keep sufficient accommodations, support and medical and other necessary attendance, for at least seventy indigent patients from any part of this state."

It was also provided in the same act that the governors of this hospital shall "within two years, erect a building for their hospital, of the clear, unincumbered value of $50,000, exclusive of the ground on which it may be built." On failure to meet these conditions, "the payment from the passengers' fund shall be dis continued." The hospital itself, and its expenditures, shall be examined by the surrogate of the city and county of New York, who shall report annually thereon to the governor of the state.—Ibid. (1840), chap. 163.

On May 26, 1841, the time was extended three years from that date, in which to erect the hospital.—Ibid. (1841), chap. 277. On May 10, 1845, all previous acts relating to the proposed state hospital were repealed, and the legislature appropriated the funds in the hands of the treasurer of the hospital to the benefit of the Colored Home (see My 8, 1845).

" The city acquires by condemnation proceedings the land comprised in Manhattan Square or Park, bounded by Central Park West, 77th St. and 81st St. (see My 4, 1836).—Prendergast, Record of Real Estate (1914), 51; L. M. R. K., III: 970.

27 The theological seminary, which recently completed its building on University Place (see Ja 18, 1836; Mr, 1837), is incorporated under the title of the "Union Theological Seminary in the City of New York." Among the incorporators are Abijah Fisher, Richard T. Haines, Anson G. Phelps, etc.—Laws of N. Y. (1839), chap. 99. For the further development of this work, see Lossing, Hist. of N. Y. City, II: 449. Subsidiary buildings were acquired in Winthrop Place (Greene St.), the next parallel street to the east, and at the corner of Winthrop Place and Clinton Place (8th St.).—Am. Cat. of the Union Theological Sem. (1911–1912). See, further, 1884 and 1908.

Apr. — The last entry in the "Keeper's Book" of the Am. Acad. of the Fine Arts bears this date. It reads: "At this time efforts were being made for a spring exhibition, when a fire occurred in the library of the academy [in Barclay St.] which consumed many of the books and prints, especially the case of Piranesi; damaging the paintings, &c. . . . no measures were taken to revive the energies of the Academy. Artists still continued to study in the Sculpture gallery, . . . the property . . . [was] returned to the Donors. The remaining effects, together with the portrait of West was sold to pay debts ($2,400.00). The portrait went to the Wadsworth Atheneum, Hartford, Ct."—From the original MS. vol., owned by the N. Y. Hist. Soc. The Piranesi prints had been presented by Napoleon Bonaparte.—Howe, Hist. of the Metropolitan Museum of Art (1913), 34. Cf. Mr 23, 1837. See, further, Ap 10, 1841.

— In this month, it was found necessary to move the curb-stone on the east side of Centre St. six feet into the sidewalk, on account of the tracks of the Harlem R. R. which were recently laid along this street. In spite of this large reduction in the width of the walk, there still remained twelve feet for the sidewalk along Centre Market.—De Voe, Market Book, 476–77, citing the proceedings of 1839 Ap— the common council. For location of the market, see May, 1838; L. M. R. K., III: 958.

7 When a passenger's hat blew off, while he was riding on the cars of the N. Y. & Harlem R. R., going 20 miles an hour, he walked down the steps, jumped off the cars to the tracks, and was killed.—N. Y. American, Ap 9, 1839, citing the Express.

9 In the election held on this day and the two following days, Isaac L. Varian, Democrat, was elected mayor by a majority of 1,067 over Aaron Clark, Whig. The Democrats also obtained a majority in the common council.—Eve. Post, Ap 9–12, 17, 1839. See My 14.

15 The legislature incorporates "The New-York and Staten Island Ferry Co.," defining its powers and duties in the act.—Laws of N. Y. (1839), chap. 182.

18 The legislature, in an act "to extend the benefits of instruction to the blind," appropriates $15,000 for the use of the N. Y. Institution for the Blind, contingent upon the institution's raising $10,000. These sums are to be used to pay for the labour and materials necessary to complete the building, according to a design already adopted by the managers; to remove the old wooden building now on the premises, and to regulate the grounds.—Laws of N. Y. (1839), chap. 200.

This enabled the institution to erect a three-storey Gothic edifice of stone on the east side of Ninth Ave. between 33d and 34th Sts. The grounds, 800 by 200 ft., extended east to Eighth Ave. The main building, 117 by 60 ft., had two wings, each 130 by 29 ft., the total length of the front including the wings being 175 ft.—Tenth Ann. Rep. of the Institution, 14–26; Belden, N. Y. Past, Present & Future, 96. This building still stands and was occupied by the institution until 1923.

27 The legislature incorporates "The Grange Cemetery Association." It is authorised to acquire and hold land in the Twelfth Ward between 139th and 145th Sts., Tenth Ave. and Kingsbridge Road, not exceeding 40 acres; and to use it for burials. It is a stock company, among whose incorporators are Robert Dickey, Isaac G. Pearson, Alfred Pell, Robert B. Minturn, Mortimer Livingston, and their associates.—Laws of N. Y. (1839), chap. 261.

" Rutgers Female Institution in Madison St., near Clinton, was to be opened on this day.—Eve. Post, Ap 26, 1839. By May 15, it had 300 pupils.—Ibid., My 15, 1839. See also L. M. R. K., III: 941.

29 The legislature incorporates "The Electro Magnetic Company," in the city of New York, "for the purpose of causing experiments to be made in electro magnetism, magnetism and galvanism, with a view to the development of said sciences, as a motive power for machinery or other useful purposes; also of manufacturing the necessary machinery and apparatus therefor, and of building and constructing boats, vessels, rail-road cars, and engines to be moved by electro magnetism, magnetism and galvanism." The value of the company's real estate must not exceed $50,000; but the capital stock shall be $500,000.—Laws of N. Y. (1839), chap. 267.

" John Quincy Adams, the venerable ex-president, arrives from Washington to be the guest of the N. Y. Hist. Soc. for patriotic exercises to-morrow. In the evening he met the members of the society at their rooms in the Stuyvesant Institute, after which Mr. Stuyvesant, the president of the society, entertained the company at his home.—Jubilee of the Constitution (1839). See Ap 30.

30 A "Jubilee of the Constitution" is held, on the fiftieth anniversary of the inauguration of Washington as president. A reception is held at the City Hotel. Many veterans of the Revolution are present. At noon the company formed in procession and moved to the Middle Dutch Church. Here, the chair used by Washington at his inauguration was placed on the platform for the use of Mr. Adams (see Ap 29), the orator of the day. Philip Hone sat beside him. The oration, by ex.-Pres. Adams, occupied two hours. At six o'clock, the company reassembled at the City Hotel for a formal dinner, with toasts.—Jubilee of the Constitution (1839); Hone's Diary, I: 355–59; Kelby, The N. Y. Hist. Soc., 1804–1904, 42–43; Eve. Post, My 1, 1839.

May — The name of "the new street east of and adjoining Centre Market" (Orange St.), and between Grand and Broome Sts., is changed to Centre Market Place.—L. M. R. K., III: 995; De Voe, Market Book, 477.

1 Hone describes the "awful" condition of the lower part of the city, due to the pulling down of houses and stores. In Wall St., the "huge blocks of granite" of the exchange occupy the highway, and "the beautiful new Bank of the United States opposite, still obstructs the walk;" there are four banks in process of destruction,—the City, Manhattan, Merchants', and Union. On the corner of Broadway and Chambers St. (probably the northwest corner), "a row of low buildings has been removed to make way for one of those mighty edifices called hotels,—eating, drinking, and lodging above and gay shops below; and so all the way up; the spirit of pulling down and building up is abroad. The whole of New York is rebuilt about once in ten years."—Hone's Diary, I: 359–60. May 1

The legislature passes an act appropriating $4,000 (increased to over $13,000 by later acts) to defray the expenses of an agent, to be appointed by the governor, to visit England, Holland, and France, "for the purpose of procuring, if possible, the originals, and, if not, copies, of all such documents and papers, in the archives and offices of those governments relating to or in any way affecting the Colonial or other history of this State, as he may deem important to illustrate that history." Such documents, when procured, are to be "deposited in the office of the Secretary of this State, subject to the use of the State Historical Society."—Laws of N. Y. (1839), chap. 315. Not until two years later, on Jan. 15, 1841, was the agent appointed. This was John Romeyn Brodhead. He received Gov. Seward's instruction (see "General Introduction" to N. Y. Col. Docs., I: xviii–xix) on March 27, and departed for Europe on May 1, 1841. He presented his final report to Gov. Wright on Feb. 15, 1845. This was printed in full in ibid., I: xxii–xxxvi, together with the report of a committee of the senate (May 5, 1845) to whom it was referred (ibid., I: xxxvi–xli). The documents were not printed until 1853 and later, in accordance with acts of the legislature of March 30, 1849, and April 12, 1856.—See 1849. 2

" The Church of the Messiah (Unitarian), on Broadway, opposite Waverly Place, is completed, and dedicated.—Eve. Post, Ap 30 and My 2, 1839. For description of it, see Picture of N. Y. in 1846, 134. For wood-cut view of it, see The Citizen and Strangers' Pictorial and Business Directory (1853), 124. It was built by the congregation which had worshipped in the church at the corner of Prince and Mercer Sts., which burned Nov. 26, 1837 (q.v.).—Hone's Diary, I: 360–362; Haswell, Reminiscences, 208; Greenleaf, Hist. of the Churches, 376. The church was sold in 1865, and converted by A. T. Stewart into a theatre.—Haswell, 208, 212. See also Man. Com. Coun. (1865), 635; L. M. R. K., III: 937.

The legislature prescribes "the manner in which the Croton aqueduct shall pass the Harlem river." The act in full is as follows: "The water commissioners of the city of New-York, shall construct an aqueduct over the Harlem river, with arches and piers, the arches in the channel of said river shall be at least eighty feet span, and not less than an hundred feet from the usual high water mark of the river to the under side of the arches at the crown: or they may carry the water across said river by a tunnel under the channel of the river, the top of which tunnel shall not be above the present bed of the said channel."—Laws of N. Y. (1839), chap. 318; descrip. of Pl. 137-b, III: 706. The water commissioners, having made a contract for a low bridge over the Harlem (see O 1, 1838), were therefore compelled to vacate the contract, which they did on May 6. They also directed the chief engineer to examine and report upon the two modes of passing the Harlem prescribed by the legislature.—King, Memoir of the Croton Aqueduct, 163. The report was made on June 1 (q.v.). 3

At this time, Pearl St., from Chatham to Vandewater St., was the principal "quartier" of the milliners. Division St., between Chatham Square and Market St.; William, in the vicinity of Fulton St.; and sections of Greenwich, Hudson, and Bleecker Sts., and part of The Bowery, were also occupied by them.—N. Y. Mirror, XVI: 357. 4

The legislature incorporates the "Ocean Steam-Packet Co."—Laws of N. Y. (1839), chap. 348. 6

" The rebuilt Bowery Theatre (see F 18, 1838) is opened.—Haswell's Reminiscences, 341; Brown, I: 115; L. M. R. K., III: 982. See also Eve. Post, Ja 10, 1839.

The legislature passes an act to provide for the translation of Liber "GG" of patents, in the secretary of state's office.—Laws of N. Y. (1839), chap. 366. The translator chosen was Rev. C. D. Westbrook (see also Ag 2, 1837). He was paid $787.90 for the work. A translation of Liber HH (1652–1664), made by Jas. Van Ingen, had been deposited in the secretary's office in two parts in 1822 and 1826 respectively.—Van Laer, The Translation and 7

" The affairs of the "University of the City of New York" are the subject of senate investigation.—Laws of N. Y. (1839), chap. 390 (p. 368).

8 The common council passes an ordinance for the appointment of a superintendent of building. His duty shall be "personally to examine and oversee all public building or works under his charge, during the progress of erecting, altering, or repairing the same." The ordinance was amended on May 14, the official being then named the superintendent of buildings. He is to advertise for estimates, but "shall not perform any work or job, the cost of which shall exceed the sum of fifteen dollars, without a written order from the committee on public offices and repairs." —By-Laws and Ordinances . . . of the City of N. Y. (1839), 50, 52.

9 The common council passes an ordinance creating the street commissioner's department. This commissioner must be one of the city surveyors. He shall have charge of street and road improvements, such as regulating and paving. Wells, pumps, canals, sewers, wharves, and piers are all in his province. He shall also attend to surveying lots about to be built upon, and prevent encroachments on the streets. He shall cause the sewers to be cleaned, for which purpose he shall have the assistance of the prisoners of the almshouse.—By-Laws and Ordinances . . . of the City of N. Y. (1839), 35.

" The Collegiate Dutch Church on Lafayette Pl., at the corner of 4th St., near Broadway, is dedicated. Of the three Dutch churches, the "North Dutch Church" was the farthest south at this time. The one farthest north was the "Ninth Street Church" and this one on 4th St., after 1854, inherited the name of the "Middle Dutch Church." It was of Grecian architecture. For fuller description, see Picture of N. Y. in 1846, 131.

In 1855, there was placed in it the bell of 1731 (see Ag 8, 1728), which had hung in the Middle Dutch Church in Nassau St. It now hangs in the tower of the Reformed Church at the corner of Fifth Ave. and 48th St.—Greenleaf, Hist. of the Churches of N. Y., 17; Mag. of Am. Hist., XVI: 3–4; Corwin's Manual (1902), 997.

10 ". . . 'In Wall street besides the Custom House and the Exchange, two immense and most costly structures which are in progress—the banking houses heretofore occupied by the Union, the Manhattan the Merchants', and the City Bank, together with the intermediate house between the National and Manhattan Banks, are already nearly levelled with the ground since the 1st of May.'

"The above we copy from the American of last evening. It may be added that on the North-east corner of Broadway and Maiden Lane, the old buildings are down, and an elegant establishment is to be immediately put up by James McBride, Esq. five stories high, with an attic—to be occupied as stores below, and above by Mr. Howard, the well known hotel-keeper, now of Broad street. [For view of the "Howard Hotel," see A. Pl. 25-a, Vol. III.] A little farther up Broadway, near Park Place, that once elegant private establishment, built by the late Mr. Mumford, and since for many years occupied by Philip Hone, Esq. [see Pl. 100, Vol. III, where the house is shown by Hone's name in the lower margin] is to come down—how to be replaced we have not learned. Still farther up, on the corner of Chambers street and Broadway, a number of small buildings have been pulled down, and a large and elegant granite building is to be erected, one hundred feet on Broadway, and the same on Chambers street. . . . The lower part is to be fitted up for stores, and the upper to be large rooms for public purposes, somewhat after the manner of the Stuyvesant Institute."—N. Y. Com. Adv., My 10, 1839.

11 "New buildings.—Niblo's Opera House is completed, and will be opened in the course of a few days. The new Bowery theatre [see My 6] is quite a stately edifice, and reflects credit alike upon . . . the architects, and . . . Hamblin, under whose sole management it is conducted. The foundation of the new Chatham Theatre is laid, and the building, it is said, will be ready for the reception of the publick by the fourth of next July. . . . Thirty dwelling-houses, between our office [No. 1 Barclay St., next to the Broadway corner] and Canal-street, have been converted into spacious stores since the first instant. The number of contracts for new houses exceeds that of any former year. . . . It is not the fashion here to live in the house of one s forefathers. Every succeeding generation improves upon the primitive habits of the past, and we are becoming so over-run with strangers from every quarter of the globe, that we begin to apprehend that the time is not distant, when a New-Yorker will be a stranger in New-York. . . ."—N. Y. Mirror, XVI: 367. May 11

Isaac L. Varian is inaugurated as mayor, having been elected in April (q.v., 9). He succeeds Aaron Clark (see Ap 11 and My 9, 1837).—Eve. Post, My 15, 1839; Hone's Diary, I: 361. Varian's successor was Robt. H. Morris.—See Ap 13, 1841. 14

The centre building, and the wing nearest the Bloomingdale Road, of the old house of refuge (see Ja 1, D 25, 1825; 1838) are totally destroyed by fire. 21

"In consideration of the removal [see 1838], and the relinquishment of the buildings now partially destroyed, the Corporation gave the Board of Managers the building on the East river known as 'the fever hospital,' built in 1824 [q.v.]. Another spacious edifice has been erected on the premises [on East River] which we believe is nearly completed."—Com. Adv., My 22; Morn. Cour., My 22, 1839. "An experimental steamboat, built to run on the Delaware and Raritan Canal, has just arrived in this port from London, after a passage of forty-five days. The name of the vessel is the Robert L. Stockton, an iron schooner, fitted with Captain Ericson's patent engine. . . . She came out under canvass, without the aid of steam. . . . 28

"The Stockton is, we believe, the first vessel of this kind, ever seen in America. She is built entirely of iron, the pieces being rivetted together; is rated fifteen tons, and is seventy one feet long, while her breadth at midships is only ten feet. . . . The steam engine is placed at the stern."—Eve. Post, My 28, 1839.

John B. Jervis, chief engineer, reports to the water commissioners in favour of crossing the Harlem by means of a high bridge rather than a tunnel under the channel of the river. The commissioners agreed with him and immediately solicited proposals for building the bridge.—King, Memoir of the Croton Aqueduct, 163–72. See Ag. June 1

"At the termination of the Harlem railroad, on the edge of Harlem River, a neat, spacious, and very commodious building has been erected which is now taken by Mr. Nowland, late of Prospect Hall, who has furnished it in a most elegant manner." It is called Nowlan's Pavilion.—Eve. Post, Je 1, 1839. "

". . . the Directors of the Harlem Railroad have ordered a line of cars to be run between the City Hall and Fifteenth street, to start from the post office at the park every 10 minutes, from 7 o'clock in the morning until 8 o'clock in the evening; and from Union Square every 10 minutes, . . . 10

"This line of cars commenced running on Monday last [June 10]. . . . the charge for the whole distance from the Park at the City Hall to the Park at Union place is fixed at 6 cents only."—N. Y. American, Je 15, 1839. See, further, O 7.

July 2 President Van Buren visits New York and is given an enthusiastic welcome. He was received at Castle Garden by the common council and "an immense concorse of citizens," and then, mounted on horseback, reviewed 6,000 troops on the Battery, after which there was a procession up Broadway to the Park. The line of march was crowded with people.—Eve. Post, Jl 3, 1839; Hone's Diary, I: 365.

4 An explosion in the locomotive of the Harlem Railroad near Union Square kills five people and injures about 16. "The limit by the Corporation for the locomotive to come into the city, is at 14th street. It is only on the gala day of the Fourth of July, that the engine comes below 32d street, the horses of the Company on that day being insufficient to accommodate the public, and it was solely to grant the greatest facility to the public, that the locomotive was brought to 15th street."—Eve. Post, Jl 5, 1839.

" A thin pamphlet bearing this date is published in New York entitled Review. The Tomb of the Martyrs, adjoining the U. S. Navy Yard, Brooklyn City, in Jackson-street, who died in dungeons and pestilential prison-ships, in and about the city of New York, during the seven years of our Revolutionary War. By Benjamin Romaine, an old native citizen of New-York. It contains a lithograph frontispiece showing the tomb. From the text of the pamphlet it appears that Romaine solicited of the "Governors and Legislatures of the Old Thirteen States" the "Busts, or other insignia, of the most distinguished deceased Military men and Civilians of the Revolution," to be placed in "the Antechamber to the Tomb." See, further, 1842; F 25, 1845. Regarding the number of martyrs who thus died, see Ap 25, 1783; see also 1781, 1782, 1808.

6 The following announcement marks the beginning of the express business in this country (cf., however, Ja 20, 1790):

"Express Package Car.—Arrangements have been made for carrying packages between New-York and Boston by a special conveyance. W. F. Harnden, to whose advertisement in this paper the reader is referred, has undertaken the transmission and delivery of specie, packages of goods, small bundles, &c., which will go with the mail and early the next day after they are sent will be delivered at any part of the city to which they are destined. This is effected by means of an arrangement made with the New York and Boston Transportation Company and the Stonington and Providence Rail Road Company. For the purpose of carrying this plan into effect Mr. Harnden will run an express on the rail road. The convenience of this arrangement is very obvious, and the project, no doubt, will be encouraged by the community."—Eve. Post, Jl 6, 1839.

Harnden was a Boston man.—See the Boston Directory, 1839, which also contains his advertisement. He had the co-operation, in New York, of James W. Hale, who was employed by Robert E. Hudson at Hudson's news-room, in the old Tontine Building at the corner of Wall and Water Sts., and who was also agent for the Providence boat, the "John W. Richmond." Harnden first carried a valise to contain the packages.—Stimson, Hist. of Express Companies; Lossing, Hist. of N. Y. City, I: 378–80.

"It was here [in the Tontine Coffee House], in 1837 [error for 1839], that Mr. J. W. Hale originated the package and letter express business, and started William F. Harnden for Boston, three times a week, with his little carpet-bag seldom more than half full. His only advertisement was a slate hung up in the News-room, and in a stationer's office at the corner of Nassau and Wall Streets. The first customers of the express were the visitors to Hale's News-rooms.

"As there were no lines of mail steamers then running, foreign correspondence was always sent by packet-ships and other sailing vessels, the letter-bags for which were kept at Hale's, as were also those of the steamers Sirius and Great Western, after they commenced running to New York."—Stone, Hist. of N. Y. City (1872), 325, citing Jour. of Com., Jl 25, 1871. Regarding the affairs of the Tontine Coffee House, see, further, Ap 30, 1840.

"The 'Sirius' ran afterwards on the line of steam-packets between Dublin and Cork, and ran on the rocks of Bally Cotton January 16, 1847, and was wrecked, when twenty lives were lost." The "Great Western" made 74 trans-Atlantic voyages before passing into the hands of the West India Co.—Preble, A Chron. Hist. of the Origin and Development of Steam Navigation (1883), 163, 165.

9 President Van Buren leaves New York City "for the north." Post*, Jl 9, 1839. See also ibid., Jl 10, 1839. July 9

". . . We perceive that Trinity Church is now in the hands of the spoilers. . . . The roof is utterly demolished, and only the walls are standing. We have heard it suggested that while the vestry were about it they might as well have taken down the walls too, and set about building a new church altogether."—N. Y. Com. Adv., July 19, 1839. "The frequent changes which take place in the numbering of streets are a great inconvenience.—They are often made without notice to the occupier of a dwelling, the plate containing the number over his door is changed without his knowing it, so that he who goes to bed at No. 50 in his street, may wake up the next morning at No. 100 . . . these proceedings are very inconvenient to householders. They occasion confusion and mistakes in the delivery of letters and packages, and perplex strangers who are looking for the residences of their acquaintances in town."—Eve. Post, Jl 19, 1839. "

The "British Queen," the first steamboat built for transoceanic service, arrives at New York from Portsmouth. In this month, the high bridge over the Harlem River was contracted for, at $737,755, to be completed in Aug., 1843.—King, Memoir of the Croton Aqueduct, 175; Man. Com. Coun. (1854), 221. The building of the bridge proceeded slowly, and while temporary arrangements were made for conducting the Croton water to the New York shore in 1842, by means of pipes along the dam, the bridge itself was not completed until 1848. "The joint Committee on the repairs of Trinity Church" (see Jl 19) makes a report to the vestry on "the Condition of the tower and Spire of that building, accompanied by written Statements from several Master builders," who have been called to survey and examine them, "concurring in the opinion that the present tower and Spire are defective and insecure." It was resolved "that the joint Committee be authorized to cause the whole of the old Edifice to be taken down, and a new one to be erected in its place;" also "that the Committee be directed to procure a plan of the new Church Edifice, with Estimates of the Cost, to be submitted to the vestry at its next Meeting and then passed on."—Trin. Min. (MS.). See also descrip. of Pl. 120, III: 625, and Pl. 122, III: 629. See, further, S 9. 5

On Aug. 8, the following news report was published: "Trinity Church. It has been ascertained that this venerable edifice, which has been undergoing repairs for some time past—or rather which the builders were preparing to repair—must be razed to the ground. Last year, it may be recollected, some apprehensions existed as to the safety of the roof, and it was the purpose of the corporation to build a new roof the present season, with which design the workmen have been several weeks employed upon the building. In the course of their labors it has been ascertained that the walls are out of plumb, and are in some places cracked from the cornice to the base. Even after this the tower was supposed to be firm; but an examination has shown that it also is unsound. Indeed the whole structure seems to have been miserably built. The mortar has not its due proportion of sand, and has never formed a cement—crumbling now at the touch. The result is, that the building must come down, and a new edifice be reared in its stead.

1839 . . . The present building was erected, we believe, about the
Aug. year 1789—fifty years ago [see 1788–90] . . .

5 "The church will of course be built on its present site. . . . Since the prohibition of interments in the church-yard, in 1823, the whole space has been thickly planted with trees, which are in full and vigorous growth, girded with a hedge of privet, planted, we believe, by the late James M' Farlan . . .

"We may be permitted, perhaps, to express a hope that the vestry, in their plans for the restoration of the edifice, will not forget, . . . the restoration of that pleasing chime of bells, which in former years constituted one of the most delightful peculiarities of old Trinity. . . ."—N. Y. Com. Adv., Ag 8, 1839. See also Eve. Post, Ag 12, 1839.

17 "The columns destined for the new Exchange building in Wall street, taken from the quarries of Quincy, (Mass.,) are said to be nearly completed. They are the largest that have been obtained from the quarries, each pillar weighing about thirty three tons, and costing, exclusive of transportation, four thousand dollars each. The columns are fluted with beautifully carved capitals, and altogether resemble the best specimens of marble."—Eve. Post, Ag 17, 1839.

22 By a codicil to his will, John Jacob Astor appropriates $400,000 for the endowment of the Astor Library, $75,000 of which is to be expended for the building, and $120,000 for books, etc.; the residue to be invested as a fund for the gradual increase of the library. For a contemporary account of the initial steps in this development, see Gleason's Pictorial, III: 200 (S 25). See also Lydenberg's Hist. of the N. Y. Pub. Library; and Jl 28, 1838.

Sept. In spite of some remonstrance, on May 23, this year, a report was 4 presented to the common council, and confirmed, whereby the city acquired 20.173 acres of the old "Race Course Farm" at Harlem for a public square, as provided for by the law of May 10, 1836 (q.v.).—Prendergast, Record of Real Estate Owned by the City (1914), 51; Proc., App'd by Mayor, VII: 6. See, further, Mr 4, 1841.

This place had already been named Mount Morris.—See the Colton Map of 1836. From this it became known in the city records as Mount Morris Square. For the possible origin of the name, see the 20th Ann. Rep., the Am. Scenic & Hist. Pres. Soc. (1915), 200. See also L. M. R. K., III: 971.

9 "The joint Committee [of Trinity vestry] on the repairs of Trinity Church [see Ag 5] herewith submit to the Vestry, in Conformity with its directions, plans and drawings of a new Church Edifice, . . . An Estimate of the Cost has been made by the Architect [Richard Upjohn], . . . the building, with a Spire of Wood, will cost somewhat less than $85,000, and with a Spire of Stone, an additional Sum not exceeding five thousand dollars.

"The tower & spire of the proposed Edifice exceed by fifty feet in height, those of the old church. The width is the same and the interior length of the body of the church greater by fifteen feet.

"The Architect is of Opinion that the length of the new church could be further increased, to the Extent of one or two Intercolumniations, without an Expence much exceeding the above mentioned Estimate, and thereby, whilst improving the appearance of the building, afford great additional accommodations for Strangers . . ."

The vestry thereupon passes the following resolutions: "that the Spire of the new Church Edifice, and the Columns to support the Galleries and clear Story, be constructed of Stone;" "that the joint Committee be directed to proceed in the Construction of the new Church Edifice in conformity with the forgoing resolutions and with the plan & drawings now exhibited, and that the Committee be instructed to enquire and report as to the kind of Stone most suitable for the Exterior of the building;" and "that the joint Committee be authorized in their discretion, to encrease the length of the building according to the Suggestion of the Architect."—*Trin. an unobstructed view of the bright blue western sky."—Hone's Diary, I: 380.

"The front of the new building in Broadway near Leonard 18 street, erected to contain the New York Library will do no honor to the architectural taste of this city. The row of red sandstone columns which stand close to the wall and support nothing, are useless as members of the building, and preposterous as ornaments. Columns should never be employed but to support a roof, their original purpose. . . ."—Eve. Post, S 18, 1839. See also ibid., S 23, 1839.

A writer asks why the "rich corporation of old Trinity" should 19

A fire which starts in the National Theatre (formerly the 23
Italian Opera House—see Ag 29, 1836), at the corner of Leonard and Church Sts., completely destroys the theatre, as well as Zion African M. E. Church on the south-west corner, the Eglise du St. Esprit at Church and Franklin Sts., the new Dutch Reformed Church in Franklin St. between Chapel and Church Sts., and several other buildings.—Eve. Post, S 24, 1839; Buckingham, The Eastern and Western States of Am. (1842), I: 7–9; Upcott Coll., VI: 435; Costello, Our Firemen, 231. See also L. M. R. K., III: 930, 932, 984. After the burning of the National Theatre, Wallack (see S 4, 1837) took refuge at Niblo's, with a stock company, including several "stars,"—Vandenhoff, Chas. Kean, Forrest, and "the best opera corps in the country;" but did not succeed there. His theatre there closed during the week of Nov. 22, 1839.—Hone's Diary, I: 388.

A new house of worship for the African Methodists was erected on the same site in 1840.—Greenleaf, 322. The successor of this congregation is now at 127 W. 89th St.—L. M. R. K., III: 930. See 1892.

The centenary of Methodism is celebrated in the John St. 24
Church. It is to be observed in turn in each of the Methodist Episcopal churches in the city.—Eve. Post, S 25, 1839. See also ibid., O 4, 1839.

"The nuisance of smoking in the streets has much increased 25 lately. The atmosphere of some parts of Broadway, of a fine evening, is almost as narcotic and sickening with tobacco smoke as the air of the traveller's room in a High Dutch tavern. Little boys make a parade of themselves on the side-walks smoking long nines almost as tall as themselves. . . . No doubt many of those persons who indulge in their favorite habit in the public streets, do it thoughtlessly without thinking how offensive it is to others, and would be surprised at hearing that they are guilty of a blackguard practice."—Eve. Post, S 25, 1839.

"The joint committee [of Trinity vestry] on the rebuilding of 30
Trinity Church [see Ag 5, S 9] Respectfully report, to the Vestry, that they deem it expedient to increase the width of the aisles on the ground floor of the new Church, beyond those of the old one, the middle aisle of which was six feet and two inches wide, and the side aisles one foot narrower. If, as is generally supposed, these dimensions were too narrow, the defect will be more important in the new building, both as to convenience, and architectural taste and proportions, by reason of the partial projection of the columns into the aisles, and the consequent obstruction to the congregation in retiring from the church, and of the increased length of the interior of the building, and the greater disproportion thereby produced, between the length and breadth of the aisles; To obviate this defect, the Committee recommend that six feet be added to the breadth of the building; . . .

"It is also deemed expedient that the new Edifice, should be so placed, as to bring the middle of the tower in a line corresponding 1839 Sept. 30 with the middle of Wall Street, according to its general course between William Street and Broad Way; so as from that position, to command a full view of the tower. To effect this, the North wall of the new building, (if its breadth be increased as proposed) must be removed fourteen feet, and the South Wall eight feet further north than the walls of the present building. A Majority of the Committee and the Architect unite in opinion as to the propriety of this change of position, which is accordingly recommended to the adoption of the Vestry. The conclusion of the contract for the foundation, awaits the decision of the Vestry on these questions, . . ."

The vestry resolves "that the breadth of the new Edifice be encreased six feet beyond that of the old one;" "that the new Edifice be placed as far South as may be practicable without disturbing the range of vaults along the South wall of the old building;" and "that the owners of vaults thro' which the foundation walls of the new Edifice may pass, and also of those which may be enclosed within the walk, and to which access will be thereby prevented be entitled to new vaults, at the Expence of this Corporation, so far as they may respectively require the same."—Trin. Min. (MS.). See, further, N 11.

" "Mr. Audubon, the ornothologist [sic], has brought to this city the original drawings from which the illustrations of his sumptuous work, entitled the Birds of America, were engraved. 7 The Harlem R. R. celebrates the completion of a double track from the city hall to the Harlem River. Some of the original petitions and remonstrances during the building of the road are filed with "Franchises, 1831–1840," in a metal file so labelled in city clerk's record-room.

31 Philip Hone writes: "I went, by invitation of Mr. Grinnell, this morning, and partook of a collation on board the splendid new ship 'Patrick Henry,' intended for Grinnell and Minturn's line of packets. She is the ne plus ultra, or will be until another ship of her class shall be built."—Hone's Diary, I: 385–86.

Nov. 11 "The joint Committee on the rebuilding of Trinity Church [see S 30] . . . recommending brown Sand Stone as the Material to be used in the Construction of the new Edifice. . . . [this] was approved & adopted."—Trin. Min. (MS.).

22 Hone describes, in his diary, Gouraud's exhibition of Daguerreotypes, consisting of views of Paris and objects of still life, and the process of their production. He closes with this remarkable prophesy: "It appears to me not less wonderful that light should be made an active operating power in this manner, than that some such effect should be produced by sound; and who knows whether, in this age of invention and discoveries, we may not be called upon to marvel at the exhibition of a tree, a horse, or a ship produced by the human voice muttering over a metal plate, prepared in the same or some other manner, the words 'tree,' 'horse,' and 'ship.' How greatly ashamed of their ignorance the by-gone generations of mankind ought to be "—Hone's Diary, I: 391–92. See also D 10.

9 Wm. Mitchell leases the Olympic Theatre (see S 13, 1837) and opens it as a low-priced house for amusing entertainments. It was henceforth called Mitchell's Olympic. "The house became the fashion, and a steady prosperity followed it for ten years."—Haswell's Reminiscences, 345; Brown, Hist. of the N. Y. Stage, I: 265; King's Handbook (1893), 582.

Dec. 10 "In removing the foundation of the tower of Trinity Church a vaulted grave was opened, which contained the coffin and bones of Lady Cornbury, wife of the Governor of the colony, who died in this city in the year 1706, and was buried under the original church, which was burned in the time of the Revolutionary War. A large plate and fragments of the coffin were found, . . .; the former is perfectly legible and nearly uninjured by its inhumation of one hundred and thirty [133] years. The arms of this noble lady, who was sister to the Earl of Richmond and a Viscountess in her own right, are engraved on the plate, with her pedigree, age, the time of her death, etc., distinctly, but very rudely, written below. She died at the age of thirty-four. . . .

". . . I proposed last evening in the vestry that these relics should be presented to the Historical Society, but it was not granted. They determined to have a new tomb provided, in which they are to be re-interred."—Hone's Diary, I: 394–95.

Commenting on the discovery of these relics, Watson says: "A record of burials at this church is preserved from the year 1702 (with the omission of the time of the revolution) making 160,000 bodies, thus making as many bodies below ground as now (in 1840) dwell alive above ground in New York."—Watson's Annals, 202.

" "The beautiful representations of external nature produced by the Daguerreotype, are now publicly exhibited at No. 57 Broadway. To the specimens brought over from Paris, some New York views have been added since the arrival of Mr. Gourraud, in this country, which will augment the interest of the collection."—Eve. Post, D 10, 1839. Gourraud was a friend and pupil of Daguerre. He came to New York "on his way to Havana, to execute a commission connected with the new art."—Ibid., D 4, 1839. 31 A report of the city inspectors to the common council shows the number of new buildings erected in New York yearly during the last six years to be as follows: In 1834, 887; 1835, 1,259; 1836, 1,826; 1837, 840; 1838, 781; 1839, 674.—N. Y. Com. Adv., My 1, 1840.

— In this year, David Livingstone, a Scotch missionary and traveller, began his African career and continued it until his death in 1873. He traced the course of the Zambesi River, of the upper Congo, and the region around Lakes Tanganyika and Nyassa and crossed the continent from sea to sea in higher latitudes than any before him.—Hazen, Europe since 1815, 552.

— In this year, the Adams Express Co., operating between Boston and New York, via Springfield, was founded.—Savage, Boston Events, 52; Encyclop. Brit., X: 84.

— Early in this year, Prof. John W. Draper, M. D., LL. D., of the University of the City of New York, made a daguerreotype portrait of his sister, Miss Dorothy Catherine Draper,—the first sunlight portrait of the human face ever made. For a reproduction of an artotype copy of this portrait, the original of which, in 1901, was the property of Sir William John Herschel of England, see Chamberlain's N. Y. University (Boston, 1901), I: 140; and the "Draper Centennial Number" of The Colonnade, Je, 1911, containing, among other articles, "The Contribution of John W. Draper to Photography," by Arthur B. Lamb, Ph.D. Mr. Lamb states (pp. 9–10): "It happened that Professor Morse, then professor of Fine Arts at our University, was in Europe during the summer of 1839, when Daguerre's discovery was announced. Morse familiarized himself with the process and brought home full details to Professor Draper. Daguerre had not succeeded in taking portraits of persons. . . ." The writer explains how Draper reduced the long exposure to strong light, previously necessary, to only 30 seconds, which permitted a sitter to endure the discomforts. See also Draper's own paper "On the process of daguerreotype and its application to taking portraits from the life," in Phil. Mag. (1840), XVI: 535 (June); XVII: 217 (Sept.), cited in Geo. F. Barker's Memoir of John William Draper.

— Early in this year, the N. Y. & Harlem R. R. purchased the controlling interest in the N. Y. & Albany R. R. Co., which had been organized eight years before to build a line to Albany, but 1840 which had not begun its construction.—From notes supplied by the — secretary's office. See Ap 1.

— In this year, American Scenery, by N. P. Willis, containing quarto illustrations by W. H. Bartlett, some of which are of places in and around New York, was published in London. The best known of the New York views are "The Park and City Hall" (1839), and "The Ferry at Brooklyn."

— In this year, the population of Manhattan Island was 312,710.—13th U. S. Census Bulletin (1910).

— "From 1836 to 1842, the N. Y. Stock and Exchange Board, occupied the second floor of one of the Jauncey buildings on the site of the present [1894] 43 Wall Street. . . . These buildings were removed in 1849, and Jauncey Court was constructed upon the site.

"A 'Description of New York in 1800,' written in 1840, contains the following:

"'Mr Jauncey, an English gentleman who lived in great style, occupied the building now rented by Messrs. Dykers & Alstyne; his stable was the same building now [1840] used by the Board of Brokers. The very room in which millions of stock are sold every week was then a hay loft.'"—Eames, The N. Y. Stock Exchange, 31.

— At this time, "Tattersall's" (a place for the sale of horses and carriages) stood on the east side of Broadway between Howard and Grand Sts. For an outline of the history of this property since 1812, with view, see Man. Com. Coun. (1865), 628, 635. See also the Horner view of Broadway (1836), Pl. 113, Vol. III.

The Central Log Cabin, at 562 Broadway; the New Jerusalem Chapel, at 563 Broadway; and the completion of Stuyvesant Institute (see 1834; S 1, 1837), at 659 Broadway, all date from this year.—Ibid., 635–36.

— In this year, the present Church of the Ascension was erected, on the north-west corner of Fifth Ave. and 10th St. For its dedication, see N 5, 1841.

— Between 1840 and 1842, P. T. Barnum occupied part of the Vauxhall property, at Fourth Ave. and Astor Pl.—Brown, Hist. of the N. Y. Stage, I: 172–74; L. M. R. K., III: 981; and cf. Je 18, 1825. — In this year, the Harlem Market on Third Ave., west side, between 120th and 121st St., was erected. In 1842, old buildings remaining on Harlem Square were sold at auction.—De Voe, 590. In 1849, Edwin Smith made a survey of the Harlem Market grounds.—See map No. 200 in real estate bureau of the comptroller's office. Ten years later, it was demolished.—L. M. R. K., III: 959.

— About 1840, there was a "Shakespeare Inn" on 12th St., near Broadway, about opposite the Hotel St. George of later years. A narrow passageway led from the street into a large room where one could get an English chop, a golden buck, or a mug of ale.

— In this year, Geo. Palmer Putnam established the publishing firm of Wiley & Putnam; in 1848, he continued the business under his own name; in 1866, his sons were associated with him, and, until his death in 1872, he was head of the firm of G. P. Putnam & Sons.—Leslie's Hist. of the Greater N. Y., III: 348.

— In this year, the value of the real estate in New York City was $187,121,464 and that of the personal estate, $65,721,699.53. The city debt was $8,978,167, and the average tax rate was 53 cents on $100.—Man. Com. Coun. (1841–2), 40, 49; (1859), 523–24.

Jan. 13 The steamboat "Lexington," in her passage through the Sound from New York to Providence, is destroyed by fire with almost everyone on board. More than 100 persons lose their lives.—Eve. Post, Ja 16, 17, 18, 20, 21, 23, 25, 29, 30, 31, F 1 and 3, 1840.

15 Two galleries of ancient and modern original Italian paintings and statuary, owned by Mr. John Clark, are on exhibition at 281 Broadway, "in the granite buildings opposite Washington Hotel." Among them are said to be "undoubted specimens from the pencils of Salvator Rosa, Domenichino, Guido, Corregio, Poussin, Raphael, and all the other great masters."—Eve. Post, Ja 15, 1840; N. Y. Com. Adv., My 5 and 7, 1840.

19 The Antarctic continent is discovered by an American exploring expedition under Lieut. Chas. Wilkes. On the next day, it was sighted by the French expedition under Dumont d'Urville.—Encyclop. Brit., XXVIII: 642. Jan. 19

28 A Daguerreotype exhibition is being conducted by Mr. Gouraud (see D 10, 1839) at the corner of Broadway and Chambers St. for the benefit of the charitable institutions of the city.—Eve. Post, Ja 28, 1840. The next day he announced his intention of giving a lecture, with "practical demonstrations of the process of the Daguerreotype," to commence on Feb. 1, at "the place where he has held his exhibition, viz: the large granite building, corner of Chambers street and Broadway." He says: "The views of the City Hall, of the American Institute, are those which will serve to illustrate the process."—Ibid., Ja 29, 1840. These views are the earliest of the kind definitely mentioned as made in this city. See F 21.

30 "The employment of horses in dragging fire engines would be a great improvement on the present mode. . . .

"The use of horses to drag fire engines is well known in England, and on the continent of Europe. If the p[r]actice were introduced here, it appears to us that it would much diminish the danger of fires. Besides, preventing their spread, it would have the effect of extinguishing them before the thieves and plunderers who do so much mischief, could have time to collect about them."—Eve. Post, Ja 30, 1840.

13 "A new daily print has made its appearance in this city, with the title of the Morning Chronicle. Its editor is Mr. William H. Hudson, one of the original proprietors of the New York Express."—Eve. Post, F 13, 1840.

17 The trustees of the several (8) Roman Catholic churches in the city petition the common council for a share of the common school fund on the ground that there are "Free Schools" attached to these churches in which some 3,000 poor children are being educated.—Jour. & Docs., Bd. of Asst. Ald., XV: 356–57. Similar petitions were presented by the Scotch Presbyterian Church and by "the Congregations of the Hebrew Persuasion" on March 16. These met with remonstrances from the Public School Society, the "Commissioners of School Moneys," Methodist and other Protestant organizations, and groups of citizens. The "entire overthrow of our republican institutions" is prophesied, if such petitions are granted.—Ibid., XV: 366–91. The assistant alderman took adverse action on the petitions by a vote of 16 to 1, on April 27 (q.v.).

18 "Mr. Morse has executed an admirable specimen of photogenic drawing, with an instrument constructed by himself. It represents the front of the City Hall, and is remarkable for its strength and distinctness, quite as much so as the best of those executed by Daguerre himself, which have been brought to this country."—Eve. Post, F 18, 1840.

21 G. W. Prosch advertises the manufacture and sale of Daguerreotype apparatus, with the endorsement of Morse, Draper, and others.—Eve. Post, F 21, 1840. Another maker, J. G. Wolf, an optician, soon came into the field, and the art was fairly launched in New York.—Ibid., F 24 and S 7, 1840.

24 A notable masked ball is given by Mrs. Henry Brevoort in the spacious mansion on the north-west corner of Fifth Ave. and 9th St. (see 1834). This locality was on the northern border of the city, all the residences of the fashionable people of the time being south of 10th St.—Lossing, Hist. of N. Y. City (1883), II: 438–39; Hone's Diary, II: 10, 11–15. This was not the first masked ball held in New York, as stated by Lossing.—See the common council's prohibition against them on Jan. 8 and 15, 1810.

Lossing relates a stirring romantic episode which transpired after the ball, when Miss Matilda Barclay and a young South Carolinian named Burgwyne, while still in the costumes of the ball, eloped and were married before dawn. "This elopment was a topic for town talk for a month, and it cast such odium upon masked balls that no other was attempted by reputable families for many years afterward."—Ibid. See, further, Ja 21, 1850.

Mar. 2 This is the date announced for the opening of "Howard's Hotel," recently erected at the corner of Broadway and Maiden Lane; the architect is Wm. Hurry.—N. Y. Com. Adv., F 17, 1840. See also A. Pl. 25-a, Vol. III.

" "The ancient mansion of the late Mrs. E. White, No. 11 Broad-

1840 Mar. 2 way, opposite the Bowling Green, was sold at auction one day this week [March 2], by order of her executors, and brought only $15,000. The lot is thirty-nine feet front on Broadway, twenty-seven feet wide in the rear, and extends through to Greenwich street nearly two hundred feet. This is the saddest proof of the fall in real estate in this devoted city that has been realized as yet. . . ." —Hone's Diary, II: 15–16; Eve. Post, Mr 2, 1840.

5 The committee on fire and water recommends "that the Fire Department of this city be changed entirely or in part, from a voluntary system to a paid department."—Eve. Post, Mr 5, 1840. See also ibid., Mr 7, 1840.

" Assessment is being levied for regulating 42d St. from Third to Fifth Ave.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, VII: 126.

7 "At noon to-day this fortunate steam-packet [the "Great Western"] made her appearance, after a voyage of sixteen days, having sailed on the 20th of February. None of her competitors have made their trips with equal despatch and regularity. Owing to an unprecedented delay in the arrival of the regular packets, we have been without accounts from England for forty-one days, which gap has now been filled up, by the arrival of the 'Great Western.'" The most important event noted in the news from England is the marriage of the queen. This ship brought a piece of the queen's wedding-cake to Hone's daughter Margaret, enclosed in a letter from the wife of the American minister, Mr. Stevenson. This, however, Hone states, was "nothing to the present . . . received . . . by Miss Rush, daughter of the former Minister from the United States. Hers came from the Queen herself,—a piece of the cake, with a letter enclosed in a beautiful satin-wood box, on which the letter V is emblazoned in diamonds. This young lady was probably a companion of Victoria's in their youthful days, when, perhaps, her childish dreams dared not to soar to the height of her present greatness, and the 'Sea of Glory' on which she now 'swims' had no place on the map of her imagination."—Hone's Diary, II: 16.

30 The legislature passes an election law "to prevent illegal voting in the city of New-York, and to promote the convenience of legal voters." While not the first law intended to regulate elections (see Ap 17, 1822), it was the fullest attempt by statute in the direction of the modern system. It provided for the appointment of commissioners by the governor whose duty it was to divide the city into election districts, and to render a report thereon, with map; the appointment of election inspectors; the election of commissioners of registry; the manner of registering the qualified voters, and ascertaining their qualifications; against voting in more than one district; the publication of registers, and how they are to be revised; the conduct of the elections, the canvass, etc.—Laws of N. Y. (1840), chap. 78. On April 13, a supplementary act was passed relating to the challenging of voters.—Ibid. (1840), chap. 106. The act was extensively amended on May 14.—Ibid. (1840), chap. 361, and p. 338; and ibid. (1841), chap. 80. An entirely new law was enacted in 1842, after the repeal of part of the act of March 30, 1840.—Ibid. (1842), chaps. 56, 130, 138. A separate act was passed at that time relating to congressional elections. —Ibid. (1842), chaps. 325, 326. Still another election law was passed April 15, 1859 (q.v.).

Apr. 1 The N. Y. & Harlem R. R. is 7¾ miles long from the city hall to the free bridge over the Harlem River. At this point it is designed to connect the road with the New York & Albany R. R. A double track extends nearly the whole distance. The track, depots, fixtures, and motive powers have cost $1,100,000; the receipts for the year ending April 1, 1840, are $104,501.50. The road has carried 3,810,000 passengers.—N. Y. Ann. Register, 1837.

13 In an act "relating to the state arsenal in the city of New-York," the legislature directs the commissary-general "to cause the necessary drawings and estimates for the construction of a fire-proof building on the present site, for the safe-keeping of arms to be made, and report the same, with his opinion, to the next legislature of this state." He is allowed $500 for this purpose.—Laws of N. Y. (1840), chap. 125.

14 Isaac L. Varian, Democrat, is reëlected mayor.—Eve. Post, Ap 15 and 16, 1840.

20 "Mr. Woolcott, in the large granite building at the corner of Broadway and Chambers street . . . executes portraits with an improved Daguerreotype, in an incredibly short space of time. The face of the subject is required to be exposed to the sun only a minute and three quarters. The glare of the sun's rays is tempered by making them pass through a blue liquid before they fall on the face. . . ."—Eve. Post, Ap 20, 1840. Apr. 20

"The Croton water-works.—We are gratified to learn, by the annual report of the commissioners, that this great work will be completed for use at the coming year. The cost will be about nine millions, which is three millions less than the estimate of the legislature. Near four millions have been expended, of which one million two hundred thousand were spent in the last half of 1839. There are ninety-seven sections to the aqueduct, of which fifty-four are completed. About twenty-six miles are arched complete. There remain to be finished six and a half miles in Westchester county, and seven and a half with the water-pipe, on the island of New-York. The whole length, from the Croton river to the distributing reservoir at Murray's Hill, (forty-second street,) is forty miles. The crossing at Harlem river by the high bridge will not be completed till 1843."—N. Y. Mirror, XVII: 351. 26

The legislature passes a law authorising the city to raise a further sum not exceeding $3,000,000 "by the creation of a public fund or stock, to be called 'The Water Stock of the city of New-York,'" the money to be used for supplying the city with pure and wholesome water in accordance with the provisions of the act of May 2, 1834 (q.v.).—Laws of N. Y. (1840), chap. 175. 27

" The common council, through an adverse vote of the assistant aldermen, denies to sectarian schools (see F 17) a share of the public school funds. This decision followed an exhaustive report on the subject rendered by the board's committee of arts and sciences. "The Constitution acknowledges no distinction among men on account of their religious faith," reads the report; "our institutions are designed, not to create or perpetuate religious distinctions, but to place all mankind upon a common footing of equality. . . . Religion needs not the support of secular power. Its appeals are to the judgments and hearts of men. Truth is its only weapon, and the only shield it requires is that of broad and equal protection. Religious liberty is necessary to the free developement of religious truth. That liberty all sects possess in the fullest degree; and no sect can rightfully procure more. The purity of the church and the safety of the State are more surely obtained by a distinct and separate existence of the two, than by their union. The opinions of the American people are settled upon this subject, and they will observe with jealous anxiety any approaches to a re-establishment of the exploded doctrine, that it is the duty of the State to protect the religious interests of the People, or propagate, at the public expense, the doctrines of any faith, however true they may be." The report continues: "Religious instruction is no part of a common school education. The Church and the fireside are the proper seminaries, and the parents and pastors are the proper teachers of religion. In their hands the cause of religion is safe. Let the public schoolmaster confine his attention to the moral and intellectual education of the young committed to his charge, and he fully performs the duties of his profession, discharges the trust reposed in him as a public agent, and fulfils his obligations as a citizen."—Jour. & Docs., Board of Asst. Ald., XV: 401, and Doc. No. 80.

" The will of Robert Lenox, which bears this date, contains the following provision: "I give, devise and bequeath to my son, James Lenox, my farm at the five-mile stone, purchased in part from the Corporation of the City of New York containing about thirty acres, with all its improvements, stock of horses, cattle and farming utensils, for and during the term of his life and after his death to his heirs forever. My motive for so leaving this property is a firm persuasion that it may at no distant day be the site of a village, and as it costs me much more than its present worth, from circumstances known to my family I believe and cherish the belief that it may be realized to them, at all events I want the experiment made by keeping the property from being sold."—N. Y. Eve. Post, F 21, 1925. The Presbyterian Hospital and the Lenox Library, between Fifth and Park Aves., 70th and 71st Sts., were afterwards built on parts of this property by gift from James Lenox. See also Fifth Avenue (pub. by the Fifth Ave. Bank, 1915).

The Nassau St. property of the N. Y. Society Library (see Ap, 1793; Je, 1795) having been sold in 1836, and the library, in conjunction with the N. Y. Athenaeum, having purchased land and built a building for both, at the south-east corner of Broadway and Leonard St. (see S 19, 1838, for corner-stone), the library moves from the rooms of the Mechanics Society at No. 12 Chambers St., where it has been since 1836, to its new building on Broadway (the 30

It is reproduced in Keep's Hist., op. cit. The library remained here until 1852 (q. v., D 18) when the building was sold. See, further, Ap, and My, 1853; Ap 28, 1856; F 12, 1867. 1 By previous order, Manhattan Square was to be opened on this day.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, VII: 34; VIII: 75, 76, 106.

7 The legislature empowers the N. Y. & Harlem R. R. Co. to extend its line through Westchester Co. from the Harlem River to an intersection, at a point agreed upon, with the N. Y. & Albany R. R. Co.'s line of road. It also gives it the right to run a branch eastward to the Connecticut border, "with the view of intersecting a line or lines of rail-road from said state of Connecticut, as well as from the state of Massachusetts." The N. Y. & Harlem R. R. is required first, however, to "construct the road to the north line of Westchester county, . . And for that purpose, the said company is authorized to construct a bridge across the Harlem river, in order to connect the New-York and Harlem rail-road, as now constructed, with the road authorized by this act, in such manner that the same shall have a draw not less than forty feet in width, . . .; and shall not have more than three piers and two abutments in said river, and shall not in any way impair the navigation thereof; and it shall be within the power of the legislature of this state to incorporate any other companies for the making of any rail-roads eastwardly, through the county of Westchester, to the line of the state of Connecticut, notwithstanding the passage of this act."

The general powers of the Harlem line are further defined in this act, and the company is authorised to increase its capital stock $1,000,000, as the board of directors may prescribe. The time allowed for the completion of the branch to Manhattanville is extended two years from this date.—Laws of N. Y. (1840), chap. 242.

This act conferred on the N. Y. & Harlem R. R. Co. all the powers and privileges of the N. Y. & Albany R. R. Co. which had been recently purchased (see 1840). It gave the right to issue $1,000,000 additional capital. Jacob Little & Co. subscribed $500,000; Dykers, Alstyne & Co., $250,000, and David Banks intended to take for himself and others $250,000. On the election of new directors, however, on May 25, differences and other attendant circumstances arose which plunged the company into a series of financial difficulties.—From notes supplied by the company. See Ag 5.

" The legislature passes an act to incorporate the Apollo Association, for "the promotion of the fine arts within the United States." John W. Francis is the first named of the incorporators.—Laws of N. Y. (1840), chap. 237. In 1844 (q. v., Ja 29), its name was changed to the American Art Union. For fuller account of its work, see the latter date. This act of incorporation was amended by another of Nov. 26, 1847.—Ibid. (1847), chap. 402. For the origin of the Apollo Assn., see Howe's Hist. of the Metropolitan Museum of Art (1913), 57–58.

" The common council appoints a committee to welcome "Ahamet Bendeman," the representative of the Imam of Muskat, and who is the commander of the Arabian ship "Sultana," the arrival of which is recognized as the first step towards the establishment of commercial intercourse with Muskat.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, VII: 169; VIII: 3. See also Eve. Post, My 14, 1840. On Sept. 22, 1840, the board appropriated $500 to pay for a portrait of "Achmet Ben Ahmin," painted by Edward Moonry.—Ibid., VIII: 53.

10 The city conveys to the Anglo-American Free Church of St. George the Martyr 24 lots on Fifth Ave., from 54th to 55th St., West Side, running 300 ft. deep, for $1, and the further consideration of receiving from the corporation of Trinity Church a good and perfect title to the block bounded by Washington, West, Duane, and Reade Sts., to which that church made claim, On Nov. 20, 1851, the common council adopted a resolution permitting this ground to be transferred to St. Luke's Hospital, on condition that they comply with the covenants in the original lease.—Man. Com. Coun. (1870), 762.

14 The legislature authorises the common council to fund and pay the old floating debt of the city by a tax.—Laws of N. Y. (1840), May chap. 327. 14

The common council orders that the houses in Lafayette Place be numbered.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, VII: 173. "

"A déjeuner à la fourchette is something of a novelty in this country, and the last imitation of European refinement. This series of breakfasts given by Mr. William Douglass, at his fine mansion, corner of Park place and Church street, can hardly be called an imitation; for in taste, elegance, and good management it goes beyond most things of the kind in Europe, and seems to be placed as a bright object in the overwhelming flood of vulgarity which is sweeping over our land. The first of these breakfasts was given last Thursday, and they are to be repeated weekly until further notice."—Hone's Diary, II: 27. "

Fanny Ellsler, the dancer, makes her first appearance in America, at the Park Theatre.—Brown, I: 55. "Her reception was the warmest and most enthusiastic I ever witnessed. . . ."—Hone's Diary, II: 28. She finished her engagement there on June 11, "having danced fifteen nights, and brought to the house something like $24,000, at the ordinary prices, of which sum she puts $9,000 or $10,000 in her own pockets. . . ."—Ibid., II: 31.

"The owners of old buildings in the lower part of the city, 15 taking advantage of the low price of rents, are tearing down the old piles, and putting up structures of more substantial and elegant kinds."—Eve. Post, My 15, 1840.

The common council directs the street com'r "to cause New 21 street to be numbered and proper sign or guide boards to be put up at the corners of said street."—Proc., App'd by Mayor, VIII: 4.

The editor of the Mirror derides the so-called "improvements" 23
now going on. "The prostration of all the pretty places, between St. Mark's Church and Harlem, the 'diggings' which disfigure the whole scene, and the carting off of the green knolls into the marshes of Kipp's Bay, are undoubtedly a very distinct 'improvement.'" Let observers, he continues, "traverse the Sound side of the island, from Fifteenth-street to Cato's. Let them look at the straits to which rurality is driven, by the meliorating march of the aforesaid improvement. The pear-tree is pulled up to make room for the lamp-post, . . . and the 'cottage of a hundred years' is demolished that a groggery may minister whiskey to the operatives upon the public works. Lovely hills are dug down, and green villas are undermined, merely that the mounds of unseemly builders may be piled up in their places! Instead of the beauty-spots which once decorated the road from Harlem-bridge, the traveller has nothing but the rugged vestiges of vandalism, that has blown into fragments the picturesque, in order to elevate the unsightliness of a subterranean quarrying after gray and blue sand-stone!"—N. Y. Mirror, XVII: 383.

Livingston's sugar-house, on the south side of Liberty St., June east of the Middle Dutch Church, which was built in 1754 (q. v.), 4 and used by the British as a prison in the Revolution (see 1777), is being levelled. The wreckers find it very strongly built. Many of the stones show prisoners' initials.—Eve. Post, Je 3; Com. Adv., Je 4, 1840. See L. M. R. K., III: 963.

The Graham House, in Barclay St., kept by a Mr. Goss, where 11
"Mr. Greely, of the New Yorker" lodges, and where Gov. Seward is a guest, is described as a vegetarian boarding-house. "Graham bread" is also a feature of the menu.—N. Y. Com. Adv., Je 12, 1840. Cf. F 6, 1845.

The editor of the Mirror writes of New York as "The city of 13 modern ruins." He says in part: "No sooner is a fine building erected than it is torn down to be put up a better. . . . We have our misgivings as to the permanency of the Merchants' Exchange now going up in Wall-street. It is very much to be feared that it will be torn down and 'improved' before it can be fairly finished; so restless are the tastes and habitudes of the city. The new Custom House [the present sub-treasury] is safe for a brief space, at least, for it is nearly the only building within our knowledge that would give much trouble in the demolition. This edifice is built for durability, and will stand a thousand years, if the improvers can be kept from it. . . . Oh, for the day when some portion of New-York may be considered finished for a few years."—N. Y. Mirror, XVII: 407.

"I have, in common with a great many of my fellow-citizens, 15 noticed the valuable improvements going on in West-street. It is well known that Washington-street was formerly the location for the most important foreign commerce; but in consequence of the 1840 June 15 neglect of the proprietors of the property, and the great accumulation of small shops and low dwellings, it was abandoned, and the business transferred to the eastern part of the city.—Within the past two years . . . the bulk head on the line of West from Cedar street to the Battery, and four or five piers, three hundred and fifty feet long and forty in width, have been nearly completed. The owners of this property from Cedar street to the Battery, have a water front of more than two thousand feet; with piers of the most capacious description, and a depth of water sufficient to float a ship of the line. It will now depend on the management of these proprietors whether they will restore and enlarge the business character of this part of the city, by building a range of ware houses from Cedar street to the Battery on West street, similar to or better than those north of Cedar street, or dispose of the property on such terms as will enable others to do so; by this mode, this part of West-street, being so near to the Custom House Exchange and the banks, can be made the most desirable business part of the city. I have however noticed that some of the owners declining to sell, have leased many of the lots for grog shops and coal and wood yards; . . . The proprietors are generally wealthy and can improve it without inconvenience to themselves; nothing is wanting but a determination to exclude nuisances, and a concert of action on their part, to restore to West street not only the foreign commerce, but a large portion of the northern trade of the city."—N. Y. Com. Adv., Je 15, 1840.

16 "The great log-cabin in Broadway, near Prince street, was dedicated this evening to Harrison and Reform. It is a large edifice, constructed of unhewn logs, in the most primitive style, with a large pavilion connected with it. . . ."—Hone's Diary, II: 33.

24 The 400th anniversary of the discovery of the art of printing with moveable type is celebrated at Boston.—N. Y. Com. Adv., Je 26, 1840.

28 "The French Episcopal Church du St. Esprit, which was partially destroyed by fire at the burning of the National Theatre [see S 23, 1839], having been repaired, will be opened again to-morrow morning [June 28]. The interior of the building . . . is a fine specimen of simple and beautiful church architecture. As the walls of the old edifice were not destroyed, it has not been thought necessary to consecrate the building a second time."—Eve. Post, Je 27, 1840. The church was opened on July 1 "for the purpose of exhibiting the new Organ built by Mr. Erben."—Ibid., Jl 1, 1840.

29 The Tivoli Saloon and Garden is opened "on the site of what was known as the Richmond Hill Theatre" (see N 14, 1831).—Eve. Post, Je 30, 1840. See also Brown, I: 235, and Haswell's Reminiscences, 351.

July 1 "The Mayor of this city has put his veto on a plan adopted by the Common Council for the erection of the bridges conveying the Croton Aqueduct through the Clendenning Valley. The plan originally agreed upon, and for which contracts have been made, proposes to leave arched openings for the passage of the streets already laid out. The plan recently adopted by the Common Council proposes to substitute a solid bridge or wall, for the reason that it is more economical. The objections raised by Mayor Varian to this substitution, are, as we understand, that it is beyond the authority of the Common Council, and that the obstruction of the streets will be inconvenient to the neighborhood.

"It is said that this is the first veto ever put by any Mayor of this city upon any ordinance or proceeding of the Common Council."—Eve. Post, Jl 1, 1840. See also Wegmann, The Water-Supply of the City of N. Y., 43.

4 A resolution, adopted by the aldermen on June 29 and by the assistants on July 1, but signed by the mayor on the 12th, gives permission, for July 4, "to erect Booths around the Park, the old rejoicing ground of the People, and other public places; the Booths to be used for the sale of refreshments and such beverages as do not violate the Corporation ordinance." The custom of erecting booths around the Park on this day "has existed, almost without interruption, since the revolutionary patriot said, 'that hallowed day would be celebrated with thanksgiving, with festivity, with bonfires, and illuminations.'"—Proc., App'd by Mayor, VIII: 25.

" Congress establishes a separate treasury or sub-treasury.—Eve. Post, Jl 9, 1840; Winsor, VII: 289. The law was repealed by the Whigs in 1841.—Ibid.

9 "A contract has been made by the Postmaster General for a steamboat and railroad mail from New York to Boston, via New London, Norwich and Worcester, with a car arranged on the Norwich and Worcester Railroad as a traveling post office for a clerk of the department for receiving and assorting mails. When the arrangement contemplated by this contract shall have been perfected, at least two hundred post offices will receive their facilities from New York from twelve to twenty four hours earlier than they now receive them."—Eve. Post, Jl 9, 1840. July 9

" Vice-President Johnson arrives in New York and receives a hearty welcome. Attended by a committee of the common council and a committee of citizens, he lands at Castle Garden "amidst the roar of cannon, the music of bands and the enthusiastic shouts of a vast crowd of people."—Eve. Post, Jl 8–11, 1840; Proc., App'd by Mayor, VIII: 23.

12 The common council changes the name of Art St. to Astor Place.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, VIII: 25.

18 The "Britannia," of the Cunard Line, arrives at Boston on her maiden voyage from Liverpool. She was the first of this line so to do.—Eve. Post, Jl 17 and 20, 1840; Hone's Diary, II: 38. The other ships belonging to the line at this time were the "Acadia," "Caledonia," and "Columbia." It was "the first permanently successful line of transatlantic steamers."—Preble, Hist. of Steam Navigation, 193. For the first arrival of a Cunarder at New York, see D 29, 1847. See Jl 27.

24 "A beautiful barge has been built in this city, under the inspection of J. R. Livingston, Navy Agent, intended as a present from our government to the Imaum of Muscat. It is of beautiful proportions, and is fitted up with perfect taste. The seats are cushioned with blue silk, the bottom is lined with the finest Brussels carpeting, and the awning which shades it, is of white linen without and blue silk within.—Blue silk curtains, with blue and white fringes, depend from the awning, and there are also curtains which may be drawn around the seats intended for the Imaum and his household, separating them from the rowers in front and the helmsman behind. The boat is edged with silver plated metal, and the supporters of the awning are metal also, and are plated. The exterior is painted white, and for smoothness and lustre, is like enamel; and the helm is of a peculiarly beautiful form. The length of this barge is thirty one feet, and the breadth four feet eight inches. The builders are W. & J. Crolius, and the upholsterer, Daniel Ferguson, of this city."—Eve. Post, Jl 24, 1840.

25 An engraving of the new Trinity Church is published in the N. Y. Com. Adv., with information regarding the structure, which has been supplied by the architect, Mr. Upjohn. The dimensions of the building, when completed, are given as follows: extreme length, including buttresses, 183 ft., 5 in.; extreme width, 84 ft., 6 in.; height to top of spire, 264 ft.; square of tower, 30 ft.; height of nave, 64 ft.—Ibid. See also lithograph of 1837, showing bird's-eye view of the church, from the architect's drawing.—A. 27 The Democrats of the first senatorial district (New York and its vicinity) celebrate at Castle Garden the passage of the Independent Treasury Bill (see Jl 4).—Eve. Post, Jl 27 and 28, 1840; Hone's Diary, II: 38.

" The "Cunard's Line of Mail Steam Ships" publishes its first advertisement in New York, announcing that Wm. F. Harnden (see Jl 6, 1839) is its appointed agent here. The American terminus of the line is at Boston.—Eve. Post, Jl 27, 1840.

28 London cabs have been introduced. The rates of fare are published.—N. Y. Com. Adv., Jl 28, 1840.

Aug. — The common council passes an ordinance organizing "the Croton Aqueduct Department." The department is to consist of a Croton aqueduct committee, consisting of three members from each board, who are to have charge of all expenditures and to make the necessary contracts for laying the pipes; an aqueduct commissioner, who is to supervise all the work and records of the department and to make quarterly reports regarding expenditures, number of pipes, etc.; and a water purveyor, who is to be subject to the direction of the committee and the commissioner.—Wegmann, The Water-Supply of the City of N. Y., 44.

5 The common council recommends "the immediate call of a Public Meeting of citizens of New-York, to hear statements in reference to the New-York and Albany Rail Road [see Ap 17, 1832], and to devise the most effectual method for procuring such ample subscriptions to its Stock, as will ensure an early completion of the work."—Proc., App'd by Mayor, VIII: 32–33; citing also "Doc. No. 10." See N 10.

1840 Aug. 6 "Censor," speaking of the New York of 25 or 30 years before, says: "Then we had our landmarks by which situations were defined and distances computed. The Stone Bridge, Rutgers's-Hill, Sandy-Lane, Richmond-Hill, Burr's-Pond, Stuyvesants' Meadow, Vauxhall-Gardens, the Forks-of-the-Road, and many other places of equal note. . . . when I returned, some few years gone, I was prepared to find an altered city. I knew that the Stone Bridge was made a splendid thoroughfare, Vauxhall Garden cut in two, Stuyvesant Pond filled up, and Richmond Hill cut down." Speaking of the change in the names which he knew formerly, he says: "for Stuyvesant Pond we had Stuyvesant Place; Richmond Hill was changed to Richmond Hill Garden, etc. . . . This year I visited new places, . . . I forsook Vauxhall, and lounged at Castle Garden; I cut Cato's and rode out to Burnham's; I forgot the Village in admiring Chelsea; Powles Hook I deserted, and sailed to Port Richmond; and my Long Island walk was changed from the Wallabout to Colonnade Garden." On hearing that certain artists were to sing at the Tivoli Garden, he inquired the way and was told that the Greenwich stages would take him there. "I jumped on a stage," he reports, and "We stopped at Richmond-Hill-Garden," which had changed its name (see Je 29).—N. Y. Com. Adv., Ag 6, 1840.

8 The common council consents, as required by the act of April 18, 1826, incorporating the Harlem River Canal Co., to the construction of "a Canal from Harlem River, across the Island, to the North river," at or near the line of 222d St., under certain restrictions and conditions.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, VIII: 44–45.

17 The steamship "President," of the British and American Steam Navigation Co., arrives at New York from Liverpool after her first trip across the Atlantic.—Eve. Post, Ag 10 and 18, 1840. The ship is described in ibid., Ag 25, 1840. See Mr 11, 1841.

Sept. 1 Charles Green, the aeronaut, writing from Norwich, Eng., to Edward Spencer, another aeronaut, projects a trans-Atlantic trip. He says: "We are busily employed on the Balloon and find it in as good condition as I expected, in short even better, as it regards the varnishing, and I think we shall have it in such condition by the end of the week that I sh[d] like a voyage with it from here to S[t] Petersburg, as I am sure I could accomplish it from its capability of retaining the gas during a much longer voyage, & were it not for its great increase of weight caused by the bad varnishing of it, I would immediately leave England for New York with it. . . ."—From item No. 1334, in catalogue No. 394 (summer of 1920), of Maggs Bros., London, describing an autograph letter.

" A news item reads: "Ewes's Fire Escape—An artisan of this city has invented a method of preventing the terrible effects of fires in buildings. It is intended to answer the two-fold purpose of facilitating the descent of persons from the upper stories of the burning building, and of raising ladders with the least possible delay from the street to the very highest part of any edifice."—Eve. Post, S 1, 1840.

" "The Standard, conducted by John I. Mumford, makes its first appearance this morning among our daily papers."—Eve. Post, S 1, 1840.

3 The Tabernacle Congregational Church is organized in "The Tabernacle" on Broadway, which was erected in 1835 by Presbyterians.—Greenleaf, 181, 363. The new congregation survives in "The Broadway Tabernacle" of to-day.—The Hist. of the Broadway Tabernacle Church, by Susan Hayes Ward (1901).

24 The new custom-house is nearly finished. "It is two hundred feet in length and ninety feet wide, with two porticoes of eight columns each, fronting on Wall and Pine streets, constructed after the Grecian Doric style of architecture. . . .

"There are three stories above the basement, the floors of which are formed by vaultings of groined arches, and the ceilings of which are finished in a chaste style of panel work. On the side towards Pine street, there are eight rooms of similar dimensions. . . . In the second story are four galleries, running around the great central room. Two stairways, right and left, rise about midway of the interior, ascending from the basement to the attic. Besides these, there are two spiral stairways running from the rotunda to the attic. . . .

"The floors and roof of this building are entirely of marble, and there is not a particle of wood in any part of it. . . ."—Eve. Post, S 24, 1840.

" The Methodist Church in John St. (erected in 1818, q. v., Ja 4) is being demolished.—Eve. Post, S 24, 1840, citing Express; Greenleaf, 284; L. M. R. K., III: 930 (under "Wesley Chapel"). It was immediately rebuilt.—See Ap 27, 1841. Sept. 24

The walls of the new Trinity Church have risen several feet, "a steam-engine, of sufficient power, being placed upon the grounds to aid in the operation of hoisting the stones to their places." The dark-red sandstone used is "from the quarry in New-Jersey selected by Thom, the celebrated sculptor, for his statuary of Old Mortality and the colossal statue of Washington. . . . and, what will ensure an execution of the ornamental portions of the structure, equal to the beauty and chasteness of the design, is the fact that Mr. Thom himself is employed upon it. . . ."—N. Y. Mirror, XVIII: 111. 26

The up-town branch of the congregation of the old South Church (see 1837) dedicates its new house of worship at the south-east corner of Washington Place and Wooster St. (University Place), fronting Washington Square, after worshipping temporarily in the chapel of N. Y. University. The building is 62 ft. wide and 80 ft. long, and is built of dark coloured granite, rather roughly hewn. The cost of the ground was $44,000; of the building, $80,000. —Ruggles, Picture of N. Y. in 1846 (with view of the church), 132–33; L. M. R. The political compaign of William Henry Harrison (called "Tippecanoe"), for president, and John Tyler for vice-president, occurs. It is known as the "Tip and Ty" campaign, and was the first by modern methods.—Winsor, VII: 289. Autumn

Wm. H. Harrison and John Tyler, Whig candidates, are elected president and vice-president. The Democrats nominated Martin Van Buren for president, but made no choice for vice-president.—McKee, National Conventions and Platforms, 40–46. Nov. 3

A meeting of citizens held at the city hall passes favourably upon the subject of the immediate construction of the N. Y. and Albany R. R. The Society Library (see Ap 30) has been reopened, in its new rooms in the Athenaeum building, at the south-east corner of Broadway and Leonard St.—N. Y. Com. Adv., D 5, 1840. See Ap 29, 1841. Dec. 5

Construction is begun on the first steam fire-engine built in the United States. Completed on April 25, 1841, it was designed and built by Paul Rapsey Hodge, C. E., in this city, and, being a self-propelled engine, it was the first of its kind ever constructed. It was arranged to be drawn by horses or by hand, as well as propelled by its own steam-power.—Costello, Our Firemen, 1001. The first attempt to make a "fire-engine" in New York was in 1737 (q. v., My 5). See D 15, 1841. 12

"The Case of the Heirs of Anneke Jane Bogardus.—This case, which was carried by appeal from the decision of the Chancellor to the Court of Errors, was decided in that court on Thursday last [Dec. 24], against the applicants. The decree of the Chancellor was affirmed unanimously. The title of the case was Humbert and others, vs. Trinity Church, and involved property to the amount of many millions."—Eve. Post, D 31, 1840, citing Jour. of Com. The name is a typographical error, of course, for Anneke Jans Bogardus. For the state chancellor's decision, see Aug. 9, 1833. 24

During the year 1840, 60,609 passengers arrived at the port of N. Y.—Arrivals of Alien Passengers and Immigrants (1891), p. 64. 31

— In this year, the first Manual of the Common Council, bearing date of 1841–2, was published, having been copyrighted "by Samuel J. Willis, in behalf of the Corporation of the City of New York." Its table of contents shows 26 items of information respecting the affairs of the city, including its financial condition, a list of the ferries from New York, the value of the city's real and personal property as assessed each year from 1836 to 1840 inclusive, the names of members of the city council from 1655 to 1841, the population of the city at various periods, and the census for 1840 (giving the population for that year as 312,852); also a map of the city showing the fire and watch districts. S. J. Willis in 1841 was clerk of the common council, and David T. Valentine was his assistant.

The first volume is a 24mo of 185 pages, bound in black muslin, $4\frac{3}{4}$ inches tall and $3\frac{1}{2}$ inches wide. Its sole illustration is the folding map above mentioned. It is now exceedingly scarce, and has sold at auction at prices varying from $4.75 (in 1907) to $159 (in 1916). —See Auction Prices of Books (1905) and Am. Book Prices Current (1912), both edited by Livingston. For a brief account of the compiler and editor of the series, David T. Valentine, whose name first appears on the title-page of the Manual of 1842–43, and who conducted it for 25 years, see the "Introduction" to An Index to the Illustrations in the Manuals (1906).

Valentine's Manuals were the successors of a series of pamphlets entitled Names and Places of Abode of the Members of the Common Council, and of the Officers who Hold Appointments under them, already mentioned (see 1816).

For the purposes of this Chronology, at the beginning of each year in which the Manual was published is given a summary of the principal historical articles appearing in that year's issue, and a first appears on the title-page of the Manual of 1842–43, and who list of the principal Manual views which depict the city in that year. The Index to the Illustrations in the Manuals, pub'd by the Soc. of Iconophiles in 1906, does not assemble the views under the dates depicted but under the dates of publication.

"David T. Valentine edited the volumes for 1841–2 to 1866, inclusive; those of 1868 and 1869 were issued under the supervision of J. Shannon, and that of 1870 by John Hardy. No manual was published for the calendar year 1846, when the change was made from an issue for the fiscal year to one for the calendar year; none was published for 1867. These annuals, once a drug in the market and subject to mutilation for their illustrations, are now sought for with avidity by libraries and collectors at an enhanced price. Each volume contains a record of the year's administration of the city. This once despised material has become the soundest evidence for the historian and economist. The supplementary materials, consisting of contributed historical articles, extracts or translations from records, and data from early newspapers, together with facsimiles, portraits, views, maps, etc., are less sound for historical uses. They should be used with great caution, because the texts are often inaccurate, whilst deductions are unsound. The danger lies in the uncritical use of this mass of unsystematic material. Valuable as this supplementary matter is when consulted for suggestions and when used with judgment, it remains true that the hitherto careless use has done much to discredit the written history of Manhattan Island during the Dutch and English periods. Valentine had the coöperation of others, and contributions are signed by Henry B. Dawson, R. G. Horton, John Gilmary Shea, etc.; the numerous extracts from early newspapers were furnished mainly by the late William Kelby.

"Lists of the illustrations in the Manuals are given in the volumes of 1857 and 1863; also in Pasko's Old New York, Vol. I, pp. 24–37, 105–116, 165–176; and more particularly in An Index to the Illustrations (N. Y., pub. by the Society of Iconophiles, 1906). The illustrations often vary as to location, due to the carelessness of the binders.

"For an index to the historical articles in the set, see the Historical Index to the Manuals of the Corporation of the City of New York ('Valentine's Manuals'), with introduction by Otto Hufeland, published in 1900 (q.v.); and, for a collation of each volume, see Bulletin of New York Public Library, Vol. V (1901), pp. 9–12."—From bibliographical notes prepared for the ICONOGRAPHY by Victor Hugo Paltsits.

— In this year, John James Audubon, the naturalist, soon after completing his Birds of America, bought the land which is now embraced in "Audubon Park." For an account of the development of this property, where he built his residence, see the 18th Ann. Rep. of the Am. Scenic & Hist. Pres. Soc. (1913), 460–63. "Audubon Park to-day is but the name of a section of the City. It is not a park, the property all being privately owned."—Ibid., 463. The old house, however, still stands, on a triangular plot on the line of 156th St., near the Hudson River. 1841 —

In this year, the ship-of-war "Princeton" was built as a screw-propeller. Her constructor was John Ericsson. She was the first ship whose propelling mechanism was wholly below the water-line and therefore safe from shot.—Church, Life of John Ericsson, I: 117 et seq. and see Ja 18, 1844. For the invention and introduction of the screw-propeller, see 1836 and 1837. —

In this year, John W. Griffiths, a naval architect of New York, exhibited at the American Institute a model ship of the type called "clipper." Two years later, the "Rainbow" was built for William H. Aspinwall from Griffiths' designs. On her first voyage to Canton, this ship broke the record each way.—Spears, American Merchant Marine, 227. —

In this year, the work of a medical college, established by New York University, was begun at the Stuyvesant Institute, 659 Broadway, later the site of the Broadway Central Hotel. The most noted men of the faculty were Dr. Valentine Mott, the foremost surgeon of the day, and Dr. John W. Draper, professor of chemistry. During the first year, there were 239 students, from 27 states and foreign countries, and by 1850 more than 400 students.—N. Y. University Bulletin, Je 30, 1911. See 1851. —

In 1840, the First Baptist Church required better accommodation for the congregation. "The old meeting-house in Gold street was accordingly taken down, the ground sold, and a new and elegant building of stone was erected on Broome street, corner of Elizabeth street, measuring 100 feet by 75, which was opened for public worship in the spring of 1841."—Greenleaf, 229. For view and fuller description, see Picture of N. Y. in 1846, 127–28. See, further, 1868; S 3, 1871. —

"When the Church of St. John the Evangelist was founded, in 1841, the old [Jesuit] college buildings [at Fifth Ave. and 50th St.] were used as a rectory. These buildings were later removed to where now [1908] stands the Villard Block on Madison Avenue, opposite the Archbishop's residence, to make way for the construction of the present Cathedral."—Farley, Hist. of St. Patrick's Cathedral (1908), 113. —

"The church of St. John the Evangelist, the pastoral residence, and the parochial school, stood for many years on the portion of the property lying to the east of Madison Avenue, 'The church was destroyed by fire while the Cathedral was in course of erection, but was immediately rebuilt, and until the Cathedral was occupied was in constant use. The church, though of no great material value, was among the most important of the Roman Catholic Churches in the city. The buildings have been removed [1882], and all the property lying to the east of Madison Avenue was sold, with the condition that no other than first-class private dwellings should be erected on Madison Avenue, and for a distance of 200 feet on the street.'"—Ibid., 114, citing N. Y. Jour. of Com., Je, 1882. Regarding St. Patrick's Cathedral, see 1858.

In this year, there were 47 public schools in New York, exclusive of those for coloured children.—36th Ann. Rep., Pub. Sch. Soc. (1841). —

New York Museum "is the new name given to Peale's Museum, under an act of incorporation granted by the Legislature of New York."—Eve. Post, Ja 4, 1841. Jan. 4

The U. S. steam frigate "Missouri" is launched from the Brooklyn Navy Yard.—Eve. Post, Ja 8, 1841. 7

A freshet on Croton River carries away the earth embankment forming a portion of the newly constructed dam, causing a great destruction of property, and the loss of three lives.—King, Memoir of the Croton Aqueduct, 186–88; Man. Com. Coun. (1854), 221. "

The board of aldermen hears a report of its special committee to which was referred a petition of the Catholics for a portion of the school funds and denies the petition by a vote of 15 to 1.—Proc., Bd. of Ald. (1841), XX: 115; N. Y. Eve. Post, Ja 20, 1841. Similar action had been taken by the board of assistants the preceding year (see Ap 27, 1840). 11

Robert H. Morris, city recorder, is recommended to the state senate for removal by Gov. Seward because of conduct "hostile . . . to the spirit and letter of our statutes." For the corre- 12

1841 spondence between the governor and the recorder, the controversy
Jan. centering about the latter's investigation of the Glentworth election
12 frauds of 1838 (see N 6, 1838), see N. Y. Eve. Post, Ja 18, 1841. Although the senate removed Mr. Morris, the people elected him mayor on April 13 (q. v.).

16 Announcement is published in New York of the appointment by Gov Seward of "a young gentleman residing in the interior" as historical agent to be sent to Europe, as proposed by the N. Y. Hist. Soc. two or three years ago. The appointee is, presumably, "Mr. Brodhead, late of Ulster county, and late secretary to Mr. Bleecker, chargé in Holland."—N. Y. Com. Adv., Ja 16, 1841.

25 Early this morning, the shock of an earthquake is felt in New York City and its vicinity. "It was accompanied by a rumbling sound, and continued for some minutes."—Eve. Post, Ja 25, 1841. See also ibid., Ja 26, 1841.

27 The common council directs the committee on arts, sciences, etc., of both boards to "enquire into the cause of the defaced appearance of the Paintings in the Governor's Room," and that they "take immediate measures to prevent their total destruction, and if possible to restore them to their original appearance."—Proc., App'd by Mayor, VIII: 93.

Feb. The annual report of the governors of the New York Hospital
2 states: "Since their last report to the Legislature, the Governors have deemed it necessary and expedient to increase the accommodation for medical and surgical patients at the hospital in the city, and they have accordingly undertaken to erect a new wing to the hospital on the north of the main building, and on a parallel line with the other wing, which is now appropriated to sick and disabled seamen, termed the Marine Department.

". . . The Governors have also made an important improvement in fitting up a building for post mortem examinations, and for the delivery of lectures on facts thus disclosed. . . . There are also in the building a gallery and other suitable arrangements for a museum of preserved specimens, for the instruction and information of medical students and others."—Assemb. Docs. (1841), V: 152; ibid. (1842), V: 95. The new wing was called the North Hospital.—Man. Com. Coun. (1845–46), 257.

13 About 300 members of the Stanton St. Baptist Church organized on this day what later became the Fifth Avenue Baptist Church. They purchased the building of the Christian Church on Norfolk St., and began their services under the ministry of Rev. Geo. Benedict. For a brief account of the congregation's history, see the 21st Ann. Rep., Am. Scenic & Hist. Pres. Soc. (1916), 114–46; Greenleaf, 248. See, further, Je, 1865.

Mar. The common council passes resolutions, to be sent to congress,
3 expressing the opinion that it is the duty of "our Senators and Representatives" in congress "to use their exertions in originating and carrying into immediate effect some plan for placing our coast, harbor, and frontier defences, upon a full and efficient war footing."—Proc., App'd by Mayor, VIII: 111.

4 The administration of Harrison and Tyler begins.—Winsor, Nar. & Crit. Hist. of Am., VII: 290, 353; Hone's Diary, II: 67. See Ap 4.

" Assessments are apportioned on certain lots for opening Mt. Morris Square (see My 10, 1836). Further action on assessments was taken on May 6 and 11, July 28, Oct. 7, Nov. 6 and 10, and Dec. 1 and 6.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, VIII: 113, 114, 150, 156; IX: 28, 29, 30, 52, 67, 84, 91, 95. See, however, 1854; D 12, 1861; S 25, 1863.

8 "On the Report and recommendation of the Building Committee of Trinity Church," it is ordered "that they have power to complete the interior of the new Church, without galleries, provided they can arrange with the owners of Pews which were in the Galleries of the old Church in respect to their rights as such owners; . . ."—Trin. Min. (MS.).

11 The steamship "President" sails from New York. She was never heard from again; although wreckage was found showing that she had foundered in some way.—Bullock, "First Steamships to Cross the Atlantic Ocean," in Conn. Mag. (1907), II: 54. See also Eve. Post, My 1, 7, 10, 11, 12, 13, 25, 27; Je 3, 9, 11; Jl 2; Ag 30, 1841; F 10, 1842. The loss of the "President" and the subsidy granted the new Cunard Line brought about the financial collapse of the British and American Steam Navigation Co.—Bullock, op. cit.

" An anti-assessment paper, The N. Y. Municipal Gazette, is first published. There is a file of this journal of protest in the N. Y. P. L.

Mar. Ex-Pres. Van Buren receives a hearty welcome upon his return
23 to New York from Washington.—Eve. Post, Mr 24, 1841.

Apr. Edward Curtis, collector of the port, writes to Thomas Ewing,
1 sec. of the treasury: "The new custom-house is nearly completed. . . . We are now occupying four stores as a custom-house, and are imminently exposed to fire. . . . The new building is fireproof, having no wood in its construction.

"If you will give me authority, I will proceed to furnish the building, pursuing the plan proposed by Mr. Frazee, the architect, to the late Secretary, . . . I can move into the new building if I receive an order to pay the bills for the furniture, . . . in about eight or ten weeks hence. . . ." The secretary replied on April 5, giving the proper authorisation.

On Nov. 9, the collector sent to the secretary a schedule of the furniture, all of mahogany, procured for the entire building. For the complete list of items, see House Ex. Docs. (Doc. No. 22), 27th cong., 2d sess., Vol. I (1841–2).

4 Just one month after his inauguration, President Wm. H. Harrison dies at "the President's House," in Washington, the first of the presidents to die in office.—Eve. Post, Ap 5, 1841; N. Y. Mirror, XIX: 119; Winsor, VII: 290; Hone's Diary, II: 71; Proc., App'd by Mayor, VIII: 133. See Ap 10. Hone's observation is: "There seems to be very little doubt that the President's illness was brought on, and its severity increased, by the constant labour and deprivation of comfort brought upon him by his new duties. . . . The sudden change from the quiet occupations of his life for several years past to the turmoil of public business, and the sacrifice of his personal convenience and comfort to the impracticable task of attending to every man's business, had been too much for the debilitated frame of a man nearly seventy years of age; . . ."

6 Vice-President John Tyler takes the oath as president.—Eve. Post, Ap 8, 1841. He was the first vice-president to exercise the executive functions.—Hone's Diary, II: 71.

7 Bells are tolled in New York and Brooklyn from 12 until 2 o'clock, the time during which the Harrison funeral is held. "Minute guns, sixty-eight in number, were fired from the heights at Brooklyn, and from the Battery. The stores generally were closed, and the flags of the shipping were hung at half-mast."—Eve. Post, Ap 8, 1841.

10 Elaborate ceremonies in honour of the late President Harrison are held, arranged by a joint committee of the common councils of New York and Brooklyn. For the programme, order of the procession, etc., see Eve. Post, Ap 9, 1841; Hone's Diary, II: 75; Mem. Hist. of N. Y., III: 375. Hone says: ". . . The arrangements of the committee [of which he was one] were made upon the grandest scale, . . . Business of every description was suspended; all the public places, markets, hotels, the shops, and many private houses on the route of the procession, were covered with festoons and hangings of black, and other mournful devices. Minute guns were fired, and the bells tolled during the four hours' progress of the melancholy parade. . . . All was order and regularity in the tremendous mass of humanity which formed the greatest civil and military procession ever witnessed in the city, for spectators occupied every window, and the house-tops, or covered the entire streets, leaving only a space sufficient for the passage of the procession."

" The Am. Academy of Fine Arts has been for two years "without direction." Notice has been given for a meeting of members and creditors. It has been proposed that the paintings, casts, etc. be merged in the Natl. Acad. of Design and the Athenaeum. Sir Thomas Lawrence's portrait of Benjamin West, and Vanderlyn's portrait of Chancellor Livingston are among them.—N. Y. Mirror, XIX: 119. The academy was dissolved.—See Ap, 1839. Its records were given to the N. Y. Hist. Soc. by Alex. J. Davis, its last secretary. The portrait of West went to the Wadsworth Athanaeum at Hartford. The casts were sold to the Natl. Acad. of Design for $400, and remained in use in the Academy's school. They were almost all destroyed by fire in 1905.—Howe, Hist. of the Metropolitan Museum of Art (1913), 32–34.

" Horace Greeley begins the publication of the New York Tribune. There is a copy of the first issue in the N. Y. P. L.

13 At the annual city election, Robert H. Morris, the Democratic candidate, is elected mayor. The American Party was in the field with Samuel F. B. Morse as a candidate; he received only a few votes, less than he would have otherwise, because some political opponents printed in the Express without his authorisation a letter of withdrawal from the contest.—N. Y. Eve. Post Ap 14,

1841 1841. Mayor-elect Morris had been recorder of the city in the previous administration, from which office he was removed by the

Apr. 13 senate on recommendation of Gov. Seward (see Ja 12). Morris succeeded Isaac L. Varian as mayor (see My 14, 1839). His first message to the common council bears date of May 31.—Ibid., Je 1, 1841. In 1844 (q. v., Ap 9), he was succeeded by James Harper.

17 The legislature incorporates "The St. Nicholas Society of the city of New-York." The incorporators are Peter G. Stuyvesant, Washington Irving, Geo. B. Rapelye, Egbert Benson, John Outhout, Abm. R. Lawrence, Hamilton Fish, and others already associated in a society bearing that name (see F 14, 1835). The objects of the society are "to afford pecuniary relief to indigent or reduced members, and their widows and children; to collect and preserve information respecting the history, settlement, manners and such other matters as may relate thereto, of the city of New-York, and to promote social intercourse among its native citizens."—Laws of N. Y. (1841), chap. 100. See D 5, 1848.

27 The new M. E. Church at No. 44 John St. is dedicated.—Eve. Post, Ap 29, 1841. It was erected between Sept. 24, 1840 (q. v.), and this date, 42 ft. wide and 80 ft. deep.—L. M. R. K., III: 930; Greenleaf, 284; and see Vol. I, p. 238. It is still standing.—King's Handbook (1893), 373–74.

29 The National Academy of Design celebrates with its annual banquet the opening of "its new rooms, in the building of the Society Library. These rooms are spacious, commodious and elegant, and on this occasion the walls were adorned with the productions of the artists, just ready for the exhibition which opens on Monday [May 3]."—Eve. Post, My 1, 1841. See also ibid., My 5, 1841. Regarding this building, then known as the Athenæum building (The Knickerbocker, XVII: 445), see Ap 30 and D 5, 1840; L. M. R. K., III: 957; Man. Com. Coun. (1868), 484; Cummings, Historic Annals of the Natl. Acad. of Design.

May 4 A recent issue of the N. Am. Rev. contains an account of Laura Bridgman, "the child of one sense." This is supplemented by a letter from Boston, pub'd in the N. Y. Com. Adv. of June 4, 1841.

6 The common council passes a resolution stating terms for the leasing of Castle Garden.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, VIII: 148–49.

26 The legislature amends the act of May 2, 1834 (q. v.), which provided for supplying the city with pure water. The new act provides for raising the sum of $3,500,000 by the creation of "The Water Stock of the City of New York," the issuing of certificates of stock, and bonds for short loans. It requires the water commissioners to complete the aqueduct "down to and including the distributing reservoir at Murray's hill, according to the plan adopted by the said commissioners, and ratified by the common council . . ., with such immaterial alterations as may be necessary, and as may be agreed upon by the said water commissioners and the said common council." It gives the commissioners power and authority, with the common council's consent, "to change the plan of crossing the Harlem river with arches and piers, and instead thereof to carry the water across the said river by means of inverted syphons of iron pipes, until otherwise directed by the legislature, so as not unnecessarily to interrupt the navigation of the said river." The commissioners are also authorised, with the same consent, "to alter the plan of constructing the reservoir at or near to Yorkville, and to complete so much of such reservoir as shall be deemed sufficient for the present purposes of such aqueduct." It is made the duty of the common council "to execute all the work necessary for supplying the said city with water, and for distributing the same for the use of the inhabitants thereof, below the said distributing reservoir at Murray's hill;" and the common council is required to assume the execution of certain contracts made by the water commissioners "for work and materials to be supplied for the construction of the said aqueduct, below the said reservoir at Murray's hill." The contracts mentioned are for "work to be done on the Fifth avenue, between Fortieth and Twenty-first streets," and for iron pipe.—Laws of N. Y. (1841), chap. 306.

29 The new National Theater at the corner of Leonard and Church Sts. (see O 12, 1840) burns the second time (see S 23, 1839).—Eve. Post, My 30, 1841; Costello, Our Firemen, 233. This date of the fire corrects the L. M. R. K., III: 984.

June 2 The Bull's Head Tavern, at 24th St., and Third Ave., and other buildings on the block between 24th and 25th Sts., are destroyed by fire.—Eve. Post, Je 3, 1841.

3 The building committee of Trinity Church reported on Sept. 16, 1841, to the vestry that "on Thursday the 3rd of June 1841 they, in the presence of the Rector and several Members of the Vestry, caused to be deposited in the Northerly front buttress of the Tower of the new Edifice," a leaden box, containing certain memorials.

The inscription on the top of the box was:

"Laus Deo.
The Corporation of Trinity Church
in the City of New York commenced the erection of this Edifice
in the autumn of the year of our Lord 1839 in the 9th year of the Episcopate of Benjamin Tredwell Onderdonk, D. D.
Bishop of the diocese of New York upon the Site of a former Edifice, then become decayed and insecure on the front of which was a tablet with the following Inscription.
'D. O. M.
Trinity Church

1696 was enlarged and beautified in 1737 and entirely destroyed in the great conflagration of the City 1776
This building was erected on the site of the former Church
in the year 1788
Right Revd Samuel Provoost D. D. Rector.
James Duane Esq. } Churchwardens'"
John Jay Esq. }

This was the tablet, of marble, which, on May 9, 1791 (q. v.), was ordered placed over the front door of the former church.

On one side of the box were engraved the names of the rector, wardens, and vestrymen, and on the other side the following:

"Thomas Ludlow Ogden — Jonathan H. Lawrence
William E. Dunscomb — William H. Harison
Adam Tredwell, — and Robert Hyslop
"Building Committee
"Richard Upjohn — Architect
James Thorn — Sculptor
James Vandenbergh — Master Mason
Samuel Martin — Master Carpenter"

Berrian said that all the monuments and mural tablets formerly in the old church were placed in the rear apartments of the edifice, as directed by the vestry.—Hist. Sketch of Trinity Church, 345.

July 5 Hone describes the celebration of "the Fourth" on this day, Gov. Seward's review of troops in front of the Astor House, the dinner of the State Soc. of the Cincinnati at "Blanchard's Globe Hotel," etc.—Hone's Diary, II: 81.

21 The corner-stone of a new Rutgers St. Presbyterian church is laid, on the site of the old church, at the north-west corner of Rutgers and Henry Sts. It was opened April 21, 1842.—Eve. Post, Jl 20, 1841; The Great Metropolis or N. Y. Almanac for 1851, 71–72; Greenleaf, Hist. of the Churches, 135–36; L. M. R. K., III: 931.

22 "The Gothic building in Broadway heretofore known as Masonic Hall, has changed owners, and is now called 'The Halls of Temperance.' It is henceforth to be devoted to 'that great and moral cause, and to those rational amusements which are derived from the polite arts, music, poetry, and painting.' A grand opening fete will be given on the 26th instant, when the Halls will be dedicated, with appropriate ceremonies. The Library, with a suite of rooms for refreshment, will be open daily to subscribers, from 8 A. M. to 10 P. M."—Eve. Post, Jl 22, 1841, citing Jour. of Com.

28 A remarkable murder mystery developed in the discovery, on this day, in the Hudson, at "Sibyl's Cave," Hoboken, of the body of a beautiful young woman, named Mary Cecilia Rogers, a well-known employee of a shop in the St. Nicholas Hotel, at Broadway and Spring St., New York.—Eve. Post, Ag 6, 13, 16–21, 31, S 2, 13, 29, 1841 (and other papers of the period); Haswell, Reminiscences, 389; Walling, Recollections of a N. Y. Chief of Police (1887 & 1890), 1841 July 26–28. Edgar Allen Poe used the incident as the basis for his detective story, "The Mystery of Marie Rogêt." This is explained by Poe in the introductory paragraphs of the story, and by numerous footnotes in later editions of his collected works, which cite various New York newspapers and give local New York and New Jersey equivalents for places and persons in Paris, where the scenes of his story are laid. For the explanation of the mystery in New York, see N. Y. Com. Adv., N 18, 1842. See also the "Life of Charles Wallace," described in Herald-Tribune, Mr 21, 1926.

31 Two groups of trustees convey to the American Tract Society property which they have held in trust for that society. These grants were confirmed, and the title vested in fee simple in the society, by act of the legislature on April 12, 1842.—Laws of N. Y. (1842), chap. 279.

Aug. 22 Henry Brevoort dies in his 94th year.—N. Y. Com. Adv., Ag 23, 1841. Hone records: "He lived all his life upon his farm, now in Broadway, a short distance above my house [Hone was now at Broadway and Great Jones St.], which cost him a few hundred dollars, and is now worth to his heirs a half million."—Hone's Diary, II: 85.

Sept. 4 A riot caused by rival fire engine companies takes place in Houston St. One man is mortally wounded.—Eve. Post, S 6–8, 1841.

11 All of the members of Pres. Tyler's cabinet, except Webster, resign on account of his second veto of the national bank bill. New appointees were immediately nominated and their names sent to the senate.—Eve. Post, S 10–17, 1841.

20 The French frigate "La Belle Poule," under the command of the Prince de Joinville, and the brig-of-war "La Cassard" arrive at New York. On Sept. 21, the frigate came up to the Battery.—Eve. Post, S 21, 1841. See also ibid., S 22, 23, 24, 25, 1841.

22 The N. Y. & Erie R. R. Co. celebrates the opening of the road from Piermont to Goshen.—Eve. Post, S 24, 1841; Hone's Diary, II: 91.

23 "The late Franklin Theatre has received the name of Little Drury, and is appropriated to the performance of pieces in the German language."—Eve. Post, S 23, 1841.

27 The visit of the Prince de Joinville, who recently arrived in the harbour, is marked by a naval reception.—N. Y. Com. Adv., S 27, 1841. See, further, N 27.

Oct. 1 "The First Baptist Church of this city, have erected a beautiful building in Broome street, near the Bowery. It is finished in the Gothic, or old English style of architecture, and is collegiate in its character. . . .

"This elegant edifice is the work of Mr. Minard Le Fevre."—Eve. Post, O 1, 1841. See also L. M. R. K., III: 928.

5 The N. Y. Hist. Soc. meets in rooms provided for it in N.Y. University, having moved its library and collections from the Stuyvesant Institute (see 1837), which has been sold. Here the society remained until it erected its own building on Second Ave. (see O 17, 1855).—Kelby, The N. Y. Hist. Soc. (1900), 48–51; Com. Adv., D 7, 1841.

14 The corner-stone of the Sailors' Home is laid in Cherry St., between Pike and Market Sts.—Eve. Post, O 15, 1841. A rare view in the Eno collection, N. Y. P. L., shows this building. A periodical, called Sailor's Magazine, describes the establishment. In the print collection of the N. Y. P. L. is a cover of one of these magazines, having a view of the building.

27 A short history of No. 1 Broadway, one of the oldest mansions in the city, and now owned and occupied by F. Prince, is published.—N. Y. Com. Adv., O 27, 1841. See also descrip. of Pl. 98, III: 589–90.

28 Hone goes to see the distributing reservoir on Murray Hill, now nearly completed, and describes it in his diary.—Hone's Diary, II: 95–96; and see N. Y. Mirror, XVII: 391 (My 30, 1840).

N 5 Jared Sparks begins a course of lectures on the American Revolution in the chapel of N. Y. University, under the auspices of the N. Y. Hist. Soc.—Eve. Post, N 6, 1841. See also ibid., N 8, 12, 16, 1841.

Nov. 5 The Church of the Ascension, at the north-west corner of Fifth Ave. and 10th St. (Rev. Manton Eastburn, D. D., rector,—see Ap 6, 1828), is dedicated. It was erected from designs by, and under the superintendence of, Richard Upjohn. The rector's house was in the rear of the church.—N. Y. Com. Adv., N 6, 1841; Hone's Diary, II: 95; Greenleaf, 86–87.

17 "The merchants are to meet in their new room on the second story [of the exchange], for the first time, to-day."—N. Y. Com. Adv., N 17, 1841.

"The rotunda of the Merchants' Exchange in Wall street, the magnificent room in which the merchants of New York are to 'congregate,' was opened this day for their use. [See also descrip. of Pl. 118, III: 623.] The façade wants three columns to be complete, and the offices are all occupied by brokers, banks, money-changers, and those who deal in pigeons, if not 'those who sell doves.'"—Hone's Diary, II: 98; Eve. Post, N 18, 1841. In the slang of the period, a "pigeon" was a person easily swindled or plucked.—Cent. Dict. See, further, 1842.

The branch post-office, established on the north-west corner of Exchange Place and William St. after the fire of 1835, moved to the merchants' exchange on the completion of that building.—See descrip. of Pl. 115, III: 618.

26 Dr. and Mrs. Valentine Mott, "at their elegant house in Bleecker street, formerly the residence of Washington Coster," give an elaborate reception, dance, and supper in honour of the French Prince de Joinville. As described by Hone: "It was a superb, hot-pressed edition of New York's 'good society,' elegantly bound, with gilt edges and rich illuminations."—Hone's Diary, II: 100–1.

27 The corporation of New York gives a "grand dinner" to the Prince de Joinville at the Astor House, at which there are about 200 guests. It is described by Hone with characteristic frankness.—Hone's Diary, II: 101–2; Eve. Post, N 29, 1841.

Dec. 1 The marble statue of Washington, executed in Italy by the American artist Greenough, is placed in the rotunda of the capitol at Washington.—Hone's Diary, II: 104.

6 "This being the anniversary of the tutelar saint of the New Netherlands, the new ship built for a Havre packet, which bears his name [the "St. Nicholas"], was launched . . . from the ship-yards at the head of Cherry street . . ." Hone describes the ship, and the ceremony.—Hone's Diary, II: 103–4.

15 The steam fire-engine is taken to the Battery and put in operation. "A trial was made with it to throw water to the top of the liberty pole in the enclosure, which is considered to be about 175 feet in height. It at once forced a stream from a pipe, whose orifice was an inch and a half in diameter, to the top of the pole, and several jets went several feet above. Afterwards a pipe with an orifice seven-eights of an inch in diameter was added, and the two streams were forced up to about thirty feet below the top of the pole."—Eve. Post, D 16, 1841, citing Jour. of Com. See D 12, 1840.

16 The last of the 18 massive pillars that adorn the front of the merchants' exchange in Wall St. is placed in position on the anniversary of the great fire of 1835.—Eve. Post, D 17, 1841.

23 The mayor signs a joint resolution "That the Committee on Arts and Sciences be directed to procure a new City Flag or Color, for the City Hall."—Proc., App'd by Mayor, IX: 107. See also Seal and Flag of the City of N. Y. (1915), ed. by John B. Pine.

27 The contents of the American or Scudder's Museum are purchased by P. T. Barnum for $12,000 and removed to the building at the s. e. cor. of Broadway and Ann St.—Brown, I: 71. For a brief history of the museum from this time and views of the building, see Illus. News, II: 236–38; and a programme of Feb. 7, 1842, in Emmet coll. (item 11463). See also L. M. R. CHAPTER VI

PERIOD OF INDUSTRIAL AND EDUCATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

1842–1860

CHAPTER VI

PERIOD OF INDUSTRIAL AND EDUCATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

1842–1860

1842 IN this year, gold was first found in California, in the Los Angeles district.—Winsor, Nar. & Crit. Hist. of Am., VIII: 231.

— In this year, the first-class frigate "Savannah" was launched at New York.—The Navy of the U. S., 1775 to 1853 (Wash., 1853).

— The Earl of Carlisle (Lord Morpeth), writing of his travels, remarks: "I cannot refrain from one, I fear rather sensual, allusion to the oyster cellars of New-York. In no part of the world have I ever seen places of refreshment as attractive—everyone seems to eat oysters all day long. What signifies more, the public institutions and schools are there also extremely well conducted. . . . A real beggar is what you never see . . .; probably religious extremes are pushed farther than elsewhere; there certainly is a breadth and universality of religious liberty which I do not regard without some degree of envy."—Earl of Carlisle, Travels in Am. (N. Y., 1851), 27–30; and see Hone's Diary, II: 99, 248.

— In this year, the citizens of Brooklyn, through a committee petitioned the legislature for leave to remove the bones of the prison-ship martyrs (see Jl 4, 1839) "for the purpose of appropriate sepulchre." Mr. Benjamin Romaine, then 80 years of age, who at the time owned the ground containing the temporary vault which was erected in 1808 (q.v.), remonstrated. He said: ". . . They are my property. I have expended more than nine hundred dollars in and about their protection and preservation. I commend them to the care of the general government. I bequeath them to my country. . . . I suffered with those whose bones I venerate. I fought beside them; I bled with them." In consequence, nothing was then done.—See Rep. No. 176, house of reps., 28th cong., 2d sess., written by Henry C. Murphy in 1845 (q.v., F 25).

— In this year, a committee was appointed to inquire into the circumstances attending the finishing and furnishing of the New York custom-house. Its report is printed as house report No. 1065, 27th congress, 2d sess. House report No. 669 of the 27th cong., 2d sess., is a report made by Mr. Poindexter on the affairs of the custom-house in the city of New York; and house document No. 248 (of the same congress) contains a report from the secretary of the treasury, relative to the late New York custom-house commission. From these it appears that John Frazee was the architect and superintendent of the building, which, after 1863, was known as the "Sub Treasury." An act of April 11, 1860, provided for a payment to the widow of John Frazee "as architect and superintendent of the New York custom-house."—Statutes at Large, XII: 835. For earlier appropriations for the construction and furnishing of this building from July 13, 1832, to March 3, 1847, see ibid., IV: 574, 629; V: 24, 346, 379, 428; VI: 899; IX: 167. See also My 21, 1842.

— In this year, the new merchants' exchange, occupying the entire block bounded by Wall, William, Exchange, and Hanover Sts., was completed, it having been commenced in 1836 (q.v., under Mr 26), and opened for use in 1841 (q.v., N 17).—Belden, N. Y. Past, Present, & Future, 62. O. L. Holley, in Description of the City of N. Y. (1847), 24, gives a good description of it. While it is listed in the City Directory for 1840 and 1841, its completion was then only partial, as evidenced by Hone's note of Nov. 17, 1841 (q.v.).

Belden (supra) thus describes it: "It is built of beautiful syenite from Quincy, Mass., to which the quarries have given the name of 'Quincy granite,' and is entirely fire-proof. It consists of two main stories, with a high basement and an attic. It's principal front on Wall-street, 196 feet in length, is adorned by a colonnade of twelve Ionic columns. Within these is a range of six smaller columns, supporting the ceiling of a recess for the main entrance to the building. The shafts of these columns, thirty feet in hight [sic], are single blocks, weighing thirty-three tons. The Rotunda, the name applied to the Exchange Hall, occupies the centre of the edifice, and is surmounted by a magnificent dome, eighty feet in diameter, resting in part on eight splendid Corinthian columns of Italian marble. A large hall, in the western portion of the building, is devoted to the purposes of a Reading Room, containing files of papers from almost every country of the world. The other apartments are chiefly occupied by the offices of insurance companies, bankers and brokers. The cost of this noble edifice, including the ground on which it stands, which was purchased for $768,000, was about $1,800,000."—Cf. Hone's Diary, II: 98. For view of the building, probably prepared from the architect's design, see Pl. 118, Vol. III, and for description of this, and an outline history of its construction, etc., see III: 623, and L. M. R. K., III: 925. See, further, 1862. 1842 —

— In this year, the first important movement toward tenement house reform was made by Dr. John H. Griscom, city inspector, when he called attention to existing conditions, in his annual report to the board of aldermen. He stated that a large part of the diseases and deaths in the city was due to the crowded condition and insufficient ventilation of many of the dwellings and that these bad conditions arose from the sudden increase of the city's population, in 1817 and 1828, by the vast immigration of ignorant, poverty-stricken foreigners, who in the absence of restraining legislation were crowded into quarters unfit for human habitation. This overcrowding led in turn to unsanitary habits and great moral and social evils. Griscom advocated city legislation to prohibit the use of cellars as dwellings, to require the owner or lessee to keep the premises clean, and to forbid crowding in such limited spaces.—De Forest & Veiller, The Tenement House Problem, 71–75.

— In this year, the National Bank of Commerce, which up to this time had been in the merchants' exchange, leased and occupied, jointly with the Bank of the State of New York, the old building of the Bank of the United States, on the present site of the Assay Office, on Wall St. It remained here until 1853, when it sold the premises to the U. S. government, and moved to the corner of Broad St. and Exchange Place.—Hardenbrook, Financial New York. In 1842, the city directories show both the Bank of the State of N. Y. (see S 9, 1836) and the Bank of Commerce at this address, No. 15 Wall St. In 1843, the latter bank is given as at 15½ Wall St. See, further, 1844.

— In this year, the interior of the North Dutch Church (see Jl 2, 1767; L. M. R. K., III: 935) "was remodelled and somewhat modernized."—Greenleaf, 15. For a complete description of the church as it was a few years later, see that written by S. A. Warner, architect, for De Witt's Discourse (1857).

— In this year, the congregation of the "Tabernacle" Baptist Church bought the Laight St. Presbyterian Church, where the abolition riot occurred.—Life of Wm. Wallace Everts, D.D., by his son (Phila., 1891), 14, 18. See 1836.

— The Manual of the Common Council for 1842–3 bears on its title-page the name of "D. T. Valentine," who for 24 years thereafter continued to be its editor (through the issue of 1866). An item of special interest is a schedule of the number of new buildings erected from 1834 to 1841, as follows: In 1834, there were 877; in 1835, 1,259; 1836, 1,826; 1837, 840; 1838, 781; 1839, 674; 1840, 850; 1841, 971. See also an account of this Manual in Eve. Post, O 13, 1842. Regarding Valentine and his Manuals, see 1841;

— The "jet" in the Harlem River is shown in a view drawn in this year and reproduced and described in Vol. III, A. Pl. 18-b.

Jan. 15 "Uncle Sam must look out for the Yankees. They have nineteen package and letter expresses, running from Boston to various points in New England, and to New York and Albany. From New York only four run; of these, two go to Boston, one to Albany, and one to Philadelphia. The postage of Boston for the year ending June 30, 1841, was less by $8,102 than the preceding year, notwithstanding the opening of new and important lines of communication."—Eve. Post, Ja 15, 1842, citing Jour. of Com.

26 In the evening of this day, a preliminary meeting of citizens is held at the Astor House to plan a suitable welcome to Charles Dickens, who recently arrived in Boston on the Cunarder "Britannia." Resolutions of appreciative compliment are passed, and a general committee of eighty-eight appointed. Another committee is appointed "to withdraw and report forthwith a suitable plan for a Ball to be given to Mr. Dickens," and Philip Hone is requested to prepare (which he does immediately) a letter, which all the gentlemen present sign, inviting him and "his Lady" to attend this "public Ball." The committee on plan present at once a detailed report of their proposals, and a committee of eighteen as promptly named to carry it into effect.

The plan contains the following: "To heighten the effect, and in compliance with the desire universally expressed, it is recommended that the Ball Room represent various compartments of 'Curiosity Shop,' in which the productions of 'Boz' may be illustrated. In order to add a strikingly novel and agreeable feature to the intended fête, it is suggested that a number of Tableaux Vivants be formed by competent Artists in the intervals of the dance, drawn from the Novels, Sketches, Poems and Dramas of Mr. Dickens, and shadowing forth, in living pictures, the graphic and glowing delineations of this singularly gifted and original author."

As no ball-room in the city will be large enough, the plan recommends that the Park Theatre be engaged, and "that the Ball take place at the earliest date, of which due notice will be given in the public prints." A complete scheme of "decorations and devices for the Ball Room, and arrangements for the floor," is outlined; also the "Order of the Dances and Tableaux Vivant." There are 25 numbers in this programme, in which march, or waltz, or quadrille, or gallopade alternates with tableau. These tableaux bear the titles of Dickens' novels, sketches, and poems; also the title "Washington Irving in England and Charles Dickens in America."—Hist. Mag., 2d ser., II: 110–12. See, further, ibid., II: 112–13; N. Y. Mirror, XX: 49–51; Eve. Post, Ja 28 and 31, F 2, 1842; Hone's Diary, II: 109–10, 113, 114. For the account of the event, see F 14.

Feb. 2 "A new daily paper, of the smaller kind, has been started in this city, with the title of the Commercial Transcript. It appears diligently to collect the news of the day, and gives ample notices of the money market."—Eve. Post, F 2, 1842.

8 The "New-York Museum of Natural History and Science," which was incorporated in 1839 (q. v., Mr 6), but could not at that time carry its charter into effect, according to a circular published by the directors, has now begun to function. They have purchased the collection of curiosities and art in "Peale's Museum," arranged them, and, by this circular, invite the public to its opening on Feb. 8. On this occasion, an address was delivered by Dr. J. H. Griscom, in which he traced the history of Peale's Museum (founded by Chas. Wilson Peale).—N. Y. Mirror, XX: 71. According to Valentine, there was a "Lyceum of Natural History" at 563 Broadway in 1837.—Man. Com. Coun. (1865), 635.

" The "new and splendid" home of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Ray where a "fancy ball" was given on this evening, is generally considered "the greatest thing" of the kind in New York.—Hone's Diary, II: 114. For the probable location of the Ray residence, see Jl 19, 1848.

14 The "Boz ball" takes place at the Park Theatre. It is thus described by Philip Hone: "'The agony is over;' the 'Boz' ball, the greatest affair in modern times, the tallest compliment ever paid to a little man, . . . came off last evening [Feb. 14] . . .

"The theatre was prepared for the occasion with great splendour and taste. The whole area of the stage and pit was floored over, and formed an immense saloon. The decorations and ornaments were all 'Pickwickian.' Shields with scenes painted from several stories of Dickens, the titles of his works on others surrounded with wreaths, the dome formed of flags, and the side walls in fresco, representing the panels of an ancient oaken hall. A small stage was erected at the extreme end, opposite the main entrance, before which a curtain was suspended, exhibiting the portly proportions of the immortal Pickwick, his prince of valets, and his bodyguard of choice cronies. This curtain was raised in the intervals between the cotillons and waltzes, to disclose a stage on which were exhibited a series of tableaux vivants, forming groups of the characters in the most striking incidents of 'Pickwick,' 'Nicholas Nickleby,' 'Oliver Twist,' 'The Old Curiosity Shop,' 'Barneby Rudge,' etc. The company began to assemble at half-past seven o'clock, and at nine, when the committee introduced Mr. and Mrs. Dickens, the crowd was immense; a little upward of two thousand tickets were handed in at the door, and, with the members of the committees and their parties who came in by back ways, the assembled multitude numbered about two thousand five hundred. Everybody was there, . . . Refreshments were provided in the saloons on the several floors, and in the green room, which was kept for the members of the committees and their families. This branch of the business was farmed out to Downing, the great man of oysters, who received $2,200. On the arrival of the 'observed of all observers,' a lane was opened through the crowd, through which he and his lady were marched to the upper end, where the committee of reception were stationed. Here I, as chairman of that committee, received him, and made a short speech, after which they joined in the dancing. Feb. 14

"The author of the 'Pickwick Papers' is a small, bright-eyed, intelligent-looking young fellow, thirty years of age, somewhat of a dandy in his dress, with 'rings and things and fine array,' brisk in his manner, and of a lively conversation. If he does not get his little head turned by all this, I shall wonder at it. Mrs. Dickens is a little, fat, English-looking woman, of an agreeable countenance, and, I should think, 'a nice person.'"—Hone's Diary, II: 117–18. For accounts of the arrangements made for this event, see Ja 26. For social events which took place during the next few days, in honour of Dickens, including a great public dinner on Feb. 18, vide ibid., II: 118–22; Eve. Post, F 15, 18, 1842. " The Presbyterian Church in Second Ave. is sold to the Roman Catholics for $12,150.—Eve. Post, F 16, 1842, citing Jour. of Com.

20 The First Baptist Church (formerly of Gold St.), and later at the corner of Broome and Elizabeth Sts., is opened for public worship. Part of the building, fronting on Broome St., is occupied by the American and Foreign Bible Society and the American Home Mission Society. From this church, since its origin, have sprung the Second or Bethel, the Zoar, Abyssinian, Peekskill, North, Stamford, and Bethesda churches, and others.—Life of Spencer Houghton Cone, by his son (1856), 271–72. See My 2, 1802.

21 A patent for a sewing-machine is granted to John J. Greenough of Washington, D. C. This machine, however, was never introduced to public use.—Annals of N. Am., 587. Howe's machine, the first practical one, was not patented until 1846 (q. v., S 10). See also Mr 4, 1843.

23 "The clerks employed in the custom-house of this city have removed, with their books, &c., to the new building extending from Pine to Wall streets."—Eve. Post, F 23, 1842. See 1842, supra; and My, infra.

25 "City Despatch Post.—A post for the delivery of city letters has been established. Its utility and convenience are very obvious; the time is in fact arrived when, on account of the growth and extent of the city, it has become almost a matter of necessity. We are glad to hear that it is undertaken by persons in whom the public can place confidence. The deliveries of letters and packages take place three times a day. It is to be hoped that the undertaking will meet with sufficient encouragement to reward the enterprise of those who have projected it."—Eve. Post, F 25, 1842. See Ag 13.

Mar. 3 Ralph Waldo Emerson begins a series of six lectures on "The Times," at the Society Library.—Eve. Post, F 28, Mr 3, 4, 7, 9, 16, 1842.

24 A circular, bearing this date, is published, headed "New-York & Albany Rail-Road." It says, in part: "We believe that the immediate construction of a Rail Road, between New-York and Albany, is absolutely necessary, to the Commercial and Landed interests of New-York,—and that such a Road can be constructed, as will not only secure to us the benefits of our heretofore unrivalled position, but will also produce a large income upon its cost to the Stockholders . . ." The agitation awakened by this address, 1842 Mar. 24 which was signed by 13 prominent men of New York, resulted in the construction of the N. Y. & Hudson River R. R., which was commenced in 1847 (q. v.), and was finished and equipped in 1851, at a cost of $9,305,551, "thereby connecting New York with a chain of little railways extending westward from Albany to Buffalo. All of these, whose combined capital amounted to $22,858,600, and the Hudson River line, were finally combined under one corporate ownership. . . ."—Dunbar, A Hist. of Travel in Am., III: 993.

26 The National Academy of Design "has enriched its collection by the purchase of the statuary, lately belonging to the American Academy of Fine Arts, and now undoubtedly possesses the finest gallery of casts to be found in the country, and perhaps equalled by few abroad."—Eve. Post, My 26, 1842.

Apr. — In this month, the Philharmonic Society of New York was founded.—Krehbiel, The Philharmonic Soc. of N. Y. (1892), 16. Another society of the same name flourished in 1799 (q. v.).

11 The legislature extends to New York City and County the provisions of the Revised Statutes in relation to common schools. An act provides for the election in each ward of two commissioners, two inspectors, and five trustees of common schools. The commissioners shall constitute a board of education. Their powers and duties, and other provisions in relation thereto, are defined in this new school law. For educational purposes, each of the city wards "shall be considered as a separate town." The commissioners are to serve without compensation, but "shall receive their actual and reasonable expenses while attending to the duties of their office."—Laws of N. Y. (1842), chap. 150. This law was extensively amended by ibid. (1843), chap. 216 (see also Man. Com. Coun., 1858, 615); and by ibid. (1844), chap. 320, and later acts, all of which were repealed by the act of July 3, 1851 (q. v.), which consolidated and amended them.

" The legislature passes a law authorising the mayor and common council "to pass such by-laws and ordinances, as to them shall seem meet, for the preservation and protection of all or any of the works connected with the supplying of the city of New-York with pure and wholesome water, . . . and also to organize a department with full powers for the management of such works and the distribution of the said water."—Laws of N. Y. (1842), chap. 225.

" The legislature makes provision for the acquisition of burial places by religious corporations in the city of New York.—Laws of N. Y. (1842), chap. 153.

12 Robert H. Morris, Democrat, is re-elected mayor.—Eve. Post, Ap 13, 1842.

" The legislature incorporates the Mutual Life Insurance Co. Among the incorporators are W. H. Aspinwall, Jas. S. Wadsworth, Philip Van Rensselaer, John V. L. Pruyn, Alfred Pell, David C. Colden, Robt. B. Minturn, Mortimer Livingston, Henry Brevoort, Theodore Sedgwick, James Boorman, Fitz-Greene Halleck, John A. King, and several others. Its powers and duties are defined.—Laws of N. Y. (1842), chap. 246.

20 "A large number of men are now actively engaged in laying pipes from the Croton Water Works, in that part of Broadway which is between Houston and Broome streets. The Commissioner of the Aqueduct has given notice that the water will be let into the distribution pipes on or before the 4th of July next."—Eve. Post, Ap 20, 1842. See Je 13.

21 The new Rutgers St. Presbyterian Church (see L. M. R. K., III: 931), a Gothic edifice of stone, is dedicated.—N. Y. Com. Adv., Ap 22, 1842.

28 Hone observes: "Scarcely a day passes that we do not hear of some steamboat being blown up, . . . or of a locomotive running off the railroad. . . ."—Hone's Diary, II: 127.

" The common council orders that a fire-alarm bell be placed on the halls of justice (in Centre St.).—Proc., App'd by Mayor, IX: 159.

May — In this month, the new custom-house was completed and furnished, at a total cost of $980,000. The building is described at length in the N. Y. Com. Adv., Jl 13, 1842. It was commenced in May, 1834 (q. v.).—Ibid.; Hone's Diary, II: 138; descrip. of Pl. 166, III: 848. See 1842; F 23, 1842. See, further, My 21.

5 The Presbyterian church in Murray St. is being taken down.—Eve. Post, My 5, 1842. It was re-erected on the north side of 8th St. facing Lafayette Place.—N. Y. Com. Adv., Ap 26, 1842; The Great Metropolis of N. Y. Almanac for 1851, 64; Greenleaf, Hist. of the Churches, 207–9. The church in Murray St. stood opposite Columbia College, where it was erected in 1812 (q. v.), and was the property of the Third Associate Reformed Presbyterian Church, which had been organized in 1810 under the charge of the Rev. John M. Mason.—Greenleaf. See, further, S 20, 1846. May 5

In its new location it became known as the "Eighth St. Church." On Sept. 20, 1846, it ceased to be occupied as a Presbyterian church, and, after being occupied by several other congregations, it was finally leased to the Church of the Mediator (see My, 1849).—The Great Metropolis . . . for 1851, 64 (with view on p. 62).

Philip Hone writes that the Union Club (see My 27, 1837) "is now pretty well settled in its new quarters,—Mr. William B. Astor's large house in Broadway, higher up the street, and on the opposite side from the former situation. . . . It has been newly furnished and put in handsome order at an expense (including a new building in the rear) of $7,000. . . ."—Hone's Diary, II: 129. Mr. Astor lived at 376 Broadway in 1841, after which he lived at 32 Lafayette Place.—City Directory. See also L. M. R. K., III: 939; and the club's handbook of 1912. 13

A great public meeting is held in the Park to "remonstrate against the interposition of the United States troops in the political controversies of Rhode Island."—Eve. Post, My 18, 1842. 17

The services of John Frazee, as architect and superintendent of the N. Y. custom-house, which began March 3, 1841 (see Mr 14, 1835), terminate on this day. This appears in an order of congress directed to the secretary of the treasury, dated April 11, 1860, to pay his widow, Lydia Frazee, $2,868 for such services.—U. S. Statutes at Large, XII: 335. 21

A congressional report, dated Aug. 20, 1842, on the subject of the furnishings of the new custom-house, which involved controversies as to the manner of expending the appropriations, states that Mr. Bowne, on Dec. 5, 1840, had dismissed Frazee from office; but that in March, 1841, it was recommended by Mr. Woodbury that Frazee be continued as "superintendent and architect of the building," and that his plan for the interior arrangements be carried out. Frazee consented to superintend the completion of the building, and design its decorations and furniture without compensation.—House Rep. No. 1065, 27th congress (1842). It appears to have been for these services that the Widow Frazee was paid.

The cost of the building was $960,000; and of the furniture, $25,000.—N. Y. Com. Adv., Jl 13, 1842. In 1863 (q. v.), it was converted into the present sub-treasury.—L. M. R. K., III: 973 (under "City Hall, second"); and descrip. of Pl. 166, III: 848.

Charles Dickens and his wife sail for home.—Eve. Post, Je 7, 1842; Haswell's Reminiscences, 383. Mr. and Mrs. James G. King give a parting breakfast at "Highwood." Hone was one of the guests, and wrote of it. He was also invited by Grinnell, Minturn & Co., owners of the ship "George Washington," to be one of a party to accompany Mr. and Mrs. Dickens to Sandy Hook. He describes the scenes on board, including a jolly "collation" with speeches and toasts.—Hone's Diary, II: 131–32. See Ag 17. 7

"It gives us pleasure to state that the Faculty of the Medical Department of the University of New York, have purchased that valuable edifice known as the Stuyvesant Institute [on Broadway above Bleecker St.]. This fine specimen of architecture, which ranks amongst the principal ornaments of our city, was built by an association of gentlemen at an expense of $120,000, for the advancement of scientific purposes; and we are quite sure that the public will agree with us that it has fallen into hands worthy of its original design, and able to carry that design into execution."—Eve. Post, Je 9, 1842. 9

"Messrs. Stevens, Ward, Ring, Birdsall, French, Jarvis and Allen, the commissioners of the Croton Water Works, have just returned from a minute examination of the interim [interior] of the works . . . 13

"They entered the Aqueduct at its mouth at the Croton river and pursued the examination down to Sing Sing, continuing their examination under ground to Harlem river, a distance of thirty-three miles; which under ground examination employed them three days. In the lowest cut, which is above Sing Sing, they were seventy feet below the surface of the earth; and at the Mill river embankment they were eighty-five feet above the surface of the earth below. . . .

"The line of Aqueduct and the Dam will both be so far completed as to introduce the water into the city by the time proposed by the Commissioners—on the 4th of July.

1842 June 13 "The pipes across the Harlem River are already laid, and have been filled with water to prove their tightness and ability to resist the head, which is about one hundred and twenty feet. In both respects the proof was satisfactory."—Eve. Post, Je 13, 1842. See Je 22.

22 Water is let into the Croton Aqueduct at its mouth on Croton Lake, and the commissioners accompany it down, sometimes in their barge, "The Croton Maid of Croton Lake," and sometimes on the surface of the aqueduct. At one o'clock on June 23 they reached the Harlem and "emerged to the surface of the earth in their subterranean barge."—Eve. Post, Je 24, 1842; Colden, Memoir Croton Aqueduct, 193. See Je 27.

27 The Croton water is admitted into the upper reservoir at Yorkville.—Eve. Post, Je 29, 1842; Colden, Memoir Croton Aqueduct 195–96; L. M. R. K., III: 976. See Jl 4.

July — During the summer of this year, Col. Frémont's first expedition to the Rocky Mountains was made. His report was ordered printed by the U. S. senate. In 1843, on his second exploration, he passed through the western slope of the Rocky Mountains, then an unexplored wilderness. The Great Salt Lake, the Sierra Nevada, and the valleys of California were brought to public notice.—Annals of N. Am., 587, 590; Winsor, Nar. & Crit. Hist. of Am., VII: 558; VIII: 260.

4 At sunrise, the Croton water was introduced into the distributing reservoir at 42d St., with appropriate ceremonies. An "immense concourse" assembled to witness the event.—Eve. Post, Jl 5, 1842; Colden, Memoir Croton Aqueduct, 195–96; descrip. of Pl. 145, III: 715; L. M. R. K., III: 975. See also marble tablet in N. Y. Public Library, which now stands on the site of the reservoir.

8 "A. Brower, at 244 Water street, gives notice that he will supply all persons, who are in want of pipes for the conveyance of the water of the Croton Aqueduct to their houses, that he has the necessary fixtures prepared, with a supply of patent lead pipes, and compression faucets peculiarly adapted to the purpose, being able to withstand a heavy pressure."—Eve. Post, Jl 8, 1842.

12 Hone describes the receiving and distributing reservoirs, the one near Yorkville, the other at Murray Hill. The Croton water system is completed, "with the exception of the magnificent aqueduct by which it is intended to convey the water across the Harlem river, where pipes are now temporarily laid down from one bank to the other on a level with the water."—Hone's Diary, II: 137. Addenda Pl. 18-b, Vol. III, shows the "jet," probably from this pipe-line, before the construction of High Bridge.

14 The French steam frigate "Gomer" arrives at New York and anchors off the Battery. This frigate brought out five commissioners, who "were appointed by the Department of Marine, Finance, Commerce, and Foreign Affairs, in France to examine the different ports of North and South America, and determine which are the most suitable to direct the lines of French steamers to, that are soon to be established."—Eve. Post, Jl 14–16, 1842. See also ibid., Jl 29, 1842. See, further, Ja 27, 1843.

20 The mayor and common council accept an invitation from the president and directors of the N. Y. and Albany R. R. Co. (see Ap 17, 1832) "to witness the commencement of that important work, the early completion of which the interests of the city are identified with." A joint committee of aldermen and assistants is appointed "to make the necessary arrangements."—Proc., App'd by Mayor, X: 4–5. See D 14.

26 Wm. D. Disbrow, "Proprietor of the Equestrian Exchange, on Vauxhall Gardens and Lafayette Place," has "fitted that spacious arena for the purpose of a Riding Academy."—Eve. Post, Jl 26, 1842.

30 "The City Hall.—The capitol at Washington is white-washed to conceal the discoloration caused by the disgraceful incendiarism of the British. Would it not be well to administer the same treatment to the rear of our City Hall? The two sides are now in ludicrous contrast; the front, white for ornament; the rear, brown for economy."—N. Y. Mirror, XX: 247. The rear was not painted white until 1890 (q. v., My 13).

Aug. 8 The commissioners of the Croton aqueduct report that Croton water has reached New York City and is flowing in its streets.—Colden, Memoir Croton Aqueduct, 193.

9 The Webster-Ashburton treaty is signed by Great Britain and the U. S., fixing the north-east boundary between the U. S. and the British provinces.—Winsor, VII: 179, 292, 493, 525, 554; VIII: 231. See, further, Ag 13.

Aug. 12 "Croton Water.—Very small exertions are at present made by our citizens to introduce this water into their dwellings. This inactivity seems to proceed from the uncertainty respecting the charge for the water. Whether its use shall be a tax upon the landlord or tenant of the premises to which it is conveyed, or whether it shall be free to all the citizens, and the expenses of the department defrayed by a general tax, seem to be the questions which require a settlement. If the present mode of taxing the premises is permanently adopted it is very certain that the water will be used only to a limited extent, and by only those citizens who can afford to purchase for their residence such an additional convenience. The great mass of the people, who are tenants, will derive no benefits from it, and the health of the city will not be materially improved.

"Again: if the expenses of the department are paid by a tax on the entire property of the city, and the water made free to all the citizens, a very general introduction of the pipes into the dwellings may ultimately take place. But tenants must, in this case be particular to select premises having this convenience attached to them before any others. There will still remain a large class whose dwellings are certain to be readily occupied without any consideration of this kind. They would probably derive more benefit from the free use of the water than any others, yet of all others they would have the least access to it. It has been suggested that the regulations of the city should make it the interest of the landlord to furnish a pipe to his premises. Such regulations would have, doubtless much influence; but there are a large number beyond their reach, for whose supply hydrants must be adopted. These questions are beginning to be of pressing importance to the citizens, and a speedy decision of them is required."—Eve. Post, Ag 12, 1842. See also ibid., Ag 19, 20, 22, 23, 1842.

13 "The Post-Master General has ordered that a City Despatch Post should be established in this city. For that purpose, about one hundred stations have been selected in different places, where letters may be deposited. They will then be delivered three times a day, at three cents each. To effect this arrangement, the gentlemen who have heretofore had in operation a private despatch post [see F 25], have been employed by the Post-Master of this city, and have transferred their whole concern to the Post-Office establishment.—The security of the letters will, doubtless, be as great as in the Post-Office, and the rapidity of their delivery will add much to the convenience of the citizens."—Eve. Post, Ag 13, 1842.

" The common council requests the mayor "to tender the use of the Governor's Room to Lord Ashburton, on his arrival, to receive the visits of our citizens," and appoints a committee to "wait on him and welcome him to the City."—Proc., App'd by Mayor, X: 23. He came to the United States on business connected with the treaty of Aug. 9 (q. v.). See, further, S 1.

17 Hone records in his diary: "A letter has been published in some of our newspapers, signed 'Charles Dickens,' dated July 15, and addressed from 'Devonshire Terrace, Parkgate,' 'To the Editor of the Morning Chronicle,' which contains some sentiments so derogatory to our country, in which the writer has been so recently honoured to the full extent of his deserving, that nothing is left for Mr. Dickens but to deny its authenticity, to save himself from the charges of wilful misrepresentation and gross ingratitude. I have written him a letter, calling for his avowal or denial of this unworthy piece of splendid impudence. . . ." He transcribes the alleged Dickens letter into his diary, and hopes that it may prove a forgery. On Oct. 7, he received Dickens' reply, and records: "It turns out as I supposed. The scurrilous remarks on the United States, to which his name is subscribed, and which were so promptly taken up by the rascally penny papers and published through the country, were a base forgery, gotten up probably by one of the craft on this side of the water." He enters in his diary the text of Dickens' reply; this states, in part:

"The letter to which you refer is, from beginning to end, in every word and syllable, the cross of every t and the dot of every i, a most wicked and nefarious forgery. I have never published one word or line in reference to America, in any quarter whatever, except the copyright circular, and the unhung scoundrel who invented that astounding lie knew this as well as I do. It has caused me more pain, and more of a vague desire to take somebody by the throat, than such an event should perhaps have awakened in any honourable man. But I have not contradicted it publicly, deeming that it would not become my character or elevate me in 1842 Aug. 17 my own self-respect to do so. I shall hope to send for your acceptance next month my 'American Notes'. Meanwhile, and always, and with cordial remembrance to all friends,

"I am, my dear sir, faithfully yours,

"Charles Dickens."

Sept. 1 A public dinner in honour of Lord Ashburton is held at the Astor House.—Eve. Post, S 2, 1842; N. Y. Com. Adv., S 5, 1842. See also Hone's Diary, II: 110, 124, 139 140, 142, 143, 154.

17 "Preparations were commenced yesterday for the erection of a fountain in front of the City Hall, in the Park. Another is to be erected in the rear of the Hall, and one is now nearly completed in Union Square" (see O 11).—Eve. Post, S 17, 1842. See also L. M. R. K., III: 964. The common council appropriates $1,500 for the erection of the fountain in the Park, in addition to the $1,000 already appropriated.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, X: 47. See O 13.

" The common council appropriates $2,000 to level, sod with grass, and enclose with a fence "the portion of Madison Square belonging to the Corporation."—Proc., App'd by Mayor, X: 232.

22 The corporation of Trinity Church buys a piece of land in the Twelfth Ward, from Richard F. Carman, situated in what is called the Village of Carmansville (L. M. R. K., III: 986). Here the present Trinity Cemetery was developed, bounded by Amsterdam Ave., the Hudson River, and 153d and 155th Sts., and intersected by Broadway. For a descriptive and historical account of this development, see the 18th Ann. Rep. Am. Scenic & Hist. Pres. Soc. (1913), 463–66. The part of W. 154th St., between Tenth Ave. and the river, was closed by the legislature on March 17, 1843. —Laws of N. Y. (1843), chap. 53. The cemetery was opened in 1844 (q.v., Je 25).

23 "The important work of introducing the Waters of the Croton Reservoir into the City of New York is now completed. . . ." The common council passes a resolution for the appointment of a committee "to make arrangements for commemorating this event in a manner corresponding with its vast importance." It appropriates $2,000 for the celebration, and orders that the committee be requested "to report a programme of the ceremonies of the day."—Proc., App'd by Mayor, X: 61–62. See also descrip. of Pl. 126-a, III: 689. See O 10.

28 "Croton Water.—The decision of the Aqueduct Commissioners is, that hydrants shall be constructed in the streets, from which the water may be taken gratuitously by any who may wish. For its introduction to houses there will be a charge, for a two story house $10, for a three story house $12."—Eve. Post, S 28, 1842.

Oct. 10 The committee appointed by the common council to make arrangements for celebrating the introduction of Croton water (see S 23) makes its report.—King, Memoir of Croton Aqueduct, 227–28; descrip. of Pl. 126-a, III: 689.

11 The fountain in Union Square is tried. "It throws up a noble column of water to a height as great almost as the houses which surround the square. In the course of the afternoon, the column and surrounding jets were made to take different appearances, by enlarging or narrowing the apertures. . . . In the evening, by the moonlight, the effect of the fountain showering its spray on every side, was exceedingly fine.

"The fountain at the Park, which has a still larger head of water, and which, therefore, may be made to produce a finer effect, has several times been satisfactorily tried, and at each time has attracted a crowd of spectators from the neighboring streets. These fountains will be in full play on Friday, the day of the great Croton Celebration."—Eve. Post, O 12, 1842.

12 "Nothing is talked of or thought of in New York but Croton water; fountains, aqueducts, hydrants, and hose attract our attention and impede our progress through the streets. Political spouting has given place to water-spouts, and the free current of water has diverted the attention of the people from the vexed questions of the confused state of the national currency. It is astonishing how popular the introduction of water is among all classes of our citizens, and how cheerfully they acquiesce in the enormous expense which will burden them and their posterity with taxes to the latest generation. Water! Water! is the universal note which is sounded through every part of the city, and infuses joy and exultation into the masses, even though they are out of spirits."—Hone's Diary, II: 150–51.

13 "The Fountains.—The large basin recently constructed in the Park, although merely the foundation of a magnificent structure to be completed at some future day yet presents great attraction, not only from its novelty to our water sparing citizens, but from the beauty and magnificence of the fountain itself, that cannot be surpassed in this country. The basin is 100 feet in diameter, and the whole fountain is composed of one main centre jet, and twenty-four subordinates, all of which can be charged, so as to present different views and forms. The cast iron plates already prepared for the centre jet present three changes—the first a close column fifty feet in height, called 'The Maid of the Mist'; the second, with a centre and sides, called 'The Croton Plume'; and the third, in an expanded shape, termed 'The Fan.' The outside or subordinate jets, can be made to throw a stream from fifteen to twenty feet, in any direction desired. They are all regulated by the iron bar above the water in the basin, so as to present a change of appearance, merely by enlarging or narrowing the apertures by valves placed beneath. Oct. 13

"The fountain in Union Place, although of smaller size, presents a most beautiful effect when in operation. Our citizens, as well as the numerous strangers who visit the city on Friday [Oct. 14], will then have an opportunity to witness them both in full display."—N. Y. Herald, O 13, 1842; descrip. of Pl. 135, III: 702.

14 A great celebration is held in honour of the completion of the Croton aqueduct. Invitations were sent to Pres. Tyler, the living ex-presidents, the chief diplomatic representatives, the state officials, and the cities of Brooklyn, Albany, Troy, Jersey City, Newark, Philadelphia, etc. The day was ushered in by the firing of a national salute, and the bells of all the churches were rung an hour, at sunrise, at noon, and at sunset. At 9 o'clock, a banner was presented, at the mayor's office, to the Fire Department, and at ten o'clock, the great military and civic parade commenced, the procession moving up from the Battery through State St., around Bowling Green, up Broadway to Union Park, around the park and down the Bowery to Grand St., through Grand St. to East Broadway, down East Broadway and through Chatham St. to City Hall Park. As the procession passed the Park and Union Square, the fountains there began to play. The whole line of march was thronged with people. At the city hall, Samuel Stevens, president of the Board of State Water Commissioners, made an address, and John L. Lawrence, president of the Croton Aqueduct Board, replied. An original ode, composed for the occasion by George P. Morris, was then sung by about 200 members of the New York Sacred Music Society from a stage erected in the Park, and the ceremonies closed with loud cheers. After the ceremonies, the governor, mayor, members of the common council, and several hundred citizens partook of a "cold collation," which was served in the city hall. To commemorate the celebration, a silver medal was struck, which showed on one side a section of the aqueduct, and on the other a view of the distributing reservoir at 42d St.—King, Memoir of the Croton Aqueduct (1843), 229–306; Hone's Diary, II: 151–52; Eve. Post, O 15 and 17, 1842. The programme for the celebration was printed in ibid., O 13, 1842. A view of the parade is reproduced as Pl. 126-a, Vol. III. For views and descriptions of the aqueduct, see King, op. cit.; Tower, Illustrations of the Croton Aqueduct (1842); *Man. Com. 18 The first submarine telegraph cable, the invention of Prof. Morse, having been laid between Governor's Island and the Battery, is tested.—Eve. Post, O 18, 1842; Haswell's Reminiscences, 402–3.

20 Some restriction on members of the common council in the matter of carriage hire seems desirable, and it is resolved "that no charge for carriage hire shall hereafter be allowed, unless incurred by a committee, or a member of the Common Council, in the performance of official duty."—Proc., App'd by Mayor (1842–3), 71. See Ag 27, 1853.

Nov. — In Oct. or Nov., Dickens published his observations and impressions of America, under the title American Notes (see Ag 17). The book reached New York on Nov. 7.—Hone's Diary, II: 157, 158. Of this city he wrote, in part:

"The great promenade and thoroughfare, as most people know, is Broadway; a wide and bustling street, which, from the Battery Gardens to its opposite termination in a country road, may be four miles long. Shall we sit down in an upper floor of the Carlton House Hotel (situated in the best part of this main artery of New York),

1842 Nov. — and when we are tired of looking down upon the life below, Sally forth arm-in-arm, and mingle with the stream? . . .

"Warm weather! The Sun strikes upon our heads at this open window, as though its rays were concentrated through a burning glass; but the day is in its zenith, and the season an unusual one. Was there ever such a sunny street as this Broadway! The pavement stones are polished with the tread of feet until they shine again; the red bricks of the houses might be yet in the dry, hot kilns; and the roofs of those omnibuses look as though, if water were poured on them, they would hiss and Smoke, and smell like half-quenched fires. No stint of omnibuses here! Half-a-dozen have gone by within as many minutes. Plenty of hackney cabs and coaches too; gigs, phaetons, large-wheeled tilburies, and private carriages rather of a clumsy make, and not very different from the public vehicles, but built for the heavy roads beyond the city pavement. Negro coachmen and white; in straw hats, black hats, white hats, glazed caps, fur caps; in coats of drab, black, brown, green, blue, nankeen, striped jean and linen; and there, in that one instance (look while it passes, or it will be too late), in suits of livery. Some southern republican that, who puts his blacks in uniform, and swells with Sultan pomp and power. Yonder, where that phaeton with the well-clipped pair of grays has stopped —standing at their heads now—is a Yorkshire groom, who has not been very long in these parts, and looks sorrowfully round for a companion pair of top-boots, which he may traverse the city half a year without meeting. Heaven save the ladies, how they dress! We have seen more colours in these ten minutes, than we should have seen elsewhere, in as many days. What various parasols! What rainbow silks and satins! What pinking of thin stockings, and pinching of thin shoes, and fluttering of ribbons and silk tassels, and display of rich cloaks with gaudy hoods and linings! The young gentlemen are fond, you see, of turning down their shirt-collars and cultivating their whiskers, especially under the chin; but they cannot approach the ladies in their dress or bearing, being, to say the truth, humanity of quite another sort . . ."—American Notes, 1st ed. (1842), I: 187–88, 192–94, 196–97.

An account of the reception which Dickens' observations of America and American society received in this country is found in Haswell's Reminiscences, 383–84. See also descrip. of Pl. 121, III: 628.

4 Daniel Webster, now in New York, receives callers in the governor's room of the city hall.—Eve. Post, N 5, 1842; Hone's Diary, II: 154.

10 "Mr. John Delmonico, the respectable proprietor of the great hotel and restaurant in William street [see D 18, 1830], died on Thursday" (Nov. 10).—Hone's Diary, II: 158. On Nov. 14, Hone recorded: ". . . Delmonico Brothers . . . Restaurant, bar-room, and private dinners No. 2 South William street; furnished rooms No. 76 Broad street, as usual."—Ibid., II: 160.

26 Jas. Watson Webb is sentenced to imprisonment for leaving the state to fight a duel, and for fighting a duel with Thos. Marshall.—Hone's Diary, II: 160.

Dec. 14 The common council passes a resolution expressing appreciation of the proposed railroad between New York and Albany. It is "indispensable to the welfare of the commercial, mercantile and mechanical interests of our City. . . ." New York "must be connected to the agricultural districts of our country by railroad. . . ." Patriotism and self-interest demand "the hearty co-operation of all citizens, to secure the immediate construction of the New York and Albany Rail Road, in the shortest possible time," and this resolution pledges "our individual assistance in the several wards, to procure subscriptions." The company's capital stock will be "a safe investment;" "sure and large returns will speedily be realized from the profits of the road, on its completion." In the event of invasion or "internal commotion," this railroad, by connecting New York with "the State and United States depot of war in the interior of our State, and in New England," will give this city "an impregnable position." The road "merits the fostering care of our Councils."—Proc., App'd by Mayor, X: 122–23.

In this year was published a circular letter urging New York business men to subscribe toward the building of this road, which says in part: "We believe that the immediate construction of a Rail Road, between New York and Albany, is absolutely necessary, to the Commercial and Landed interests of New York. . . ." See My 12, 1846.

" The common council orders that the N. Y. & Harlem R. R. Co. be required to discontinue the use of steam power on Fourth Ave., south of the north line of 32d St., on or before Aug. 1, 1845.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XII: 216. The order was not obeyed, and, on March 30, 1846, the corporation counsel was directed to take legal measures to stop the use of steam power below 32d St.—Ibid., XIII: 377. See Mr 30, 1846. Dec. 14

"At the American Museum [Barnum's], may be seen a dwarf of the very smallest class, lately brought from England. His family name is Stratton, but he answers to the appellation of General Tom Thumb. He is said to be eleven years of age, and is twenty two inches high, or about the size of an infant six months old. He is dressed like a grown person, has a full set of teeth apparently of the second growth, walks about the room, answers when spoken to and does as he is directed with perfect docility. It is said that his growth ceased when about six months old."—Eve. Post, D 14, 1842. See also Brown, Hist. of the N. Y. Stage, I: 71. "

29 The city conveys to the Assn. for the Benefit of Colored Orphans a plot of ground (20 lots) on the west side of Fifth Ave. between 43d and 44th Sts., extending 250 ft. on each street.—Liber Deeds, DCLXX: 592; Jour. & Docs. of the Bd. of Assts., XIX: 240, 259. A condition of the gift was that the association should "maintain, clothe, and keep, twelve Colored Pauper Children, without any charge to said City."—Proc., App'd by Mayor, IX: 166. Here the association immediately erected an asylum. It was a substantial edifice, accommodating 200 children. It was not only a place of refuge but also an educational institution where they received instruction and training (see D 7, 1847); then suitable situations were found for them. It was supported not only by private munificence but also by city and state appropriations.—Belden, N. Y. Past, Present & Future (1849), 99; Phelps' N. Y. City Guide (1854), 23–24; L. M. R. K., III: 953. This was one of the first buildings in New York to be heated by hot water in iron pipes.—Eve. Post, S 28, 1843; and see ibid., D 9 and 12, 1843.

On May 1, 1848, the city added a strip of land 50 ft. wide (4 lots), running from street to street, making the plot 300 ft. deep.—Liber Deeds, DXX: 260, 262. See, further, the draft riots of 1863.

31 In this year, 1,963 ships with 74,949 passengers arrived at the port of New York.—Eve. Post, Ja 5, 1843, citing Jour. of Com.

" In the course of 1842, 417 commercial houses and 918 commission houses in New York, with a capital of nearly $46,000,000, were engaged solely in the foreign trade.—Valentine, Man. Com. Coun. (1842–3), 97.

1843

— In this year, Prescott published his Conquest of Mexico, and his Peru.—Winsor, II: 425; 577.

— In this year, Col. Frémont made his second expedition to the Rocky Mountains.—Winsor, VIII: 260.

— In this year, the subject of the annexation of Texas was first agitated.—Winsor, VII: 291.

— In this year, the first American clipper, the "Rainbow," of 750 tons, was built, for the China trade.—New International Encyc., V: 467.

— In this year, the Moravian Church, built in 1829 (q. v., Ag 13) on the south side of Fulton St., between William and Dutch Sts., was taken down, and the ground sold. A new purchase of ground was made on the corner of Houston and Mott Sts. Here a large, substantial, brick church was erected, and was opened for worship June 29, 1845.—Greenleaf, 278. See also Vol. I, p. 237.

— In this year, Sherman & Smith published a map of the city showing topography and old buildings.—See map No. 822 in real estate bureau of comptroller's office.

— In this year, an assessment was levied for regulating 23d St. between Third and Eighth Aves.—Index to Assessment Rolls, Vol. I.

— "As late as 1843 it [the Pitt statue] was in the yard of the arsenal on the site of the Harlem Railroad Depot near the city prison."—Mag. Am. Hist., VII: 149. Cf. Stevens, Progress of N. Y. in a Century, 1776–1876, 14–15. The next recorded location of the statue was in front of the Fifth Ward Museum Hotel, corner West Broadway and Franklin St., on April 26, 1847 (q. v.).

— In this year, the Association for Improving the Condition of the Poor was formed. Incorporated in 1848 (q. v.), it is still maintained under the familiar designation of the "A. I. C. P." For an account of its early work, see Richmond's N. Y. and Its Institutions (1871), 505–8; Eve. Post, F 10, 1844. It led to the formation of the following institutions, societies, etc.: In 1851, the Demilt

1843 Dispensary, and the N. Y. Juvenile Asylum; 1852, the North— western Dispensary, and a public washing and bathing establishment; 1853, a legislative act to provide for the care and instruction of idle truant children; 1854, the Children's Aid Society; 1855, the erection of a workingmen's home; 1863, the Society for the Relief of the Ruptured and Crippled.—Ibid.

— In this year, the carpet and rug establishment of W. & J. Sloane was on Broadway, opposite the city hall. In 1893, it was occupying the 6-storey building, of stone, brick and iron, at the s. e. cor. of Broadway and 19th St.—King's Handbook (1893), 851. Its next move was to the s. e. cor. of Fifth Ave. and 47th St.

Jan. 2 P. T. Barnum purchases the collection of the New York (or Peale's) Museum, and removes it to his establishment at Broadway and Ann St.—Brown, I: 71.

7 The common council appropriates a further sum of $113.64 "for the completion of the fountain in the Park."—Proc., App'd by Mayor, X: 124.

21 Holt's Hotel is sold for $100,000.—Eve. Post, Ja 23, 1843. It was re-opened as the United States Hotel, by Braisted & Johnson. —Ibid., F 18, 1843.

24 Up to this time, 10,000 copies of Kent's Commentaries had been printed, in four editions, and sold at $9 a copy. The author's profits are $5,000 a year, twice his salary as chancellor. "I doubt if any American book has ever produced so much money."—Hone's Diary, II: 171.

" Wm. S. Stone, deputy superintendent, reports to the board of education that a new school has been opened in the Twelfth Ward, "under very favorable circumstances," and recommends "the establishment of additional schools in several of the other wards where the wants of the population are most pressing."—Eve. Post, Ja 27, 1843. This was the first ward-school.—Boese, Public Education in the City of New York, 69–70.

27 Announcement is made that "the French Government has ordered fourteen steamers to be built, which are to be employed as packets between that country and the most important ports of this continent and the West Indies. Four of these will compose the line between Havre and New York. The remaining ten will sail from Cherbourg. They are so built as to be swift, and comfortable to the passengers, and the rate of fare will be much lower than in the English steamers."—Eve. Post, Ja 27, 1843, citing Courrier des Etats Unis.

30 The common council decides to remove the potter's field from 50th St. and Fourth Ave. to the southern part of Randall's Island, and that it be called the city cemetery.—N. Y. Com. Adv., Ja 31, 1843. See also Docs., Bd. of Assts., No. 64. See Ap 28.

Feb. 3 "Millerism.—Miller now says that the destruction of the world will take place some time between the 21st of March, 1843, and the 21st of March, 1844."—Eve. Post, F 3, 1843. For the effects of Millerism in various places, see ibid., F 8, 9, 13, 16; Mr 9, 10, 17, 20; My 10; S 9, 14, 1843.

8 The common council directs the comptroller to lease to the N. Y. & Harlem R. R. Co. the lot which they now occupy at the corner of Centre St. and Tryon Row.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, X: 154, 303.

25 The first number of The Pathfinder, a new weekly, is issued by Parke Godwin.—Eve. Post, F 24 and 25, 1843.

27 The common council changes the name of Greenwich Lane to Greenwich Avenue.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, X: 184.

Mar. 3 Congress appropriates $30,000 "for testing the capacity and usefulness of the system of electro-magnetic telegraphs invented by Samuel F. B. Morse, of New York, for the use of the Government of the United States, by constructing a line of said electro-magnetic telegraphs," under his superintendence.—Acts of Cong. (1843), chap. 84. An experimental line was built in June, 1844, between Washington and Baltimore.

" Congress makes appropriations for various fortifications in different parts of the United States, including Fort Schuyler on the East River, Fort Wood on Bedlow's Island, and Fort Hamilton in New York harbour.—Acts of Cong. (1843), chap. 70. See similar appropriations by congress in current years.

" "Streets in New-York.—Within a few years there have been introduced among us, a class of people, whose persons, like their occupation, are the most filthy and degraded imaginable, and whose peculiarities demand for them a brief particularization. These are the chiffoniers, or rag-pickers of Paris, London and other European cities. They may be seen already in considerable numbers, in our streets, furnished with their apparatus of labour, consisting of a long-handled iron hook, with which they rake the kennels, and overturn the heaps of rubbish and filth, in search of rags, bones, bits of paper, &c., and a basket on one arm, or a large bag slung across the shoulder, which receives their gatherings, reeking with mud and filth. From early dawn, these degraded hunters after the apparently most worthless of all matters, pursue their avocation, until night compels them to desist; and for food, they may not unfrequently be seen picking up the garbage thrown into the gutters from the adjacent houses, which they either deposit in a seperate receptacle, to be re-cooked at home, or eat upon the spot. They are of all ages and both sexes, though I am happy to express my belief that not an American can be found among them. . . . The remedy for this new sore upon the face of this city, the exterminator of this new evil, is apparent; it is clean streets; with them the 'occupation' of the chiffonier is 'gone.'"—Eve. Post, Mr 3, 1843, citing City Inspector's Report. Mar. 3

A patent for a sewing-machine is granted to Benjamin W. Bean, of New York.—Bishop, Hist. of Am. Manufacturers, II: 475. 4

Hone mentions a dinner with Willlam B. Astor, "in his noble mansion in Lafayette place, one of the finest houses in the city." —Hone's Diary, II: 176. 9

The common council agrees to give to the Am. Institute a ten-years' lease of its room in the almshouse, on certain conditions.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, X: 202. 27

An act of the legislature provides: "It shall not be lawful for a member of the common council of any city in this state, or of a trustee of any village, or the supervisor of any town, to become a contractor under any contract authorized by the common council, board of trustees, or board of supervisors of which he is a member, or to be in any manner interested directly or indirectly, either as principal or surety, in such contract. 30

"No town, county, city or state officer shall be interested in any contract made by such officer, or be a purchaser or interested in any purchase at any sale made by such officer, or a seller at any purchase made by such officer in the discharge of his official duty.

"Contracts in violation of the provisions of the 1st and 2nd sections of this act, may be declared void at the instance of the city, county, village or town interested, or of any other party interested in such contract except the officers mentioned and prohibited in said sections from making or being interested in such contracts.

"The chairman of committees of common councils and of other public municipal bodies, charged with any investigation or inquiry requiring the taking of testimony, are authorized to administer oaths to such witnesses as may be brought before such committee, and any false swearing in testimony so taken shall be deemed perjury, and subjected to the pains and penalties of perjury

"This act shall take effect immediately."—Laws of N. Y. (1843), chap. 57.

The legislature authorises the mayor, recorder, and aldermen 18

1843 Apr. 18 "to order and cause to be raised annually and to be collected, such amount of money as shall be requisite to defray the interest upon the 'water stock of the city of New-York,' by tax on the estates, real and personal, of the freeholders and inhabitants of and situated within such portions of the said city, as may have been from time to time brought into use by the regulating and grading of the streets and avenues, and the laying down therein the necessary water pipes, and that may be designated the 'water district' by the mayor, aldermen and commonalty." Until such designation is made, the water district is to include all the city lying south of a line commencing on the west side opposite the middle of 23d St., running east to Lexington Ave., then north to 28th St., then east to the East River.—Laws of N. Y. (1843), chap. 231. This law was amended on March 4, 1846.—Ibid. (1846), chap. 23.

" The legislature incorporates the Washington Monument Assn. for the purpose of erecting a monument to the memory of George Washington. It shall be "competent" for them to acquire ground for the monument and begin to build as soon as $50,000 shall have been collected. If, however, this sum is not collected within three years from this date, they shall refund the contributions.—Laws of N. Y. (1843), chap. 203. See also S 2. 22 "As to-morrow is the 23d of April, when a great catastrophe may happen, according to Mr. Miller's prediction, expectation is on tiptoe to see every sign that may occur. During this forenoon a singular streak was seen in the western sky of a pale cloudy color which could be traced from the zenith down to the top of some houses on the west side of Broadway. This immediately attracted a general gaze, and speculation was rife as to what it might portend; and apprehension and anxiety were beginning distinctly to appear on many countenances, when it passed away and left the gazers to conclude that it was like many things that had excited wonder before—'all smoke.'"—*Eve. 25 For many years, beginning at this time, the "Plumbe Daguerreotype Gallery," at 251 Broadway, cor. of Murray St., held the distinction of being the largest establishment of the kind in New York, and one of the best in the world.—N. Y. Com. Adv., Ap 25, 1843; A Picture of N. Y. in 1846, 112. The bronze bust of Washington Irving now in Bryant Park follows the "Plumbe type" of Irving portrait, being from a Plumbe daguerreotype.

Two other daguerreotype artists, who began business at about this time, and afterwards distinguished themselves in photography, were Anthony (see *A Picture of N. May — In this month was opened, at Castle Garden, a manuscript day-book of events. Its entries extend to May, 1851. This was sold at The Anderson Galleries May 6, 1924, with the Wm. S. Lambert collection, and, as described in the catalogue (item No. 256), represents, apparently, "the whole receipts for admission for some years, and after that the receipts taken at the door, together with the amounts at the bar, and minor expenditures." During this period appeared Jenny Lind, Miss Phillips, Miss Vernon, Mme Augusta, Signor Arditi, John Nickerson, Signor Bottesini, the Havana Opera Company with its stars, etc. During the Jenny Lind concerts a succession of notes tell of attendance of from 7,000 to 10,000, of 300 to 400 tickets left in the hands of the speculators, of a house too full to do any business at the bar, etc. Other notes tell of the visits of the presidents, generals of the Mexican War, the Daniel O'Connell obsequies, the cholera epidemic, the Astor Place riot, opening of Niblo's, balls, etc. The day-book is now owned by the N. Y. Hist. Soc.

May — "Grace Church.—We learn that this society has purchased 3 six lots on the east side of Broadway, just above Tenth-street. The price of the lots was $40,000. It is the intention of the Society to erect a beautiful church upon these lots. These lots are just above the point where Broadway inclines to the west of a straight line. The consequence is, that the church will front a line passing down through the centre of Broadway, and will be the most conspicuous object that meets the eye of the spectator, while standing at the Bowling Green and looking up this great thoroughfare."—*Eve. Com. Adv., My 30, 1843.

Mayor Morris, in his annual message to the common council, 29 offers a searching criticism of the municipal government from the time the amended charter of 1830 went into effect. After citing several provisions of the charter to prove that "the powers and duties of the Common Council are exclusively legislative," he says further: "The section prohibiting members of the Common Council being directly or indirectly interested in any contract made with, or expenses or considerations paid by, the City Government, also shows that the powers of the Common Council are exclusively legislative. They are intended to have no participation in the action of the executive departments of the city. But to remove all doubt upon this subject, the words of the 21st section are expressive and imperative. The executive business of the Corporation shall be performed by distinct departments; and it is made the duty of the Common Council to organize and appoint those departments. The language of the amended charter could not well be more explicit upon this point, and the whole tenor of that instrument shows that its framers intended there should be a marked and entire separation between the legislative and executive departments of the City Government, that each might perform the duties of its peculiar province without collision with the other, so that the whole might work in harmony. An attentive examination of the amended charter will convince your Honorable Body that it is the result of wisdom, integrity and patriotism, and deep knowledge of the springs of human action. Had the City Government from the commencement of the operation of the new charter been conducted in strict conformity with its provisions, the cost of the City Government would have been trifling compared to what has actually been expended; order would have been established where confusion has prevailed, and honest reputations and unexceptionable characters would have been maintained by many, who from a deficiency of proper and legal checks and examinations, have been led into defalcations alike disastrous to them and injurious to the public treasury.

"It is deeply to be regretted that upon the organization of the City Government in the month of May, 1831, under the amended Charter, so many gentlemen who had previously been Aldermen and Assistant Aldermen, were re-elected. These gentlemen, habituated to the former practice of the Common Council, gave more weight to precedent than to the Charter under which they were to act, and continued the practices which the amended Charter was expressly intended to destroy. It is true, that in accordance with the amended Charter, the Mayor left the Council as a member of their deliberations. The Common Council, however, continued to make their appointments in Joint Ballot. The effect was to deprive 1843 May 29 the Mayor of the participation in the appointments, which before as a member of the Common Council, he had exercised. They continued to perform the executive business of the Corporation by Committees appointed by themselves, thus depriving the Mayor of the participation in the executive business of the City, which he had previously exercised as presiding officer of the Common Council in the appointment of Committees.

"The members continued to participate in contracts with the City, and in the receipt to their own use of the treasure of the City. These precedents have been followed by subsequent Common Councils. Many of them have gone farther. They gave to these Executive Committees the legislative powers of the Common Council; so that in fact the Common Council became sub-divided into a number of sub-legislatures, corresponding with the number of their Committees. These sub-legislatures determined, legislatively, what work was necessary to be done; executively, they made the contract or employed the workmen; in many instances took the contract themselves or were interested in it; executively they determined whether their own work was properly done, and directed payment to themselves out of the City Treasury. Legislative acts of these sub-legislatures were never sent to the Mayor for approval or objection. By such practice the Mayor's limited objecting power was destroyed. He knew nothing of the legislative action until the warrant for payment of the work was sent to him for his signature, and then he was met with the position that work had been done, and the Corporation had received the benefit of the poor man's labor, and that an action could be sustained against the Corporation for work, labor, services and materials furnished to the use of the Corporation. In this manner many hundred thousands of dollars of the people's money has been uselessly and extravagantly expended since the organization under the amended charter, and in direct violation of the spirit and letter of that instrument."

In support of this last statement the mayor presents figures furnished by the comptroller showing that during the 12 months just past as much as $16,511.61 had come from the treasury directly to members of the common council, including $6,282.85 to one assistant alderman "for printing and stationery," and $5,424.20 to another assistant alderman "for plumbers' work and hydrants." He adds: "The effect of such practice by numbers of the Common Council is incalculably prejudicial to the interests of the City, and shamefully burdensome to the tax-payer, and that too without even the palliation that the money is distributed to benefit the many. Such practice will lead persons to obtain seats in the Common Council with the express object of making money out of the City Treasury. An election to the Common Council will become a means of trade; a 'drumming for custom.' Such practice would be an inducement to bring into the Common Council members of different business pursuits, who would divide among themselves the whole business of supplying the wants of the City Government, each being desirous to receive from the City Treasury the most his peculiar business would authorize, would not oppose the pecuniary interests of the others, that he in turn might not be opposed by them. This would lead to the most extravagant expenditure of money for repairs, and work performed for the Corporation, and to a lavish and unnecessary supply of every article which officers and departments of the Corporation required."

As instances of what the mayor deems "reckless squandering of the public moneys," he says: "Among their last acts they direct a compilation of the laws of the State and a revision of the City Ordinances to be printed at a large expense, both of which would have been useless. They also directed a very expensive work—'The Geological Survey of the State,' to be purchased for the Mayor, each member of the Common Council, and for the Clerks of the two Boards. One of these Committees, also usurping legislative as well as executive powers, directed an essay to be written, and a work to be compiled and published for the members and officers of the Common Council, with additional numbers to be distributed as presents, at an expense to the City of $2,000." The mayor declares that each of the acts above mentioned has been returned by him "with objections," and is now before the common council for consideration. He furthermore cites as "extraordinary" their "selection of the $64,000 Street Contract to the exclusion of offers to perform the same work for much less money."

In emphasizing the necessity of a "strict conformity to the charter" the mayor offers as his first recommendation the immediate organization of "separate and distinct Departments for the management of the Executive business of the Corporation." He further recommends "concentrating in the City Hall all the offices of the City Government" by making other disposition "of the Courts, Clerks' and Sheriff's Offices, and Law Library." May 29

Another recommendation is the establishment of "an Office for the receipt of all moneys paid into the City Treasury," instead of having so much money go through other offices, the mayor's for example.

Another recommendation is that "contracts shall in every instance be made for work performed, or articles furnished the city." A permanent board for making contracts, he thinks, should be the mayor, the presidents of the two boards, the comptroller, and the counsel for the corporation, plus "the Chief of the Department for which the work is to be performed or articles furnished."—Proc., Bd. of Ald. (1843), 61–75. Administrative departments were created finally in the amended charter of April 2, 1849 (q.v.)

"The workmen have already commenced on the fountain in Bowling Green [see My 23]. The diameter of the basin will be ninety feet. The jet is expected to rise seventy feet. "An experiment of sweeping the streets with a machine was tried this morning in Chambers street. 15 "The marvel of New York just now is 'The Alhambra'—an ice cream resort lately opened a little below Niblo's." This is described.—New Mirror, I: 239. It was at 557½ Broadway, a few doors from Prince St.—Eve. Post, Jl 1, 1843.

29 Philip Hone writes: "Dickens has just published, as one of the chapters of 'Martin Chuzzlewit,' an account of the arrival of his hero in New York, and what he saw, and heard, and did, and suffered, in this land of pagans, brutes, and infidels. I am sorry to see it. Thinking that Mr. Dickens has been ungenerously treated by my countrymen, I have taken his part on most occasions; but he has now written an exceedingly foolish libel upon us, from which he will not obtain credit as an author, nor as a man of wit, any more than as a man of good taste, good nature, or good manners. . . ."—Hone's Diary, II: 189–90. On Oct. 12, Hone added: "Speaking of the United States, Mr. Dickens says in the story [Martin Chuzzlewit] which he is spinning out in one of the London periodicals, 'That republic, but yesterday let loose upon her noble course, and but to-day so maimed and lame, so full of sores and ulcers, foul to the eye, and almost hopeless to the sense, that her best friends turn from the loathsome creature with disgust.' If the scamp had no regard for his own character, he ought to have had for ours, who made fools of ourselves to do him honour."—Ibid., II: 196.

Aug. 5 "I notice the introduction of the Italian verandah curtains to New-York—the sort of striped demi-umbrella, put out from the top of the window with falling sidefolds, which are so common in Venice and Naples. Two or three shops in Broadway have them, and Cozzens has lately fitted them on to the windows of his ladies' dining-room—and most showy and picturesque luxuries they are."—New Mirror, I: 287.

"I observe that the paviours are at work in the upper part of Broadway, removing the wooden pavement, and substituting the broad flat stones, such as are laid in the streets of Florence. The wooden blocks were certainly in a deplorable condition, but I do not think they have had fair play as an experiment. They were badly laid, and were left to annoy the public long after they should have been repaired."—Ibid.

14 The design for the Washington Monument (see Ap 18) "is now completed. It is in the form of a pentagon, and is to be erected of granite, in or fronting on Union Square; to be finished in the Gothic style of architecture, richly and elaborately ornamented, with spacious rooms below for a historical library, gallery for paintings, etc. Its rich Gothic windows, columns, friezes, cornices and balustrades—its buttresses, turrets, tower, and pinnacle, partake of all that is sublime in architecture; and when the structure shall have been finished, the crochet of the pinnacle being 420 feet in the air, it will be pronounced the noblest monument in the known world. It is to be built by the voluntary contributions of the People of the United States of one dollar and upward. Some of the wealthy citizens of New York have already headed subscription lists with five and ten thousand dollars, and arrangements for the immediate commencement of the enterprise are fast maturing."—Eve. Post, Ag 14, 1843, citing Pennsylvanian. The original subscription list is in the N. Y. Pub. Library.—See O 29, 1851. A memorial to Washington, to be erected as a "State Monument" (see Ap 18), is projected. The design is one of "unequalled magnificence, . . . Four hundred and twenty-five feet is the proposed height; and this, one of the papers states, will make it the highest building in the world—not quite correctly, as the pyramid of Cheops is six hundred feet high. To realize this prodigious elevation, however, one must remember that the steeple of the new Trinity church, which is to be the tallest in this country, will only reach to two hundred and seventy-five feet. It is not to be merely a monument, but an immense public building, containing halls, libraries, and other appropriate apartments. The shape is to be a pentagon, and the style a florid Gothic. Union-square is named as the site; but the immense size of the base, I should suppose, would require an area of much greater extent. . . ."—New Mirror, I: 351; N. Y. Com. Adv., S 7, 1843. "The Public Fountains.—The largest audiences we see in the city, assemble on the advertised nights of the illumination of the Bowling Green Fountain. The lower part of the city is rendered completely impassable by the packed assemblages." The writer criticises the fountain, however, which is "a huge heap of rocks," and which, he says, was probably designed by "a well-digger or a mason." He suggests a new design—that of the "Fountain of Lerna at Corinth."—New Mirror, I: 399. 23

The oldest house on Manhattan Island at this time (according to The Christian Intelligencer) was the Kip mansion at Kip's Bay, on 35th St., between First and Second Aves. "It was built for Jacobus Kip in 1655, and rebuilt in 1696, as marked on the front of the house. The house is now occupied, and is still owned, by one of the Kip family. Dec. 13 Up to this time, an old one-mile stone stood on Broadway about 20 ft. below Houston St. Its removal, on Saturday last, awakens reminiscences.—N. Y. Com. Adv., D 13, 1843; Eve. Post for the Country, Ja 3, 1844. This old landmark appears to be a special one, in addition to those established by the common council, and listed in the L. M. R. K., III: 960–61.

— In this year, the Young Men's Christian Association was founded in London, by Sir George Williams.—Encyclop. Brit., XXVIII: 940–41. The first such association in the U. S. was organized at Boston in 1851 (q. v., D 29).

— In this year, the N. Y. & Harlem R. R. was finished to William's Bridge on Bronx River, a distance of 14½ miles from the city hall. —Holley, The Picturesque Tourist, 36. See D 1.

— In this year, the New York Gallery of the Fine Arts was founded, for the purpose of establishing here a permanent collection of paintings, statuary, and other works of art. It received its charter in 1845 (q. v., My 13). The first act of the association was to purchase the gallery of Luman Reed. In 1849, it possessed about 100 paintings, including many by Cole and Durand, with several pieces of statuary and engravings. Prior to 1849, the gallery was in the Rotunda in the Park.—Belden, New-York. Past, Present & Future, 116–17. The leading spirits in starting this establishment, besides Luman Reed, a wealthy art patron residing at 13 Greenwich St., were his son-in-law Theodore Allen, and his partner Jonathan Sturges.—Howe, Hist. of the Metropolitan Museum of Art (1913), 62–65.

— In this year, the First Mariners' Methodist Episcopal Church, in Cherry St., between Clinton and Montgomery Sts., was founded. For view of this building, see Brown, Book of Old N. Y. (1913), 234. A large lithographic drawing of it was published by Endicott in Jan., 1845.—Eve. Post, Ja 10, 1845. Cf. the Mariners' Church erected in Roosevelt St. in 1819.—L. M. R. K., III: 930. For the floating chapel of the Methodists, see Je, 1845.

— In this year, the first hydropathic establishment in the United States was opened at No. 63 Barclay St., New York. Its proprietor, Campbell, published the Water Cure Journal.—Annals of N. Am., 590.

— In this year, the Columbian Magazine made its appearance; it was discontinued in 1848.—North, Newspaper and Periodical Press, 117.

— In this year, the Eclectic Magazine was established.—North Newspaper and Periodical Press, 117.

— In this year, a volume of poems by Clement C. Moore, containing the first printing, in a book, of his well-known poem "'Twas the Night before Christmas," was published. See also Ag 16, 1750.

Jan. 11 "Italian Opera.—Mr. Palmo, one of the most enterprising residents of the city, is pushing his project of a new theatre with great activity. The building which he has selected is in Chamber street, in a quiet and respectable neighborhood and is already in such a state of forwardness that it will be opened as early as the 31st of the present month." The internal arrangements are described.

"Mr. Palmo has very properly determined to number the different seats in the theatre, so that a person or family, when they have purchased a ticket, will be secured the possession of places during the whole evening. This is a decided improvement on the old plan, and will be a great accommodation to the audience."—Eve. Post, Ja 11, 1844. See also ibid., Ja 27, 29, 30, F 3, 1844. It was opened on Feb. 3 (q. v.).

17 The N. Y. Herald introduces a wood-cut portrait to illustrate a news report of a murder trial. See also ibid., Ja 18, and 22 (Supp.). Later, from time to time, in this year, wood-cut views of places and events, in the news, appeared. Soon after, such illustrations were a regular feature of the first page of The Weekly Herald, which, since 1838, had been published each Saturday.

18 The U. S. steam war-vessel "Princeton," now at New York, is visited by invited guests of Capt. Stockton. The steamer "is moved by Ericson's propellers. . . . The machinery is under the water line, out of sight, and rendered impervious to shot by a covering of sheet iron. Jan. 18

"The big gun of Captain Stockton, which he calls the Peacemaker, weighs ten tons. . . . There is a small one on board the same vessel weighing only six tons and a half, which is called the Orator, from its supposed talent of persuasion."—Eve. Post, Ja 19, 1844. See also ibid., Ja 20, 1844. See, further, F 28.

29 The name of the Apollo Association (see My 7, 1840) is changed to the American Art Union by act of the legislature. This act provides that the distribution of works of art (principally engravings) belonging to the association, provided for in its constitution, shall take place at the time of the annual election of officers, on the Friday preceding Christmas Day in each year.—Laws of N. Y. (1844), chap. 7. For the plan of organization and the progress of the Union, see Howe's Hist. of the Metropolitan Museum of Art (1913), 58–59, citing a monthly "Bulletin" published by the Union as a medium of communication with the subscribers. For a view of the gallery of the Art Union during an exhibition, see ibid., 61. See, further, D 15, 1853.

In 1846, the Art Union occupied quarters at 322 Broadway near Pearl St., and at that time its work was thus briefly described: "The money obtained by subscription was applied [each year] to the production of a fine and costly engraving from a choice painting, of which every member received a copy, also to the purchase of paintings and sculpture by native or resident artists, which were publicly distributed by lot amongst the members at the annual meeting in December."—A Picture of N. Y. in 1846. See also Knickerbocker Mag., XXXII: 442 (Nov., 1848). See, further, 1849. This annual distribution of works of art continued until 1851 (q. v., D 31), when the law which prevented the further continuance of lotteries went into effect, and the establishment was closed.—Annals of N. Am., 584. Many of the engravings distributed by the American Art Union are to-day prized by collectors.

Feb. 1 The Bank of the State of New York is deeded to John Austin Stevens, president of the Bank of Commerce, the eastern portion of its property having been acquired in 1836 from the corporation of the Bank of the United States, when the latter suspended payment.—Liber Deeds, CDII: 222. 3 Palmo's Opera House (see Ja 11) is opened in Chambers St., between Broadway and Centre, in a building previously occupied by Stoppani's Arcade Baths. The undertaking was a financial failure and in 1848 the opera house was converted into a theatre.—New Mirror, II: 287, 319; Ireland, Records N. Y. Stage, II, 423–24; Ruggles, 68; Holley, 52; L. " The first (Alpha) chapter of the Order of United Americans is organized. This date is established by an address (in room 319, N. Y. P. L.) delivered before the order on the occasion of the "Seventh Anniversary" of the Alpha chapter, Feb. 22, 1851 (q. v.). See also Mr, 1851.

28 Mr. Upshur, U. S. secretary of state; Gov. Gilmor, secretary of the navy; Virgil Maxcy, late chargé d'affaires at Belgium; David Gardiner, late state senator of New York; Commander Beverly Kennon, U. S. N., and others are killed, and many wounded, by the explosion of a gun on Capt. Stockton's steam-frigate "Princeton" (recently fitted with Ericsson's propellers), on a trial trip on the Potomac.—*N. 9 "There are two buildings, in different parts of the city, in the occupation of the post office. The principal business of the office is conducted at a building [the Rotunda] having three fronts—two on the Park, one to the south and one to the east; and the other on Chamber, near Centre street. Part of this building was originally constructed for the exhibition of a panorama, to which a small addition was made, fronting south on the Park. It is in all respects wholly unfitted for the accommodation of the business of the post office, is old and dilapidated, and exceedingly unsafe, both as regards security from loss by fire, or depredation by robbers. . . . This building belongs to the city corporation, to whom a rent is paid of $1,500 per annum, on an annual lease.

"The branch post office is situated on the southwest corner of Exchange and William streets—is rented on an annual lease from the Exchange Company of $2000 per annum. The security against robbers and fire in this building is considered in every respect sufficient. The Exchange is fire proof, and the site and fastenings render it a perfectly safe depository."—Exec. Docs., No. 178, 28th cong., 1st sess., Vol. V. See Ag 10.

13 The common council passes resolutions of sympathy for the families and friends of those lost on board the steam-frigate "Princeton" (see F 28).—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XI: 199.

Apr. 1 By this time the fish trade at Fulton Market had become so large that one part was called the "Fulton Fish Market," the other being known as the "Fulton Butcher Market." Since 1835, the fishermen and oystermen occupied a shed along the slip; but, in 1845, were moved again into the meat market.—De Voe, Market Book, 508, 512–14. For various structural changes, prior to 1862, for the accommodation of the fish dealers, see ibid., 514–16.

3 The legislature incorporates the "New-York Vaccine Institution," the purpose of which is the extermination of the small-pox, "especially among sailors, emigrants, indigent persons, those employed in manufactories, and children."—Laws of N. Y. (1844), chap. 115.

6 The legislature incorporates the "Odd Fellows' Hall Association of the city of New-York." Its object is "to provide suitable premises, by the erection of a conveniently sized edifice, for the accommodation of library and reading-rooms, apartments for natural history, science, and the arts, school, lecture and meeting rooms, and to provide for the education of orphan children" of members.—Laws of N. Y. (1844), chap. 126. For the opening of its hall, see Je 4, 1849.

9 James Harper, of the publishing firm of Harper & Bros., is elected mayor.—N. Y. Herald, Ap 10, 11, 1844; Hone's Dairy, II: 211; Man. Com. Coun. (1844–5), 275. He succeeds Robt. H. Morris. —See Ap 13, 1841. His successor was Wm. T. Havemeyer.—See Ap 8, 1845.

12 Secretary of State Calhoun negotiates a treaty for the annexation of Texas to the U. S. The senate refused to ratify it.—Winsor, VII: 506. See Mr 3, 1845.

" The legislature incorporates the "Protestant Episcopal Church Missionary Society for seamen in the city and port of New-York," the objects of which are "to provide by building, purchase, hiring or otherwise so many floating and other churches for seamen, at different points in the city and port of New York, as they may deem proper, . . ."—Laws of N. Y. (1844), chap. 147. See F 15.

24 About 3,000 people meet at the Broadway Tabernacle to protest against the annexation of Texas.—Eve. Post, Ap 25, 1844. See My 14.

27 William Coventry H. Waddell, Sr., buys the plot of ground lying between 37th and 38th Sts., on the west side of Fifth Ave.—Liber Deeds, CDLIII: 80 and 81. See also Perris's Insurance Map, 1854. Here he built a suburban villa which became a famous social centre. The architect's perspective sketch is reproduced as Pl. 129-a, Vol. III, and some particulars are given regarding it, III: 692–94. It was of "yellowish gray stucco with brownstone trimmings," writes Mrs. Lamb. The house "was finished in a style of costly elegance, and a large conservatory and picture gallery were among its attractions. From its broad marble hall a winding staircase led to the tower, from which a charming view was obtained of both the East and Hudson rivers, the intervening semi-rural landscape, and the approaching city. . . ."—Hist. City of N. Y., II: 756. It had "oriels and gables and a spacious conservatory of plants, native and exotic," says Lossing, adding: "Mr. and Mrs. Waddell were leaders in fashionable society in New York. He was a brilliant man and a confidential friend of President Jackson, who gave him public employments that made him rich. He was frank and generous, and always displayed a princely hospitality. His house was the scene of notable entertainments. At Mrs. Waddell's parties one was sure to meet every celebrity, American and foreign, who chanced to be in the city at the time. The house was superbly furnished. It had a broad marble hall and elegant winding stairs."—Hist. of N. Y. City (1884), II: 612–13. See, further, Ap 6, 1849. The author's mother went to her first ball at the "Waddell Villa."

" The common council orders that the Old Post Road, above 23d St., through the present Madison Sq., as far north as 31st St., be closed, and the title to it conveyed by quit-claim deeds to the owners of the land on each side of it.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XI: 233–34. The double row of trees extending north-east from the fountain to Madison Ave. denotes approximately the bed of this old road.—Kelly, Historical Guide to N. Y., 111; and see Colton's "Topographical Map" of 1841, Pl. 124, Vol. III.

29 The legislature incorporates the "Irish Emigrant Society of New York," the objects of which are "to afford advice, information, aid and protection, to emigrants from Ireland, and generally to promote their welfare."—Laws of N. Y. (1844), chap. 226.

May — At the session of the Connecticut legislature held in this month, the N. Y. & New Haven R. R. Co. was incorporated.—See statement in Laws of N. Y. (1846), chap. 195.

4 In an act relating to arsenals and fortifications in various parts of the state, the legislature designates certain funds (see F 6, 1836) to be used "in building an arsenal in the county of New-York, upon such plan as the commissioners of the land office and the commissary-general may devise." Its location also shall be designated by them. "The inspectors of Sing Sing state prison are hereby authorized to furnish the commissary-general, or order, such quantity of dressed or undressed stone from the quarries at Sing-Sing as may be ordered by the commissioners of the land office, to build the above arsenal; but the stones so furnished shall be paid for by the commissioners out of the moneys so received from the sale of the land mentioned in the first section of this act, . . ."—Laws of N. Y. (1844), chap. 274.

7 The legislature makes a complete change in the police system by an act, the first section of which reads: "The watch department, as at present organized, is hereby abolished, together with the offices of marshals, street inspectors, health wardens, fire wardens, dock masters, lamp lighters, bell ringers, day police officers, Sunday officers, inspectors of pawn brokers and junk shops, and of the officers to attend the polls at the several election districts of the city and county of New York, and superintendent of roads of the twelfth ward of the said city, except the office of mayor's or first marshal."

In place of the watch department and the various officers mentioned, there shall be "a day and night police" of not more than 800 men, including a chief of police, captains, assistant captains, and policemen. The act defines their duties; police districts; police courts; how police officers are appointed and removed from office, their compensation, etc.

The offices of "inspector of hacks, omnibuses, cabs and public porters, inspector and deputy inspector of carts, keepers of lands and places," all are abolished, duties of such officers to be performed by the chief of police and his assistants. The chief is to have his headquarters in the mayor's office and a salary of $1,500; he is to be appointed by the mayor with the approval of the common council for a term of one year "unless sooner removed from office for cause;" and he must be a citizen of the United States and an actual resident of the city.

Subordinate officials and the policemen themselves are also to be appointed for a year, but by the common council with the approval of the mayor; the captains shall have power "to suspend policemen from office for cause." In case of such suspension or of a complaint against the chief or any member of the force, the mayor shall afford the accused an "opportunity to be heard in his defence."

Many details are given in regard to patrol districts, police courts, exact duties and salaries ($500 for a policeman), restrictions as to fees, presents and rewards, and other matters. The more important sections of the act were to become effective only after their adoption by the mayor and common council.—Laws of N. Y. (1844), chap. 315; Man. Com. Coun. (1855), 82 et seq; Com. Adv., My 25, 1844. See also Eve. Post, F 26, 1844.

1844 May 7 The city authorities were reluctant to adopt this act; it was presented in the board of aldermen for adoption as an ordinance on June 12, and again on July 30, without success. Then the common council made an ordinance of its own which gained the approval of the mayor on Nov. 29 (q.v.). The legislative act was then amended May 13, 1846, by Laws of N. Y. (1846), chap. 302; and on April 11, 1849, by ibid. (1849), chap. 436.

" The legislature passes an act intended to secure transfer to the Washington Monument Association (see Ap 18, 1843) of all the money collected by the trustees, etc. appointed under "An act in commemoration of the services and in honor of the memory of George Washington," passed April 26, 1833 (q.v.).—Laws of N. Y. (1844), chap. 303.

" The legislature incorporates the "Eastern Collegiate Institute of the City of New York," to be located in the Seventh Ward. It "shall be subject to the visitation of the regents of the university."—Laws of N. Y. (1844), chap. 298.

13 The common council requests ex-Mayor Morris to sit for a portrait, to be placed in the governor's room.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XI: 266.

14 "The annexation of Texas to the United States is now the question which regulates all our policies, . . ."—Hone's Diary, II: 221. It was carried by the senate in Feb., 1845.—Ibid., II: 243. See Ja 7, Mr 3, 1845.

25 "The 'Polka.'—This celebrated dance, which seems to have turned the heads of the fashionable people in Paris, is soon to be taught in this country. Mr. Gabriel Korpany, of Ramonka, has recently arrived from Europe, and is making preparations to teach our citizens the mysteries of the new movement. He is a Hungarian by birth. . . ."—Eve. Post, My 25, 1844. See also ibid., Je 18, 1844.

June 17 "The Trustees of the 'Washington Monument Association,' for the accomplishment of the object confided to their care, have adopted a plan, prepared by Mr. Calvin Pollard, of this city, architect, and have placed in the hands of respectable individuals, subscription lists, from which they hope to obtain funds sufficient to commence the edifice and ensure its completion."—Eve. Post, Je 17, 1844. See, further, My 8, 1847; Ja 10, 1848; F 2, 1849.

21 John Pintard dies at the age of 86.—Eve. Post, Je 22, 1844.

22 "Building in New York.—For many years there has not been observed any thing like such activity in building as now prevails in this city. One of our citizens, recently returned after an absence of seven months, remarked to us this morning that the altered appearance of Broadway quite astonished him. There are many buildings of the largest and most expensive description going up at various points of that thronged avenue, and a greater number of the same character are far advanced to a state of completion. Among the latter the pile of brick and granite, six stories in height, and apparently one hundred and sixty feet in front, opposite the Church of the Messiah [probably the New York Hotel—see D 1], strikes the attention as an evidence of the very rapid advance in this respect.

"Further on, also, at a point which, five years ago, was quite out of town—we mean Union Park—begin to appear the splendid shops which have, until lately, been confined to the lower end of the city. The number of sumptuous dwellings in this vicinity has much increased during the past winter and spring. There are two edifices now constructing on Broadway, which, when finished, will constitute the finest features in the much admired view it presents. The first is the beautiful Gothic church of the Trinity, at the head of Wall street, the tower of which already has a fine and imposing appearance as you turn the angle of Broadway at two miles distance. The other is Grace Church, in which considerable progress has been made. This structure, being built of white marble, and situated at the turn of the street, will show to great advantage, even some two miles down Broadway."—Eve. Post, Je 22, 1844. Regarding Grace and Trinity Churches, see also ibid., Ap 24, 1845.

25 Trinity Cemetery at Manhattanville, extending from Tenth Ave. to the Hudson River, between 153d and 155th Sts. (see S 22, 1842), is advertised as open for use by all denominations. Its rules and regulations are published.—N. Y. Com. Adv., Je 25, 1844.

" Pres. Tyler arrives at New York for his marriage.—Eve. Post, Je 26, 1844. See Je 26.

26 John Tyler, president of the United States, is married to Miss Julia Gardiner, eldest daughter of the late Hon. David Gardiner, of New York (see F 28), in the Church of the Ascension, on Fifth Avenue. The marriage service was performed by Bishop Onderdonk.—N. Y. Com. Adv., Je 27, 1844. The Gardiner residence was one of the "Colonnade Row," on Lafayette Place.—22d Ann. Rep., Am. Scenic & Hist. Pres. Soc. (1917), 140–42. This was the first marriage of a president of the United States during his term of office. June 26

" "It appears from an abstract of the report of the Croton Aqueduct Board . . . that there are south of the distributing reservoir in Forty-second street, 150 miles of pipe laid, supplying about 310,000 inhabitants, equal to one mile for every 2000 inhabitants. These pipes supply 600 free hydrants and 1500 fire hydrants. The capacity of these latter is such that 200 only will discharge all the water which the pipe over the Harlem now delivers; consequently that there is imminent danger in unrestricted use of the water that the reservoirs will be emptied, and the city exposed to the horrible calamity of a short allowance of water, more especially as the pumps and the means by which they were formerly supplied are rapidly going out of repair. The report states that this danger has already been imminent, as on occasions of extraordinary use of the free hydrants, the surface of the reservoirs has sunk several feet. When the high bridge is complete the means of supply will increase. Some restraints are, therefore, proposed on the use of the free hydrants." The revenue from the water for the past year was $92,626.31.—Eve. Post, Je 26, 1844. See D 14.

July 2 The N. Y. & Harlem R. R. has just been completed from Williamsbridge to Tuckahoe Mills, six miles from White Plains.—Eve. Post, Jl 2, 1844.

3 A treaty is signed between the United States and China.—Winsor, VII: 509.

" "The heats of summer are upon us, and while some are leaving town for shady retreats in the country, others refresh themselves with short excursions to Hoboken or New Brighton, or other places among the beautiful environs of our city. If the public authorities, who expend so much of our money in laying out the city, would do what is in their power, they might give our vast population an extensive pleasure ground for shade and recreation in these sultry afternoons, which we might reach without going out of town.

"On the road to Harlem, between Sixty-eighth street on the south, and Seventy-seventh street on the north, and extending from the Third Avenue to the East River, is a tract of beautiful woodland, comprising sixty or seventy acres, thickly covered with old trees, intermingled with a variety of shrubs. The surface is varied in a very striking and picturesque manner, with craggy eminences, and hollows, and a little stream runs through the midst. The swift tides of the East river sweep its rocky shores, and the fresh breeze of the bay comes in, on every warm summer afternoon, over the restless waters. The trees are of almost every species that grows in our woods. . . . There never was a finer situation for a public garden of a great city. Nothing is wanted but to cut winding paths through it, leaving the woods as they now are, and introducing here and there a jet from the Croton aqueduct, the streams from which would make their own waterfalls over the rocks, and keep the brook running through the place always fresh and full. . . .

"As we are now going on, we are making a belt of muddy docks all round the island. We should be glad to see one small part of the shore without them, one place at least where the tides may be allowed to flow pure, and the ancient brim of rocks which borders the waters left in its original picturesqueness and beauty. Commerce is devouring inch by inch the coast of the island, and if we would rescue any part of it for health and recreation it must be done now. . . ."—Eve. Post, Jl 3, 1844.

4 Washington Hotel, at the south-east corner of Broadway and Reade St., formerly called Washington Hall, is destroyed by fire.—N. Y. Com. Adv., Jl 5, 1844. See Ap 7, 1845.

20 Workmen are making progress in taking down the First Presbyterian Church on Wall St.—Eve. Post, Jl 20, 1844. The church having been sold, it is to be re-ërected on the highest site in Jersey City.—N. Y. Com. Adv., Jl 24, 1844; and see descrip. of Pl. 105, III: 607. It was purchased for $3,000 by a Presbyterian congregation in that city, for re-ërection at the corner of Washington and 1844 July 20 Sussex Sts. The ground, including the cemetery, on which the church stood in Wall St., has been divided into five lots, and sold for $22,000 each, or $110,000.—*Conn. In 1853, the tall spire of the reconstructed church in Jersey City could be seen from New York overtopping all other buildings.—The Stranger's Hand-book (1853), 110. The congregation of the "Old First" opened its new house of worship on Fifth Ave. on Jan. 11, 1846 (q.v.), the corner-stone of which was laid in Sept., 1844 (q.v.).

24 The corner-stone of the Church of the Holy Communion, at the north-east cor. of Sixth Ave. and 20th St., is laid. This church is to be built by Mrs. Rogers, widow of John Rogers, on ground belonging to his estate, and it is intended "to have it secured in perpetuity as a free church."—The Churchman, Jl 27, 1844. The building was "erected in 1845."—A Picture of N. Y. (1846), 139. In May, 1846, it was sufficiently near completion to be used for public worship.—Life and Work of William Augustus Muhlenberg, by Anne Ayres (1889), 177–79. 27 The Long Island R. R., "which is all but completed," is opened to Greenport, "its eastern termination on the Island," for a party of invited guests. It was open for passengers on July 29.—Eve. Post, Jl 25, 26, and 29, 1844.

" "The magnificent new edifice of Trinity Church is nearly complete. The steeple will be 264 feet high—twice the height of the old one."—Conn. Courant (Hartford), Jl 27, 1844.

30 The N. Y. Yacht Club is formed by nine yachtsmen in the cabin of John C. Stevens' 25-ton schooner-yacht "Gimrack," lying at anchor off the Battery. The nine are John C. Stevens, Hamilton Wilkes, Wm. Edgar, John C. Jay, Geo. L. Schuyler, Jas. M. Waterbury, Louis A. Depau, Geo. E. Rollins, and Jas. Rogers. Stevens is named commodore.—Thompson & Lawson, The Lawson Hist. of the America's Cup (1902), 2.

Aug. 8 "St. Thomas' Church, in Broadway, is about to be remodelled in its interior, at an expense of $10,000. $8,000 have already been subscribed."—Eve. Post, Ag 8, 1844.

10 The "Postmaster General has completed arrangements for the occupation, for a post-office building, of the fine lot of ground occupied by the Middle Dutch church—the congregation having built a new church up town. The church ground extends from Liberty to Cedar street, on Nassau, and extends about 200 feet on the two former streets. It is, consequently open on three sides. If we are correctly informed, the government pays $4000 per annum, and an association of merchants pay $1000 to the church per annum for the lease of the property. The church building is to be so altered as to make a convenient and handsome edifice for the office. The branch office in the Exchange is not to be discontinued, for a while at least."—Eve. Post, Ag 10, 1844. See also Man. Com. Coun. (1844–45), 261; Hone's Diary, II: 241. See, further, Ag 11; Ja 17, 1845.

11 The Middle Dutch Church, on Nassau St., is used on this Sunday for the last time as a place of worship, after an occupancy of 115 years. The valedictory sermon is preached by Rev. Dr. Knox.—*N. Y. The common council directs a special committee "to inquire into the expediency of establishing a Railroad in and through Broadway, to belong to the City, and the whole profits thereof to be applied to the payment of the public debt, and to that end, into the expediency of prohibiting all stages and omnibuses in Broadway after said Railroad is completed."—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XII: 728. Mayor Harper approves an ordinance passed by the common council to establish "a Municipal Police, or Night and Day Watch." This differed decidedly from the act passed by the legislature (see My 7). The old "Watch Department" was retained from which 200 "suitable men" were to be drawn for the new establishment. Indeed, the old organization was not to be affected in any way except as "Watch Posts" might need to be altered "to conform to the diminution of that force by transfers into the Municipal Police hereby established."—Proc., Bd. of Ald. (1845), 52–53; Docs., Bd. of Ald. (1844), XI: 249–53. The New York Hotel, at 721 Broadway, between Washington Place and Waverly Place, opens.—N. Y. Herald, Mr 10, 1845. Dec. 1

The common council authorises the committee on public offices and repairs "to have the writing table now at the Alms House, Bellevue, known as General Washington's writing table placed in the Governor's Room, City Hall, and such other property and relics as may come to their knowledge as belonging to the City."—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XII: 200. 5

The Right Rev. Benjamin T. Onderdonk, Bishop of New York, is brought to trial before a court of Protestant Episcopal bishops, "as being guilty of immorality and impurity." The trial was held in the upper room of the Sunday-school building attached to St. John's Chapel and continued until Jan. 3, 1845. Bishop Onderdonk was found guilty by a majority of the court and suspended from office.—Proceedings of the Court . . . for the Trial of the Right Rev. Benjamin T. Onderdonk, D.D., etc. (N. Y., 1845). 10

Dwellings to the number of 6,175 are now supplied with Croton water. "The works are in good order, and fully equal the expectations of those who superintended the construction."—Eve. Post, D 14, 1844. 14

The common council orders that the committee on public offices and repairs cause the room in the city hall formerly called the "Tea Room" to be "fitted up with shelves and glass cases, and that the said room be hereafter used as a Library, and place of deposit for the archives, presents, valuable books, and other property of the Common Council of a similar description, and be placed under the care of the Clerk of the Common Council, subject to be used however for a Committee Room;" $330 is appropriated for this purpose.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XII: 220. 20

In this year, the Naval Academy at Annapolis was founded. — Geo. Bancroft was secretary of the navy.—Winsor, VII: 460.

After visiting New York in this year, an English woman published the following observations: ". . . It is very much the custom (originally Dutch, I believe) for all the world to change their residence on the first of May, and consequently the whole city undergoes a thorough purification and cleansing. . . ." —

1845 She also observes that "the ferries at New York, . . . are admirably managed, and occasion but very trifling inconvenience to persons living at Brooklyn, or on the opposite shores of New Jersey. The stage from which you enter the ferry boat is loose, and rises and falls with the tide; you enter on foot into shelter, or otherwise drive into the boat in your carriage without the least difficulty, danger, or inconvenience, and are landed on the opposite side of the river without alighting from your carriage, or being exposed in any way to the heat or inclemency of the weather."—An Englishwoman in America, by Sarah M. Maury (London, 1848), 163–66, 168–70.

— Grant Thorburn writes of New York in this year: "Public stores cover the spot where lately towered the weather-beaten steeple of the French Protestant church in Pine-street. In Cedar, between Nassau and William-streets, where stood the Presbyterian church, are now stores of cotton and bags of wool. The Lutheran, known by the name of Labagh's church, in Nassau, near Maiden-lane, is occupied by Dummer and his tea-pots of china. Already has commerce fixed her Argus-eyes on the Middle Dutch and Scotch Presbyterian churches in Cedar-street. . . ."—Grant Thorburn's Reminiscences (1845), 135, 154.

— About 1845, John Jacob Astor built a residence for his daughter, Mrs. Walter Langdon, on a piece of property having a frontage of 250 ft. on Astor Place and the same on Lafayette Place (the south-west corner). Its courtyard, shut off from the latter street by a high wall, was laid out as a garden, with large trees. After Mrs. Langdon's death, the house was occupied by her daughter, Mrs. Matthew Wilks. It was taken down in 1875.—Old Buildings of N. Y. City, by Wm. F. Mott (1907), 46. See 1849.

— About this time, the Vauxhall Garden had a gate on the Lafayette Place side and one on the Bowery side. A "merry-go-round" was one of its amusements.—Havens, Diary of a little girl in Old New York (1919), 2.

— About this year were issued two lithographic views of Broadway hotels, one of the Howard Hotel, corner of Maiden Lane, and the other of the Franklin House, at 197 Broadway, corner of Dey St. These are reproduced and described as A. Pl. 25, Vol. III. Cf. Je 1, 1846.

— Valentine's Manual for 1845–6 contains a map of the city, compiled from the latest surveys; a view of the city hall (frontispiece), one of the hospital (p. 257), and others.

— In this year, James Lenox began to form his valuable library.—Stevens, Recollections of Jas. Lenox, 2, 18 et seq.

— In this year was published a volume of the Laws and Ordinances of the common council.

— During 1845–52, the American Whig Review was published by Colton and Whelpley.—North, Newspaper and Periodical Press, 118.

— In 1845, one could pick blackberries along the highway where now Madison Ave. crosses 35th St. On Fifth Ave., nearly opposite the distributing reservoir, at the s. e. cor. of 40th St., was a small country-house built of wood painted yellow, and surrounded by trees and shrubbery, where ice-cream and other refreshments were furnished.—Lossing, Hist. of N. Y. City (1884), II: 603; view of the "Croton Cottage" in Man. Com. Coun. (1865), 456; Fifth Avenue (pub. by the Fifth Ave. Bank, 1915), 36, 37.

— In this year, Wm. Gowans, of New York, a dealer in rare Americana, began the publication of Gowans' Bibliotheca Americana, a series of reprints of rare old books and pamphlets relating to the early settlement of North America. The series consists of the following works: I (pub'd in 1845), Denton's description of New York; II (pub'd in 1860), Chas. Wooley's journal in New York; III (pub'd in 1862), Miller's description of New York; IV (pub'd in 1865), Thos. Budd's Good Order Established in Pennsylvania and New-Jersey; V (pub'd in 1869), George Alsop's A Character of the Province of Maryland. Several of Gowans' early trade catalogues are in the N. Y. P. L. In the author's collection is one of 1860, containing a street plan showing the location of his book-store in the Caxton Bldg. on the west side of Centre St., bet. Worth and Leonard Sts. The same plan shows the Harlem R. R. depot at the n. w. cor. of Centre and Franklin Sts.

Jan. 4 The editor of the Com. Adv. receives "a large lithographed design for the proposed Washington monument," by Robert Kerr of New York. "He proposes an edifice to be used as a place of public resort, a lounge or promenade, to rest on a stylobate or basement of steps, to be of a circular form, surrounded by a colonnade with galleries and terraces, an enriched dome and skylight. [It is further described.] . . ."—N. Y. Com. Adv., Ja 4, 1845. The lithograph is reproduced as A. Pl. 26-b, Vol. III. Jan. 4

" "The Broadway Journal.—The first number of a new weekly has this morning been laid upon our table. It is a sheet of sixteen pages, neatly printed in two broad columns. The articles, which are all original and generally well-written, relate to literature and the arts. Among the contributors we find the names of Mrs. Child and James Russell Lowell."—Eve. Post, Ja 4, 1845.

7 Gen. Lamar, ex-president of Texas, is in New York. On Jan. 8, he received visitors in the governor's room of the city hall.—Eve. Post, Ja 7, 1845. See Mr 3.

16 It is resolved by the common council that measures be taken immediately "to prevent any interference with the chartered rights of this city," and to prevent "encroachments upon the property of this City along the Brooklyn shore," as well as "to remove trespassers therefrom."—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XII: 237–38.

17 "The New Post Office.—The post office department last summer [see Ag 10, 1844], leased the Middle Dutch Church for seven years, at the moderate sum of $5000 per annum. The property is estimated by the Consistory to be worth $300,000. The building has been altered and fitted up in a very handsome and convenient manner, under the direction of our postmaster, Col. Graham, and will be opened the latter part of this or the beginning of the next month, for the transaction of business. . . .

"The post office is situated on a spacious lot, bounded by Liberty street on the north; on the east by buildings on Liberty and Cedar streets; on the south by Cedar street; and on the west by Nassau street. The lot which contains a large number of vaults belonging to the congregation of the Middle Dutch Church, is surrounded by a strong iron railing, and iron railings are built around the vaults which protect the tomb stones from being defaced or injured by wanton or sacrilegious hands.

"There is a large gateway on Cedar street, which opens the front of the office, in which there are three doors leading to the 'box delivery.' On the front of the office a large and handsome portico, supported by pillars has been erected for the protection of those who have business at the box delivery. On Nassau street there are six gates which afford entrance to the box delivery, general delivery, ladies' window, mail carriers' door and window, newspaper delivery and editors' boxes. A handsome verandah with glass windows extends the whole length of the building on Nassau street, which affords protection from the inclemency of the weather to all who have business at the windows, without excluding the light from the post office. On the east side there is a covered passage enclosed in glass, which leads to the offices of the cashier, postmaster, transcript office, city despatch office, and for the entrance of the clerks. The main building is of stone, exceedingly plain, but substantial,—the architecture having no claim to ornament or beauty. It has been recently painted, and is a tolerably good imitation of granite. Its dimensions are one hundred feet by seventy-five, exclusive of the tower and the two wings which have been added for the reception of the mails. The tower, which is about one hundred feet high, contains a clock, and an alarm bell weighing 2000 lbs., placed there by the corporation of the city. The roof originally shingled is now covered with metal, which renders the exterior of the office nearly fireproof.

"On entering the front of the office you find a spacious hall with a marble floor, in which are placed two large stoves, the pipes of which passing into drums, warm also the Postmaster's and Cashier's offices in the second story. Here is a range of letter boxes, extending the whole length of the hall, numbering three thousand two hundred and twenty six, from which there are five places of delivery. Over the centre of the boxes, there is a fine clock which runs 375 days, made by A. D. Crane.

"Such an imposing array of boxes shows at once the vast amount of business done in this office, especially when we take into consideration that there are nineteen mail letter carriers, who deliver their letters two or three times a day, besides twelve persons employed in delivering the City Despatch letters.

"In entering the office on the left of the Box Delivery, we approach the Assorting Department, where the letters are separated and delivered to their respective departments, viz: those which belong to the General Delivery, the boxes, the ladies, and the carriers. There are opposite the General Delivery windows, two large triangular alphabetical boxes, which turn upon a pivot, so as 1845 Jan. 17 to face the delivery clerk—one contains the letters from A to I, and the other from J to Z. In these alphabetical boxes are placed all letters which do not belong to the "box delivery," to the ladies, or are taken out by the carriers. They are generally such as are addressed to strangers and persons whose residence is not known by the carriers. At these windows are deposited also the letters for the mails, through apertures made for the purpose.

"Next to this is a separate department for the ladies' window at which no one is permitted either to receive or deposite letters but ladies. The carriers' door and delivery is next to this, at which they attend on Sundays for the delivery of their letters. Adjoining this is the Newspaper Delivery, and the editors' boxes, to which they have access at all times, both by day and by night.

"Next to these, and in the centre of the building, there is two long ranges of boxes placed on tables, extending nearly the whole length of the office in which the mail letters are distributed prior to their being mailed, and opposite to them are eight large tables which are appropriated to the assorting and making up of the mails. Here is a partition separating the letter from the newspaper distribution. Also on the other side of the office are three circular tables, surrounded with framework on which three tiers of mail bags may be suspended for the reception of newspapers as they are distributed at the tables. In front of the box delivery are two large tables on which the letters are examined and the rates corrected, previous to their being deposited in the boxes.

"At the north end of the building, a portico is erected to shelter the mails which are received and delivered at a large door in the basement of the tower, on either of which there are two wings containing fire proof rooms, where the mails are securely deposited until they are taken into the office for distribution. On the east side there are several rooms enclosed in glass, one of which is devoted to the use of the City Despatch Carriers,—another as a wash room—and two entrances, one for the clerks of the office, and another to the cashier's and postmaster's rooms in the second story, which are approached by a spiral stair case. In the south end of the building are several fine rooms, which are occupied as the cashier's office, containing a large iron safe inserted in the massive wall, which is four feet thick; adjoiningt his is the postmaster's room for public business, which communicates with hisprivate room, where is also the magnetic telegraph, by which intelligence is conveyed to and from the Branch Post Office in Chatham square, and also to his residence in Eighth street, which is about two miles from the office.

"The west side of the second story has a large room where all letters are rated, stamped, and made ready to be mailed. There are also next to this two rooms devoted to the night clerks, adjoining which is one for the use of the letter mail carriers, and is approached from their lower office by a spiral staircase, by which means the carriers are kept distinct from the other parts of the office to which they have no access. . . .

"As light is a desideratum in the Post Office, and for the want of which the clerks have heretofore suffered in all the places occupied in this city, a spacious sky-light, fifty-five by fifteen feet has been constructed in the ceiling and roof of the building, which gives ample light for the transaction of the business of the office.

"It may be added that Croton water is brought into each end of the building, and is furnished with hose and pipes, that any fire which might occur could be extinguished by the night clerks in a few minutes.—Everything which could be done for the safety of the building has been accomplished, and every part has been fitted up with a view to facilitate the business of the office and afford satisfaction to the community. . . . Some persons have complained that so much expense has been incurred in fitting up this new office, inasmuch as the property does not belong to the government; but were they acquainted with the terms on which this building was obtained, they would be satisfied that they are much better for the government than if they had purchased it."—Eve. Post, Ja 17, 1845; descrip. of Pl. 130-a, III: 695. See also Hone's Diary, II: 241. Printed invitations to view the building, surmounted by a picture of the old church, and lithographed by Endicott, were issued by Postmaster Graham. A copy was offered in the sale of the Holden Collection.—Descrip. of Pl. 130-b, Vol. III. See also Ja 27 and F 4. A later view of the building, about 1860, from a stereoscopic photograph by Anthony (not by Holmes, as stated in the plate description), is reproduced as Pl. 150-b, Vol. III, from an enlargement (in possession of the N. Y. Hist. Soc.) made from the original negative owned by Mr. Frederick H. Meserve.

27 The old Middle Dutch Church in Nassau St., which has been leased by the government and fitted up for a post-office (see Ag 10, 1844; Ja 17, 1845) is opened for public inspection. It was opened for business a few days later.—N. Y. Herald, Ja 28; Eve. Post, Ja 28, 1845; The Great Metropolis for 1851, 74–75. See also Pl. 130, Vol. III. The branch post-office moves to Chatham Square.—See descrip. of Pl. 115, III: 618. See F 4.

28 The Bloomingdale Road had been widened by this time, from 25th to 45th St., at a total cost of $49,475.31.—Man. Com. Coun. (1857), 537.

Feb. 4 The new post-office in the Middle Dutch Church (see Ja 17) and the branch office in Chatham Square are opened for business. The old offices in the Rotunda and the merchants' exchange are discontinued.—Eve. Post, F 4, 1845; descrip. of Pl. 130-b, III: 697; and descrip. of Pl. 150-b, III: 725. See also Stone, *Hist. of N. 8 A "goodly number of friends of the project of erecting a new and capacious Opera House in the upper part of the city" meet at the New York Hotel. P. G. Stuyvesant having offered "a long lease of a highly eligible site, at an inconsiderable yearly rent," a committee is appointed to accept the offer and to solicit subscriptions.—Eve. Post, F 10, 1845. This probably led to the erection of the Astor Place Opera House.

12 J. Romeyn Brodhead, who was appointed agent of the state of New York under an act of the legislature, passed May 2, 1839 (q. v.), "to procure and transcribe documents in Europe relative to the Colonial History of this State," makes his report to the governor. This was transmitted to the senate by the governor on Feb. 21, and published this year. It consists of a Calendar to the Holland Documents, in the office of the secretary of state at Albany, transcribed in 16 vols. (MS.) from the originals, in the "Royal Archives" at The Hague, and the archives of the city of Amsterdam; a Calendar to the London Documents, in the office of the secretary of state at Albany, transcribed in 47 vols. (MS.) from the originals in the Queen's State Paper Office, the office of the Privy-Council, the library of the British Museum, and the library of the Archbishop of Canterbury at Lambeth (in London); and a Calendar to the Paris Documents, in the office of the secretary of state at Albany, transcribed in 17 vols. (MS.) from the originals in the archives of the "Ministère de la Marine et des Colonies," of the "Ministère de la Guerre," and in the "Bibliothèque du Roi," at Paris.—"General Introduction" to N. Y. Col. Docs., I: xxi-xli.

These were published, in accordance with the provisions of the act of March 30, 1849 (q. v.), entitled "An act to provide for the publishing of certain documents relating to the Colonial history of the state;" and the act of April 12, 1856, entitled "An act in relation to the Colonial history of the state, and the publication and distribution thereof." The documents in Dutch and French were translated by E. B. O'Callaghan.—Ibid., I: title-page (with verso), and xlii-xlv. Publication dates and contents are as follows:

25 In a report to the house of representatives, Henry C. Murphy, of the committee on military affairs, reviews briefly the martyrdom of the prison-ship victims, and presents the results of an inquiry into the propriety of erecting a proper sepulchre for the bones now lying at the Wallabout. These remains have been preserved for more than 30 years through the care of the late Benjamin Romaine (see Jl 4, 1839), who during that time owned the ground which had been given by Samuel Jackson, of Brooklyn, for the purpose of placing there, in 1808, a temporary vault. See 1842. As a result of this report, the committee of congress reported in favour of a joint resolution to give the remains a "proper burial."—See Rep. No. 176, House of Rep., 28th cong., 2d sess. The copy of this report in the N. Y. P. L. (catalogued under "United States Military Affairs"), is inscribed: "This report was written by me. H. C. M."

26 "Progress of the City.—The growth of the city in the upper wards is astonishing. Whole streets of magnificent dwelling houses have been erected in the vicinity of Union Square within the last year, and some half dozen elegant churches are in process of erection in the same neighborhood. The Fifth Avenue is rapidly filling up, and in the course of a few years will be one of the finest streets on the continent. Fourteenth street, running from river to river, is a noble thoroughfare and is now nearly the centre of the fashionable faubourgs, whilst a year or two since it was quite the boundary line of the city in that direction. . . ."—N. Y. Herald, F 26, 1845.

" Myndert Van Schaick addresses to Aldermen James Palmer, Charles Henry Hall, James B. Murray, Henry Meigs, Assistant Alderman Peter S. Titus, "and the other friends of the Croton River project in the Common Council of 1832–3," a communication entitled "A Relation of the Measures which were Adopted for the purpose of Supplying the City of New York with the Water of the Croton River." It was published in Eve. Post, Mr 18, 1845.

28 The legislature continues for five years longer the relief extended by act of April 27, 1840, to the Institution for the Instruction of the Deaf and Dumb.—Laws of N. Y. (1845), chap. 14.

Mar. 3 Congress, by joint resolution, which the president confirms, annexes Texas, such resolution going into effect on July 4. In December, Texas was admitted as a state.—Winsor, VII: 291, 506.

" The common council permits the New York Gallery of Fine Arts to occupy "the building known as the Post Office or Rotunda in the Park," for the exhibition of paintings, statuary, and engravings, at the rent of one dollar per year, during the pleasure of the board.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XII: 274; Eve. Post, F 10, 11, 17, Mr 4 and 6, 1845.

4 James K. Polk is inaugurated president.—N. Y. Herald, Mr 5 and 6, 1845; Winsor, VII: 291, 355; Hone's Diary, II: 244.

22 The legislature prohibits fishing with seines or nets in the Hudson River, north of Castle Garden, between six o'clock in the evening and six o'clock in the morning.—Laws of N. Y. (1845), chap. 31. Mar. 22

28 The legislature, by act of April 27, 1840, having granted a loan of $10,000 to the Am. Seaman's Friend Soc., now permits the society to retain the sum without interest so long as its trustees shall use it "to promote the benevolent objects of the Sailors' Home, erected for the boarding and accommodation of seamen" in this city.—Laws of N. Y. (1845), chap. 37. A letter describing at length and praising the Sailors' Home, on Cherry St., was published in the Com. Adv., Mr 24, 1845; see ibid., Mr 26, and Ap 6, 1845.

29 "Morse's Telegraph.—The rooms for the exhibition of the electric telegraph presents one of the most attractive and interesting lounges in this city. Just step up stairs at 563 Broadway, and be delighted, instructed, and astonished by the working of this magical means of communication."—N. Y. Herald, Mr 29, 1845.

Apr. 2 The common council orders "That the stone trackways now laid in Broadway be taken up and cut in pieces from two to four feet in length, and re-laid crosswise, and that a sufficient quantity of stone be procured in addition thereto to complete the two most central tracks from three to four feet in width, and the two other tracks from two to three feet in width;" the sum of $550 is appropriated for the work.—Proc. App'd by Mayor, XII: 321.

7 The corner-stone of the burned Washington Hall (see Jl 4, 1844), which was laid at the corner of Broadway and Reade St. in 1809 (q.v., Jl 4), is removed from the ruins.—Eve. Post, Ap 7 and 8, 1845. This prompts Philip Hone to record:

"The site of Washington Hall, in Broadway, between Chambers and Reade streets, was lately sold by the heirs of Mr. John G. Coster to A. T. Stewart, who is preparing to erect on the ground a dry-goods store, spacious and magnificent beyond anything of the kind in the New World, or the Old either, as far as I know. . . ."—Hone's Diary, II: 245. Here Stewart built (see S 10, 1846) the great retail store with marble front, which still stands as the well-known "Stewart Building." Stewart's project supplanted efforts already under way, started by Charlotte Cushman in 1842, to erect a theatre on the site.—Eve. Post, My 7, 1842. In 1917, the Stewart building was purchased by Frank Munsey as a publishing-house for The Sun.—N. Y. Times, O 10, 1917; O'Brien, The Story of The Sun, 433.

8 Wm. F. Havemeyer, the Democratic candidate for mayor, is elected.—N. Y. Herald, Ap 9, 1845; Man. Com. Coun. (1845–6), 303. He succeeds James Harper.—See Ap 9, 1844. He was succeeded by Andrew H. Mickle.—See Ap 14, 1846.

12 The legislature appropriates $5,000 annually for five years for the relief of the N. Y. Institution for the Blind.—Laws of N. Y. (1845), chap. 58.

16 The possibility of war with Mexico is rumoured.—N. Y. Herald, Ap 16, 1845. See also Eve. Post, Ap 15, 1845.

17 "According to the City Inspector, it appears that 1210 buildings have been erected within the precincts of the city itself during the past year, and 900, as we are credibly informed, in Brooklyn, which is to all intent and purposes as much a part of New York as Southwark and Kensington are of London, or the Faubourgs are of Paris.

"Though the number of houses actually built may have equalled this in former years, the quantity of brick laid and of ground covered is vastly greater than it has been in the same space of time. The houses generally are of a better style of finish; many of them costing from $20[,000] to $40,000, and a few, perhaps, as high as $70,000. . . .

"Of the dwellings we have enumerated above, the greater part are owned by individuals, and those built by contract on builders' account, find ready purchasers at an advance upon the actual cost. The number of churches now near completion is unprecedented.

"There are already indications of an increased number of dwellings for the present and ensuing years. Contracts have been made for the erection of fine buildings on the 5th Avenue, as far out as Murray Hill. The whole of the Sixteenth Ward will soon be covered with fine houses, and the time is much closer at hand than we are aware of, when the Distributing Reservoir will be one of the public squares and promenades of the city itself.

"At the present rate of increase, New York with its environs will contain in 1861, a population of one million; and in 1877 . . . it will count up two millions of people.

"Who so blind as not to see that New York will always be the 1845 Apr. 17 " great city of the western world?"—Eve. Post, Ap 17, 1845 See also ibid., Ap 24, 1845. Among the new buildings is a "playing house for children."—N. Y. Com. Adv., Ap 2, 1845.

A correspondent writes to one of the papers: "I am informed that the upper Reservoir is dry, and clouds of dust fill the city, where every thing seems as dry as a tinder-box. What would be the effect if we had a large fire, and any accident should happen to the pipes from the lower Reservoir? . . .

"The present Common Council have sold the buildings on Thirteenth street, covering the old reservoirs, and they are being torn down.

"These reservoirs were built on a solid stone foundation, forty feet above the street, on the very highest ground in the city, and only needed fifteen feet additional height of tank to conduct the water to the highest rooms in the Astor House and other high buildings on Broadway and other streets, where the Croton fails to supply at this time during the day. . . .

"I was informed by the Chief Engineer, that in a few years at least six such reservoirs as have been sold in Thirteenth street, will be required in various parts of the city, to keep a full supply of water at all times, and to counteract the friction of the pipes from Forty-second street, and to guard against accident.

"It is to be hoped the new Common Council will ponder on the subject, and remember 1835 and Pittsburg."—Eve. Post, Ap 17, 1845.

25 The Harlem R. R. depot at Fourth Ave. and 27th St. is destroyed by fire.—N. Y. Herald, Ap 26, 1845.

" The Bowery Theatre is destroyed by fire for the fourth time.—N. Y. Herald, Ap 26, 1845; Costello, Our Firemen, 235–40; L. M. R. K., III: 982. It was immediately rebuilt and re-opened on Aug. 4.—Brown, I: 121.

May — In this month, the Magnetic Telegraph Co. opened its telegraph office at No. 46 Wall St., in a small basement room.—Proceedings of the Magnetic Tel. Co., I: 24. The first meeting of the stockholders in New York was held on Jan. 21, 1846, at Bunker's Mansion House.—Ibid., I: 26. On May 1, 1851, a branch office of the Magnetic Telegraph Co. was established at 203 Broadway.—Ibid., I: 262. On Jan. 1, 1852, the Magnetic Telegraph Co. combined with the Bain Line, hitherto a rival line operating along the same route as the Magnetic Telegraph Co.—Ibid., I: 290. Another branch of the Magnetic Telegraph Co. was located at 181 Broadway in 1856.—Ibid., II: 175. See also descrip. of Pl. 147, III: 720.

3 The "Henry Clay," the largest merchantman in the U. S., owned by Grinnell, Minturn & Co., is ready to sail on her maiden voyage.—Hone's Diary, II: 247.

4 The 50th anniversary of laying the corner-stone of St. Mark's Church is celebrated, an historical address being delivered by the rector, Dr. Anthon. This was published in a pamphlet.—N. Y. Com. Adv., Je 19, 1845.

5 Eleven houses on William St., Nos. 111 to 133, are being demolished "to make way for modern warehouses." In one of them Washington Irving was born; another was the Horse and Cart Tavern, famous in Revolutionary history.—N. Y. Com. Adv., My 5, 1845. For the latter, see L. M. R. K., III: 978–79.

7 By this time, the total cost of opening Madison Square amounted to $75,306.—Man. Com. Coun. (1857), 537.

8 The legislature incorporates "The Colored Home," for "the support and comfort of infirm and destitute coloured persons of both sexes." For this purpose this corporation is permitted to hold real estate in New York, not exceeding $50,000 in value, and personal property not exceeding $50,000 in value. The home is to be subject to inspection by state and municipal officials, and shall make an annual report to the governor.—Laws of N. Y. (1845), chap. 148. Cf. Ap 16, 1838. On May 10, the legislature appropriated a fund, originally intended for a state hospital (see Mr 11, 1839), for "the erection of a permanent building on the real estate belonging to the said colored home . . ., for the support and relief of disabled colored sailors and other infirm and destitute colored people."—Ibid. (1845), chap. 175. For a sketch of its later history, see Man. Com. Coun. (1868), 421–25. In 1865, it was situated on 65th St., near First Ave.—Ibid.

" The "corner stone of the Alms House, proper, now in process of erection on Randall's Island," is laid with appropriate ceremonies.—Eve. Post, My 9, 1845.

12 A cross is decided upon by Trinity vestry for the "termination or Fineal" of the spire.—Trin. Min. (MS.). See Jl 9.

May 13 Mayor Havemeyer in his message to the common council offers the following criticism of that body: "The annual election of thirty-four persons, whose . . . main business is to collect and distribute, through the various forms of patronage, nearly a million and a half of dollars, is an event of no ordinary interest. The nature of man must be radically changed before success in such an election can be prevented from being regarded in some degree as a pecuniary prize to be contended for; and to the extent to which it is so regarded, it is corrupting in its effects. . . . A change in the political complexion of the Common Council is generally followed by a change of all the officers in the government, from the highest to the most subordinate; and this change has now become almost annual.

"The facility with which it is accomplished leads to combinations to effect it—those who win this year hold their offices by the same uncertain tenure as those whom they displaced—are assailed by the same combinations—and are in turn thrown out of employment to await the chances of the next year's competition. This is a disqualifying process. The man thus ejected from office seldom returns to his original business; or, if he does, it is not with that reliance upon it which commands success.

"He generally becomes a politician by trade, and seeks no other employment. The uncertainty of his chances of success and defeat generate an excitement, which, like that of gaming, leads to habits of indolence and irregularity. In proportion as he becomes unfit for office, he grows more dependant upon it, and more unscrupulous in its pursuit.

"A government whose organization does not provide the guards which have universally been found necessary to prevent errors and abuses in administration; which produces incessant fluctuations in the officers who conduct it, utterly incompatible with their competency and usefulness; and which itself becomes a mere machinery for the distribution of public favors, ought not to be tolerated where the power to exchange it exists."

The mayor recommends that measures be taken "to procure such alteration in the Charter of the city as will remedy these evils." Abolish the practice denounced by "our constituents, in public meetings," he advises, "of transacting executive business by Committees," and establish the executive departments for which the charter already makes provision. He condemns the existing police establishment as "complicated and inefficient," and recommends the adoption of the plan of organization passed by the state legislature, May 7, 1844 (q. v.), which "your predecessors did not see fit to enact" as an ordinance. "This law," he says, "appears to contain within itself a complete system; it confers powers and imposes regulations which the city does not possess, and cannot establish under its charter or any former law, and which are essential to the object in view; it is presented to us under circumstances which deserve our respect, and appears to be better calculated to give us an efficient police, than the system now in operation, or any which is within the legal competency of the Common Council to carry into effect." The appointment of policemen "for a single year," as provided for in the act, he deprecates as involving the whole system "in the incessant strifes and annual changes of parties," and precluding the patrolmen "from the experience and independence which are indispensable to their usefulness." This evil should be "remedied by the Legislature before its effects are experienced."—Proc., Bd. of Ald., XXVIII: 24–29. The common council adopted the act on May 23 (q. v.).

" A state convention having been suggested to revise the constitution, the state legislature recommends "a Convention of the People of this State," and provides that, at the annual election in November (see N 4), the voters shall by ballots reading "convention" or "no convention" decide whether they wish such. In case the decision is favourable, it is provided that the number of delegates to be chosen shall be "the same as the number of members of Assembly from the respective cities and counties in this state," such delegates to be chosen at a special election on the last Tuesday of April next (see Ap 28, 1846), and to assemble at Albany on the first Monday of June (see Je 1) "for the purpose of considering the constitution of this state, and to make such alterations in the same as the rights of the people demand, and as they may deem proper." It is further provided that "the amendments to the constitution agreed to by the said convention" shall be submitted to the people "for their adoption or rejection" at the 1845 My13 regular election in November (see N 3, 1846).—Laws of N. Y. (1845), chap. 252; Jour. N. Y. Const. Convention (1846), 4–8.

LAST FOUR PAGES OF CATALOGUE SHOWN ON PL. 71.

" The legislature incorporates "The New-York Gallery of the Fine Arts," which was founded in 1844 (q.v.). The object is "to establish in the city of New-York a permanent gallery of paintings, statuary, and other works of art." The payment of one dollar and subscribing to the constitution of the gallery shall constitute the subscriber a life member, entitling him to free admissions. Among the incorporators are Horatio Allen, Wm. H. Appleton, Wm. C. Bryant, Wm. B. Crosby, Peter Cooper, Fredk. De Peyster, Richard Irvin, James G. King, Shepherd Knapp, Robt. B. Minturn, Alfred Pell, Peter A. Schermerhorn, Jonathan Sturges, Moses Taylor, Jacob A. Westervelt, and several other citizens prominent in the life of New York of the period.—Laws of N. Y. (1845), chap. 250.

" The legislature authorises the common council "to raise money by loan, and to create a public fund or stock, to be called 'Building Loan Stock, No. 2,'" not exceeding $150,000. The money so raised is to be applied to "erecting nursery and alms-house buildings, and also an iron fence around Stuyvesant Square," if the common council direct that the fence be made.—Laws of N. Y. (1845), chap. 253. On May 13, 1846, a similar act was passed to raise a sum not exceeding $250,000, for the same purposes.—Ibid. (1846), chap. 253.

" "There has never been in this city so magnificent a place of amusement as Castle Garden now is. Under the direction of Messrs. French & Heiser, it has been fitted up into a saloon, and no one who has not seen it can have an idea of its vastness and beauty. . . The castle on one side commands the view of a bay of unsurpassed beauty, and on the other enables the eye to take in a large part of the city, with its shipping and buildings.

"The whole area covered by the castle has been enclosed with spacious dome, exquisitely painted, while the terraces on the outside have been converted into walks. Just over the entrance a stage has been erected with great taste, in front of which is a small fountain, that continually sends up its waters. More than ten thousand people can be comfortably seated on the main floor and in the galleries, leaving space enough around the whole for promenades."—Eve. Post, My 13, 1845.

Hone describes Castle Garden, where the Italian Opera Co. is performing, as "the most splendid and largest theatre I ever saw,—a place capable of seating comfortably six or eight thousand persons. The pit or area of the pavilion is provided with some hundred small white tables and movable chairs, by which people are enabled to congregate into little squads, and take their ices between the acts. In front of the stage is a beautiful fountain, which plays when the performers, do not. The whole of this area is surmounted by circular benches above and below, from every point of which the view is enchanting. . . ."—Hone's Diary, II: 249. For view of the "castle," see Man. Com. Coun. (1852), 128.

14 The legislature reorganizes the almshouse department. It authorises the common council to appoint a "Commissioner of the Alms House Department," who shall have the same powers and authority as are now conferred upon the "Commissioners of the Alms House and Bridewell." His term of office shall be one year.—Laws of N. Y. (1845), chap. 283.

" The legislature, amending the act of May 7, 1840 (q.v.), authorises the N. Y. & Harlem R. R. Co. to construct a continuation of its railroad through the interior of Putnam, Dutchess, Columbia, and Rensselaer Counties, to some point on the Hudson River opposite Albany, or to some point in Columbia or Rensselaer Co. to form a junction with "any other road leading to a point on the Hudson River opposite . . . Albany."—Laws of N. Y. (1845), chap. 333.

" The legislature passes an act "to establish and regulate ferries between the city of New York and Long Island." The governor is to appoint three commissioners who shall have power to grant licenses for establishing and keeping as many ferries and at such places as they think public convenience may require, between these localities; but not to grant a license for any ferry or ferries which shall interfere with the rights, franchises or privilege of the corporation of the city of New York, in ferries already established, for more than ten years at a time.—Laws of N. Y. (1845), chap. 352.

Under this act, the commissioners granted to Benson et al. licenses to establish the Fulton Ferry, the Hamilton Ave. Ferry, and a new ferry from the foot of Wall St., New York, to the foot of Montague St., Brooklyn. These licenses were to commence at the expiration of certain leases of these ferries, which had been granted by the city.—Hoffman, Treatise on the Estate and Rights of the Corporation, 286–87. The power of the legislature to alienate the ferry right, already given by franchise to the city of New York, was thoroughly examined by Hoffman, and also by Judge Barculo in Benson vs. The Mayor, &c., of New York (10 Barbour 223). May 14

" The legislature discontinues 11th St. between Broadway and The Bowery, as laid down on the Commissioners' Map of 1807–11. This act, in effect, confirms a city ordinance to the same effect.—Laws of N. Y. (1845), chap. 314.

19 The Sir John Franklin Arctic expedition, in the "Erebus" and "Terror," sails from England.—Winsor, VII: 89, 122, 127.

" The Bank Coffee House, in Pine St. (formerly Niblo's), is being torn down.—N. Y. Com. Adv., My 19, 1845; L. M. R. K., III: 976.

23 The common council, after repealing the ordinance of Nov. 29, 1844 (q.v.), establishing the "Municipal Police or Night and Day Watch," adopts the act of the legislature, passed May 7, 1844 (q.v.), establishing a police system.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XIII: 26. An ordinance regulating the police was approved by the mayor on June 16 (q.v.). For the appointment of the first chief of police, see Je 17.

31 Fire destroys about 100 buildings on 18th, 19th, and 20th Sts. between Sixth and Seventh Aves.—N. Y. Tribune, Je 2, 1845; Costello, Our Firemen, 235–40.

June — Following the lead of the Episcopalians (see F 15, 1844), the Methodists put a "floating chapel" into operation. This is moored on the North River, at the foot of Rector St.—Picture of N. Y. in 1846, 138.

8 Andrew Jackson dies at "The Hermitage" in Nashville, Tennessee.—Eve. Post, Je 17 et seq., 1845; Hone's Diary, II: 250–51.

9 "Mr. Thomas Flynn is fitting up the old Richmond Hill Theatre [see Je 29, 1840], so as to contain 3,000 spectators. He is going to call it the 'National Theatre.'"—Eve. Post, Je 9, 1845. Both Brown, I: 235, and the L. M. R. K., III: 951, erroneously state that this was done in 1843.

11 The Academy of Fine Arts in Philadelphia burns down. News reports mention the destroyed paintings and those saved.—N. Y. Com. Adv., Je 12 and 13, 1845.

12 Dedication services are held at the unfinished Presbyterian church at the corner of University Place and 10th St. (see Jl 13, 1844).—N. Y. Com. Adv., Je 13, 1845. On Oct. 1, the pews were sold at auction. "This church is built of free-stone, in the Gothic style. The main building is about one hundred and forty six feet long by sixty broad, . . . The spire is about one hundred and forty feet high. . . . The interior is extremely beautiful, being composed entirely of black walnut, oiled. The roof is supported by five columns of free-stone, on either side, with arches. . . . The cost of the building is estimated at eighty thousand dollars."—Eve. Post, O 2, 1845. See also L. M. R. K., III: 932; descrip. of Pl. 135, III: 704; Picture of N. Y. in 1846, 135.

14 The Bleecker mansion on Broadway, originally a Dutch parsonage house, occupied during the Revolution by the medical staff of the U. S. army, later by Aaron Burr, and then by Wm. Duer (father of Wm A. and John Duer), is being demolished.—N. Y. Com. Adv., Je 14, 1845.

15 Gen. Zachary Taylor is ordered to march to some suitable place on the Gulf to be in readiness to protect Texas after she accepts annexation. Unless Mexico declares war on the U. S., he is simply to defend Texas. Taylor sailed with 1,500 men from New Orleans in July, and in August he established his headquarters on the Nueces River near Corpus Christi. He remained there until the spring of 1846.—McMaster, Hist. of the People of the U. S., VII: 440.

16 An ordinance "Regulating the Police of the City of New-York" is approved by the mayor. This ordinance divides the city into three districts in each of which there shall be a police court and office, and magistrates and clerks are assigned to these courts and offices. Captains and patrolmen are distributed among the 17 wards, and salaries are fixed. The mayor is empowered to make rules for the government of the force and amend the same from time to time when he deems it necessary.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XIII: 99–103.

17 The common council appoints a committee to determine the best mode to testify the board's respect for the late Andrew Jackson.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XIII: 71; Hone's Diary, II: 250 On June 23, the board voted an appropriation of $2,500 "to defray the 1845 Je 17 expenses of the funeral solemnities in this City in honor of General Andrew Jackson."—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XIII: 110.

" George W. Watsell is appointed first chief of police after Mayor Havemeyer's first nomination failed of confirmation in the common council. In the message accompanying the nomination of Watsell, the mayor explains his attempt to lift the newly-established police organization out of politics by making an exception to the rule "by which all parties seem inexorably to act in making appointments exclusively from their own ranks."—Proc., Bd. of Ald., XXIX: 267–69.

18 "Grace Church, at the corner of Broadway and Rector street [built in 1807–9, q.v.], has been sold for $65,000. It is to be converted into stores below, and the upper part into a splendid museum of Chinese curiosities, which are likely to prove a good speculation. Doctor Taylor, the rector, preached the last sermon on Sunday last in the old edifice. The congregation will occupy a temporary place of worship until their splendid new church at the upper end of Broadway is finished. It will be second only to the magnificent Trinity, and will probably be finished about the same time."—Hone's Diary, II: 252. See also a manuscript memorandum to the same effect, under date of June 22, 1845, in the Bayard-Campbell-Pearsall Papers, in the N. Y. P. L. See Mr 7, 1846.

19 A large lithograph has been published recently of a statue of Washington, designed by Catherwood and Crawford. The proposed statue is 75 ft. high on a pedestal 55 ft. high.—N. Y. Com. Adv., Je 19, 1845.

24 Ceremonies in honour of the late Gen. Andrew Jackson are held in New York. A military and civic procession is the feature of the day, arranged by a joint committee of the municipal authorities of New York and Brooklyn. Near the head of the parade, a car drawn by four white horses carries a funeral urn, after which a horse, caparisoned, is led. For the programme, and various features of the event, see N. Y. Herald, Je 23, 24, 25, 1845.

July 9 "The cross has at last been placed on the top of the noble steeple of Trinity Church. As a mere matter of architecture, it is rather, by contrast, calculated to add to the dignity of the structure below. Whether in this respect it is for the better or the worse, there will probably be a diversity of taste. If the cross is intended as a sign to designate the denomination to whom the building belongs, it will be likely to be misunderstood, unless, indeed, Trinity intends to announce her return in due submission to the bosom of Holy Mother Church of Rome, which we suppose is not the case. If the cross is erected under the notion that it adds any thing to the sanctity of the place, that this cross will be an object of adoration, or veneration even, the design is distinctly idolatrous, and in thorough rejection of Him who died on Calvary upon a cross, as a sacrifice in the place of sinners. . . ."—Eve. Post, Jl 9, 1845, citing Jour. of Com. On July 28, the dimensions of the cross were given as follows: "The upright shaft is five and a half feet long and the bar is three feet.—It is made of copper, and gilded."—Ibid., Jl 28, 1845.

19 Over 300 buildings are lost in a fire that sweeps over nearly the same district as that burned in 1835. All of Broad St., with the exception of five or six tenements on either side nearest Wall St., is in ruins; all of Beaver St. from William St. to the Bowling Green is destroyed; nearly the whole of New St., Exchange Place, and South William St., with their immense quantities of merchandise, are ruined.—Hone's Diary, II: 257–59, 260, 261; Great Metropolis for 1846, 60; N. Y. Herald, Jl 21, 22, 1845; Eve. Post, Jl 19, 1845, et seq. The fire began in the sperm oil establishment of J. L. Van Doren, 34 New St., and extended to Exchange Place and Broad St., and finally to the storage house of Crooker & Warren in Broad St. This was a storage for saltpetre. It blew up, and the explosion shook the city, was felt in Jersey City and Brooklyn, and was heard at Sandy Hook. The Adelphi Hotel on Beaver St., the Waverly House on Broadway, 12 warehouses on both sides of Broad St. between Wall St. and Exchange Place, and from Broadway to William St., were among the buildings destroyed. Hone notes that "all the fine buildings down Broadway to Marketfield street, including Abraham Schermerhorn's hotel, at the corner of Beaver street, are gone. Here it [the fire] crossed the widest part of Broadway and burned all the houses from Morris street, including Robert Ray's great granite edifice, Brevoort's house, Gardiner Howland's three houses, and all down to Edward Prime's [No. 1 B'way], which is saved."—Hone's Diary, II: 259. (In 1847, Mrs. Ray had established a residence at the cor. of Ninth Ave. and 28th St.—Ibid., II: 293.)

July 19 The losses in this fire were estimated at $6,000,000. A large part of the property lost consisted of imported goods, on which the duties, already paid, were $600,000.—N. Y. Com. Adv., Mr 17, 1848.

After the fire, N. Currier published a lithographic view entitled "The Bowling Green Fountain. View of the Great Conflagration at New York July 19th 1845 From the Bowling Green. Nearly 300 Buildings destroyed.—Estimated loss of Property $7,000,000."—See view in Eno collection, N. Y. P. L.; and see Ag 26. In the same collection is also the Currier view of the explosion.

" "A great many complaints are made with respect to the various lines of Broadway stages. It would almost seem that, from being a great public convenience, they are becoming public nuisances. There is no particular difference in or about them, except that each line is worse than any other. As to the Bleecker street line, it is said by those who live at and above the site of the ancient and now swallowed up and suburban village of Greenwich, that it is not half sufficient in the number of stages and the frequency of passages, to accommodate the travel between that distant quarter and down town. And this is pretty evidently the fact. Regarding all the lines, it may be generally said that the Corners, for the first six or eight blocks at either end, are considered stations of rest and refreshment for the drivers. If a man of business in Wall and Pine streets desires to reach his dwelling in time for dinner, he must lay his account so as to appropriate one hour to that purpose, which he will generally find sufficient, if he have a favorable passage.

"If the proprietors would direct their drivers to start at certain intervals from each end of the route, and to go through at regular and moderate speed, without stopping, except to let out and take in passengers, all these complaints of vexatious delays would cease."—Eve. Post, Jl 19, 1845.

22 "Last evening [July 22], the fourth after the conflagration [see Jl 19] had subsided, the fire was blazing to the height of six or eight feet above the heaps of ruins, in as many as twenty places. The scene was highly picturesque. The sky was illuminated in the manner familiar only to western people accustomed to see the 'Prairies on fire.' Most of the walls and chimneys, which were so insecure as to endanger those passing about them have been thrown down by the firemen. Piles of brick are already forming along Broad street, preparatory to rebuilding. There is such an abundance of capital now lying in wait for any opportunity of safe investment, and the ground burnt over is so valuable, that we have no doubt, all the buildings consumed will be replaced by better ones in the course of six months."—Eve. Post, Jl 23, 1845.

23 "Several suggestions have been made regarding the widening and straightening of some of the streets comprised within the limits of the late fire. . . . If it be found practicable, it would be an improvement, we think, to close up altogether such generators of combustion as the narrow lanes of New street and Marketfield street. As a general rule, every proper effort should be made to prevent the population becoming too dense in this part of the city, and there is nothing which so much invites it as these streets and alleys, too narrow and confined for the ordinary purposes of commerce."—Eve. Post, Jl 23, 1845.

25 "Consequences of the Fire [see Jl 19].—Some of these, if the case is viewed with the right spirit, may be highly beneficial to the city. In re-building the burnt district, more care will be taken in rendering such buildings as are called fire-proof, worthy of the name. . . .

"Let a little more rigor be used in excluding from the crowded portion of the city, combustible and explosive materials, and in the prevention of danger from furnaces, engines, camphine manufacturies and others.

"The width of a street is of much less consequence as a protection against a large fire than is commonly supposed. This conflagration crossed Broadway with the wind, and Broad street against it, and was arrested on every side where there was no street at all, except on the southern boundary where Stone street in its narrowest part seemed to be a barrier to the flames.

"They have already commenced rebuilding a portion of the burnt district, but we are sorry to say that on taking a stroll through it yesterday, we could see no evidence of a better or more substantial masonry appeared to show themselves. Build quick and burn quicker seems to be our order of the day."—Eve. Post, Jl 25, 1845. Cf. the fires of S 21, 1776, and D 16, 1835.

1845 Aug. 6 The common council permits "the proprietors of Morse's Electro-Magnetic Telegraph to set posts for the purposes of said Telegraph along the line of the side-walks," under the directions of the street commissioner; but "the same shall in no wise obstruct the side-walk or Streets otherwise than other posts permitted to be so placed there; and provided that all breaks in either the pavement of side-walk or Streets in the execution of said work be suitably repaired without any expense to the City."—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XIII: 152. See Jl 29, 1880.

10 "The great iron steamer Great Britain, the leviathan of steam, the monster of the ocean, and unquestionably the largest and most magnificent specimen of naval architecture that ever floated, arrived here yesterday [Aug. 10], at three o'clock, in fifteen days from Liverpool, under . . . Captain Hosken." A deep interest, accompanied by some doubt, awaited her arrival, because she was constructed of iron plates and driven by a screw propeller.—Hone's Diary, II: 260. See also Eve. Post, Ag 11, 1845.

15 "The appraisers appointed for the ascertaining the value of the waters of the Croton taken for the use of the city of New York . . . on Friday [Aug. 15] closed the long and laborious session they have been holding in the village of Sing Sing, by giving to the owners one gross sum of $40,000, as we understand, for the total and complete diversion of the waters of the Croton River to the control of the Corporation of the city of New York, should all be required for the purposes of that city."—Eve. Post, Ag 20, 1845.

26 Deer and swans "add greatly to the charm of the scene" at the Bowling Green fountain, which consists of an irregular pile of rocks.—N. Y. Com. Adv., Ag 26, 1845. For view, see Jl 19, supra; also A Picture of N. Y. in 1846, 84.

27 A correspondent calls attention to the fact that "the remains of General the Baron Steuben lie neglected and almost forgotten beneath the Baptist church in Nassau st." Workmen now repairing the church have been unable to find the marble slab which is said to mark the spot "somewhere among the vaults." The writer makes a plea for the removal of the remains and the erection of a monument.—N. Y. Com. Adv., Ag 27, 1845. Steuben, however, was not buried here, but in Oneida Co.—See N 28, 1794. The Nassau St. Baptist Church, between John St. and Maiden Lane, was formerly the German Reformed Church, and was attended by Steuben when he passed his winters in New York. A mural monument to his memory was removed to the new German church in Forsyth St. when the Baptists acquired the church in Nassau St.—Kapp, Life of Steuben, 603–4. For the church's demolition, see 1847.

30 The "Great Britain" sails from New York "accompanied by a gallant convoy of steamboats and sailing vessels."—Eve. Post, S 1, 1845.

" The "magnetic telegraph" line "between this city and Philadelphia is under contract, and is to be finished in about two months. The posts are down through Broadway to the Harlem railroad, and are continued along that road to Harlem. The line then diverges to Fort Washington, where it is to pass the North River. Whether the wires will be carried under the water or over is not yet determined. The first effort will be to convey the wires in tubes, at a distance so far below the surface of the river as to be out of the way of any passing vessels. . . .

"The line from Philadelphia to Baltimore is to be constructed by the same association that governs the road between New York and Philadelphia, and it is believed that the whole line from Washington to Buffalo will be ready for use by the 1st of March next."—N. Y. Com. Adv., Ag 30, 1845. See S 10.

Sept. 3 The building "on the site of the Old Tammany Hall, No. 164 Nassau street," is being demolished, "for the purpose of erecting on the ground an additional wing to Tammany Hall." A fatal accident occurs by falling walls.—N. Y. Com. Adv., S 4, 1845.

" The Knickerbocker Base Ball Club of New York is organized. —By-laws, Regulations and Rules of the Knickerbocker Base-Ball Club of N. Y., in N. Y. P. L. This is believed to be the first baseball club in America formally organized, and to this club the origin of our "National Game" is traceable.—See "Final Decision of the Special Base Ball Commission," in Spalding's Official Base Ball Guide (1908), 47. Several of the club's "Game Books" (score books), and two volumes of the club's "Correspondence," are also preserved. See Je 19, 1846.

Sept. 7 The first issue of the Scientific American appears. For its early history, see the 70th anniversary issue, June 5, 1915, pp. 512, 540.

10 "The workmen have been engaged for two days past in putting the wires up for the magnetic telegraph. The wires are much smaller than those used by Col. Graham, the late Postmaster, and are neither coated or zerved [sic]. The posts are laid throughout nearly the whole distance, and it is contemplated to have the telegraph in operation by the 15th of October."—Eve. Post, S 10, 1845. On Sept. 20, the Post stated: "The work on the line of telegraph between Philadelphia and New York is rapidly progressing; . . . The work is also in progress between Philadelphia and Baltimore. The line from New York crosses the Delaware at New Hope, and taking a direct line from thence through the borough of Doylestown and Norristown, strikes the Philadelphia and Columbia Railroad at Morgan's Corners, in Delaware County. From this point a branch will be constructed along the railroad to Philadelphia city. The line to Baltimore will be extended along the railroad route, via Lancaster, Columbia and York."—Ibid., S 20, 1845, citing the Tribune. See Ja 26, 1846.

13 "The National Police Gazette, is the title of a weekly paper just issued by Messrs. Camp and Wilkes."—Eve. Post, S 13, 1845.

15 The first issue of a new paper, entitled The Globe, appears. "It is edited by Mr. Levi D. Slamm, and published by Mr. Casper C. Childs, at No. 125 Fulton street."—Eve. Post, S 17, 1845.

30 For the year ending this day (cf. D 31, 1840), 76,514 passengers arrived at the port of N. Y.—Arrivals of Alien Passengers and Immigrants (1891), 64.

Oct. 22 The Unitarians, formerly on Chambers St., dedicate a new church, on Broadway between Prince and Spring Sts. (extending back to Crosby St.), known as "The Church of Divine Unity."—Eve. Post, O 23, 1845; Greenleaf, 374–75. For detailed description of it, with wood-cut view, see Picture of N. Y. in 1846, 133–34. A lithographic view of it by D. H. Arnot, in Eno collection, bears the title "First Congregational Church, Broadway," and the date 1845. See also L. M. R. K., III: 937.

In seven years, this edifice was sold to the Universalists, thus becoming the third site of the "Church of the Divine Paternity," also known as the "Fourth Universalist Church" (L. M. R. K., III: 937; cf. 1855); and the Unitarian congregation built its present church at the south-east corner of Fourth Ave. and 20th St. and took the name "All Souls' Church."—From the church records; also Man. Com. Coun. (1865), 635. See D 25, 1855.

24 The common council orders that a 21-year lease be granted to the United States government "of the outer end of the Pier No. 1, East River, known as the L of said pier, together with one hundred feet of the easterly side of the pier," with "the privilege of erecting a barge office in the angle formed by the L," at an annual rental of $750.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XIII: 207.

25 The common council orders "that the burial ground on Randall's Island, known as Potter's Field, be abandoned as soon as a more suitable place of burial for the poor can be obtained;" also that the committee on charity and alms report "where a suitable location for a burial ground for the poor can be procured. . . ." —Proc., App'd by Mayor, XIII: 214.

Nov. 2 At the annual election on this day a ballot is taken as prescribed by act of legislature (see My 13), resulting favourably for a convention to amend the state constitution.—Eve. Post, N 8, 1845. Delegates to this convention were elected on April 28, 1846 (q. v.).

" The common council orders "That no trees, posts, chains, or any obstacles whatever, be placed within the ground belonging to the Corporation in Madison Square, and that the Military be permitted to parade within the same, until the ground shall be required for more important purposes."—Proc., App'd Mayor, XIII: 224.

Dec. 12 The common council permits the architect of Trinity Church "to set out the iron railing in front of said church three and a half feet upon the side-walk of Broadway, upon condition that the gates be so placed as to open inwardly."—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XIII: 283.

31 The water revenue this year amounted to $164,532.—Man. Com. Coun. (1854), 222.

— In this year, Sir Robert Peel carried against bitter opposition the repeal of the Corn Laws, the keystone of the English protective system.—Hazen, Europe since 1815, 450–54.

1846 In this year, Pius IX was elected pope.—Hazen, Europe since — 1815, 166.

— In this year, the Smithsonian Institution in Washington was founded.—Winsor, I: 439.

— The Catherwood-Papprill view of New York, "Taken from the North west angle of Fort Columbus, Governor's Island," bears this date. It is reproduced and described as Pl. 131, Vol. III.

— In this year was published a guide-book entitled A Picture of New-York in 1846. The title page of the copy in the N. Y. P. L. bears (in pencil) the name of Edward Ruggles as author, and the firm name of C. S. Francis & Co., 252 Broadway, as publishers (with copyright entry, 1845, by Homans & Ellis, on verso). It contains several wood-cut views of prominent buildings, as well as their description. The following information is selected: "Bloomingdale, A remarkably neat village . . . on the left bank of the Hudson, five miles above the City-Hall. An Orphan's Asylum is established here. The village consists chiefly of country seats, and contains some 400 inhabitants. About two miles beyond Bloomingdale, on the same side of the river, is Manhattanville, Containing about 500 inhabitants, an Episcopal church, and some extensive factories. The New-York Lunatic Asylum occupies a commanding position in the southern part of the village. Harlæm is situated two miles southeast of Manhattanville, on Harlæm River, near its discharge into Long Island sound. It is a flourishing village, with a population of 1,500, four churches, and a superabundance of hotels, besides a commodious depôt, belonging to the New-York and Harlæm Rail-Road Company, and several factories. The cars for Harlæm start every hour from the depôt, northeast of the City-Hall."—Ibid., 22–23.

In a description of the city hall reference is made to the watchman "lodged" in the cupola (cf. The Great Metropolis for 1845, p. 60), who gave the "alarm in case of fire, by ringing the big bell, which occupies a small cupola on the back part of the roof."—Ibid., 28.

The University Medical School, with 378 pupils, occupied the building formerly known as the Stuyvesant Institute. This is described with a small wood-cut view of the building.—Ibid., 55.

The American Institute held an annual fair at Niblo's Garden, visited by 30,000 people; also, each year, a cattle show.—Ibid., 57.

The "Merchants' Vigilant Association" investigated and exposed abuses in trade, to prevent frauds, and punish the fraudulent.—Ibid., 58.

Mitchell's Olympic Theatre, on Broadway below Grand St., was at this time the most popular theatre in New York. Mitchell "seized upon local incidents and prevailing follies, and moulded them into most amusing pieces. . . . He has depended more upon the excellence of his stock company, . . . than to the fashionable system of starring."—Ibid., 66–67. See also an old newspaper clipping describing the productions and players of this theatre, pasted in the copy of Holley's guide-book (1847), in the N. Y. Pub. Library. Lafayette Place having been taken from ground formerly comprising Vauxhall, left that resort on the Bowery, between 4th and 8th Sts., much less expensive.—Ibid., 68.

Palmo's Opera House, built for the use of the Italian Opera Co., on Chambers St., opposite the Park, is now devoted to various kinds of theatrical entertainments. It is a small but beautiful theatre.—Ibid., 68.

The state arsenal, in Centre St., next to the city prison, occupied an entire square, and "consists of a quadrangular court, surrounded on two of its sides by sheds, covering numerous pieces of ordnance, on another side by sheds and the keeper's dwellings, and on the other side by a large building, two stories high, filled with a vast assembly of munitions of war. Over one hundred thousand stands of arms are here arranged in long columns, . . . swords, pikes, banners and various trappings of war are ranged around the walls, . . . But by far the most interesting objects are the various trophies, taken from the English during the Revolution and the late war. . . . The 'trophy-room' is full of objects of this kind, besides many other objects of interest. . . ." The arsenal is surrounded by a board fence. Gen. Storms, its commander, has been instrumental in securing the promise of a substantial building "in place of the insufficient shanty that now cumbers the place."—Ibid., 74. See, however, O 2, 1851.

Among the finest packet-ships at this time docking at New York were the "Ashburton," "Garrick," "Victoria," "Liverpool," "Queen of the West," "Yorkshire," and "Henry Clay."—Ibid., 75.

The trans-Atlantic steamships "Great Britain" and "Great Western" docked at the foot of Clinton St., East River.—Ibid., 75. 1846 —

The "sectional dock," at the foot of Pike St., for lifting vessels when repairs were to be made to their hulls, is described; also the inclined railway, used for the same purpose at the shipyards.—Ibid., 76–77.

The forts and fortifications of the city and harbour are described.—Ibid., 77–79.

Tattersall's (on Broadway) was the largest horse market in the U. S.—Ibid., 79.

Tompkins Square was used for a parade-ground.—Ibid., 85.

Stage lines to Harlem, Yorkville, and Astoria, started from 23 Chatham St.; those to Bloomingdale and Manhattanville from Chatham St. and Tryon Row; those to Dover, Morristown, and Powerville, N. J., started from 73 Cortlandt St.; those to Jamaica, Newtown, Flushing, Roslin, Manhasset, Great Neck, and Little Neck, L. I., from 340 Pearl St.

There were 258 regular omnibuses in the city, 2,989 drays, 201 hackney-coaches, and 231 cabs. Twelve of the omnibus lines ran on Broadway and certain uptown avenues and streets, under various names, such as the Empire Line, Chelsea Line, Fulton Ferry Line, Greenwich Line, Knickerbocker Line, etc.—Ibid., 95–97.

The guide contains a list of "all the Passage Boats built and now running on the Hudson river, between New-York, Albany and Troy." It tells when they were built, their names, tonnage, and "remarks" (showing some were "broken up," "sunk," "burnt," etc.). Beginning with the "Clermont" (changed to the "North River"), they total 47.—Ibid., 103–4.

There were several "Daguerrian galleries" in successful operation, the most extensive being Plumbe's, at 251 Broadway. Another establishment of this kind was Anthony, Edwards & Co. The head of this firm was afterwards a leader in photography. Another, Parkinson, was "celebrated for the beauty and perfection of out-door scenes, buildings, &c." A view of Niagara Falls, and views of public buildings in New York revealed his "unequalled" skill in this department of his art. "The prices for miniatures in the various Daguerreotype establishments, vary from one dollar to five dollars, but none that are really good can be obtained for less than three or four dollars."—Ibid., 112.

There were over 300 artists in New York, in the various branches of portrait, miniature, landscape, and historical painting. Among portrait painters were Page, Inman, Elliott, Ingham, Huntington, and Mooney. Most conspicuous among landscape painters were Cole, Durand, and Cropsy. Matteson, the historical painter, Boyle, May, Chapman, and Hicks, are mentioned; also the sculptors Kneeland, Frazee, and Launitz, and the miniature painters Cummings, Fanshaw, Hite, Shumway, and McDougal.—Ibid., 112–13.

The Walton house, at 326 Pearl St., was a boarding-house.—Ibid., 116. See Ag 25, 1823; and cf. infra.

The volume contains several vignette wood-cuts of some of the principal churches.

In this year was published Annals and Occurrences of N. Y. City and State in the Olden Time, by John F. Watson (Phila., 1846). See also 1832. The following notes are from this source: 1846 —

The Walton mansion, at 324 Pearl St., built in 1752 (q. v.), "has even now an air of ancient stately grandeur. It has five windows in front, constructed of yellow Holland brick; has a double pitched roof covered with tiles, and a double course of balustrades thereon. Formerly its garden extended down to the river [see 1828]. The family is probably descended of the Walton, who, a century ago, gave the name of 'Walton's Ship Yard,' at the same place. Wm. Walton, who was one of the council, and the first owner of the above house, made his wealth by some preferences in the trade among the Spaniards of South America and Cuba."—Watson's Annals, 350. For fuller account of the family and its affairs, see "Biographical Sketches," by John Austin Stevens, in Colonial Records, Chamber of Commerce (1867). For view of the mansion, see Man. Com. Coun. (1849), 331; ibid. (1857), 495. See also L. M. R. K., III: 953.

"In the rear of No. 48 Frankford street, is now a very ancient tan yard. This street down to Ferry street, and from William street over to Jacob's street, is the region of what was formerly tan yards, and originally Beekman's swamp. An old man near there, said he remembered to have shot ducks there formerly. The father of another had told him he often gathered huckleberries; and fifty to 1846 sixty years ago it was common to exercise there skating."—

— Watson's Annals (1846), 175.

"Hudson's Square is a beautiful embellishment of New York, redeemed from a former waste, once a sand beach. The large growth of trees and the abundance of grateful shade, make it, in connection with the superiority of the uniform houses which surround it, a place of imposing grandeur. The continuous long lines of iron palisades, both round the square and before the areas of every house, and up the several door steps, give a peculiar aspect of European style and magnificence."—Ibid., 186.

"There are at present but four or five houses remaining of the ancient Dutch construction, having 'pediment walls' surmounting the roof in front, and having their gable ends to the street; a form once almost universal. . . .

"In broad street is one of those houses marked 1698, occupied by Ferris & Co., No. 41. Another, appearing equally as old, but of lower height, stands at the north-east corner of Broad and Beaver streets. These, with the one now standing, of three stories, No. 76 Pearl Street, near Coenties slip, are, I think, the only ones now remaining in New York. . . ."—Ibid., (1846), 350. For views of buildings of the design referred to, see Man. Com. Coun. (1850), 443; ibid. (1861), 580.

— At this time, there stood on Fifth Ave., near the Institution for the Deaf and Dumb (50th St.), the Roman Catholic Church of St. John the Evangelist, which was founded in 1842, and of which the Rev. Felix Larkin was pastor.—Greenleaf (1846), 341–42.

— In this year, a number of young men used to meet socially at a dinner-resort called "The Woodcock," on East Houston St. near Broadway. Literary and professional men, and men of leisure, formed an acquaintance here. From these informal meetings sprang a permanent organization which resulted in the establishment of the New York Club.—From article on "Clubs" in The Galaxy (1876).

This club has had many migrations. It was originally housed in Chambers St., opposite the court-house. It moved to the corner of Broadway and Walker St.; then to No. 737 Broadway (on the west side between Waverly Pl. and Astor Pl.); then to 558 Broadway (east side between Spring and Prince Sts.), where it remained from 1849 to 1851.—King's Handbook of N. Y. City (1893), 546; City Directory. Its next move was to 620 Broadway, on the East side, between Houston and Bleecker Sts., where it remained until 1856. Then it moved to No. 744 Broadway, at the south-east corner of Astor Place, where it leased the large house owned by, and formerly the residence of, John D. Wolfe; here it remained until 1861. The next move was to the Haight mansion, No. 1 E. 15th St., at the north-east corner of Fifth Ave.; the City Directory shows that it was here until 1867, and then occupied No. 2 E 15, directly opposite, until 1870. From 1871 to 1873, it occupied a residence at No. 31 E. 17th St., between Broadway and Fourth Ave., facing Union Square. Then it moved to 309 Fifth Ave., on the east side, between 31st and 32d St., where it remained until 1874. In the spring of that year, it occupied the large residence at No. 1 W. 25th St., between Fifth Ave. and Broadway, facing the Worth monument; it was here fourteen years. The next move, in 1888, was to the Caswell residence, at No. 370 Fifth Ave., on the south-west corner of 35th St., which had been occupied by the University Club. —Galaxy; King's Handbook; City Directory. It remained there until 1906; then for about two years maintained an office at 7 W. 42d St., until it occupied its own building, on March 16, 1907 (q. v.), at No. 20 W. 40th St., where it still is.—City Directories.

— In this year, the Association for Improving the Condition of the Poor called attention to the bad conditions in the tenement-houses of New York and to the relation between poverty and the housing problem.—De Forest & Veiller, The Tenement House Problem, 76.

— In this year, the first volume of the History of New Netherland; or, New York under the Dutch, by E. B. O'Callaghan, was published; in 1848, the second volume appeared.

— In this year was published by John Doggett, Jr., at the "Directory Establishment," a pamphlet entitled The Cries of New York, with 15 illustrations, poetry by Frances S. Osgood, and text describing landmarks, parks, etc.

— In this year, the Home Journal was established by Geo. P. Morris and N. P. Willis in New York. Similar in character to the N. Y. Mirror, which it succeeded, it continued a successful weekly of social, art, and literary import until 1903, when its name and form were changed by new owners to Town & Country, the illustrated weekly of social life which still survives. 1846

In this year, Edgar Allan Poe wrote, for Godey's Magazine and Lady's Book (Phila.), a series of critical essays under the title "The Literati of New York City." —

In this year, Daguerreotype Miniatures of Life in the Empire City, by A. J. H. Duganne, was published in Philadelphia. —

In this year was published A Hist. of the Churches of All Denominations in the City of N. Y., by Jonathan Greenleaf. —

In this year, Henry Kirke Brown, the sculptor, returned to America from Europe and settled in New York. During his stay here he made some of his best known works, including the statue of Washington in Union Square. At the outbreak of the Civil War, he moved to Newburgh.—Tuckerman, Book of the Artists, 575–76. —

"The Magnetic Telegraph.—We learn from an authentic source, says the Baltimore American, that the line of Magnetic Telegraph between Baltimore and Philadelphia may be expected soon to be completed. The posts for the whole line are nearly all delivered, ready for setting up, 'and many weeks,' says a letter before us, 'will not elapse before the completion of this line will finish the Telegraph between Washington and New York.' Mr. Vail is now in Philadelphia, testing the accuracy of the line between that city and New-York, section by section, which will not occupy more than ten days, when the instruments will be put in operation. . . ."—N. Y. Daily Tribune, Ja 5, 1846. Jan. 5

"The Magnetic Telegraph. That portion of the New York and Philadelphia Magnetic Telegraph which is between Philadelphia and Norristown was put in operation on Friday, for the purpose of testing the wires and the working of the machine. There now remain but about seven miles of the line to be completed, in order to form a magnetic connexion between Philadelphia and New York, and this is being rapidly carried forward."—Eve. Post, Ja 6, 1846. 6

"Coney Island Telegraph.—The workmen were engaged on Monday in regulating the wires which have, for the third time, been laid in a lead pipe under the river for the Long Island Telegraph. The Tribune says: 'If this latter attempt shall not succeed, it will be carried across in the air at Blackwell's Island, making the telegraph some twelve miles longer. The bottom of the river at the ferry is hard and rocky, instead of muddy as was supposed; . . .'" —Eve. Post, Ja 7, 1846. 7

Hone records: "I dined yesterday with Mr. Peter G. Stuyvesant, in his splendid new house in the Second avenue, near St. Mark's Church."—Hone's Diary, II: 268. See, however, Ag 17, 1847. "

"Magnetic Telegraph. The wires are all placed from Boston to Springfield; thence to Hartford and this place [New Haven], the holes are dug for the reception of the posts, but as yet none of them are erected . . ."—Eve. Post, Ja 8, 1846, citing New Haven Herald. 8

"The question of applying to the legislature to pass a law giving the corporation authority to open Madison Square in the manner originally contemplated is before the Common Council. The city has too few public squares, the few it has are of small dimensions, and there is not one, at the present time, which is suitable for the manoeuvres of our military companies. It seems to us so far as we have been able to understand the matter, desirable that the original plan and design of Madison square should be adhered to as nearly as possible, and that it should be left free for the erection of such public buildings as the growth of the city may hereafter render necessary, and for the use of the military companies in their parades and exercises. To turn it into a private square, and assess the property of those who have bought it of the corporation in the faith that no assessment should be made, would be clearly an unjust proceeding and wanting in honesty. It is to be hoped therefore that the plan of applying to the legislature, will be adopted."—Eve. Post, Ja 9, 1846. See also ibid., Ja 10, 1846. 9

The common council orders that "the ground adjoining the Distributing Reservoir, between Fortieth and Forty-second Streets, and the west side of said Reservoir, and the Sixth Avenue, be graded . . . and sloped and sodded on the sides bordering upon the avenue and streets, and that the same be enclosed by a neat ornamental wooden fence . . . ; the same to be used as a public park, until required for reservoir or other purposes."—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XIII: 302. 10

The First Presbyterian Church, on the west side of Fifth Ave., between 11th and 12th Sts., erected in 1845, is opened for public worship.—N. Y. Com. Adv., Ja 12, 1846; Greenleaf, 134–35. See Jl 20, and S, 1844. 11

1846 Jan. 14 "The Second Avenue. The two great avenues for elegant residences are to be the Second and the Fifth. The latter is already well sprinkled with dwellings, up to the vicinity of Twentieth street, and the lots fronting on it are commanding very high prices, from six to ten thousand dollars each. Like the Fifth, the Second has its character established as a good neighborhood, by the number of elegant dwellings erected. But hitherto they have extended only to about Eleventh or Twelfth streets, while the spacious square (which the Board of Aldermen, by a recent vote, has determined to enclose with a handsome railing and regulate,) through which it passes from Fifteenth to Seventeenth street [Stuyvesant Square], will continue to keep up the good character of this avenue. . . ."—Eve. Post, Ja 14, 1846.

15 "The Magnetic Telegraph was completed to Lambertville, on the Delaware, in this State, on Monday, when communication was opened with Philadelphia. The battery will be brought to Somerville during the week, and to Newark, on the way to Fort Lee and New York soon thereafter."—Eve. Post, Ja 15, 1846, citing Newark Daily Adv. On Jan. 20, the line was in complete working order between Newark and Philadelphia.—Ibid., Ja 20, 1846. Cf. Ja 26.

17 "The improvements in the mode of warming dwelling houses, which have been introduced in the city of New York within the last two years, have effected almost an entire revolution in this department of our domestic arrangements. Mr. E. L. Miller, of Brooklyn, was the first to introduce among us the present admirable system of air furnaces. He has recently, however, introduced into his own house, 89 Clark street, an arrangement for warming air by radiated [sic] from water heated surfaces only: in other words, a hot water furnace of an entirely new construction. The apparatus is placed in the lower basement of the house, occupies no more space than an ordinary hot air furnace, and distributes the heat through the house in the usual way of the common surface [furnace?]; but the effect of the quantity of fuel under ignition, and the character of the heat, are truly astonishing and delightful."—Eve. Post, Ja 17, 1846.

26 "Magnetic Telegraph. Notice is hereby given, that the Magnetic Telegraph will be opened for the use of the Public on Tuesday morning, the 27th instant, between Newark and Philadelphia, at the rates of charge heretofore published—Communications to be sent by Telegraph will be received, and the postage paid, at the Office of the Telegraph Company, in the basement of No. 10 Wall st., whence messengers will be despatched at 9 and 11 o'clock, A. M., 12 M., 3, 4, and 7 P. M., to convey them to the Station at Newark; and communications will also be received from Philadelphia, via Newark, at the same place, about 8½ and 10 A. M., 12 M., 2½, 5 and 10 P. M. No additional charge will be made on account of these special messengers.

"Communications presented at Newark, at any time between sunrise and 10 o'clock, P. M., (except the ordinary hours for public worship on Sunday) will be immediately forwarded.

"Communications for points south of Philadelphia, or north of New York, may be started by Telegraph after the departure of the mails, be written out by the clerks in the Telegraph offices, and put into the Post-office—thereby gaining a day.

"Communications will be Telegraphed in the order in which they shall be received at the office in New York.

"In case the communication by Telegraph shall be interrupted, public notice thereof will be immediately given.

"By order of the Board of Directors,

"T. M. Clark, Secretary."

" "The common council appropriates $20,000 "for enclosing Stuyvesant Square with an iron railing," and resolves to apply to the legislature for permission "to include this sum with the amount to be funded for the erection of Alms House Buildings, &c." It is to be set out five feet on the sidewalks of 15th and 16th Sts., and ten feet on Second Ave.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XIII: 310; L. M. R. K., III: 971.

30 "The attention of the public has been called often, of late, to the propriety of opening and widening Anthony [Worth] street, and it has been urged in favor thereof that it would greatly tend to reform that sink of pollution known as the Five Points. Much as we are opposed to the revival of that system of improvements that has heretofore wrought so much evil in this city, yet if the widening and opening of every street connected with the Five Points would in any wise tend to break up that nest of vipers, and wipe away from the heart of the city that plague spot, we would not only lift up both our hands in favor thereof, but would be willing that every man, woman and child should be assessed to pay the damages. We know of no place on the earth where there are more wretched beings congregated together than at the Five Points, and what renders it still more abhorrent to the feelings of every philanthropist is that the number, instead of decreasing, is constantly increasing."—*Eve. The corner-stone of Calvary Church, at the north-east corner of Fourth Ave. and 21st St., is laid.—Hone's Diary, II: 273; cf. Eve. Post, Mr 10, 1846. The church was built in 1846–7 after designs by Jas. Renwick, Jr., at a cost of $80,000. It originally had two open-work wooden spires.—Putnam's Monthly Mag. (1853), II: 248, with wood-cut view, p. 247, showing the spires. It also appears with spires in Pl. 136, Vol. III of the present work; and in Miller's N. Y. As It Is (1859), opp. p. 67. 9

The board of aldermen grants permission to John Randel, Jr., and Richd. Varick De Witt to "deposit in the Street Commissioner's Office such plans, models and specifications of his elevated railway" as he may "deem necessary to give the requisite information to the parties interested." In the report of a special committee who had the matter in charge at this time, it was stated that "the petitioners [above named] are in possession of a plan for constructing an elevated railway, that combines the very desirable advantages of strength, lightness of appearance and utility, and is, in the opinion of the Committee, well calculated to answer all the purposes for which it is designed. . . ." 23

In accordance with the permission thus granted, Mr. Randel deposited in the office of the street commissioner plans and models of his elevated railway, which were "advertised for the objections of the parties interested on the line of Broadway." The committee on streets believed that some method should be devised for the relief of Broadway, but in their opinion this purpose would be 1846 Mar. 23 gained by "opening some of the streets running parallel with it to the necessary width." They recommended that William St. should be opened into Chatham St., and Church St. widened and extended to the Battery. "The invention of Mr. Randall," they said, "is one of great ingenuity, and no doubt can be applied to other cities with advantage, but should it come into use on Broadway, it would no doubt destroy the appearance of the street, as well as drive the citizens entirely from it." The board approved this report.—Proc., Bd. of Ald., XXXIV, part 1, 78 (Dec. 6, 1847).

On Sept. 18, 1848, the board received a communication from Randel, inviting them to examine the model and drawings of the elevated railway for Broadway, invented by him.—Ibid., XXXV, part 2, p. 576.

On Dec. 6, 1852, Randel again petitioned the common council for a permit to construct an elevated railway on Broadway.—Proc. and Docs., Bd. of Asst. Ald., XLVIII: 304. See also O 11, N 5 and 8, 1847, and Pl. 133-a, Vol. III, with its description, III: 699.

30 The common council gives the N. Y. & Harlem R. R. Co. three months in which "to complete the necessary buildings at Thirty-second Street, prior to the removal of their depot from Twenty-seventh Street."—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XIII: 377. This is a result of the order to remove the use of steam power from Fourth Ave. below 32d St.—See D 14, 1844.

31 The corner-stone of the Protestant Episcopal Church of the Holy Apostles, at the corner of Ninth Ave. and 28th St., is laid. It is to be a brick edifice, 50 by 79 ft., with a wood spire 160 ft. high, and will be completed in August.—N. Y. Herald, Ap 1, 1846; Greenleaf, 107–8.

" The Astor House is damaged by fire.—Eve. Post, Ap 1, 1846.

Apr. 2 Under the head of "City Improvements," mention is made of: "costly warehouses, nearly completed, which are soon to restore the 'burnt district' to the business aspect which it wore previous to the destructive conflagration of July last, . . . the expansive Church edifices, such as Trinity, Grace, Rev. Dr. Pott's, Rev. Dr. Phillips's, the Divine Unity, &c.—the marble palace on the site of Washington Hall, erected for the Stewarts as a fashionable dry goods depository—the New York club house, adjacent to Niblo's, and many other buildings of a public nature," and various private residences "North of Bleecker street and East of Fifth Avenue," among which are the new homes of Mr. Lenox, Mr. Aspinwall, Mr. Donaldson, and Mr. Brown (of Brown Bros. & Co.). The writer describes in detail the residence of James Penniman, on the south side of Union Square, between Broadway and University Place, of which Mr. French is the architect; and refers to "a new block of buildings opposite Tompkins square, not yet quite finished, erected under the superintendence of Mr. French," which also afford "strong evidence" of "the improvement in architectural science which has begun to manifest itself in this city, in the erection of private as well as public edifices."—N. Y. Com. Adv., Ap 2, 1846.

3 "The Growth of the City.—According to an estimate made by an experienced architect, the number of dwelling houses in this city, compared with the number of inhabitants, falls short of what it was four years ago, by twelve hundred. One reason for the deficiency at this moment is probably the great fire of last summer. . . .

"There is still a good deal of enterprise in the way of building apparent in the upper part of the city.—Whoever goes thither no oftener than once a month, sees changes which give a strange face to places once familiar to him. . . .

"The neighborhood which bears the name of Chelsea is rapidly covering itself with new buildings.—The arrangements made by the original proprietors of the land in that quarter are such that no buildings can be erected for any purpose which will make the neighborhood disagreeable, and it is becoming a favorite place of residence. We saw yesterday in Twenty-third street, near the Tenth Avenue, an elegant row of three story buildings set back from the street in such a manner as to leave a large garden in front, which we learned was to be ornamented with three fountains. In Twenty-fourth street, immediately beyond it, is a row of houses of a neat but somewhat peculiar style of building, intended for cheaper residences, finished with economy but with great neatness, and with all the attention to convenience . . . which the modern practice of domestic architecture has introduced.—These snug tenements, we learned, were meant to be let at very low rates, and are almost finished. [Cf. Ap 2, supra.]

Apr. 3 "No one can witness the arrangements for health, refreshment and convenience which the introduction of the Croton water has enabled builders to introduce into the houses they are erecting, without being satisfied that the benefits of that great enterprise are not yet fully appreciated."—*Eve. 28 As prescribed by acts of legislature of May 13, 1845 (q. v.), and April 22, 1846, delegates are named at a special election to represent the various counties and cities of the state at the constitutional convention to assemble on June 1 (q. v.).

30 The legislature provides that when books of record in the office of the clerk of the city and county of New York become mutilated by use, and the supervisers authorise that they be copied, the copies, when certified by the said clerk to be correct copies of the originals, shall have the validity of the originals.—*Laws of N. " The legislature incorporates the Ocean Steam Navigation Co.—Laws of N. Y. (1846), chap. 145.

9 The legislature passes an act providing for "the calling of a Convention in relation to the Charter of the City of New York. It stipulates that on the first Monday of June, 36 delegates shall be elected from the various wards "according to the usual manner of city elections." These delegates shall meet at the chamber of the board of aldermen, and formulate a new charter or such amendments to the existing charter as are deemed necessary, which business must be completed in time to submit the result to the city and county electors on the first Tuesday after the first Monday of November, 1846. If then adopted, it shall be sent for approval to the next session of the legislature. The election and convention expenses are to be paid from the city treasury. The maximum pay for members of the convention is $1.50 per day.—Laws of N. Y. (1846), chap. 172. See Je 1.

" The legislature incorporates the Prison Association of New York, the objects of which are: 1. 11 On receiving the president's message, announcing a state of war with Mexico, congress grants him power to call out 50,000 volunteers, and appropriates $10,000,000 "as a small outfit for his military operations."—Hone's Diary, II: 278; McMaster, VII: 443.

" The legislature authorises the N. Y. & New Haven R. R. Co. "to extend their railroad from the Connecticut line to the New-York and Harlem Railroad." The act states that the New Haven road was "chartered by the Legislature of the State of Connecticut, at the May session thereof," 1844, to construct a line in Connecticut and Westchester over a prescribed route. The present act supplements the charter with fuller details regarding organization for the construction of the road.—Laws of N. Y. (1846), chap. 195.

12 The legislature incorporates the Hudson River R. R. Co. and authorises it to construct "a single, double or treble railroad or way, between the cities of New-York and Albany." The road is to be commenced within one year, and a single track road is to be completed within four years. Its location in New York City may be on or west of Eighth Ave. and on or west of Hudson St., if the consent of the city corporation is obtained, but the road shall not infringe on the rights or privileges of the Harlem R. R. Co. "by using any track or line of the road contiguous to or along side their track," nor shall any part of it be located "east of or within one mile of the said Harlem railroad, in the county of Westchester."—Laws of N. Y. (1846), chap. 216. On March 20, 1847, the time for commencing the Hudson River R. R. was extended to Nov. 15, 1847.—Ibid. (1847), chap. 31. 13 President Polk signs the bill of May 11 (q. v.), and issues a proclamation declaring that a state of war exists between the U. S. and Mexico.—Eve. Post, My 15, 1846; Winsor, VII: 292; McMaster, VII: 445.

"It has long been the fashion to assert that the annexation of Texas was the cause of the Mexican War. No such delusion was held by the people of 1846. The great meeting in New York attributed the war to 'the aggravated and multiplied wrongs to which our country has been subjected by Mexico during a long series of years;' to the refusal to make reparation after it had been promised; to the recent rejection of our minister sent to make a friendly adjustment; and to the invasion of our soil. At Baltimore one branch of the City Council stated the causes of the war to be, 'a systematic and long-continued course of faithlessness, falsehood, and insolence on the part of Mexico toward our Government.' A meeting of citizens at Easton, Pennsylvania, declared the causes of the war were the wrongs inflicted upon our citizens and the cold-blooded murder of our gallant officers and men. Another at Harrisburg found justification for a resort to arms in Mexico's 'long-continued disrespect to our Government and official agents,' in her refusal to adjust our rightful claims, in her refusal to negotiate on the subjects in dispute, and in her invasion of our soil."—McMaster, VII: 446. "The Messrs. Delmonico have recently erected a large building as a hotel at No. 25 Broadway. The house is handsomely furnished throughout, . . . The well-earned reputation of Delmonico will no doubt cause it to be much frequented."—Eve. Post, My 26, 1846. This was on the south-west corner of Morris St.; it was afterwards well known as the Stevens House (No. 21–27 Broadway). Until 1856, it vied with the Astor House as the finest hotel in the city. It was torn down in 1919 to make way for the new Cunard Building.—N. Y. Times, Nov. 23, 1919 (Real Estate Section, p. 5); L. M. R. K., III: 978. See 1855. 26

A convention of delegates to consider amendments to the state constitution (see My 13, 1845) assembles at Albany, and elects John Tracy of Chenango Co. president.—Jour. N. Y. Const. Convention (1846), 9–12. The sessions of the convention continued until Oct. 9 (q. v.). June 1

The Oregon question is settled by a treaty between the U. S. and Great Britain, signed at Washington by James Buchanan, secretary of state, and Richard Pakenham, British minister. The northern boundary of the U. S. west of the Rocky Mountains is fixed at 49° N. L. and the middle of the channel between Vancouver Island and the continent. The treaty was signed by the president on June 19; ratifications were exchanged on July 17, and it was proclaimed on Aug. 5.—*U. S. Hone writes: "It makes an interesting item in my journal, that I should have dined with the British Minister on the day on which this joyful event occurred,—an event which restores the prosperity of the nation, sets commerce again upon its legs, makes the husbandman's corn grow higher and his grass more green, and would equally rejoice the manufacturers, if they would let this unhappy tariff alone."—Hone's Diary, II: 280.

The first match game of base ball on record is played on this day at the grounds of the "Knickerbocker Ball Club" (see S 3, 1845) in Hoboken. The "New York Club" defeats the "K. B. The corner-stone of the new St. George's Church is laid on the corner of Rutherford Pl. and 16th St., on land given by Peter G. Stuyvesant.—Eve. Post, Je 24, 1846. The architects selected were Otto Blesch and Leopold Eidlitz. The building was opened for service on Nov. 19, 1848; it was consecrated Dec. 4, 1849, but was not completed until Nov., 1856, when the spires were erected, and a clock and large bell added. On Nov. 14, 1865 (q. v.), St. George's Church was gutted by fire. It was rebuilt as nearly as possible in conformity with its original plan, and reopened on Sept. 29, 1867 23

1846 (q.v.). In 1890, the old spires, which had not been destroyed in the June fire of 1865, were found to be unsafe, and were accordingly taken 23 down.—Anstice, Hist. of St. George's Church (1911), 167–68, 178–79, 205, 232, 234–35, 316. 7 Sloat raises the U. S. flag over Monterey. On July 11, the flag was raised on Sutter's Fort on the Sacramento. "Each flag-raising was followed by the reading of a proclamation in which Sloat claimed California as a part of the United States, . . ."—McMaster, VII: 469. Com. Stockton, succeeding Sloat, took Los Angeles, and proclaimed himself governor of California. Frémont was made military commandant. This conquest not proving complete, it was necessary for Stockton to recapture the position early in in 1847.—McMaster, VII: 470; Winsor, VII: 410.

23 The common council permits the N. Y., Albany, and Buffalo Magnetic Telegraph Co. to erect posts for their telegraph line through Eighth Ave. to Bank St., through Bank St. to and through Washington St. to Rector St., thence through Wall St. to the "Merchants' Exchange Buildings," under certain regulations.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XIV: 55.

" A bill having been introduced in congress making an appropriation for improving the fortifications at the Narrows, Henry I. Seaman, speaking in favour of the measure, says: "I ask the members of this House to remember that three-fourths of the revenue of the country is annually collected in the city of New York, and that property, to an immense amount, from different and distant portions of the country, and belonging to citizens of every state in the Union, is continually in store there, to say nothing of the vast amount belonging to her own citizens." The bill proposes the sale or exchange of the site and materials of old Fort Gansevoort, and the application of the proceeds to the acquisition by the United States, and the repair, of Fort Tompkins and Fort Richmond on Staten Island. Defences of New York Harbour are also projected at Sandy Hook. Forts Hamilton and Lafayette, on the Long Island side, are not considered sufficient to make the channel secure, even with the assistance of the Hudson and Morton batteries.

It was stated recently in a New York newspaper that: "It is well known to every engineer that there is no spot where the city can be so well defended as at the Narrows, on the Staten Island side; and that, whenever a hostile fleet passes that point, the city must be subjected to the will of the enemy, and may be bombarded or destroyed. During the War of 1812 the State of New York expended nearly half a million dollars to erect fortifications near the Telegraph. As soon as peace was declared the works were abandoned; and they have since become (except materials) utterly worthless. Not a single gun is at present mounted on them. The State has long since agreed to sell all their works and ground for a sum far less than many individuals would be willing to pay for the land alone." The bill passes the house.—From Seaman's printed speech, Wash., 1846.

28 The common council orders that a grant be made to the Roman Catholic Orphan Asylum Society of the land on the east side of Fifth Ave., between 51st and 52d Sts., and extending eastward 450 ft. from the avenue, on condition that the society erect within three July years a building or buildings upon it, the plan of which shall be 28 approved by the mayor, and with certain other restrictions. The board also orders that a lease be granted to this society for the rest of the block as far east as Fourth Ave., during the pleasure of the common council.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XIV: 59–60. See Ag 1, and 1851. There is a small wood-cut view of the building in Man. Com. Coun. (1864), 322, and in the Manuals for the following years; see also L. M. R. K., III: 955.

"The progress of laying down the Russ pavement, as it is called, 9 between Chambers street and Reade street, has been interrupted by the want of a sufficient number of stone blocks to fill the space. Workmen are now getting them out in the quarry. . . .

"The construction of this pavement is described thus: The street is first dug down about two feet, a foundation is then laid, consisting of cement intermixed with fragments of stone, the surface of which is made uniform and level, and strewn with a layer of fine gravel. On this are laid the granite blocks which compose the upper part of the pavement; they are about nine inches high and six inches in width each way. The interstices are filled from the top with fine gravel."—Eve. Post, S 9, 1846. See also ibid., S 23, 1846.

"Mr. Stewart's splendid edifice, erected on the site of Wash- 10 ington Hall, in Broadway, between Chambers and Reade streets, is nearly finished, and his stock of dry goods will be exhibited on the shelves in a few days. 9 The constitutional convention, which assembled at Albany on June 1 (q. v.), concludes its labours, and the amended constitution of 14 articles is signed by 103 of 109 delegates. In an address to the electors of the state (which was adopted unanimously) the delegates declare they have "reorganized the legislature; established more limited districts for the election of the members of that body, and wholly separated it from the exercise of judicial powers. The most important state offices have been made elective by the people of the state; and most of the officers of cities, towns and counties are made elective by the voters of the locality they serve. They have abolished a host of useless offices. They have sought at once to reduce and decentralize the patronage of the Executive government. They have rendered inviolate the funds devoted to Education. After repeated failures in the legislature, they have provided a Judicial System, adequate to the wants of a free people, rapidly increasing in arts, culture, commerce and population. They have made provision for the payment of the whole State Debt, and the completion of the Public Works begun. While that debt is in the progress of payment, they have provided a large contribution from the canal revenues towards the current expenses of the state, and sufficient for that purpose, when the state debt shall have been paid; and have placed strong safeguards against the recurrence of debt and the improvident expenditure of the public money. They have agreed on important provisions in relation to the mode of creating incorporations, and the liability of their members; and have sought to render the business of banking more safe and responsible. They have incorporated many useful provisions more effectually to secure the people in their rights of person and property against the abuses of delegated power. They have modified the power of the legislature with the direct consent of the people, to amend the Constitution from time to time, and have secured to the people of the state, the right once in twenty years to pass directly on the question, whether they will call a convention for the revision of the Constitution."

Arrangements are made for a referendum at the coming election with ballots reading "Amended Constitution, Yes" and "Amended Constitution, No;" also for a separate balloting to decide whether there shall be an additional amendment giving "Equal suffrage to colored persons."—*Jour. The charter convention delegates (see Jl 6) sign the completed 26
"Amendments to the Charter of the City of New York."—Jour. of Convention (1846), 704–5. Durand says of these amendments that they "proposed more specific provisions for enforcing the separation of powers, and stricter checks upon the common council. But the absorption of popular attention in the beginning of the Mexican War, in the congressional election, and in the state constitutional convention then in session, withdrew interest almost entirely from the city convention. Accordingly, the poll on the adoption of the charter was decidedly small, and there was a small majority against it. Yet the work of the convention had not been without effect. Many of its proposed measures were copied word for word in the charter actually adopted in 1849 (q. v.), while others were incorporated in the amendments of 1853."—Durand, The Finances of N. Y. City, 67–68.

At a meeting of the Sketch Club, in this month, John G. Chap- Dec. man proposed that an association be formed of both artists and — men of letters, with others who were interested in the promotion of taste for the fine arts. On Jan. 9, 1847, a notice was sent to each member of the Sketch Club that "The first general meeting of the association of gentlemen engaged or interested in Letters or the Fine Arts, will be held on Wednesday next, the 13th inst., at 8 P. M., in the Rotunda of the New York Gallery of Fine Arts, in the Park. . . ." Such a meeting was held, and, on motion of Edw. S. Van Winkle, "The Century" was adopted as the name of the association, because of its restricted membership to one hundred persons. Rooms were taken at No. 495 Broadway. In the spring of 1849, the association removed to 435 Broome St. (not 435 Broadway, as stated in III: 937). In 1850, it moved to No. 575 Broadway; and, in 1852, to No. 24 Clinton Place, near Greene St. In 1857, it occupied its own building at 109 E. 15th St.; and, in 1891, it erected its present building at 7 W. 43d St. from plans by McKim, Mead, and White.—Origin and Hist. of the Century (1856), 5–9, 10, 20, 21; Galaxy, Aug., 1876; The Fiftieth Ann. of the founding of the Century (1897), 9; Lossing, *Hist. of N. 1846 Dec. 26 Another meeting for the relief of Ireland was held at the Broadway Tabernacle on Feb. 15, 1847.—Ibid., F 16, 1847. See also ibid., F 18, 22, 24, 27, Mr 1, 3, 6, 8, 11, 15, 20, and My 8, 1847.

— The Factory Act, passed by parliament in this year and altered somewhat in 1850, "practically established a ten-hour day for labor, a demand long urged by the laboring class and bitterly opposed by manufacturers."—Hazen, Europe since 1815, 456.

— In this year, after much agitation, ministerial responsibility was finally introduced in Canada, by Lord Elgin. It spread rapidly to the other colonies of Great Britain.—Hazen, Europe since 1815, 527–28.

— In this year, the Hakluyt Society of London began its long series of historical publications.—Winsor, I: xxxvii.

— In this year, Richard M. Hoe patented his so-called "lightning" printing-press.—Harper's Encyc. of U. S. Hist. (1912); McMaster, VII: 99.

— In this year, the common council of Philadelphia printed, in one volume, its early minutes from 1704 to 1776.—See copy in N. Y. P. L. The early records of New York City were not published until 1897 (q.v.) and 1905 (q.v.). See also Ja 22, 1848.

— In this year, Dr. John W. Francis, of New York City, patented a typewriter, "in which a motion similar to that of a piano hammer was employed to throw up the types, which were arranged in a circle to a common center. It was bulky and intricate, and although capable of good work was too costly for a commercial venture. This machine contained many of the saliant features of the typewriter of to-day, such as the carriage traveling from side to side over type basket, a large bell to indicate the end of the line, [and] blank key for spaces."—Scientific American, Je 5, 1915, p. 512. For the first commercially successful typewriters, in the designing of which Sholes, Soulé, Glidden, Densmore, and the Remingtons collaborated after 1866, see ibid., 514.

— In this year, the attempt (see 1813; S 25, 1832; Ja 28, 1833) was renewed to invade Trinity churchyard by an extension of Albany St. to Broadway. Its advocates claimed that the extension would not disfigure the churchyard. Trinity vestry presented a remonstrance to the board of aldermen. The board of assistants adopted a report adverse to the scheme, which was an obvious attempt to benefit a small group of property holders, "without regard to the needs of the public or the rights of the dead."—Dix, Hist. of Trinity Church, IV: 313–14, citing Church Records, III: 446. See, further, 1851.

In this year, J. Disturnell published a guide-book entitled A Description of the City of New York . . ., edited by O. L. Holley. It contains historical and descriptive notes regarding parks, squares, public buildings, etc., not found elsewhere, such as the inscriptions on various monuments (pp. 66–71), and a description of the several excursions which may be taken from N. Y. to other points of interest near the city. It is illustrated by two views (one of Castle Garden), drawn by Wade and engraved by Dongal.

— In this year, the N. Y. Academy of Medicine was founded, its earliest meetings being held in the Lyceum of Natural History, 561–565 Broadway (cf. infra). From March 3, 1847 to June 5, 1850, the Academy met in Convention Hall, 175 Wooster St.; and from 1850 to 1860, in N. Y. University on Washington Square.—N. Y. Medical Jour., Jl 22, 1911; Man. Com. Coun. (1851), 343; Eve. Post, Ja 14, 1847. See My 17, 1875.

— It shows that Clinton Hall, the 4-storey edifice at the south-west corner of Nassau and Beekman Sts., not only provided accommodations for the Mercantile Library, but also was occupied in part as a hotel. (See also 1853.)

The Lyceum of Natural History, at this time, occupied the front rooms in the second storey of the N. Y. University Medical College (originally the Stuyvesant Institute), at 659 Broadway. See also Mr 21, 1846.

The principal hotels were:
American Hotel, Broadway, n. w. cor. of Barclay St.
Astor House, Broadway, bet. Vesey and Barclay Sts.
Atlantic Hotel, 5 Broadway, near Battery.
Battery Hotel, 8 Battery Place.
Carlton House, Broadway, cor. Leonard St.
City Hotel, Broadway, bet. Cedar and Thames Sts.
Clinton Hotel, Beekman, s. w. cor. Nassau St.
Croton Hotel (a temperance hotel), 142 Broadway.
Delmonico's Hotel, 25 Broadway.
Dunning's Hotel, Cortlandt, cor. Washington St.
Franklin House, Broadway, cor. Dey St.
Globe Hotel, 66 Broadway.
Howard's Hotel, Broadway, cor. Maiden Lane.
Judson's Hotel, 61 Broadway.
Lovejoy's Hotel, Park Row, cor. Beekman St.
Mansion House (Bunker's), 39 Broadway.
Merchants' Hotel, Cortlandt, near Greenwich St.
National Hotel, 5 Cortlandt St.
New York Hotel, 721 Broadway.
Northern Hotel, Cortlandt, cor. West St.
Pacific Hotel, 162 Greenwich St.
Pearl St. House, 88 Pearl St.
Rathbun's Hotel, 165 Broadway.
United States Hotel, Fulton, bet. Pearl and Water Sts.
Western Hotel, 9 Cortlandt St., near Broadway.

1847 —

Tammany Hall, at the s. e. cor. of Nassau and Frankfort Sts., was kept on the European plan of letting out rooms by the day or week, the occupants getting their meals when and where they chose.—Holley, A Description of the City of New York (1847), 30, 33–34, 54–55.

— The first church of St. Francis Xavier, in Elizabeth St., was founded in this year. It was destroyed by fire after being in use only about a year. In 1850, land in W. 16th St. was acquired for a new church.—See later history of the church by Harvier, in N. Y. Times, N 23, 1922. For the corner-stone laying, see F 24, 1850.

— In this year, the Ladies of the Sacred Heart purchased property of Jacob Lorillard at Manhattanville, and erected the Academy of the Sacred Heart.—Man. Com. Coun. (1868), 460.

— In this year, the old First German Reformed Church, at 64–66 Nassau St., which stood on the site of Hallam's Theatre of 1753 (q.v.), lately occupied by Gosling's cheap "eating house" or "dining saloon," was demolished.—L. M. R. K., III: 935, 985; Picture of N. Y. in 1846, 81. In 1848, two large, well-built stores were erected in its place.—Belden, New-York. Past, Present & Future (1851), 78, footnote.

— In this year, C. B. & F. B. Nichols published, in two parts, a series of 13 views of New York. For the list of these, see Andrews's The Journey of the Iconophiles around New York in search of the historical and picturesque, 45. A number of these, to which others were added, were republished by Prall, Lewis & Co. in Belden's New-York. Past, Present & Future (1851). For the added ones, see Andrews, 46.

— The Coliseum, at 450 Broadway; Mechanics' Hall, and the Baptist church at 472 Broadway; the Church of the Divine Unity (Dr. Bellows), at 548 Broadway; the Church of St. George the Martyr, 563 Broadway; and Lafayette Hall, at 597 Broadway, all date from this year.—Man. Com. Coun. (1865), 635. Also the Broadway Theatre.—See S 22.

— In Valentine's Manual for 1847 were published the following contemporary lithographic map and views: map of the city, 1847; almshouses on Blackwell's Island, 225; Columbia College, 293; an old Dutch house (bearing date 1697) in Pearl St., 346; and another (1698) in Broad St., 371.

For view of the old Abbey Hotel, on Bloomingdale Road, 1847, see ibid. (1864), 386.

— In this year, The Literary World was established. Edited by Hoffman and the Duyckincks, it continued until 1853.—S. N. D. North, The Newspaper and Periodical Press (1884), 118.

Jan. 1 The mode of the period in celebrating New Year's Day is thus described by Hone: "New Year's presents have abounded this year. This is the Parisian mode of celebrating le jour de l'an, and we are getting into it very fast. Some of the houses where I visited yesterday presented the appearance of bazaars, where rich presents were displayed, from the costly cashmere shawls and silver tankard to the toy watch and child's rattle."—Hone's Diary, II: 292.

13 The Century Association is formally organized and named.—See summary under D, 1846.

23 Hon. Samuel Cunard and others, contractors with the lords commissioners of the British admiralty for the conveyance of the mails between Liverpool and New York, have arranged to make Jersey City the terminus of their line of steam packets.—Com. Adv., Ja 23, 1847, citing the Newark Daily Adv. For a view of the Cunard dock in Jersey City, built soon after this date, see Illustrated Am. News, Jl 19, 1851. For the arrival of the first Cunarder, see Dec. 29.

1847 Feb. 8 Col. Frémont proclaims the annexation of California to the U. S., and assumes the office of governor.—Lossing, in Harper's Popular Cyc. of U. S. Hist. (1893), 540.

11 Thos. A. Edison is born in Milan, Ohio.—Harper's Encyc. of U. S. Hist. (1912).

16 "A large number of the friends of the project of erecting a monument to Washington in this city, have associated for the purpose of procuring a revival of the charter of the late Washington Monument Association. They propose, therefore, to celebrate the approaching anniversary of the birth day of Washington, at Castle Garden."—Eve. Post, F 16, 1847.

18 A great public meeting is held at Vauxhall Garden and a "rapid, strong-handed and decisive prosecution of the war" is urged.—Eve. Post, F 19, 1847. Another meeting was held at Tammany Hall on March 1.—Ibid., Mr 2 and 3, 1847.

22 On this day and the next, Gen. Taylor defeated Santa Anna in the battle of Buena Vista. For accounts of the engagement, see N. Y. Herald, Mr 31 et seq., and Je 1, 1847; Hone's Diary, II: 302–4.

28 Col. Doniphan defeats the Mexicans under Gen. Heredia in the battle of Sacramento.—Lossing, in Harper's Popular Cyc. of U. S. Hist., 874, 1238.

Mar. 1 Subscriptions for the relief of the famished Irish "are kept up with undiminished spirit. The Relief Committee have received upwards of $50,000 . . ."—Hone's Diary, II: 301. See also Hone's entry of May 31.—Ibid., II: 309.

3 The use of adhesive postage stamps on letters is authorised by congress.—Laws of U. S., 29th cong., 2d sess., chap. 62. On June 1, 1856, prepayment by stamps was made compulsory.—Encyclop. Brit., XXII: 195.

5 Public ceremonies are held, by order of the common council, in honour of Capt. Morris of Albany and Capts. Field and Williams of Buffalo, who fell in the battle of Monterey. The bodies lay in state all day in the city hall.—Eve. Post, Mr 3, 4, 5, and 6, 1847.

15 Lawrence Van Wyck, a civil engineer, opens a manuscript diary relating to progress in the construction of the Hudson River Railroad. Beginning on this date at Spuyten Duyvel, the notes describe the work as far as Dobbs Ferry on April 27. Beginning again, after a lapse, on Jan. 29, 1848, at Livingston, they continue to July 1. They begin again on July 16, 1853, when the writer is working for the Albany and Susquehanna R. R. Co.—See the author's fair copy of his original diary (MS.), in N. Y. P. L.

23 A dinner is held in honour of Thos. Butler King, of Georgia, at the Astor House, "by merchants and other citizens of this place, on account of the support given by him in the last Congress to the bill for establishing a line of government steamers between this port and England."—Eve. Post, Mr 24, 1847.

25 "The reproach to our city that the monument of Lawrence was in ruins no longer exists. The vestry of Trinity Church, with a commendable spirit of liberality, have erected in front of that church on the line of Broadway, a new monument of brown free stone, beautifully sculptured, beneath which lie the remains of Lawrence and [his lieutenant] Ludlow.

"The enclosure of the monument is formed by eight cannons, connected by chains. These are naval trophies, captured during the war. . . .

"The cannon bear the initials and crown of the English monarch, and one is dated as far back as 1728. It is to be regretted that they could not be so planted in the ground as to exhibit conspicuously the fact that they are the trophies of victory."—Eve. Post, Mr 25, 1847; N. Y. Herald, My 24, 1847; Lossing, Pictorial Field Book of the War of 1812, 712–13. See also "Tombs in Old Trinity," by Mrs. Lamb, in Harper's Mag., N, 1876. Regarding the first place of burial and Lawrence monument, see S 16, 1813; Ap 2, 1825; Ap 10, 1826; 1833; Ag 17, 1844.

29 Gen. Morales surrenders Vera Cruz to Gen. Scott, after a bombardment of several days by Commodore Conner, with Scott, who had landed with 12,000 men on March 9, joining in the cannonade.—N. Y. Herald, Ap 10 et seq., 1847; Lossing, in Harper's Popular Cyc. of U. S. Hist. (1893), 1451.

In 1847–48, Maj-Gen. Worth commanded a division under Gen. Scott, and participated in the capture of Vera Cruz, and in all battles from Cerro Gordo (see Ap 18) to the assault and capture of the city of Mexico.—Ibid., p. 1546.

Apr. 3 "We notice that ornamental trees known by the name of the 'Pride of China,' have been placed on the sidewalk in front of the Astor House. This is a great improvement, and we would like to see the sidewalks of Broadway, from the Battery to the upper extremity, shaded by these beautiful trees."—Eve. Post, Ap 3, 1847.

9 The Astor House is illuminated "in a brilliant style" in honour of the victory at Buena Vista, and the four centre windows are occupied with transparencies bearing the names of Palo Alto, Resaca de la Palma, Monterey, and Buena Vista. At the close of the illumination fireworks are set off bearing the name of Gen. Taylor.—Eve. Post, Ap 10, 1847.

10 Sarah Heywood, widow, conveys to William B. Moffat the property known as "Woodlawn," including the house and land surrounding it between 106th and 107th Sts., West End Ave. and the river, for $20,000.—Liber Deeds, CDLXXXVI: 424. This was the former Nicholas Jones house.—See O 12, 1764. Moffat leased the premises to William L. Wiley, who ran the house as the Woodlawn Hotel. Some time after Moffat's death in 1862, it became the country residence of Courtlandt P. Dixon; and was the first home of the New York Infant Asylum.—Mott, The N. Y. of Yesterday, 47. For an earlier description of the estate of "Woodlawn," see ibid., 23. The house is shown, still standing, on Bromley's Atlas of 1897. It does not appear on the Insurance Map of 1909. See also L. M. R. K., III: 981–82; Pl. 178, Vol. III.

12 A national salute is fired in honour of the victory at Vera Cruz.—Eve. Post, Ap 12, 1847.

13 Wm. V. Brady, the Whig candidate for mayor, is elected.—N. Y. Herald, Ap 14, 1847; Man. Com. Coun. (1848), 354. He succeeds Andrew H. Mickle.—See Ap 14, 1846. He was succeeded by Wm. F. Havemeyer.—See Ap 11, 1848.

16 The legislature authorises the board of education to establish evening free schools for the education of apprentices and others.—Laws of N. Y. (1847), chap. 74.

" Duncan Phyfe sells out his stock of furniture and retires from business. A copy of the sales catalogue is in the possession of Mr. Charles O. Cornelius, author of Furniture Masterpieces of Duncan Phyfe (1922), q. v., 42.

18 Gen. Scott defeats Santa Anna in the battle of Cerro Gordo.—Lossing, in Harper's Popular Cyc. of U. S. Hist., 217.

24 The mayor approves a resolution in regard to Gen. Taylor's victory at Buena Vista on Feb. 22 and 23 (q. v.), and Gen. Scott's achievements at Vera Cruz in March (q. v., the 29th). It provides that the thanks of the city be extended to them, the men of their commands, and the portion of the navy which cooperated with them; that the freedom of the city be presented to them; that swords be presented to Gen. Scott and his second in command (Gen. Worth), and to Gen. Taylor and his second in command (Gen. Wool); that, on the evening of May 7, all the public buildings in the city be illuminated, and the citizens at large be requested at the same time to illuminate their dwellings; that on the same day national salutes be fired at the Battery, Park, Washington Parade Ground, Union Square, and Tompkins Square. At the same time the common council highly commends "the able and skillful manner in which this War has been conducted by the National Administration."—Proc., App'd by the Mayor, XIV: 317–19; N. Y. Hist. Soc. Coll. (1885), 422–24; Hone's Diary, II: 307 (containing an account of U. S. soldiers killed).

26 A news item reads: "Passing through Franklin street the other day, we saw, in front of the Fifth Ward Hotel, the mutilated remains of a marble statue of William Pitt which once ornamented the front of the government house [sic!] in Wall Street, when New York was under the dominion of the British crown. . . ." The article tells how the statue, "after lying in the corporation yard for a long time, was sold at auction for a dollar or two . . ., preparatory to the removal of the yard to Goerck street." The buyer "placed it on a pedestal in the yard of his dwelling in Water street. Property, however, soon became too valuable in that vicinity of residences and the homestead was demolished to make room for a row of stores, and in the cellar of one of these, completely buried in rubbish," the statue remained until the owner recently presented it to the keeper of the Fifth Ward Hotel, Mr. Riley.—N. Y. Com. Adv., Ap 26, 1847. Cf. Stevens, Progress of N. Y. in a Century, 1776–1876, 14–15. The statue had the same location in 1859 (Knickerbocker Mag., LIV: 13), and is pictured in a view of the hotel in 1864 (Man. Com. Coun., 1864, 598). It came into the possession of the N. Y. H. S. in 1864 (q. v., Mr 1).

27 The legislature passes an act "authorizing an estimate and assessment to be made for a part of the ground on Madison Square

1847 in the city of New York, and empowering the corporation of said
Apr. city to use said square for public purposes."—Laws of N. Y. (1847),
27 chap. 138. See also Proc., App'd by Mayor, XIV: 333; L. M. R. K., III: 970.

28 The legislature passes a state-wide act "providing for the registry of births, marriages and deaths." In New York City marriages and births are to be reported "direct to the city inspector." —Laws of N. Y. (1847), chap. 152. As no penalty was prescribed in the law, it had no immediate effect in the city. See Ap 15, 1853.

May In this month, the Hamburg-American line of steamers was — established between New York, Southampton, and Hamburg.—Encyclop. Brit., XXV: 854.

4 "There are now four parties of Engineers engaged in surveys for the purpose of settling the location of the line for the Hudson River Railroad. The progress thus far made, is such, that the location is expected to be settled by the latter part of this month, from this city to Fishkill, a distance of sixty miles. . . ."—Eve. Post, My 4, 1847.

5 The legislature modifies the street plan of the commissioners of 1807–11 by extending the line of Broadway northward from 45th to 71st Sts. Part of this route is new, and part the old Bloomingdale Road. The act defines the course of it.—Laws of N. Y. (1847), chap. 203.

" The legislature passes an act to supersede earlier acts relating to reports required of masters of vessels arriving at this port, concerning passengers, their number, condition, etc. Commissioners of "emigration" are named in the act. They are Gulien C. Verplanck, James Boorman, Jacob Harvey, Robert B. Minturn, Wm. F. Havemeyer, and David C. Colden.—Laws of N. Y. (1847), chap. 195.

An amendment to this act, on Dec. 15, transferred from the commissioners of health to the commissioners of emigration the Marine Hospital on the eastern shore of Staten Island; and added several supplementary provisions.—Ibid. (1847), chap. 483; see also further amendments on April 11, 1849, in ibid. (1849), chap. 350, and on July 11, 1851, in ibid. (1851), chap. 523.

6 The common council permits the Hudson River R. R. Co. "to construct a double track of rails, with suitable turn-outs along the line of the Hudson River, from Spuyten Devil Creek to near Sixty-eighth Street; occupying so much of the Twelfth Avenue as lies along the shore, thence winding from the shore so as to intersect the Eleventh Avenue, at or near Sixtieth Street; thence through the middle of the Eleventh Avenue to about Thirty-second Street; thence on a curve across to the Tenth Avenue, intersecting the Tenth Avenue at or near Thirtieth Street; thence through the middle of the Tenth Avenue to West Street, and thence through the middle of West Street to Canal Street." The ordinance prescribes regulations for grading. The company is required to file with the street com'r a map showing the location and intended grades.

Permission is given to the company "to run their locomotives as far south as Thirtieth Street, and no farther."

The company is prohibited "from running a stated train between any points below Thirty-second Street, for the carrying of passengers between those points, under the penalty of twenty-five dollars for each passenger from whom fare shall be received therefor."—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XIV: 307. The work of construction is commenced immediately.—From chron. supplied by the company. See Je 12, 1848. The line, at its southern end, when constructed, started at the corner of Chambers and Hudson Sts., and ran through Hudson, Canal, and West Sts., to Tenth Ave., and (according to this authority) ran "thence to the Spuyten Devil's creek."—Man. Com. Coun. (1855), 334.

" The common council orders "That the actual Opening of Madison Square take place on the first day of June next." A collector of assessments for this purpose is appointed.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XIV: 305. On May 10, however, this order was rescinded. —Ibid., XIV: 333. See, however, Je 3.

" The legislature passes an act "for the organization of the first division of the New-York state militia." The counties of New York and Richmond comprise the first division for this purpose.—Laws of N. Y. (1847), chap. 205 and 406. See also My 13, 1846.

" "Since the administration of the venerated Governor Clinton, it has been customary to procure a full length Portrait of each Chief Magistrate of the State of New York." The common council therefore orders that one of Gov. Wright be procured, at a cost not exceeding $500, to be placed in the governor's room of the city hall.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XIV: 313. May 6

" The common council appropriates $1,800 to introduce hot-air furnaces into the city hall, to heat the first and second storeys.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XIV: 310.

" The common council orders "That all Posts in the Sidewalks for the support of Awnings in Broadway, from Marketfield Street and Battery Place to its intersection with Fourteenth Street, be removed therefrom within twenty days after the passage of this Resolution." The owner or occupant of any premises shall be subject to fine if these are not removed within three days after notice. —Proc., App'd by Mayor, XIV: 306. Cf. Jl 1.

7 New York celebrates the successes of the United States in the Mexican War, by a military parade, illuminations, etc.—N. Y. Herald, My 8, 1847; Hone's Diary, II: 306.

" The legislature passes an act authorising the board of education of the city of New York to establish a free academy. It gives authority to procure a site and erect a building at an expense of $50,000, and authorises an annual expenditure of $20,000 for its support. It also provides, as a condition precedent to this becoming a law, that the question whether such an academy shall be established be submitted to the people.—Laws of N. Y. (1847), chap. 206. The question was so submitted, and 19,404 votes were given in favour of, and 3,409 against, the measure.—Belden, N. Y. Past, Present & Future (1849), 105. For the completion and opening of the building, see Jan., 1849. The act of May 7 was one of several acts absorbed by the consolidated school law of July 3, 1851 (q. v.). See S 22.

8 The common council authorises the street commissioner "to have a Fence put around that part of Madison Square that has no Fence."—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XIV: 323. See S 24.

" The common council orders that a space of ground, 200 ft. square, be granted to the Washington Monument Ass'n, as a site for the erection of a monument to Washington, to revert to the corporation whenever it shall cease to be used for such purpose.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XIV: 326. See also descrip. of Pl. 100, III: 592. See, further, O 15, 1847.

10 The common council orders that "the actual opening" of Madison Square take place on this day. A collector of assessments is appointed.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XIV: 333. According to the prevailing practice, assessments are due and payable on the date fixed for the opening. On this date, or soon after, the work of collection commenced. See, further, Je 3.

" The common council orders that Washington Square be enclosed with an iron railing, similar to the one being erected around Stuyvesant Square, at a cost not exceeding $25,000.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XIV: 331.

11 The city acquires, from Wm. Wright, the land west of the reservoir.—Prendergast, Record of Real Estate (1914), citing Liber Deeds, CDLXXXVIII: 479. This is now Bryant Park.

12 The corner-stone of the U. S. dry-dock at Brooklyn is laid by Commodore Smith.—Eve. Post, My 13, 1847.

15 The U. S. army, unopposed, enters Puebla, a city of 80,000 inhabitants.—Lossing, in Harper's Popular Cyc. (1893), 1159.

17 The money received by the New York committee for the relief of Ireland amounts to $144,000. Four ships, five barks, and four brigs have been sent abroad with 21,731 barrels of Indian meal and corn.—Eve. Post, My 17, 1847. See also ibid., My 19, Je 28, 29, 1847.

18 The "Republic" sails from New York with 336 soldiers of the 10th Regiment, U. S. Infantry, to re-inforce Gen. Taylor.—Eve. Post, My 20, 1847.

28 The new Calvary P. E. Church at the n. e. cor. of 21st St. and Fourth Ave. is almost completed. Renwick is the architect.—Eve. Post, My 28, 1847. See also L. M. R. K., III: 932.

June The steamboat "Washington" sails from New York on her
1 maiden trip to Southampton and Bremen.—Eve. Post, Je 2, 1847. This was the first ship of the Ocean Steam Navigation Company, incorporated to operate steam packets from New York to England and the continent, and this company was the first American steamship to receive an annual subsidy from the government for carrying the United States mail.—Morrison, Hist. of Am. Steam Navigation, 408; Hone's Diary, II: 310; N. Y. Herald, My 26, 1847. (The Cunard Co., of Gt. Britain, on May 15, 1840, had already sent the "Unicorn," the first of its steamships under subsidy to carry the mail, to Halifax, and Boston from Liverpool.—Liverpool Courier, Ap 22, My 13, 1840.)

1847 June 1 The steamboats "Cornelius Vanderbilt," bearing the name of her owner, and "Oregon" (Capt. Law) race to Croton Point and return, 75 miles, in 3¼ hours,—"a rate of speed that would carry a vessel to Liverpool in five or six days."—Hone's Diary, II: 310.

3 Between June 3, 1847, and Feb. 18, 1848, the common council passed many resolutions apportioning assessments on certain lots for opening Madison Square.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XV: 44–46 (in which see index, pp. 490–91, for other page references).

5 The corner-stone of the new Odd Fellows' Hall, at the corner of Grand and Centre Sts., is laid. For details of the procession in celebration of the event, with description of the building, see N. Y. Herald, Je 6, 1847.

23 A decision is rendered by Judge Lewis H. Sandford, of the court of chancery, state of New York, in the voluminous case of "Nathaniel Bogardus and others vs. The Rector, Church-wardens and Vestrymen of Trinity Church in the City of New York, William Berrian, and William Johnson." The testimony and pleadings show the boundaries and tenantry of the "Church Farm" after the Revolution. For these pleadings and the court's opinion dismissing the case, with costs chargeable to the plaintiff, see Sandford's Chancery Reports, IV: 633–762. In the author's collection is a bound volume of pamphlets relating to Trinity's title to this property. The last of these is an extract from the address delivered by Bishop De Lancey in the church convention at Oswego, Aug. 19, 1857, in which the various suits brought by claimants under Anneke Jans are briefly reviewed.

29 The common council grants to the "French Trans-Atlantic Steam Company" the exclusive use of pier No. 4, North River.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XV: 69.

" P. A. and L. Delmonico, proprietors of the café in Beaver St., and of the hotel at 25 Broadway, add the new building at 23 Broadway to the latter.—N. Y. Herald, Je 29, 1847.

30 The foundation of the Washington monument is "now in progress in Hamilton Square."—Eve. Post, Je 30, 1847. See Jl 5.

July 1 The common council authorises the owners and occupants of property on Broadway "to erect, in front of their buildings, posts for the purpose of hanging their awnings on." These posts are "to be made of iron—the height thereof to be nine feet, and no higher, from the curb stone to the inner side of the cross rail, and the pattern, in all particulars, to conform to that of a model, to be approved by the Joint Committee on Streets."—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XV: 74.

5 The corner-stone of the N. Y. State arsenal, on the west side of Fifth Ave. at 64th St., is laid. In the morning there is a review of the state militia at the Battery. In the afternoon, a large number of ladies and gentlemen set out from the arsenal at the corner of Centre and White Sts. to attend the laying of the corner-stone, and also to witness the ceremony of taking formal possession of the grounds at Hamilton Square, recently appropriated by the common council (see My 8) for the use of the Washington Monument Association.

Commissary-Gen. Storms, chief superintendent of buildings, conducted the arsenal ceremonies. The news report of the event refers to a "marble slab bearing an inscription," and the contents of the corner-stone. When the latter was lowered to its place, "the company of Veteran Artillerists began to fire the old twelve-pounders which the British left on the Battery on a certain 25th day of November."—N. Y. Herald, Jl 7, 1847, with view of the arsenal; Courier & Enquirer, Jl 5, 1847; descrip. of Pl. 151, III: 771; descrip. of Pl. 164-b, III: 847. See N 4. " According to the provisions of section 8 of article 14 of the state constitution, adopted Oct. 9, 1846, the court of chancery, which was established by Gov. Dongan in 1683 (q.v., N 1), was ordered abolished on this first Monday in July, 1847. Its powers were vested in the supreme court.—Laws of N. Y. (1847), 17th sess., Vol. II; Hist. of the Bench and Bar (1897), I: 236.

9 The "Keying," a Chinese junk, arrives at this port from Canton, supposedly the first Chinese vessel to visit the United States. She anchors off Castle Garden. For description of her, and account of her voyage, see N. Y. Herald, Jl 7, 10, 11, 12, 13, 16, 1847. See also a coloured lithographic view, pub. by Currier, showing the boat and her measurements (at N. Y. Hist. Soc.). See Jl 16.

July 9 A committee of the common council reports in favour of selling the ground and premises of the Monroe Market (see Ja, 1836) at public auction. Soon after, part of the property was sold (see Proc., App'd by Mayor, XV: 93), but in 1853 that part on the corner of Grand and Corlaers Sts. was still standing, although in a tumble-down condition.—De Voe, 588; L. M. R. K., III: 959.

12 The trustees of the First Presbyterian Church, on Fifth Ave., near 12th St., "have kindly consented to have the bell, in the cupola of the same, struck for fires, until a new bell is placed in the tower at Jefferson Market."—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XV: 84.

13 The common council orders that awning-posts in Ann St. be removed immediately.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XV: 83. Time was extended to Nov. 1.—Ibid., XV: 96.

14 The common council grants to Monsieur Vattemare the use of the governor's room in the city hall "for the purpose of exhibiting the various Books presented by the City of Paris and the French Government to the City of New-York, the State of New-York, the United States, and the several Scientific Institutions of this city."—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XV: 84–85. See also Eve. Post, S 18, 1847.

15 "Whereas, a new era in our commercial intercourse with the Kingdom of France has been opened upon the arrival of the government steamer called the Union, in our port; and also with the Celestial Empire, upon the arrival within our harbor of the first Chinese vessel, known as the Keying," the common council appoints a committee to tender to the captains and officers of these vessels "the usual hospitalities of the City."—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XV: 91.

16 The common council makes it a special duty of the police "to take charge of any and all swine found at large" within the lamp and watch districts, and to place them in the pound to be disposed of as provided in the city ordinances.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XV: 85. See also 1849.

" The common council orders that the awning-posts be removed from Pine St. before Sept. 1.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XV: 86.

20 Contracts are made for constructing the Harlem River R. R. from New York to Dutchess County.—Eve. Post, Jl 21, 1847.

23 The common council appropriates $65,000 for the construction of "a Nursery Establishment" on Randall's Island.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XV: 98.

24 The French steamer "Union" sails from New York. "The Battery, Castle Garden, and the Junk [see Jl 9], were crowded with people."—Eve. Post, Jl 26, 1847.

27 The name of the Third Regiment is changed to the Eighth Regiment by general orders from Albany.—See "Military History" in Grand Opening of the Eighth Regiment (1890), in N. Y. P. L. It was the Eighth Regiment which occupied Fort Gansevoort in 1812 (q.v.). After the World War the name was changed to the Eighth Coast Defence Command, N. Y. Coast Artillery, N. G.

30 "The proposition to erect the free Academy in Madison square meets with strong opposition from the property holders and residents in that neighborhood. They say the authorities would violate their pledged faith by such a proceeding; it would destroy the value of the property, it would be unjust, for they (the property holders) had expended $70,000 towards the formation of the square, and they would not consent to the proposition unless that amount were refunded; they had no right to build school houses on the square, for it would eventually be wanted for a City Hall or other municipal building."—Eve. Post, Jl 30, 1847. See S 1.

" Christ Church, in Anthony (Worth) St. opposite the N. Y. Hospital, is destroyed by fire, as its predecessor in Ann St. was in 1834 (q.v.).—Eve. Post, Jl 30, 1847; Mag. of Am. Hist. (1888), XIX: 60–62. See Je 29, 1848.

Aug. 3 The common council passes an ordinance to fill up "the old reservoir well" on 13th St. between The Bowery and Third Ave.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XV: 111.

5 The common council passes a resolution of thanks to John Lozier who has presented to the city "a valuable original Map of the City, by John Gibbs, in 1782."—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XV: 118.

17 "St. John's Park.—This enchanting spot, by far the most beautiful of our city parks, is perhaps least known by strangers, and least enjoyed by citizens of any similar place in town. The park is private, except to its rich neighbors, who, by virtue of their wealth, can enjoy its delightfully cool and shady walks, 1847 Aug. 17 pleasant arbors, and sparkling fountains. A high iron fence shuts out 'the people' from the enjoyment of all the beauties there enclosed. . . . It is a spot of Eden loveliness and exclusiveness. . . . Aside from the busiest and most public streets, it seems as if retiring from the din and tumult of the noisy town to enjoy its own sweet solitude, even in the heart of our great metropolis. Truly the dwellers here can say Rus in urbe. . . ."—Eve. Post, Ag 17, 1847.

" "The Greek Slave.—This famous work of art, by our countryman, Mr. Hiram Powers, arrived in this city a few days since, in the ship Hudson, from Leghorn, and was passed through the Custom House to-day. It will be exhibited, we are told, as soon as the necessary arrangements can be made by Mr. Kellogg, to whose care it has been entrusted."—Eve. Post, Ag 17, 1847.

" Peter G. Stuyvesant, "lineal descendant of Gov. Stuyvesant, and next to Mr. Astor the wealthiest individual in the city," dies.—Eve. Post, Ag 18, 1847; Hone's Diary, II: 321.

20 A battle before the city of Mexico occurs, in which Gen. Scott defeats Santa Anna. "Scott and Worth have added new, but blood-stained, laurels to their already over-burdened brows."—Hone's Diary, II: 322–23. The fortified camp of Contreras, defended by Gen. Valencia, and the heights of Churubusco, by Santa Anna, which were taken by U. S. troops on Aug. 20, were the battle grounds. "General Scott preferred to bear the olive-branch rather than the palm. As he advanced to Tacuba (Aug. 21), only seven miles from the city, he met a deputation from Santa Aña to ask for an armistice, preparatory to negotiations for peace. It was granted. N. P. Trist, appointed by the United States government to treat for peace, was present. The treacherous Santa Aña had made this only a pretext to gain time to strengthen the defences of the city. When the trick was discovered, Scott declared the armistice at an end, and advanced upon the city." Then followed the battle of Molino del Rey, near Chapultepec, on Sept. 8; the bombardment of the hill of Chapultepec on Sept. 12; the assault and triumph of the U. S. troops on Sept. 13 (q. v.).—Lossing, in Harpers' Popular Cyclopædia of U. S. Hist. (1893), 875. (It should be noted that, while Lossing wrote "Field Books" of the Revolution, the War of 1812, and the Civil War, he did not write a field-book of the Mexican War. Instead, he embodied in his Cyclopædia the information relating to this subject, in the same manner of condensed and graphic description, under topical heads, with dates, and illustrations, most of which were from his own sketches. The first edition bears copyright date of 1881.)

21 "The very extensive improvements which are going on in this city this season furnish the most gratifying evidence of general prosperity. Reference is had more particularly to buildings erecting by individuals and private companies as the surest test of the healthy state of our monetary concerns. The most striking improvements are taking place in Broadway. From Canal street to the Battery extensive buildings are going up. . . . A very extensive building (designed as a store) is in progress on the spot formerly occupied by the New York Garden, . . .

"Rathbun's hotel is to be greatly enlarged. A very large hotel is going up nearly opposite. . . . The crumbling walls of old Grace church which have so long disgraced the lower part of Broadway, have at length been demolished.

"In Fulton, Nassau, John, William, and various neighboring streets, elegant blocks are taking the place of dilapidated and miserable dwellings, and all is life and activity. Money is abundant, labor in good demand, and while capitalists are thus investing their surplus, the poor and industrious are also reaping their share of the harvest."—Eve. Post, Ag 21, 1847.

23 By negotiations lasting from Aug. 23 to Sept. 7, an armistice is effected between the armies of the United States and Mexico.—Winsor, VII: 412.

Sept. 1 The board of education resolves to purchase, for $25,000, ten lots on the east side of Lexington Ave. at the s. e. cor. of 23d St. as the site for the Free Academy.—Eve. Post, S 2, 1847. See S 22.

6 Father John Larkin, of the Society of Jesus, having purchased property consisting principally of a Protestant church standing in Elizabeth St., a few doors above Walker St. (now Canal St.), once known as "the Bowery Church," and having redecorated this and dedicated it as the Church of the Holy Name, opens here the College of St. Francis Xavier.—The College of St. Francis Xavier (1897), 9, 11, 15, 25, 32; Eve. Post, S 6, 1847. See Ja 22, 1848.

" The "Sisters of Charity" have "lately opened a Seminary for young ladies on 107th street, between 5th and 6th avenues, which they call the 'Academy of Mount St. Vincent.'"—Eve. Post, S 6, 1847. This later was embraced by Central Park.—See under "McGown's Tavern," in L. M. R. K., III: 979, and Fifth Avenue (pub. by the Fifth Ave. Bank), 67. Sept. 6

13 The American flag waves in triumph over the shattered Castle of Chapultepec (see Ag 20). "The Mexicans fled into the city, pursued by the Americans to the very gates. That night Santa Aña and his troops, with the civil officers, fled from the city, and, at four o'clock the next morning, a deputation from the municipal authorities waited upon Scott, begging him to spare the town and treat for peace. He would make no terms, but entered the capital of Mexico (Sept. 13, 1847) a conqueror; and from the Grand Plaza he proclaimed the conquest of the Republic of Mexico. . . . The President of the Mexican Congress assumed provisional authority, and, on Feb. 2, 1848, that body concluded a treaty of peace with the United States commissioners at Guadalupe-Hidalgo."—Lossing, in Harpers' Popular Cyclopædia of U. S. Hist., 875–76. See Jl 4, 1848.

For meritorious conduct at Molino del Rey (on Sept. 8) and Chapultepec, Grant was promoted to 1st lieutenant.—Personal Memoirs of U. S. Grant, I: 126.

17 The acquisition by the city of the title to lands for Central Park begins. This continued through Sept. 4, 1852. The cost, dates, grantors, and libers where recorded, were published by Wm. A. Prendergast in Record of Real Estate (1914), 51.

22 The city acquires title to the land at the corner of Lexington Ave. and 23d St. (122.6 x 200 ft.), on which the College of the City of New York was afterwards built; grantor, John La Farge; price $25,000.—Prendergast, Record of Real Estate (1914), citing Liber Deeds, CDXCIV: 570; Proc., App'd by Mayor, XV: 191.

24 The common council orders "That such of the arm chairs now in the rooms of the Aldermen and Assistant Aldermen, as were in use by the members of the first Congress of the United States, be removed to the Governor's Room, and that the Superintendent of Repairs provide other chairs for the use of the Aldermen and Assistant Aldermen."—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XV: 142.

" The common council authorises the committee on lands and places "to complete the fence necessary to enclose Madison Square."—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XV: 141.

27 The Broadway Theatre, between Anthony (Worth) and Pearl Sts. (at the north-east corner of Broadway and Pearl Sts.—see L. M. R. K., III: 982), is completed, and opens with "School for Scandal."—Eve. Post, S 22, 25, 27, 28, 29, 1847; Man. Com. Coun. (1856), 520.

Oct. 4 New buildings, each 120 x 33 ft., are being erected at Fulton and Washington Markets, respectively, for the better accommodation of "country dealers."—Eve. Post, O 4, 1847.

7 The common council orders "That permission be granted to Horace P. Russ, to pave Broadway with square blocks of granite," from the southerly side of Wall Street to the northerly side of Fulton Street, in the same manner, and not to exceed the expense per square yard, of that recently constructed opposite the New York Hotel." The city is to pay one-third the cost of this pavement.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XV: 154.

8 The common council orders "That the marble piers now standing at the southern entrance of the Park, be sold at auction, under the direction of the Street Commissioner, and that the granite balls presented to the city by one of our worthy fellow-citizens as a specimen of the implements of war at a former period, be placed on the gate piers at Union Park, and that the spaces now occupied by said piers, be substituted by an open iron railing, to correspond with those remaining."—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XV: 160–61; Man. Com. Coun. (1849), 434. See D 1.

11 John Randel, Jr., (see Mr 23, 1846) invites the common council to examine "his model railway, which is in operation at No. 413 Broadway. This model, the result of two years labor and an expense of more than $4000, is made entirely of metal, and weighs about three tons; it is more than seventy-six feet long, and nine feet wide. This improvement is calculated to give more room to the travel in Broadway, to enhance the value of property on that fashionable thoroughfare, and afford to the citizens an economical, convenient, safe and expeditious mode of travel without occupying any space that will interfere with the present commerce and uses of that street, or of those that cross it. Some of the improvements made since the project was first submitted are as follows:

1847 Oct. 11 "The railway is to be erected only twelve feet above the line of curbstone, and extend only six feet each side of the line.

"The passenger cars, which are to be propelled by stationary engines and endles[s] rope, do not stop to take in or let down passengers. This is accomplished by means of a tender, which passes along a side track, and by means of a brake pressing upon a brake plate fixed to each car; the speed of the tender is got up to be equal to that of the passenger car, before they are fastened to each other, for the exchange of passengers. To prevent the cars from leaving the railway, each car is confined by sixteen pullies, with vertical shafts, two to each w[h]eel. It is also so provided that if either the axles, the shafts, the car wheels, or the transverse beam, which passes quite across the street, should break, no damage can arise from the breakage.

"Passengers need not walk up the stairway, but ascend by a screw-shaft, containing a sofa, on which they ride from the pavement to the promenade. [This is probably the first reference to a proposed elevator.]"—Eve. Post, O 12, 1847. The railway is further described on Nov. 5 (q.v.). It is shown on Pl. 133-a, Vol. III.

15 Prof. Agassiz, the "greatest of living naturalists," begins a series of lectures on natural history at the College of Physicians and Surgeons, No. 67 Crosby St.—Eve. Post, O 16, 1847.

" The common council orders "That the Governor's Room be placed at the disposal of the Committee of Arrangements of the Washington Monument Association," under the mayor's direction, on Oct. 19, "for the purpose of receiving the Governors of the different States, Mayors of Cities, and other Gentlemen, invited on the occasion of laying the corner stone of the Washington Monument" (on O 20, q.v.).—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XV: 177. See, further, O 16.

16 The common council orders "That it be recommended to the Merchants and Mechanics of the City of New-York, so far as it may be practicable, to unite with the citizens on the 19th instant, in the ceremony of laying the corner stone of the Washington Monument, and that the stores, manufactories, and other places of business be closed on that day."—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XV: 181–82. See O 19.

18 A general convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church (bishops and clergy) has "filled the city."—Hone's Diary, II: 324–25; and current newspapers.

19 On land in Hamilton Square, conveyed to the Washington Monument Assn. by the city, and which its president assumes possession of in the name of the association on last Fourth of July (see Jl 5), the corner-stone of the monument is laid,—a block of stone 5 ft. square and 4 ft. thick. In it was placed a box containing the charter of the association, etc. The gathering of citizens at the ceremony consisted of city officials, militia, firemen, and civic organizations, which had marched to the spot from down town.—N. Y. Herald, O 20; N. Y. Com. Adv., O 20, 1847; Proc., App'd by Mayor, XV: 186. A lithographic view of the ceremonial procession, showing the shot-tower at 53d St. (L. M. R. K., III: 963) in the background, was sold with the Percy Pine, 2d, collection of N. Y. views. See also descrip. of Pl. 102-a, III: 601, and descrip. of A. Pl. 26-c, III: 882. The account of the procession in the Herald, op. cit., contains a wood-cut view of the monument, and one of an allegorical float used in the parade. See, further, Ja 10, 1848.

21 The "New England House" was the name of a hotel standing at this time on the corner of Broadway and Thames St.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XV: 183.

Nov. — In this month, building construction began on the Free Academy at the south-east corner of Lexington Ave. and 23d St. (see My 7, S 22).—Mosenthal and Horne, The College of the City of N. Y. (1907). See Ja 3, 1848.

4 The report of James E. Serrell, engineer of the state arsenal, at Fifth Ave. and 64th St., bears this date. Accompanied by maps and plans, it was later filed in portfolios 361 and 362 in the secretary of state's office.—See Cat. of Maps, etc. (1859), 33.

5 The plan of the elevated railroad, devised by John Randel, Jr., (see Mr 23, 1846) is referred to as "The Broadway Railroad." The model (see O 11) is now on public exhibition. It is "designed to relieve our main street from the crushing pressure of omnibus travel. . . . The rail-tracks are . . . to be supported by iron pillars along the curbstones, and iron cross pieces running across the street, the whole frame work to be iron. On this frame-work are to be laid four railroad tracks from Bowling Green to Union Place, about three miles, and running round the Bowling Green and the Park at Union Place, thus forming an endless road. The two inner tracks are for the main cars, and the two outer tracks for what are called tenders. The cars are to be attached to and moved by endless rope; the motive power to be one or more steam engines at some central point on the road. The main cars are to be in constant motion, without any stoppages during the running hours of the day and evening, at a speed of perhaps six miles an hour. Nov. 5

"At the corner of every cross street, or every second cross street, will be stations where passengers ascend by stair-ways and steps into one of the tenders, which for the time is stationary. But immediately one of the main cars comes up, and when abreast of the tender fastens to it by the operation of the machinery, and takes it along to the next corner or station and there drops it, and fastens to another tender, which it takes along to the next station, and so on. As soon as the tender is attached to a main car, so as to become as it were a part of it, a door is opened by the conductor, and the passengers step from the tender, into the main car, and those in the main car who wish to stop step out into the tender. The door is then closed to prevent accidents, and the main car leaves its tender at the next corner.

"It is calculated to have sixty or seventy of the main cars, so there may not be more than 2 or 3 minutes between them; and as many tenders as there are corners or stations. It is calculated also to have promenades by the side of these tracks, either half the width or the whole width of the sidewalk below, and, in order not to obstruct too much of the light below, they will be covered by a semi-transparent glass. Various other appendages are suggested to give more or less the conveniences of a street in this upper story of Broadway. . . .

"The expense of erecting this railway and putting it in full operation is estimated by the inventor, after careful calculations, at a million and a half to two millions of dollars. If the City Council will sanction the plan, then application will be made to the state Legislature to charter a company for its construction. . . ."—N. Y. Com. Adv., N 5, 1847, citing the National Intelligencer; see also Pl. 133-a, Vol. III. See, further, N 8.

"Elevated Railway, &c., above Broadway.—Mr. Randel, the inventor of this magnificent project for the relief of Broadway, has to-day deposited three sections of his model made of iron open work, and at his own cost, in the Street Commissioner's Office, in accordance with a resolution of the Corporation of the 30th March, 1846, the remaining three quarters of the model (about 27 by 9 feet, and comprising the working part of the cars, tender, elevator, &c.) being too large to be received into that office, will remain on exhibition at No. 413 Broadway, until Wednesday next, for the examination of those who have not yet seen it."—Eve. Post, N 8, 1847; N. Y. Com. Adv., N 9, 1847. See also Eve. Post, N 15, 1847. 8

"New Freight Depot of the Harlem Railroad Company, Twenty-seventh street.—During a recent ramble in the upper part of the city, our attention was called to the extensive buildings and improvements that are making near the Twenty-seventh street Depot. The City Hall Depot is entirely too contracted for the increasing business of the company, being scarcely sufficient to accommodate the passenger trains. 12

"The company have erected a spacious freight house at Twenty-seventh street, 138 feet in length, 68 in width with two tracks through the centre of the building. On each side are platforms, 21 feet wide, on a level with the floor of the cars, the north side designed for receiving freight, the south side for the delivery of freight and produce. At the main entrance of the building are two commodious offices fitted up for counting rooms. A little south of this building are numerous pens for cattle, sheep, swine, and other kinds of stock that is brought on the road.

". . . The company have also erected at 32d street a machine shop one hundred feet by forty, and adjoining are several extensive sheds for storing wood—these are just in the rear of the mammoth engine house of brick, one hundred and twenty five feet in diameter. Just above this place a beautiful, unique, wrought iron bridge may be seen spanning the Harlem road. . . .

"Besides what we have noticed, this part of the city is rapidly filling up with private dwellings, in many places entire blocks are going up, and in a few years this will be one of the most thickly settled parts of the city. The business of the Harlem road has made this place what it is. . . ."—Eve. Post, N 12, 1847.

The common council orders "That Stuyvesant Park be graded and planted with trees and shrubbery, and that trees be planted 17 1847 Nov. 17 around the fenced part of Madison Square, and that the other Parks and enclosures be repaired where required," the sum of $1,500 to be applied for the purpose out of the unexpended balance appropriated for the use of lands and places.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XV: 209, 344.

18 The common council orders that "the lower corner line of the Park" be readjusted "so as to make a curve, instead of corners and angles, from Broadway to Chatham Street," and that the railing be placed on the line of such curve.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XV: 216. This operation necessitated the removal of the stone pillars and iron fence at the southern entrance to the Park, provided for on Oct. 8 (q.v.). See D 1; Com. Adv., D 17, 1847.

22 The Astor Place Opera House, at the junction of Astor Place and 8th St., ground for which was broken in March (Eve. Post, Mr 6, 1847), and a description of which was published on Nov. 12 (ibid., N 12, 1847), is opened to the public.—Brown, 413. On Dec. 4, the opera "Hernani" was presented there.—Eve. Post, D 6, 1847. See also L. M. R. K., III: 982. See Ap 16, 1853.

26 The common council passes a resolution of praise and thanks for the conduct of the First Regiment of the N. Y. State Volunteers in the war with Mexico; and causes medals to be struck, commemorative of the recent victories, to be presented to each of the surviving members of the New York regiment, and to the widow, eldest son, father, or mother of each of those who have fallen.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XV: 226, 403; XVI: 27.

29 A great public meeting is held at the Broadway Tabernacle "to give a public demonstration of . . . satisfaction at the late reforms introduced in the ecclesiastical states by Pope Pius IX, and their sympathy with the noble motives by which he is inspired."—Eve. Post, N 30, 1847.

" A contract is entered into by E. K. Collins with the U. S. government for the building of "an additional line of American steamers between New York and Liverpool," in accordance with an act of congress, in its last session, authorising the government to make such contract.—N. Y. Com. Adv., N 30, 1847.

Dec. 1 The gate-posts of marble blocks, which for 26 yrs. have stood at the southern entrance to the Park, are removed.—N. Y. Com. Adv., D 2, 1847. For a list of the articles deposited within the pillars when they were erected, in October, 1821 (q.v., O 1), see ibid., D 17, 1847.

7 The legislature incorporates the "New York Society for the Promotion of Education among Colored Children."—Laws of N. Y. (1847), chap. 425. See Ap 11, 1842.

11 The legislature passes an act "completing the line of Broadway." This, however, provides merely for the triangular block bounded by 22d St., Fifth Ave., and Broadway, by making it clear that it is not to be "a part of one of the streets;" also defining more clearly the western boundary of Broadway between 23d and 25th Sts.; and making a public place or park of the triangular block bounded by 25th St., Fifth Ave. and Broadway.—Laws of N. Y. (1847), chap. 439.

12 Chancellor James Kent dies. At the meeting of the common council on the following day, the information was communicated to the members by Mayor Brady, and resolutions were adopted by that body recalling that the deceased, "for upwards of half a century, was identified with the Judiciary of our State, either as Recorder, Judge, Chief Justice or Chancellor," in all of which positions "he has displayed such purity of character and distinguished ability as to command the confidence of his associates and the respect of those by whom he was surrounded."—Proc., Bd. of Ald. (1847–48), XXXIV: 128–32; Hone's Diary, II: 331. See, further, D 15.

14 The legislature prescribes the proceedings necessary to enable persons to change their names.—Laws of N. Y. (1847), chap. 464.

15 The common council passes a resolution, adopting the resolution proposed on Dec. 12, eulogizing the character and public services of the late Chancellor Kent, whose funeral occurs on this day. The board "will wear the usual badge of mourning for thirty days, cause the flag of the City to be raised at half mast during the day of the funeral, and will attend the same with their staves of office." The committee on arts and sciences is required to procure a portrait of Chancellor Kent to be placed in the governor's room.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XV: 240–41; Hone's Diary, II: 332–33.

29 The Royal Mail steamship "Hibernia" (Capt. Ryrie), the first Cunarder to enter New York harbour, arrives from Boston, and moors at her dock in Jersey City (see Ja 23). The trans-Atlantic route will not be direct, as was intended, between Liverpool and New York (see S 8, 1846). The recent refusal of the U. S. government to transport the Canada mails through its territory, has compelled the Cunard steamers to stop at Halifax, both going and returning.—N. Y. Com. Adv., D 29, 1847; N. Y. Jour. of Com., Ja 1, 1848. Capt. Ryrie was given an enthusiastic reception at the merchants' exchange next day in behalf of the merchants of New York.—N. Y. Com. Adv., D 31, 1847 (which contains a detailed description of the vessel). See Ja 2, 1848. Dec. 29

"Messrs. Murphy & Co, the well known stage proprietors, are about establishing a line of stages to run from the South ferry through Broadway, Astor place, and St. Mark's place to Tompkin's square."—Eve. Post, D 31, 1847. For the stage lines of this period, see 1850. 31

" "We believe that, since the organization of our Government, no one year produced so great a number of vessels as the year just passed. Among them were many elegant and substantial steamers, of great strength and immense capacity, varying in size from 1,000 to 3,000 tons.

"The number of tons launched since January last reaches 39,718; and if we add the 29,870 tons now on the stocks, in course of completion, the whole will amount to 69,588."—Merchants' Mag. (1848), XVIII: 310.

— In this year, members of the anti-slavery section of the Democratic party, especially in New York State, which separated from the rest of the Democratic national convention in 1846, were called "Barnburners." Allied with Abolitionists, they consisted of radical or progressive Democrats opposed to the more conservative "Hunkers."—Winsor, VII: 293. For the origin of the name, see Harpers' Popular Cyc. of U. S. Hist. (by Lossing), 104, 659.

— In this year, Abraham Lincoln and Andrew Johnson were in the house of representatives, and Stephen A. Douglas and Jefferson Davis in the senate of the U. S.—U. S. Cong. Directory (1848).

— In this year, a new type of magnetic telegraph was installed between Philadelphia and New York, known as "House's Printing Telegraph." It was regarded as an improvement on Morse's telegraph, and President French of the Magnetic Telegraph Co., which controlled Morse's patent, requested the board of directors to institute legal proceedings against the proprietors of the infringing company.—Proc. of the Magnetic Telegraph Co., I: 85.

— "The New York papers joined forces with the telegraph people, and in 1848 organized the Associated Press, with Mr. [Gerard] Hallock as president and Dr. Alexander Jones as manager."—"The Associated Press," by its manager, Melville E. Stone, in Century Mag., LXX: 302. There had been combinations of newspapers before for the purpose of obtaining news, but this was the most extensive and permanent one. It was composed of the Journal of Commerce, the Courier and Enquirer, the Tribune, Herald, Sun, and Express. In 1851, the Times became a member, and, in 1859, the World.—Annals of N. Am., 600; S. N. D. North, The Newspaper and Periodical Press (1884), 89.

— Some features of New York as they appeared in 1848 are described by Jas. Grant Wilson in an illustrated article, entitled "The City of N. Y. in 1848," in The Independent, LXV (1908): 1403–10. Among the views is a reproduction of a rare one of the Madison Cottage, from an original owned in 1908 by John D. Crimmins.

— At this time, the last houses on Madison Ave. were just above 27th St. "A grove of trees was where the next block now is, and nothing obstructed the view from our windows, so that we could see as far as Hoboken." Madison Ave. stopped at 42d St. The fashionable quarters of the city were then Broad St., Washington Square, East Broadway, St. John's Park, Second Ave., and Chelsea. Handsome residences had been built on lower Fifth Ave., and a very few had reached as far north as Murray Hill. Red brick residences were being replaced by brown stone, high-stoop, structures.—Knapp, A Hist. of the Brick Presby. Church, 278.

— John C. Myers describes, with some detail and in architectural terms, the principal buildings in New York in 1848.—Sketches on a Tour through the Northern and Eastern States, the Canadas and Nova Scotia (Harrisburg, 1849), 50, 51–55, 58, 73–74.

— In this year, surveys were made of Hell Gate by Davis and Porter, by which a complete knowledge of the hydrography of the pass was obtained.—See S 24, 1876. See also O 20, 1849, and descrip. of Pls. 82A, and 82B-a, III: 552–53, 554.

1848 From 1848 to 1852 inclusive, the Common Lands were surveyed by John J. Serrell.—See maps No. 91, 191, and 199 in real estate bureau of comptroller's office, Municipal Bldg.

— In this year, Serrell made a survey of the gore of land made by the intersection of Broadway and Fifth Ave. bet. 25th and 26th Sts.—See map No. 96 in real estate bureau of comptroller's office.

— From 1848 to 1852, surveys were made of grants of land to the Manhattan Gas Light Co.—See maps filed as No. 24 in real estate bureau of comptroller's office.

— In this year, the N. Y. Ladies' Home Missionary Soc. of the Methodist Episcopal Church laid plans for the reformation of Five Points (see D 19, 1831) by missionary efforts. It was a spot "where vice reigns unchecked."—Lossing, Hist. of N. Y. City, II: 627, passim. This led to the founding of the Five Points Mission (see F, 1851; D, 1852; Ja 27, 1853), and the Five Points House of Industry (see F, 1851; 1856).

— In this year, the almshouse at Bellevue was appropriated as part of the hospital establishment there (see 1826), the paupers being sent to Blackwell's Island.—See tablet on present hospital; and Lossing, Hist. of N. Y. City, I: 116. For view of the hospital, see Belden's New-York, Past, Present & Future (1849), 56; Man. Com. Coun. (1857), 438.

— From 1848 to 1854 (q. v.), the almshouse in the Park was used for public offices.

— The Papprill view of New York, "From the steeple of St. Paul's Church, looking East, South and West," bears this date. It is reproduced and described as Pl. 132, Vol. III.

— In this year was issued one of the rarest, and most complete series of New York street views, in coloured lithograph, by Jones, Newman, & J. S. Ewbank, with the title The Illustrated Pictorial Directory of New York. The views published were all of Broadway. For an account of these, see descrip. of Pl. 147, III: 719. See also 1849.

— Between 1848 and 1850, Jas. Pirsson, a boy of 16 or 17, made a panoramic water-colour view of the east side of Broadway, from Cedar to Bleecker St. It is now owned by the N. Y. P. L.—See descrip. of Pl. 147, III: 719.

— In Valentine's Manual for 1848, were published the following contemporary lithographic map and views: map of the city, 1848; the Park fountain; High Bridge, 47; the lunatic asylum on Blackwell's Island, 234; the University of the City of N. Y., 306; an old Dutch house at Kip's Bay, 384.

For view of the Cortelyou mansion, 1848, see ibid. (1858), 456.

— In this year, the Houston St. burial-ground of the Society of Friends was discontinued, and the remains were removed to their cemetery just opened on "The Plank Road," Brooklyn, now in Prospect Park.—Cox, Catalogue of Records of the Society.

— In this year, the Kennedy house, No. 1 Broadway, was leased as a hotel and called "The Washington."—See descrip. of Pl. 98, III: 590, citing Liber Deeds, DXI: 409.

— The Manhattan Club was founded in this year at 483 Broadway.—Man. Com. Coun. (1865), 635. Cf. L. M. R. K., III: 938.

— In this year, Victor Prevost, a French artist, came to America. In 1853, he established himself as a photographer at 43 John St. His negatives, on waxed paper, are among the very earliest produced in America. Two of his views of N. Y. City are reproduced and described as Pls. 142-a and b, III: 710–12.

— In this year was published by the N. Y. Pub. Co. a booklet of biographical sketches entitled The Aristocracy of New York. . . . A social and business history of the city for many years. By an old resident (William Armstrong). It was similar to the series of booklets entitled Wealth and Pedigree of the Wealthy Citizens (1842), and Wealth and Biography of the Wealthy Citizens (1845), which were published "at the Sun Office" at this period.

Jan. 2 The Cunarder "Hibernia" leaves New York harbour for Boston and Halifax, the first trans-Atlantic steam packet, carrying the mails, to go from this port on regular schedule.—N. Y. Herald, Ja 3, 1848. The name of "James Lennox" is on the passenger-list.—Morn. Cour. and N. Y. Enq., Ja 3, 1848.

3 "Free Academy—The foundations of this institution are now being laid, at the corner of Lexington avenue and 23d street; but we learn it will be some time before the ceremony of laying the corner stone takes place."—Eve. Post, Ja 3, 1848. See Ja 27, 1849.

10 A ball is held in Tammany Hall in commemoration of the battle of New Orleans (see Ja 8, 1815). President Tyler and Mrs. Tyler, who left the city on Jan. 8, wrote a letter of regret on that day, on being obliged to decline an invitation to attend.—See catalogue of sale at Henkels', Phila., Je 23, 1921 (item No. 504). Jan. 10

"The Washington Monument.—We have received from the Washington Monument Association a handsome lithograph of Mr. Pollard's design for the proposed monument to Washington, which was adopted, we understand, with the prudent reservation that it should be 'subject to an alteration, or the substitution of any more approved design, prior to the commencement of the structure.' We are not apprized whether the laying of the corner stone—or rather the celebration thereof—is to be considered as the 'commencement of the structure,' but we suppose the matter is still open. "

"We confess that the present design seems to us quite as suitable for a monument for any one else as for Washington. Something more characteristic is wanted. A pyramid, for instance, surmounted by a columnar altar, upbearing a colossal bust of Washington, would have the elements of simplicity and grandeur. . . ."—N. Y. Com. Adv., Ja 10, 1848. See Je 17, 1844; see, further, Mr 30.

Mayor Brady approves a resolution of the common council authorising the employment of a proper person to translate the Dutch records of the court of burgomasters and schepens, provided the same "can be done at an expense not exceeding fifteen hundred dollars."—Proc., App'd by Mayor (1847–48), XV: 265. The committee on arts and sciences, in its report to the common council recommending this action, said there were in various parts of the city hall "some thirty-seven or thirty-eight books in manuscript in the Dutch language, bearing strong evidence of the ravages of time. Fifteen of these books are registers of wills, mortgages, conveyances of real estate, &c., and the remainder are the journals or minutes of our first Common Councils, and extend from the year 1653 (when the City was originally incorporated) to the year 1674, when the records were first regularly kept in the English language. . . . 22

"Every public body owes it to itself, and to the citizens whom it represents, to preserve its records as perfect and unbroken as possible. They are the only authentic sources from which a correct knowledge of the past can be obtained, and the loss of which exposes the character and history of the City to misrepresentation, whereby false impressions are or may be formed of the Acts of its public functionaries. So sensible has the Common Council of Philadelphia been of this truth, that it has recently caused its early journals not only to be copied, but, at a great expence, printed for the use of the public [see 1847].

"The manuscripts which your Committee have examined are, however, sealed to almost all enquirers, and totally useless for reference, being in a language with which very few indeed of our citizens are acquainted. To render them accessible for any useful purpose they ought to be translated. The City would then possess an uninterrupted record of its municipal government from its foundation, embracing a period of nearly two hundred years. On the other hand if these records be allowed to remain in their present state, every year will diminish their number, the damp is rotting them away piecemeal, and vermin will soon destroy whatever that spares.

"This ancient and wealthy City ought not to allow the destruction of its own official records. Several years ago [see Ap 21, 1837] an effort was made to prevent it, and one volume of these papers was translated, at an expense of about five hundred dollars. Unfortunately, the work was then discontinued."—Proc., Bd. of Ald. (1847–8), XXXIV: 156–58. The committee on arts and sciences "subsequently appointed Doctor E. B. O'Callaghan, the author of the History of New Netherlands, &c., to make such translation." Two volumes had been translated by Feb. 19, 1849 (q. v.), and two more remained to be done.—Ibid. (1849), XXXVI, part 2: 537–38. For a suggestion regarding the publication of these early records, see Ja 2, 1849. For O'Callaghan's translation of the N. Y. Col. Docs., see F 12, 1845.

The College of St. Francis Xavier (see S, 1847) is destroyed by fire. On May 1, the college took new quarters in a dwelling-house, No. 77 Third Ave., between 11th and 12th Sts.—Eve. Post, Ja 24, 1848; The College of St. Francis Xavier (1897), 9, 11, 15, 25, 32. See Ap 5, 1850. "

Gold is discovered in California. Cf. 1842. This led to the "gold rush" of 1848–49.—McMaster, VII: 585; Rhodes, Hist. of the U. S., I: iii. 24

Congress authorises the Washington National Monument Society (see S 26, 1833) to erect "a Monument to the memory of 31

1848 Jan. 31 George Washington upon such portion of the public grounds or reservations within the City of Washington, not otherwise occupied, as shall be selected by the President of the United States and the Board of Managers of said Society as a suitable site on which to erect the said Monument, and for the necessary protection thereof." The site selected, containing about 30 acres, was near the Potomac River, west of the Capitol, and south of the White House.—Harvey, Hist. of Washington Nat'l Monument and Washington Nat'l Monument Soc. (1902), 41–44. The corner-stone was laid on July 4 (q. v.).

Feb. 2 The treaty of peace between the U. S. and Mexico is signed.—Winsor, VII: 412, 507, 535, 553. When ratified, it was proclaimed on July 4 (q. v. for its provisions).

4 The common council orders that awning-posts be removed from Wall St.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XV: 270.

5 The common council orders that the N. Y. & Harlem R. R. Co. restore the bridge crossing the track at the intersection of Fourth Ave. and 50th St.; construct bridges at the intersection of Fourth Ave. and 79th St., and Fourth Ave. and 85th St., of the same width as the one at 87th St.; enclose the track on Fourth Ave. with "a fence or protection wall along the edges," between 84th St. and the tunnel at or near 92d St.; and enclose the sides of the bridge at the intersection of Fourth Ave. and 87th St.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XV: 274.

11 "The Banking Institution of the Manhattan Company.—. . . During the past year the plain and substantial two story granite building, No. 40 Wall street, occupied by this company, was torn down for the purpose of extending it over the vacant area in the rear, and adding another story. It is but a few weeks since the new building was completed, the whole front being of Quincy Granite, presenting a neat and imposing specimen of modern architecture." The new building is described in detail.—Eve. Post, F 11, 1848.

12 Thomas Cole, the artist, dies. For a brief account of his life and work, see Hone's Diary, II: 339–40.

" "New Baptist Church in Broadway.—We understand that the Hope Chapel Baptist Church have recently purchased some eligible lots in the upper part of Broadway, nearly opposite the New York Hotel, on which they are commencing a house of worship. The purchase gives them 50 feet front by 137 feet deep. The church is to be erected in the rear, with an attractive entrance from Broadway, while two stores, four stories high, two dwellings above them, are to be placed on the front. . . ."—N. Y. Com. Adv., F 12, 1848.

15 "A Homeopathic Dispensary has just been established in this city, at 57 Bond street."—Eve. Post, F 15, 1848.

" Lieut.-Com'r Chas. H. Davis, assistant superintendent of the U. S. Coast Survey, reports to the superintendent, A. D. Bache, LL.D., the results of his examination of "the Hurl Gate passage," to discover the best means of improving this channel. The report makes mention of rocks and other landmarks named the Pot, Frying Pan, Gridiron, Negro Head, Bread and Cheese, Way's Reef, Flood and Little Mill Rocks, Hog's Back, Mill Reef, Rylander's Reef, Negro Point, and Hallett's Point.—N. Y. Com. Adv., Ag 9, 1848. See O 30.

22 The Revolution of 1848 in France begins. It resulted in the abdication of Louis Philippe and the establishment of the Second Republic.—Hazen, Europe since 1815, 141–44.

23 John Quincy Adams dies in Washington.—N. Y. Herald, F 24, 25, et seq., 1848; Hone's Diary, II: 341. See Mr 8.

29 The Morning Star, a new penny paper, makes its first appearance.—Eve. Post, F 29, 1848.

Mar. 7 Henry Clay is enthusiastically welcomed to New York.—Eve. Post, Mr 8, 1848. See also ibid., Mr 9, 10, 11, 1848; Hone's Diary, II: 344.

8 The body of the late John Quincy Adams is received in New York, and full honours paid in elaborate ceremonies at the city hall. The next morning the remains were conveyed by boat to New England.—N. Y. Herald, Mr 9, 10, 1848.

22 A great number of Frenchmen meet at St. John's Hall and express their approval of the revolution in France.—Eve. Post, Mr 23, 1848.

25 The legislature authorises the board of education of the city of New York to establish evening schools for the education of apprentices and others, and to raise money by taxation for their organization and support.—Laws of N. Y. (1848), chap. 128. This act was one of those absorbed by the consolidated school law of July 3, 1851 (q. v.).

Mar. 28 The common council orders that the "Russ pavement" be placed on Broadway between the north line of Chambers St. and the south line of Vesey St.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XV: 325.

29 John Jacob Astor dies in his 85th year, the wealthiest man in America.—N. Y. Herald, Mr 30, 1848. His property is estimated at twenty or thirty millions. For a brief account of his business success, see Hone's Diary, II: 347–48, 349; Man. Com. Coun. (1856), 543; Correspondence of Jas. Fenimore-Cooper (1922), II: 588.

Mr. Astor left by his will the sum of $400,000 for establishing a public library in this city.—See Ap, 1849.

" In amending an act of May 7, 1840, relating to the N. Y. & Harlem R. R. Co., the legislature extends the time from June 1, 1848, to Dec. 31, 1848, within which to finish the road and put it in operation. This act authorises the N. Y. & New Haven Railroad Co. to operate over the N. Y. & Harlem R. R. tracks from their junction at William's Bridge, Westchester Co., "to the city of New-York, and as far into the said city as the said Harlem railroad can extend," upon such terms as the roads can agree upon.—Laws of N. Y. (1848), chap. 143.

30 "Washington Monument Association.—The gentlemen who have been invited to act as members of the New York committee for the Washington National Monument Society, and all others interested in the object, are requested to meet this evening, at half past 7 o'clock, at the rooms of the New York Historical Society. Hon. Elisha Whittlesey will be present."—N. Y. Com. Adv., Mr 30, 1848. This refers to a monument in Washington City.

"The National Washington Monument Society Having invited Several gentlemen to act as a committee on collections for the city of New York, with power to add to their number, the following members [were appointed] . . .

"Mr. James Beekman, a member of the committee for erecting a monument in the city of New York, was then introduced and made a statement relative to the proceedings of that committee, by which it appeared that they had suspended operations until a suitable design could be selected from a number now in preparation, which are to be exhibited in the Summer. Mr. Beekman expressed the hope that this committee would not act so as to embarrass the collections for a local monument.

"Messrs. Frelinghuysen and Whittlesey replied and protested against the idea of collision between the operations of the two committees, expressing the hope that each would assist the other. . .

"Resolved. That a committee be appointed by the chair to select a suitable agent and prepare suitable by-laws for the government of the committee and the agent, and report at the next meeting."—N. Y. Com. Adv., Ap 3, 1848. For subsequent events connected with the long effort to erect a monument in memory of Washington, see F 2, 1849; O 22 and 29, 1851.

31 The common council orders that awning-posts be removed from Maiden Lane, from Cedar St. between Pearl and William Sts., and from John St.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XV: 326.

" The common council orders that such evergreens, water plants, and other appropriate shrubbery, be planted "as will best comport with the ornamental basin recently finished around the Park Fountain," and a variety of plants in the several city parks, at an expense of not over $175.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XV: 327.

" The common council passes the following resolution: "Whereas, It appears that the French nation, indignant at the oppression, corruption and tyranny of a monarchical government, has succeeded in effecting its overthrow by a revolution, proposing to establish on its ruins a republic; and

"Whereas, Conscious that the republican institutions of America have mainly contributed to its prosperity, liberty and greatness, and are best calculated to develope its powers and secure the rights of man, we desire to see them extended to the oppressed masses of Europe, and identified with the nations that have given to the world a Lafayette, a Hampden and an Emmet; therefore

"Resolved, That appreciating the blessings of free institutions, and grateful to the services rendered to America in its struggle for independence, we sympathize with the French people in their recent united effort to replace a European monarchy by a European republic, and establish the freedom and equality of the new world among the oppressed nations of the old."—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XV: 332

Apr. 1 The common council passes further resolutions of sympathy for the revolution in France. "It is the intention of our fellow-citizens to hold a mass meeting in the Park on Monday evening

1848 Apr. 1 next, without regard to party, sect, locality, or birth, and for the purpose of congratulating each other upon the soul-stirring events which within the last few days have been communicated to us from Europe, and to adopt such measures as in their judgment may be best calculated to strengthen the arm of France, in her struggles for liberty and independence, and to kindle a beacon-fire upon her altars which may enlighten the other nations of the world, and teach them the important lesson, that the inalienable rights of man will not forever be disregarded."

The board orders that the flags of the city and state of N. Y. be displayed from the city hall on the day of the meeting, and that the front of the city hall be illuminated during the meeting. A committee is appointed to make necessary arrangements, to co-operate with a citizens' committee.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XV: 333–34.

3 A great demonstration takes place in City Hall Park, in honour of the French revolution.—Eve. Post, Ap 4, 1848.

5 The legislature incorporates the "United States Mail Steam Ship Co." This line is to run from New York to New Orleans and touch at intermediate points.—Laws of N. Y. (1848), chap. 178.

" The legislature authorises the common council to borrow $25,000 for an iron railing around Washington Square.—Laws of N. Y. (1848), chap. 186.

8 The legislature authorises the commissioners of the land office to surrender to the common council the lease for the present site and buildings occupied as the state arsenal, including a lot on White St. occupied as a portion of the arsenal grounds, upon such terms as they may deem advantageous to the state. The comptroller is authorised to lend $15,000 to be "expended in the erection of the new arsenal at New-York" (see N 15, 1848), and to issue stock for it.—Laws of N. Y. (1848), chap. 204.

11 Wm. F. Havemeyer is again elected mayor, after having filled the office in 1845–6 (q. v.). He succeeds Wm. V. Brady.—See Ap 13, 1847. He was succeeded by Caleb S. Woodhull.—See Ap 10, 1849. Havemeyer served a third term in 1873–74.—See N 5, 1872.

" The legislature makes an appropriation for collecting and translating some of the documents belonging to the state, and connected with its history.—Laws of N. Y. (1848), chap. 260 (p. 382). In pursuance of this action, certain papers were compiled, under the direction of Secretary of State Morgan, by Dr. E. B. O'Callaghan, which, on the 5th of January, 1849, the legislature ordered to be printed. In the following April, the legislature directed the secretary of state to cause to be printed a second volume of what was styled the Documentary History of New-York. Of this work, four volumes, in all, were published, at Albany, the first three in 1850, and the fourth in 1851. They contain a miscellaneous compilation, in which some of the manuscripts procured by Mr. Brodhead (see F 12, 1845) are printed.—"General Introduction" of N. Y. Col. Docs., I: xlii; and the Doc. Hist. N. Y.

" The legislature incorporates the "N. Y. and Staten Island Steam Ferry Co.," a stock company, organized for the purpose of establishing and operating a ferry between New York and the east shore of Staten Island, between Castleton and Southfield.—Laws of N. Y. (1848), chap. 257.

12 The legislature passes "An Act to simplify and abridge the Practice, Pleadings and Proceedings of the Courts of this State."—Laws of N. Y. (1848), chap. 379 (pp. 497–569). David Dudley Field was the chief author of this code of procedure. Amended and enlarged in 1849 (q. v., Ap 11), it was generally adopted later by other states, and its principles are still to some extent followed in England, Ireland, and many of the English colonies.—Silliman's reminiscences in Hist. of the Bench and Bar (1897), I: 236–37.

" The legislature passes a general act to provide for the incorporation and regulation of telegraph companies. Among other provisions, it prescribes the proceedings whereby any company now organized and using Morse's telegraph may be incorporated.—Laws of N. Y. (1848), chap. 265.

" The legislature incorporates the Pacific Mail Steamship Co., for the purpose of navigating the Pacific.—Laws of N. Y. (1848), chap. 266.

" The legislature passes a general act to provide for the incorporation of benevolent, charitable, scientific, and missionary societies, by their filing a certificate under prescribed regulations. Certain proceedings, powers, and restrictions, of such corporations are defined.—Laws of N. Y. (1848), chap. 319. Under this act, the Association for Improving the Condition of the Poor, founded in 1843 (q. v.), was incorporated. Apr. 12

The common council orders that the section of Madison Square lying between Fifth and Madison Aves., 23d and 24th Sts., "be levelled up with mould and seeded down to grass," at an expense not exceeding $650, under the direction of the street com'r.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XV: 344. 17

"A gang of thirty labourers, under the supervision of Mr. Russ, commenced removing the old cobble-stone pavement before the 'Park,' in Broadway, yesterday [April 24] morning, with a view of re-laying it after Mr. Russ's more durable method. . . . All that portion of the street south of Chambers and north of Vesey is under contract, and is expected to be completed some time in September next. The expense will probably be $30,000."—Eve. Post, Ap 25, 1848. 24

In this month, Croton water commenced to flow over the High Bridge.—Man. Com. Coun. (1854), 222. May —

The common council orders "That the actual opening of the 4th Avenue, between 28th and 38th Streets, as confirmed by the Supreme Court on the 17 day of January, 1848, be, and is hereby, ordered to take place on the 1st day of May, 1848." A collector of assessments is appointed.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XV: 265; Man. Com. Coun. (1857), 537. See also 1853. 1

The city's old contract with the Manhattan Gas Light Co. is cancelled, and the common council enters into a new contract with that company. "For the light, the lighting and extinguishing of the public lamps," the company is to receive $15 per lamp per annum, and "for the fitting up of the same" an additional $5, "the cost of posts, lanterns and repairs to be at the expense of the Corporation." The corporation is to have the right "to order the mains of the company to be extended to such points as they may direct, commencing at Grand and Canal Streets, . . . to an amount not exceeding the sum of six thousand dollars in any one year." 5

It has been ascertained that each lamp has been "kept burning during the last five years" an average number of 2,300 hours per year. If at any time the corporation shall "direct the lamps to be kept burning during a greater number of hours than the said average," the company shall be entitled to receive increased compensation.

Another provision is that the company shall "so conduct their manufactory or manufactories of gas as not to create a nuisance."—Proc., App'd by Mayor (1847–8), XV: 381–83.

An amendment to the ordinance of 1845 regulating the police of New York divides the city into four districts, each with a police-court and office. They are in the "Halls of Justice" on Center St., in Jefferson Market, in Essex Market, and in the newly erected police station-house on 29th St.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XV: 391–92. 6

The mayor signs a joint resolution providing that a lease of the North Battery and pier at the foot of Hubert St. be granted to the "Commissioners of Emigration, for the landing of Immigrants, for a period of five years," at an annual rental of $3,000.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XV: 401. 8

The common council orders "That the room [in the city hall] now occupied by the Judges of the Supreme Court as Chambers be united with and form a part of the Governor's Room, as soon as other apartments are provided for the said Judges."—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XV: 410. "

The common council orders that Lexington Ave. be opened immediately from 30th to 42d St.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XV: 396; Man. Com. Coun. (1857), 538. "

Mayor Havemeyer, in his message to the common council, says: "The immigration from the over populated countries of Europe, which our free institutions, and our fertile and unoccupied soils has invited, has received a new impulse from the famine which has been recently added to the evils of misgovernment. The number who have within the last year sought a new home and a refuge from want and oppression, is scarcely less than 250,000, of which about 160,000 persons, arrived at this port. The regulations recently proposed in Canada, will, if adopted, discourage direct emigration to that country, and increase the resort to this city, and it cannot be doubted that the annual accessions to our population of such persons, are destined rapidly and largely to increase and to form one of the most remarkable characteristics of the age in which we live. 9

"Aside from the vast increase of the productive power of the 1848 May 9 country thus created, and the considerable additions to its capital from those who bring with them the accumulation of their former industry, the effects upon our foreign commerce, although less observed, is by no means unimportant. The passage money received from immigrants during the past year, has contributed more to the prosperity of our navigation, than the freight from all our commerce with Europe. With a sagacious regard to an aspect of the times so peculiar and so important, as well to our citizens as to the immigrant, the Legislature of last year instituted a Commission whose duty it should be, by a proper application of the commutation and Hospital moneys collected from immigrants, to protect them against the frauds to which they were exposed, and the citizens of the various localities in our State, against the charge to which they might be subjected for the support of the sick or destitute. . . .

"In view of the importance of this great and growing interest, and its relation to the prosperity of our City, it cannot be doubted that the Commissioners of Emigration will, in the discharge of their arduous and responsible duties, receive, as they deserve, your cordial and efficient co-operation."—Proc., Bd. of Ald., XXXV (part 1): 40, 41.

" The law department is created by an ordinance of the common council, the chief officer to be denominated "Council of the Corporation." This officer is to be appointed by the common council, to have an office in the city hall, and to receive a salary of $3,500. It shall be his duty "to advise the two Boards, and their Committees and officers, on such questions as may, from time to time, arise in relation to the business of the Corporation," also to defend and prosecute "suits at law, or in equity in which the Corporation of New York have any interest or concern."—Proc., App'd by Mayor (1847-8), XV: 411–13. See Ap 2, 1849. The office of corporation counsel had been in existence for many years (see Index, Vol. VI), but there was no law department before this time.

12 The common council appropriates $250 to procure a portrait of Mayor Wm. V. Brady, to be placed in the governor's room.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XVI: 3.

14 Mayor Havemeyer, in a message to the common council, states that the Russ pavement lately introduced seems to present an even and permanent surface, and a contract has been made to lay it in Broadway between Chambers and Vesey Sts. at an expense of $30,000 (see Mr 28).—Mayor's Message, My 14, 1848, p. 29. For an account of the earliest use of this kind of pavement in New York, see Belden's N. Y. Past, Present & Future (1849), 30, 31.

25 A reception, military review, and dinner are held in honour of Gen. Scott on his return from Mexico.—N. Y. Herald, My 26, 1848; Hone's Diary, II: 349.

26 A society is organized in the merchants' exchange called "The New York Cheap Postage Assn.," the object of which is to secure a 2-cent postage rate for pre-paid letters under a half-ounce, when carried to any part of the United States. The existing rate is 5 cents for 300 miles or less, and 10 cents for over 300 miles, with an additional charge for increased weight.—Belden, New-York, Past, Present & Future (1849), 73–74.

" Hone is one of a dinner party at the "magnificent mansion" of Moses H. Grinnell in 14th St.—Hone's Diary, II: 350.

June 1 "One of the curiosities of New York—one of the hydraulic wonders of the new world—is the fountain at the High Bridge, where the aqueduct which brings the Croton into our city crosses the Harlem River. The magnificent arches of that bridge, spanning the valley of the river, are among the noblest sights in the world, and the fountain throwing up such a flood of water to such an immense height in the air, has made the place a favorite resort of all who delight in seeing the magnificent in art combined with the beautiful in nature. It is now said that arrangements are to be made for taking up the pipes which lead the water to this fountain, in order to use them on the aqueduct, by which a small sum will be saved and the fountain destroyed.

"A correspondent justly calls this a piece of Vandalism. . . ."—Eve. Post, Je 1, 1848. The fountain is shown on A. Pl. 18-b, Vol. III.

5 The common council gives permission to Prof. Elias Loomis, "in behalf of the principal of the U. S. Coast Survey, under the direction of the Street Commissioner, to erect telegraph posts between the corner of Second avenue and Eleventh street, and the Boston telegraph line by the way of Eleventh street, or by the most direct route, to support a connecting wire between the Boston and New York Observatory."—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XVI: 13.

In a description of "the picturesque beauty of the suburbs of New York," the prophesy is made that "Not many years will pass before Harlem, Yorkville and New York will be one city."—N. Y. Com. Adv., Je 6, 1848. June 6

Gen. Lewis Cass, accompanied by Sen. Houston and others, arrives in New York and is welcomed by Mayor Havemeyer and a great crowd of citizens.—Eve. Post, Je 9, 1848. 8

The first annual report of the directors of the Hudson River Railroad (printed in this year) bears this date. It shows the completion of the survey as far as Poughkeepsie. See S 25, 1849. "

In closing the old Eastern Post Road between 31st and 42d Sts., the common council orders that the land in the road be conveyed to adjoining property owners.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XVI: 33. 17

The "Board of State Commissioners of Water Supply" is appointed by the governor and confirmed by the senate.—Man. Com. Coun. (1854), 222. This was done under the act of May 2, 1834 (q. v.); but see Ap 11, 1849. 21

The first effectual steps are taken for establishing a workhouse for employing the able-bodied inmates of the almshouse. A communication on the subject is presented to the board of aldermen, and both the board of aldermen and the board of assistant aldermen appoint special committees to consider it.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XVI: 154. A report was rendered to the board of aldermen Feb. 12, 1849, favouring the project, and the board submitted the draft of an act to be presented to the legislature. The committee report was adopted by the board, and subsequently the act was passed by the legislature (see Ap 11, 1849).—Man. Com. Coun. (1851), 296. The corner-stone of the workhouse was laid on Blackwell's Island on Nov. 2, 1850.—Ibid. (1851), 296; Harper's Mag., Nov., 1866. 26

Christ Church, on Anthony (Worth) St., rebuilt since its destruction by fire on July 30, 1847 (q. v.), is consecrated.—Eve. Post, Je 30, 1848; Mag. of Am. Hist. (1888), XIX: 60–62; L. M. R. K., III: 932. For view of the new church, see The Evergreen (1848), Vol. V. See, further, Je 30, 1854. 29

The treaty of peace with Mexico is proclaimed by President Polk, it having been ratified by both governments. It stipulated the evacuation of Mexico by the U. S. troops within three months; the payment of $3,000,000 in hand, and $12,000,000 in four annual installments by the U. S. to Mexico, for New Mexico and California, which had become territory of the U. S. by conquest, and, in addition, the assumption of debts, due certain citizens of the U. S. from Mexico, to the amount of $3,500,000. It also fixed boundaries and otherwise adjusted matters in dispute.—U. S. Treaties, etc. (1910), I: 1107 et seq.; Lossing, in Harper's Popular Cyclopædia of U. S. Hist., 876; Hone's Diary, II: 347. July 4

During the day, there arrived from New Orleans the bodies of five victims of the war in Mexico, which were sent for by the common council.—N. Y. Com. Adv., Jl 5, 1848.

The corner-stone of the Washington monument in the city of Washington is laid.—Harper's Encyclop. of U. S. Hist. (new ed.), Vol. IX. The architect was Robert Mills. Hon. Robert C. Winthrop delivered the oration.—Harvey, Hist. of Washington Nat'l Monument and Washington Nat'l Monument Soc. (1902), 44-48, 115. Each state was invited to furnish, for insertion in the interior walls, a block of marble or other durable stone, a product of its soil (see e.g., O 22, 1851). Work on the monument progressed steadily until 1855 (q.v.).—Ibid., 48 et seq. See Ja 31. "

The common council appropriates $500 for a stand of colours for the 10th and 12th Regiments of the Fourth Brigade, N. Y. State Militia.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XVI: 55. A further sum of $500 was appropriated on Aug. 21 for a second stand of colours.—Ibid., XVI: 124. 6

Palmo's Opera House (see F 3, 1844) becomes Burton's Theatre.—Brown, I: 342; L. M. R. K., III: 983. 10

Mayor Havemeyer approves a resolution authorising the mayor to pay a bounty not exceeding 50 cents "for each dog found running loose or at large in the City, below Forty-second street, without being properly muzzled, and which may be killed or destroyed."—Proc., App'd by Mayor (1848-49), XVI: 63. 12

The first Woman's Rights Convention, called by Lucretia Mott, Martha C. Wright, Elizabeth Cady Stanton, and Mary Ann McClintock, assembles at Seneca Falls, N. Y. It adjourned on July 20 after adopting a "Declaration of Sentiments" and resolutions demanding suffrage, preaching, teaching, and property rights. It re-convened in Rochester on Aug. 2 and continued through three 19

1848 sessions. On April 19 and 20, a convention was held at Salem, Ohio.

25 The common council orders that the American Institute, at present occupying premises in the old almshouse building in the Park, and the Mechanics' Institute, at present occupying premises in the basement of the city hall, be required to vacate these premises on or before Nov. 1; also that the N. Y. Gallery of Fine Arts, at present occupying the "Rotunda" in the Park, be required to vacate within ten days. This is for the purpose of providing suitable rooms for holding the various courts.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XVI: 91–92. On Sept. 14, the board paid the managers of the "American Gallery of Fine Arts" $1,800, in full for repairs and alterations made to the Rotunda.—Ibid., XVI: 140.

27 A great reception is held upon the arrival of the First Regiment, N. Y. Volunteers from Mexico.—Eve. Post, Jl 28, 1848.

28 "The arrival in our harbor of the United States frigate Cumberland, bearing the broad pennant of Commodore [Matthew C.] Perry, offers an appropriate occasion to testify our appreciation of the gallantry and good conduct of our Navy generally, in the late war." With this preamble, the common council passes a resolution of thanks, extends the hospitalities of the city to the commodore, his officers and crew, and proposes to present to him the freedom of the city, in recognition of his services while in command of the Gulf squadron in the war with Mexico.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XVI: 95–96; N. Y. H. S. Coll. (1885), 424.

" "Whereas, The neighborhood of St. John's Park is in the night time infested with base and unprincipled persons, who take advantage of the darkness in which it is shrouded, in consequence of the dense foliage of the trees, and the dimness of the ordinary oil lamps, to perpetrate acts of violence upon . . . unprotected persons, who have occasion to pass through Beach, Varick and Laight streets. Therefore, be it

"Resolved, That the Superintendent of Lamps and Gas be, and he is hereby directed to have Beach, Varick and Laight streets, where they front on St. John's Park, lighted with gas, in accordance with a resolution of the Common Council, approved by the Mayor on the 20th March, 1846."—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XVI: 83.

Aug. The common council orders that resolutions directing the 1 renumbering of streets shall be carried into effect each year only in April.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XVI: 101.

4 The common council ordsrs that the owner of each building below 40th St. shall "provide a barrel, or tub, or box, of sufficient size to contain all the rubbish, coal ashes and garbage, that may accumulate from day to day, on his or her premises," and shall place it "on the side-walk, in front of each house or tenement, on such convenient spot as shall be designated by the street inspectors of the several Wards."—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XVI: 104.

" A common council order appoints Horace Greeley commissioner of common schools for the Twelfth Ward.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XVI: 110.

5 The common council orders "the passages and corridors" in the city hall be lighted with gas.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XVI: 120. Also Centre St.—Ibid., XVI: 121.

" The common council appropriates $2,000 to convert the "Rotunda" in the Park for public offices.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XVI: 122.

" The common council appropriates $10,000 for the erection of the free academy building.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XVI: 118. On Oct. 14, a second $10,000 was appropriated for the same purpose, as well as $5,000 for fitting up the building.—Ibid., XVI: 175. On March 9, 1849, $5,000 was again appropriated for the latter purpose.—Ibid., XVI: 370. For the total cost of ground, building, and equipment, see Ja 27, 1849.

" The common council directs the committee on public offices and repairs "to have the flags recently presented to the Corporation by the Volunteers from Mexico, placed in the Governor's room, with suitable inscriptions thereon."—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XVI: 123.

30 The gas works at the corner of Centre and Hester Sts. are destroyed by fire.—Eve. Post, Ag 31, 1848.

31 "The pleasant history of New York, written by Washington Irving, under the name of Diedrich Knickerbocker, is just published by G. Putnam, of this city, in one duodecimo volume, very neatly got up, as the first of a series of 'Irving's Works.' The edition is revised by the author, who has added a preface, in which he gives an account of the origin and design of the work. We are glad to welcome the reappearance of a work which, in the forty years since it was written, has lost none of its power of entertainment."—Eve. Post, Ag 31, 1848. (The MS. of the preface, which is really an apology for the work, is in N. Y. P. L. See also D 4, 1809.) Aug. 31

The cracked fire-bell is lowered from the roof of the city hall. Half way down, the guy breaks, and the immense piece of metal falls to the steps and shatters them. A new bell, weighing 6,330 lbs., which was cast at West Troy, arrived yesterday.—N. Y. Com. Adv., S 1, 1848; descrip. of Pl. 143-a, III: 713. See Mr 9, 1849. Sept. 1

A fire, covering about eight city blocks, occurs in the heart of Brooklyn. For full account, with map of the burnt district, see Com. Adv., S 11, 1848. 9

Irving Hotel "is the name of the new hotel recently erected at the corner of Chambers street and Broadway for D. D. Howard. . . ."—Eve. Post, S 11, 1848. 11

"The Ruins of the old Grace Church, at the corner of Broadway and Rector street, so long an eyesore to good taste, are about to disappear before the spirit of improvement. The lot and ruins in question have been purchased of its late owner, Elihu Townsend, Esq, by John Jay Phelps, of the firm of Phelps, Chittenden & Bliss, with a view of erecting there a magnificent building for stores and offices, which shall amply develope the great advantages of its site. It will extend 78 feet on Broadway, and 223 feet on Rector street. . . . The building will be five stories high, constructed in the most substantial and durable manner, with a front facing of free stone. In point of finish and elegance it will rival the large and beautiful free stone stores recently erected by Mr. Phelps in Courtlandt street."—Eve. Post, S 22, 1848. 22

The common council resolves to present the freedom of the city, in a gold box, to Frederick Jerome, a common seaman on board the American ship "New World," who was the means of saving a number of persons from the wreck of the "Ocean Monarch," which was recently burned at sea on her voyage from Liverpool to New York, when 178 persons were lost; and who also was instrumental in preserving life and property when the packet-ship "Henry Clay" stranded at Barnegat.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XVI: 147–49; N. Y. H. S. Coll. (1885), 425–26. The presentation was made at the Mariners' Church, in Roosevelt St., on Sept. 29.—Eve. Post, S 30, 1848. 26

The common council orders that the "wooden pavement" in William St. between Pine and Wall Sts., and in Hanover St. between Wall and Beaver Sts., be taken up and the streets repaved with "round stones."—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XVI: 152. 27

The lease of the Richmond Hill property (see Ap 3, 1846) is surrendered to Trinity Church.—Liber Deeds, DIX: 356; and see 1849. "

"The Historical Society will hold a meeting at their rooms, this evening. An important historical document in manuscript, recently discovered at the Hague, will be presented and read. It is an original account of New Netherland, written here in 1626, and transmitted by the Dutch Secretary, De Rosiere, to the authorities in Holland."—Eve. Post, O 2, 1848. The meeting was held on Oct. 3.—Ibid., O 4, 1848. The Dutch document here referred to was the letter written by Isaack de Rasière to Samuel Blommaert, extracts from which appear in the Chronology under Autumn, 1628. A copy was sent to the Historical Society by John Romeyn Brodhead.—N. Y. H. S. Proc. (1848), 132–35, 159–63; N. Y. H. S. Collections, 2d ser., II: 239–54. Oct. 2

By this time, Broadway had been widened from 21st to 25th St., at a total cost of $11,573.13.—Man. Com. Coun. (1857), 573. 3

The common council resolves "That a lease of the square of land bounded by Duane, West, Reade and Washington streets, be made to the 'New York and Erie Railroad Company,' for a term of ten years," at an annual rent of $1,250, ". . . the said ground to be used for the purposes of a depot for said New York and Erie Railroad Company only."—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XVI: 154–55. 7

A great free soil mass meeting is held in the Park.—Eve. Post, O 10, 1848. 9

A special committee of the common council having been appointed on Sept. 8 to report upon a plan for the enlargement of the Battery, now reports that surveys and soundings have been made, and a map drawn by Daniel Ewen, surveyor, showing the line of the old Battery previous to the last enlargement (1824), the limits "

1848 Oct. 9 at the time the map was made, and the line of the proposed extension. "The line of enlargement," the report states, "commences at the westerly side of West Street, and thence runs in a direct line until it strikes the north-westerly angle of the block on which Castle Garden is erected; thence along the block to its westerly angle; and thence in a curve line until it strikes the new pier, No. 1, East River, at a point 200 feet distant from the southern exterior point of the Battery, adding thereby eleven acres, three roods and thirty-two poles, exclusive of the aforesaid block, which contains one acre and sixteen poles, and making the Battery thus enlarged to contain twenty-four acres,"—being more than twice its area at that time, and increasing its river front from 1,620 to 2,120 ft. The plan also contemplates sinking a bulkhead along the line at low-water mark, or of rip-rapping the same, and the construction of a masonry wall of free stone, thereon, nine ft. in height by three ft. in width, with a coping and balustrade similar to the one then in existence. By reason of its enlargement in 1824, the report states, the Battery was brought on a line with the exterior streets of the city, after which West St. was extended so as to bring it far outside the northern exterior line of the Battery. South St. was widened, and wharves and piers extended out at both points to considerable distances. The map was published with the report. It shows Castle Garden embraced by the proposed extension.—Proc., Bd. of Asst. Ald., Vol. 32, Part 2 (Document No. 9).

13 "A fine view of New York taken from Williamsburg, representing the whole city, lying under the eyes of the spectator, has been published by E. Anthony of this city at his Daguerreotype establishment in Broadway. It was drawn from nature, and lithographed by E. W. Freman and E. Brown. It is a more complete and satisfactory view of New York, than we have seen taken from any other point."—Eve. Post, O 13, 1848.

27 The common council appoints a committee to tender to Brevet Maj.-Gen. John E. Wool, and Brevet Maj.-Gen. Wm. J. Worth the use of the governor's room, "for the purpose of receiving the visits and congratulations of their fellow citizens" for their heroic conduct in the War of 1812 and the Mexican war.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XVI: 168–69.

30 The following extracts are taken from a letter of this date from Lieut.-Com. David D. Porter to A. D. Bache, superintendent of the U. S. Coast Survey, in regard to Hell Gate: "The first in order, and the principal obstruction in Hell Gate, is 'Pot Rock,' on which I found 8 feet of water at the lowest tides, the average depth is, however, about ten feet. At half tides the depth of water does not increase on 'Pot Rock' as there is at least a fall of four feet, and a vessel drawing over 8 feet must strike upon it . . . this obstruction once removed Hell Gate would be less dangerous by half. 'Way's Reef,' to the southard of 'Pot Rock,' is divided into two parts, one a conical rock with five feet on it, and the other a flat bed of rocks about ten feet square with 14 ft. of water. . . . Nothing can be done with this large bed of rocks but to erect a stone beacon on the shoalest part—this will save many a vessel. 'Hallett's Point' I should recommend by all means to be removed, it is the most accessible obstruction in Hell Gate . . . it extends 40 yards into the channel, and has 18 ft. of water at its outermost point." Other dangerous rocks mentioned are "Bald Headed Billy," "The Frying Pan" rock, "Rylander's Reef," and "Blackwell's Rock."—From letter filed with "Misc. MSS." in the N. Y. H. S. On Nov. 14, Porter made fuller recommendations about clearing this channel, in which he described its present condition. He mentioned the following additional place-names: Gibbs's Point (the southern approach to Hurl Gate), Scaly Rock, Shell Rock, Ravensworth Reef, Diamond and Prince's Reefs.—Ibid., N 25, 1848. See, further, O 20, 1849.

Nov. 1 As authorised by the legislature, the common council appropriates $25,000 for building an iron railing or fence around Washington Square.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XVI: 203.

2 Myndert Van Schaick, president of the water board, recommends that a new site be purchased for a receiving and distributing reservoir, to contain about 120 acres.—Doc. No. 18, Bd. of Ald., N 2, 1848. He prepared a bill for a law which changed the water office into a department, with a president, assistant commissioner, and engineer. This passed the legislature on April 11, 1849 (q. v.).

Nov. 2 The common council orders "That the iron railing now being constructed around Washington square, be placed on the line where the wooden fence now stands, except that the angles be rounded, and three small gates be placed in each circle of the square."—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XVI: 207.

7 The Whig candidates, Zachary Taylor and Millard Fillmore, are elected president and vice-president, defeating their Democratic opponents, Lewis Cass and Wm. O. Butler.—McKee, National Conventions and Platforms, 58–73.

8 The common council refers to the committee on wharves, piers and slips, with power, a petition of Anson G. Phelps and others, owners of the steamboat "Ansonia," for a berth on the easterly side of Market St. pier.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XVI: 226.

15 The common council authorises the N. Y. & Harlem R. R. Co. "to lay down rails in Canal street, from their road in Centre street, to a point seventy-five feet east of Broadway, to enable them to afford the increased accommodation for the public, which may be required by the extension of their own road, and by their connection with the New York and New Haven Railroad Company, and for the purpose of establishing a depot for passengers to and from the New York and New Haven Railroad, with permission to cross the side-walk from the rail tracks into any premises which either of said companies may become the lessees or owners of, . . ."—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XVI: 232. Regarding the New Haven line, see D 29.

" By this time, the new state arsenal, at Fifth Ave. and 64th St. (see Jl 5 and N 4, 1847), was erected, though not entirely completed (until 1851). It was the largest building of the kind in the state, an imposing edifice, having a frontage of 200 ft., and depth of 50 ft.

"A sub-cellar, under the north wing of the building, is to be occupied by the old Revolutionary pieces. The basement, . . . is for heavy cannon and balls. The principal story . . . will be tenanted by the small arms. The second story, . . . by munitions; and the upper story, by gun carriages, etc., etc. . . .

"In the rear of the main building is a small magazine."—The Great Metropolis: or New-York Almanac for 1850, 77. See also text of the tablet over the entrance, pub. in 19th Ann. Rep., Am. Scenic & Hist. Pres. Soc. (1914), 165–66; ibid. (1911), 437; and L. M. R. K., III: 923. For early views of the building, see Man. Com. Coun. (1850), 402; Illustrated News, I: 76, 77 (Ja 29, 1853).

In 1854, a description of the contents of the building shows that it was occupied about as planned. A cellar under one of the wings contained relics of the Revolution. "Among more modern curiosities may be noted the cannon built by Governor Daniel D. Tompkins, after a peculiar model of his own; also Cochran's revolving cannon . . ., which was to have made such dreadful havoc among an enemy, by throwing the balls as from a sling, without the use of powder and without making a noise. This invention, however, proved a failure."—Gleason's Pictorial, VII: 133 (S 2, 1854); Phelps' N. Y. City Guide (1854), 35.

18 "The Hudson River Railroad Company have purchased two blocks of land, and have commenced the erection of a depot and other buildings on 31st street."—Eve. Post, N 18, 1848. Bromley's Atlas of the Entire City of N. Y. (1879) shows these buildings on Pl. 14, as built on the two blocks between 30th and 32d Sts., Tenth and Eleventh Aves., and consisting of freight houses, repair-shops, etc. The railroad ran down Eleventh Ave. to this point, where the freight-yards were on the water-front. There was a depot on the south side of 30th St., between Ninth and Tenth Aves., and connecting tracks.

19 St. George's Church, on 16th St., is opened.—Eve. Post, N 20, 1848. It is described in ibid., N 18, 1848. It was consecrated on Dec. 4, 1849.

28 The common council orders "That the open space fronting the Park, from Tryon row to Ann street, be hereafter known and designated as 'City Hall square.' "—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XVI: 249.

29 The common council orders "That a lease of the north Battery and pier foot of Hubert street, be granted to the Delaware and Hudson Canal Company, for ten years" from May 1st, 1849, at an annual rent of $3,500, "provided the Commissioners of Emigra-

1848 Nov. 29 tion relinquish the same . . ." The company shall extend the pier on its southerly side, and have permission to "square the block" on the northerly side, as shown on maps accompanying the resolution. Such improvements shall be made at the company's expense but shall be the property of the city at the expiration of the lease. —Proc., App'd by Mayor, XVI: 261.

Dec. 2 Emperor Ferdinand of Austria, having been forced to abdicate, is succeeded by his nephew, Francis Joseph I. Hungary refused to recognize the new emperor, and war broke out between the two countries.—Hazen, Europe since 1815, 178–79. See Ap 14, 1849.

5 Washington Irving presents to the St. Nicholas Society a weather-vane, consisting of an upright rod about 4 ft. high, surmounted by four arms to indicate the points of the compass, above which is a copper cock which revolves. This was given to Irving by Elizabeth Mackie on May 13, 1836, in the belief that it had graced the stadt-huys (the first city hall) of 1656 (q.v.). Irving placed it on "Sunnyside," his home at Irvington, on the Hudson.

Its use by the St. Nicholas Society in later years is thus explained: When the gentlemen met on Feb. 14, 1835 (q.v.), to consider "the expediency of establishing a society to be composed of the old residents of New York and their descendants," they had in mind the fact that the influx of New England families into New York was encroaching upon the business and social prestige of the older citizens (see Ap 17, 1841). At the society's banquets, the pushing ways of these new-comers would be enlarged upon jocosely. The weather-cock, placed upon the president's table, and pointing eastward, symbolized this condition which summoned the sons of St. Nicholas to let their voices be heard in honour of Old New York. —See the 1907 ed. of the society's Charter, Constitution, By-Laws, and List of Members, opp. p. 29, where a photograph of the weather-vane is reproduced.

It is stated in Vol. I of the present work, p. 232, that there is no "official confirmation" of the alleged "pedigree" of this "wind-vane;" that while it is possible that it was taken from the stadt-huys, it seems more likely that it belonged to the city hall (the later "Federal Hall") on Wall St., "which we know from several contemporary pictures had a vane in the form of a cock."

It is even more likely that it came from one of the early churches. For example, on March 20, 1830, the N. Y. Mirror published an engraved view and description of the Middle Dutch Church, and referred to the weather-cock shown in this view as "a correct representation of 'bright chanticleer,' in the ancient Dutch taste." The weather-cock was loaned to the N. Y. Hist. Soc. by the St. Nicholas Soc. in 1923, and remains there on exhibition.

" The common council directs the committee on arts and sciences to report what suitable return shall be made to Pope Pius IX for a present to the city of six medals emblematic of events connected with the Papal dominions. The medals are described in the resolution. The committee is also to take into consideration the subject of international exchanges, as now being conducted by Mons. Alexandre Vattemare.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XVI: 276–79. A resolution of Jan. 25, 1849 (q.v.) embodies the committee's recommendations.

The full service of the N. Y. & New Haven R. R. is opened over 77 miles between New Haven and Canal St., New York (see N 15). Of this, 64 miles extend from New Haven to Williams Bridge.—From chron. supplied by the company. "Passenger cars of the New Haven line were pulled through the city streets by horses, and assembled into a train on Fourth Avenue, near the southern end of the tunnel."—Dunbar, Hist. of Travel in Am., 997, 1000, with view reproduced from one in the Illustrated News, of Jan. 29, 1853 (not cited by Dunbar), showing a scene in Centre St. during a snow-storm, with one of the passenger cars hauled by eight or ten horses past the old "Tombs" (prison). 29

The most notable guide-book describing New York in the middle of the Nineteenth Century, that of E. Porter Belden, makes the following observations (selected): —

"The southern portion of the island, including about one fifth of the whole area, is compactly built. The remainder is mostly under tillage. . . . Probably no other city would have evinced the public spirit of New York in widening and straightening its ancient streets. Large piles of valuable buildings have opposed no barrier to the accomplishment of this object. The work of improvement is not yet completed. While we write, the crash of buildings, under the hand of innovation, can be heard, making way for an outlet to one of the principal business streets of the city [William Street].

"Broadway . . . extends from the Battery . . . to Union Place, a distance of 2½ miles. . . . The great promenade for beauty and fashion, it contains the largest and most splendid retail stores in the city. . . . Broadway, though 80 feet wide, is too contracted for the free passage of the numerous vehicles with which it is always thronged. The principal lines of omnibuses pass through this street, but their progress in its lower portion is so slow, that their utility for short distances is much diminished. To obviate this inconvenience an elevated railway has been proposed, but opposition of some of the citizens to this measure has yet to be removed.

"Among other streets prominent for width, length or beauty, may be mentioned the Bowery, East and West Broadway, and Chatham, Canal, Hudson and Greenwich streets. Pearl street, one mile and three eighth in length, at the same time the most irregular and the most important business street in the city, commences at State-Street, a short distance from Broadway, and having described a zig-zag curve terminates in Broadway, nearly a mile from the Battery. . . .

"The northern portion of the island, most of which is not yet thickly settled, was laid out in a regular manner, . . . The avenues . . . have been cut through the opposing rocks and hills at great expence. They are intersected by 156 cross streets, numerically designated, which, with the avenues, form oblong rectangles, most of them 200 by 800 feet.

"The streets are mostly paved with the common round paving stone. But the 'Russ Pavement,' invented by Horace P. Russ, Esq., has during the last two years been introduced into several places in the city. . . . It consists of blocks of trap, about 10

1849 inches in depth, laid in ranges, . . . [An account of the times and — places where this was first laid in New York is given. See also 1852.]

"Although New York is not so well supplied with Public Grounds as might be desired, in consequence of the neglect of the City Fathers to reserve, when the soil was not as valuable as at present, a sufficient portion for this purpose; yet we can boast of several splendid promenades, and one not surpassed, if equaled, in this country.

"The Battery, at the southern extremity of the island, forms an irregular figure, resembling a quarter section of the space included between two concentric circles. . . . Extended in its limits; enclosed by an iron railing on the side next the city, and by an open railing with stone posts on a foundation of solid masonry on the water side; laid out with grass plots and gravel walks; planted with many additional trees; and presenting a view enlivened at different times by the sails of every nation; it draws within its precincts by a more irresistible attraction the young men and maidens of our own days . . .

"Hudson Square, or St. John's Park, is a little ornamental enclosure, of about four acres, situated in front of St. John's Church, and bounded by Hudson, Laight, Varick and Beach streets. It stands in the name of the corporation of Trinity Church, though it is virtually the property of the surrounding owners; and its privileges are confined to the proprietors and such others as are permitted on their recommendation to hire keys at the annual charge of ten dollars. It is surrounded by an iron fence, contains a most beautiful fountain, and is more abundantly supplied with shrubs and flowers than any other park in the city.

"Washington square, containing nine and a half acres, bounded by Waverly Place, . . . and Wooster, Fourth, and McDougal streets, was formed in 1827 by adding to the ground formerly used as the Potter's Field about one half more purchased of private owners. The bones were collected and deposited in the trenches on the sides of the square. Washington Square has been until recently the principal military parade ground in the city."—Belden, New York, Past, Present & Future (1849), 28–34.

Twenty-one omnibus lines are listed, showing routes and the number of omnibuses belonging to each line. These total 327 licensed omnibuses.—Ibid., 53.

At this time, there were eight railroads having either ferry connection or direct connection with Manhattan Island. Those with tracks on the island were the Hudson River Railroad with terminal at 31st St., soon to be opened as far as Peekskill; the New York & Harlem Railroad, No. 4 Tryon Place, opposite the city hall (which had 12 trains daily to Harlem, 7 to Williamsbridge, 5 to White Plains, 4 to Croton Falls, and 2 to Dover Plains); and the New York & New Haven Railroad, 29 Canal St.—Ibid., 72. Vide infra.

Exhibitions of paintings were numerous in New York at this time. The gallery of the American Art-Union (497 Broadway), and the New-York Gallery of the Fine Arts (until recently in the Rotunda), were open throughout the year. The exhibition of the National Academy of Design (in the Society Library building, cor. Broadway and Leonard St.) was continued during about three months in the spring and early summer. (See, further, Mr 16, 1850). The Lyceum Gallery, at No. 563 Broadway, containing original paintings of the old masters, and the gallery of Goupil, Vibert & Co., at No. 289 Broadway, containing works of European art, were worthy of attention.—Ibid., 116, 119. Vide infra.

At this period, Hoboken was a resort for excursionists, its "Sybil's Cave" and "Elysian Fields" being two attractive features. —Ibid., 120.

At this time, No. 1 Broadway, formerly the Kennedy mansion and headquarters of Sir Henry Clinton during the British occupation, was a hotel (see 1848).—Ibid., Appendix (description of the "Model of New York"), 10.

The New York & New Haven R. R. depot was a "marble building near the Gas Works, on Canal-street."—Ibid., Appendix, 11; and see above list of railroads in the city.

— Lady Emmeline Stuart Wortley, after a visit to New York in this year, wrote: "One of the first things that struck us on arriving in the city of New York—the Empress City of the West—was, of course, Broadway. It is a noble street, and has a thoroughly bustling, lively, and somewhat democratic air. New York is certainly handsome, and yet there is something about it that gives one the idea of a half-finished city, and this even in Broadway itself; for the street was literally littered with all imaginable rubbish 1849 which, we should imagine from appearances, is usually shot in — that celebrated thoroughfare; indeed it seems a sort of preserve for this species of game. Piles of timber, mounds of bricks, mountains of packing-cases, pyramids of stones, and stacks of goods, were observable on all sides. The New Yorkers themselves grumble much at the inconvenience, and their newspapers often contain pathetic remonstrances with the authorities, for allowing such obstructions to crowd the thoroughfare.

"Besides this, it appears from their published complaints, that their streets are very much too often torn up for sewage purposes, &c., and, in short, that this tiresome performance is frequently unnecessarily encored, without their consent, and certainly to their manifest inconvenience. They ask if their time is to be taken up (as their streets are) continually, by having to stop every two or three steps, and sit down on the next doorstep to take the paving-stones out of their boots? Cart-loads of these same paving-stones, adding to the confusion, were to be seen on all sides, and sometimes felt, as our handsome, heavy, crimson-velvet-lined, hired vehicle (rather a warm-looking lining for New York, near the beginning of June), swayed from side to side, and rolled and rattled ponderously along. . . .

"From the cupola that surmounts the building [city hall], a view of the whole vast city is commanded; and in this there is a clock; and there is also an apartment constantly occupied, night and day, by a watchman, whose office it is to keep a perpetual look-out for fires, and to give the alarm, by striking an enormous bell which hangs in a belfry in the rear of the cupola, and which is exclusively used for this purpose. By this bell the man watches with a hammer in his hand, ready to give the necessary notice when he observes the least indication of fire. The sound can be heard from one end of the city to the other, and is almost instantaneously responded to by a hundred others in every direction. The number of strokes indicates the particular ward.

". . . Some of the Squares of New York are very handsome. Washington Square is prettily laid out with walks, and shaded with flourishing trees. Union Square has a fountain in the centre, and is inclosed with a handsome iron fence. St. John's Park is also embellished with a fountain, and adorned with trees. . . .

"Pearl-street, a labyrinthine street in New York, which is said to have been originally built by the Dutch, along a cow-track, is a very zigzagging thoroughfare indeed. . . . It is very narrow, and the houses are very high, like those in Old Edinburgh; waves and billows of merchandise of every description and denomination seem pouring over from the brimming stores and warehouses, into the inconveniently narrow street. . . ."—Travels in the U. S., etc., during 1849 and 1850 (London, 1851), I: 2–3, 286–87, 296.

Sidney's Map of 12 miles around New York bears this date.— —
See map No. 996, bureau of topography, borough president's office.

"Near the head of Dover-street, and at the junction of Pearl — and Cherry streets, stands the old family mansion of Walter Franklin, a member of the society of Friends, and an eminent merchant, whose wealth was indicated by the dimensions of his dwelling. The late Governor De Witt Clinton, married one of his daughters, and afterwards occupied his house. But it had previously been rendered more illustrious as the first residence of General Washington in this city after his election as President of the United States. It has since been altered, and the lower part converted into shops. In the rear of this, in Pearl-street, was the Quaker Meeting House; and this quarter of the city, as far as Chatham-street, was principally inhabited by members of that society. But the more wealthy ones had their establishments lower down, as far as Maiden Lane. Here were the Pearsalls, the Pryors, the Embrees, the Effinghams, the Hickes, the Hawxhursts, the Halletts, the Havilands, the Cornells, the Kenyons, the Townsends, the Tituses, the Willetts, the Wrights, &c. &c. Interspersed, however, with others equally substantial though not as plain, such as the Waltons and Roosevelts. The Bank of New York was first kept in the larger Walton House, and its first President, the elder Isaac Roosevelt, had his dwelling nearly opposite."—Duer, New York as it was during the Latter Part of the Last Century (1849), 12 (footnote).

By this year and the next, the opening up of new streets entailed — many ordinances for the laying of sidewalks, and curb- and gutter-stones, the extension of the sewer system, and lighting the streets with gas. Such ordinances were frequent for many years, and continued indefinitely.—See Proc., App'd by Mayor, XV, XVI et seq.

1849 — In this year, the Richmond Hill Theatre property (previously known as the N. Y. Opera House—see 1847), was demolished.—Brown, I: 236; Haswell's Reminiscences, 457; descrip. of Pl. 55a, III: 417. Cf. Stone, Hist. of N. Y., Appendix II, and Man. Com. Coun. (1852), 467.

In Dec., 1913, when tearing down old buildings on the east side of Varick St., between Canal and Carmine Sts., the wreckers found remnants of the old "Richmond Hill;" and even the stage of the theatre was pointed out, then used as part of a stable. "On some of the beams were evidences of ancient painting or fresco work." The proprietor of a neighbouring café possessed a playbill of 1836, showing that the old theatre at that time was known as "Miss Nelson's Theatre."

The news report of 1913 continues: "Over the site will soon be the reconstructed Varick Street, 100 feet wide, and at Carmine Street it will connect with the Seventh Avenue extension which will be cut through from Eleventh Street. Within a few months the Seventh Avenue subway diggers will be at work beneath the grounds which Mrs. John Adams admired for their attractive garden and handsome trees."—N. Y. Times, D 11, 1913. On Sept. 25, 1923, the Greenwich Village Historical Soc. unveiled a memorial tablet on the Butterick building, corner of Spring and Macdougal Sts., which is near the site of "Richmond Hill."—Ibid., S 17, 1923.

— In this year, the International Art Union was established by Messrs. Goupil, Vibert & Co., at 289 Broadway. One of its undertakings was to send regularly to Europe for a period of two years an American art student, selected through a public exhibition of students' work. It closed its affairs in 1863.—Howe, Hist. of the Metropolitan Museum of Art (1913), 86.

— There was also established, in this year, the Düsseldorf Gallery, in a hall over the Church of the Divine Unity in Broadway, between Spring and Prince Sts. This was "the first appearance in New York of foreign art on a large scale," and the beginning of "the eclipse of American art." For further facts regarding it, including view of the interior, see ibid., 86–88, citing John Durand's Life and Times of A. B. Durand, 192.

— In this year, E. Jones published in lithograph a New York Pictorial Business Directory of Maiden Lane, showing a panorama of both sides of this street, on one long sheet measuring 82½ by 7⅞ in. For an account of the buildings seen in the view, see descrip. of Pl. 147, III: 719. See also 1848.

— A lithographic view of New York and the harbour, from the heights above St. George's, Staten Island, drawn by Burton, bears this date. It is reproduced and described as Pl. 134, Vol. III.

— A lithographic view of "Union Park, . . . from the Head of Broadway," reproduced and described as Pl. 136, Vol. III, bears this date.

— A coloured lithograph, showing a bird's-eye view of New York, looking south, with Union Square in the foreground, bears this date. It is reproduced and described as Pl. 135, Vol. III.

— In Valentine's Manual for 1849 were published a map of the city, 1849; views of Union Park (showing fence and fountain), 50; the nursery establishment on "Randel's" (error for Randall's) Island, 218; the Free Academy, 224; the Walton house on Pearl St., 331. For view of an old house on 45th St. near Fifth Ave., 1849, see ibid. (1862), 581.

— In this year, D. Appleton & Co. published Appleton's New York City and Vicinity Guide: giving a full and accurate description of the Great Metropolis and environs . . . by W. Williams.

Jan. 2 The New York Historical Society approves a memorial to the common council "requesting them to publish the unpublished minutes [see Ja 22, 1848] of their Honorable Body, from the first incorporation of New York." It is contended that this action "would not only provide for their safety against their possible destruction by fire or other casualty, but would be the means of placing within the reach, and thereby securing to the people of the City, the knowledge of the interesting contents of those records, embracing, as they do, among other things, the early municipal legislation of this great and prosperous metropolis."—Proc., Bd. of Ald. (1848–49), XXXVI: 415–16. See F 19.

8 "The Academy of Design has purchased a lot on Broadway, on which a large building is to be erected for its accommodation. The New York Gallery is also to be accommodated in the same building; the apartments which contain the pictures are to be on the ground floor."—Eve. Post, Ja 8, 1849. See also ibid., F 15, 1849. See Mr 16, 1850.

Jan. 15 The common council appropriates $600 to procure a full-length portrait of Gov. Young, framed, to be placed in the governor's room.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XVI: 305.

17 The common council passes a resolution favouring the establishing of a U. S. mint in this city. This is believed necessary on account of the discovery of gold in California. The reduction of postage will so enlarge the business of the post-office as to make larger quarters for that also necessary. The report of the special committee on the enlargement of the city hall (see Doc. No. 3) is to be used in negotiations in Washington having that object in view, "provided sufficient provision shall be made in said building for the full accommodation of the General Government, for all such public offices as may be requisite for their purposes in this City."—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XVI: 307–8; see also ibid., XVI: 351–52.

18 The legislature incorporates "The Trustees of the Astor Library." They are the mayor, and Washington Irving, Wm. B. Astor, Daniel Lord, Jas. G. King, Jos. G. Cogswell, Fitz Greene Halleck, Sam. B. Ruggles, Sam. Ward, Chas. A. Bristed, and their successors. The trustees are empowered to receive from the executors of the will of the late John Jacob Astor (who died March 29, 1848, q. v.) $400,000 bequeathed by him for the establishment of a public library in this city. This sum includes the price of "the site selected for the said library, on the easterly side of Lafayette Place," as authorised by the testator. They are to spend not over $75,000 in erecting and maintaining on the site a building suitable for a public library. They are to spend not over $120,000 in the purchase of "books, maps, charts, models, drawings, paintings, engravings, casts, statues, furniture, and other things appertaining to a library for general use." They are to invest the rest of the $400,000 as a fund for paying for the site, and "for maintaining and gradually increasing the said library, and to defray the necessary expenses of taking care of the same, and of the accommodation of persons consulting the library. . . ." The duties of the trustees are defined in further and fuller details.—Laws of N. Y. (1849), chap. 1. See, further, F 19, 1853. The library was opened on Jan. 9, 1854 (q. v.). For an early description of the projected building, see The Great Metropolis for 1850. See also Lydenberg's Hist. of the N. Y. Public Library (1923).

23 Elizabeth Blackwell receives from Geneva Medical College the first degree of M. D. given in the U. S. to a woman.—Blackwell, Pioneer Work in Opening the Medical Profession to Women, 64–91.

25 In a resolution conveying the city's thanks to Pope Pius IX for medals, etc. (see D 8, 1848), approved by Mayor Havemeyer, the common council directs the committee on arts and sciences to forward to the Pope, by Mons. Vattemare, "the works now published in reference to the Croton Aqueduct, including the memoir of Charles King, Esq., and one of the medals struck [see Je 12, 1848] to commemorate the bravery and good conduct of the first regiment of the New York Volunteers, in the recent contest with Mexico."

The committee is also authorised "to solicit and receive suitable donations of books, prints, &c., to be appropriated and distributed in such way and manner as they may think proper, for the purpose of carrying out and extending the system of international exchanges heretofore commenced by Mons. A. Vattemare, and now successfully in progress. . . ."

It is further resolved "That when the room now occupied by the Law Institute shall be vacated, the Committee on Arts, Sciences and Schools, cause the same to be suitably arranged for the accommodation of a library, to contain the books now belonging to the Common Council, and which may hereafter belong to them, together with the prints, plates, medals, &c., now in their possession, and cause the same to be collected and arranged so as to be carefully preserved for the use of the City."—Proc., App'd by the Mayor, XVI: 320–21.

In the report of the aldermanic committee on the basis of which this action was taken, the statement appears that it has long been "a serious inconvenience" to those who have occasion to consult "the records of legislation, and other works connected with City, State and National Legislatures, that there is no collection of these works to be found in any of our public libraries, to which the people can at all times have free and uninterrupted access. The present collection connected with the Clerk's office of the Common Council, is very small and imperfect; many of the statutes are lost and cannot be found, while the series of documents and proceedings of the Board are far from being complete. It has long been a subject of reproach that the first commercial city in the Union has no place of resort

1849 where these necessary works can be found, and strangers have often
Jan. inquired, 'Where is the public library connected with your City.'"
25 We have "blushed" as we pointed to "the small and inappropriate case in the reading room of the Common Council, and the one also in the Mayor's office," and replied, "these are all of which we can boast in the form of a Corporation Library."—Docs., Bd. of Ald. (1848–9), XV, part 1, No. 23.

On March 31, the comptroller was directed to pay for fitting up the library room.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XVI: 408. See Je 20.

26 "The California fever is increasing in violence; thousands are going, among whom are many young men of our best families; the papers are filled with advertisements of vessels for Chagres and San Francisco. Tailors, hatters, grocers, provision merchants, hardware men, and others are employed night and day in fitting out the adventurers."—Hone's Diary, II: 355. See Ap 17.

27 The Free Academy (see My 7, S 22, N, 1847) is opened with appropriate exercises.—Eve. Post, Ja 25 and 27, 1849. "The building should be doubly famous from the fact that it cost actually two thousand dollars less than the appropriation of fifty thousand dollars. . . . The cost of the ground was but twenty-five thousand dollars, making a total investment, including furnishing, considerably less than one hundred thousand dollars."—The City College (1907), 8; descrip. of Pl. 136, III: 705; Man. Com. Coun. (1855), 228. See, further, July, 1853.

29 In a message to the common council, Mayor Havemeyer disapproves of a proposed union of New York and Brooklyn "under one charter and one government."—Com. Adv., Ja 31, 1849. On April 9, 1850, a motion in the senate to effect such union was lost. —Ibid., Ap 10, 1850. See D 21, 1848.

31 "The City has been put to considerable expense and inconvenience in consequence of the several fire alarm bells which have been erected on the City Hall having cracked, being thereby rendered useless." This is believed due to their being insufficient in size and weight "to withstand the heavy striking necessary to produce sufficient sound." The common council therefore orders that a bell of 10,000 lbs. be procured, "to be placed on the cupola of the City Hall, if upon proper examination it shall be ascertained that the said cupola is capable of sustaining that weight," and in case it is not, then a tower shall be erected in the vicinity of the Park.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XVI: 329. See F 22.

Feb. The legislature amends the charter of the Washington Monu-
2 ment Assn. so as to authorise it "to commence the erection of the said monument at any time, with such sum of money in hand as in their discretion they may deem advisable."—Laws of N. Y. (1849), chap. 25.

Nothing further was accomplished toward erecting a monument to Washington in New York City. A subscription-list had already been opened (see Ag 14, 1843), but discontinued. The original list (MS.), 1844–7, is now preserved in the N. Y. Pub. Library. See also descrip. of A. Pl. 26-c, III: 882. It is likely that the efforts directed toward building such a monument in the city of Washington (see Mr 30, 1848) supplanted all other efforts here, until the equestrian statue was erected at Union Square in 1856 (q. v., My 9, Jl 4).

3 Hone mentions being a dinner guest "in Mr. John C. Stevens's palace, College place," adding: "The Palais Bourbon in Paris, Buckingham Palace in London, and Sans-Souci at Berlin, are little grander than this residence of a simple citizen of our republican city, a steamboat builder and proprietor. . . ."—Hone's Diary, II: 355.

16 New court rooms have been provided for the Supreme Court in the "New City Hall." "They occupy the centre part and about one-third of the building known as the 'Old Alms House.' In the basement, which was formerly occupied as a mere depository for rubbish, light and airy rooms have been made, in which there is a suite of rooms for the District Attorney, two rooms for the Petit Jury, and a Grand Jury room. These apartments are entered both from the Park and from Chambers street, and communicate with the court rooms above by a private staircase in the rear of the building.

"The main entrance to the court rooms is from the Park. . . . Upon entering the main hall . . . on the right is perceived the judges' chambers, consisting of three rooms.

"On the left side of the hall is the special term room, in which special motions and law arguments before a single judge will be heard. . . .

"These four rooms and the main hall occupy the whole of Feb.
the first floor. . . . On the second floor are two large and very 16 convenient court rooms, which occupy the whole of the second and third stories of the building. On the right is the court room for the Circuit and Oyer and Terminer. . . .

"On the opposite side of the hall, on this floor, is the General Term room. . . . This room is so constructed as to accommodate the Court of Appeals, and a part of it also is railed off for the reporters. . . .

"We understand that the court moves into the new rooms on Monday next" (Feb. 19).—Eve. Post, F 16, 1849.

The steamship "Panama" sails from New York for San Fran- 17
cisco, with about 90 California "adventurers."—Eve. Post, F 17, 1849. The "Abrasia" sailed on Feb. 23, with 32 passengers.—Ibid., F 23, 1849.

The board of alderman adopts resolutions declaring it "inex- 19
pedient at the present time" to comply with the request of the New York Historical Society (see Ja 2) to publish the old common council minutes. They concur with the society as to "the deeply interesting matter contained in some of those unpublished volumes," and as to "the great importance of their publication to those engaged in researches of the early history of this City," but they estimate the expense of publication (exclusive of the preparation of indices) as $32,375, a burden "the City treasury is illy able to sustain." In arriving at this estimate, they figure on the "Total folios" of the 80 volumes, 1647 to 1831, as 42,200.

"Printing forty-two thousand folios, at fifty cents . . .	$21,100
Copying forty-two thousand folios, at twelve and a half cents	5,275
Binding	6,000
	$32,375

"The above calculation is at the rate per token, or of two hundred and fifty copies of each volume, which is the usual number of copies printed by the Common Council, of their proceedings or other documents."—Proc., Bd. of Ald. (1849), XXXVI, part 2, 536–42. Cf. this estimate with that presented on Jan. 23, 1873 (q. v.), when the work was in progress.

A new flag, 66 feet by 42 feet, is raised on the new state arsenal, 22 corner of 65th St. and Sixth Ave. It is "the most magnificent one ever unfurled in this city."—Eve. Post, F 21, 1849.

The common council authorises the chief engineer of the fire " department "to contract for the striking apparatus for the fire bell stations at the City Hall and at Essex market," the sum of $500 being appropriated for the purpose.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XVI: 354. See Mr 8.

Gen. Zachary Taylor is inaugurated president, the 4th falling Mar.
on Sunday.—Eve. Post, Mr 6, 1849. 5

By a new act "for the more effectual prevention of fires," the 7 city's fire limits are extended to a line extending from river to river, 100 ft. north of 32d St. The act embraces many new provisions relating to building construction.—Laws of N. Y. (1849), chap. 84; amended by ibid. (1849), chap. 195; ibid. (1850), chap. 120. On March 25, 1850 (q. v.), A. T. Stewart's store on Broadway was exempted from the provisions of this act. The amendment of April 4, 1849, was repealed on March 28, 1851, at which time the original act of March 7, 1849, was again amended. The 1851 amendment prescribed the mode of erecting stores.—Ibid. (1851), chap. 66.

"The cholera is at the Quarantine. The utmost vigilance is 8 necessary on the part of the authorities."—Eve. Post, Mr 8, 1849.

The new fire-alarm bell (see S 1, 1848)—the fourth or fifth in " succession—is raised to its place on the city hall. It weighs 10,000 lbs., and "is so hung that with every blow of the hammer it will partially revolve on its axis, presenting a new surface to each successive stroke." It is supposed that "the frequent fractures which have happened [see Jl 22, 1836; Ja 1, 1838; S 1, 1848] are caused by striking continuously on one place."—N. Y. Com. Adv., Mr 9, 1849; descrip. of Pl. 143-a, III: 713.

The common council orders that Washington Square be lighted 9 with gas.—Proc., App'd by Mayer, XVI: 372.

"Vauxhall is being turned into stores."—Eve. Post, Mr 12, 1849. 12

Hone describes the great popularity of "Fanny Kemble" (Mrs. 13
Butler) as a reader of Shakespeare's plays. She has "taken the city by storm."—Hone's Diary, II: 357.

The common council names that part of William St. recently 16

1849 opened, from Frankfort to Chatham St., North William St.—
Mr 16 Proc., App'd by Mayor, XVI: 387.

22 The common council directs the superintendent of repairs to advertise for proposals "for the altering and repairing and fitting up of the west end of the old Alms House building, . . . for the use of the Superior Court and the 'Law Library,'" and appropriates $4,800 for this object.

The board authorises the committee on public offices and repairs to make the necessary alterations in the rooms "now occupied by the Mechanics' Institute, in the basement of the City Hall, for the use of the Marine Court."—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XVI: 396.

27 The common council appropriates $1,000 for furnishing the governor's room with new carpets, painting, cleaning, etc.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XVI: 404.

28 Competition for plans for the Astor Library is authorised by the trustees, who were incorporated on Jan. 18. The site for the building on Lafayette Place, 65 ft. front by 120 ft. deep, was acquired in April. Thirty drawings were submitted May 1, and though none was wholly satisfactory, the first prize ($300) was awarded to Alexander Saelzer and the second ($200) to James Renwick, Jr. Saelzer's plan was adopted provisionally on June 13, and, after alterations, was finally adopted on Dec. 10, 1849. A contract for erecting the building was let on Jan. 2, 1850. The corner-stone was laid March 14, 1850 (q.v.), and the next three years were required for erection and completion. The building was opened for public examination on Jan. 9, 1854 (q.v.).—Lydenberg, Hist. of the N. Y. P. L. (1923), 3–9, 15–16, 20–21.

30 The legislature passes an act to provide for the publication of the colonial and other documents collected by Brodhead, who was appointed agent for that purpose under the act of May 2, 1839, and whose work was completed in 1845.—Laws of N. Y. (1849), chap. 175. The work of publication was begun in 1853 with Vol. III, and continued in the following order: In 1854, Vol. IV; 1855, Vols. V, VI and IX; 1856, Vol. I and VII; 1857, Vol. VIII; 1858, Vols. II and X; 1861, Vol. XI (Gen. Index); 1877, Vol. XII (or Vol. I of a New Series); 1881, Vol. XIII; 1883, Vol. XIV. See also F 12, 1845.

Apr. 2 The city charter is amended by the legislature. Some changes particularly significant are:

1. The term of the mayor—an annual term since the Nicolls Charter of 1665—is lengthened to two years; so also is the term of an alderman, although the assistant alderman continues to serve for one year.

2. Beginning with 1851, the common council "shall annually hold only three stated sessions, of not exceeding one month each, commencing on the first Monday of January, May and September;" extra sessions may be convened by the mayor.

3. The assistant aldermen are to have the power of impeaching city officials, while the aldermen are to act as the court of impeachment; a vote of two-thirds of the whole board is necessary to convict. In further imitation of the federal constitution, it is provided that "Judgment in case of impeachment shall not extend farther than removal from office, and disqualification to hold any office under the city charter; but the party convicted shall be liable to indictment, trial, judgment and punishment according to law."

5. Executive power is to be vested "in the mayor, the heads of departments, and such other executive officers as shall be from time to time created by law." A similar provision had been written into the amended charter of 1830 (q.v., Ap 7), but the common council had failed to establish departments, and had continued to perform executive functions through its own committees (see criticism offered by Mayor Morris in his message of May 29, 1843). It is now explicitly stated that "neither the common council nor any committee or member thereof shall perform any executive business whatever except such as is, or shall be especially imposed on them by the laws of the state, and except that the board of aldermen may approve or reject the nominations of the mayor."

Furthermore, detailed plans for the organization of the nine new departments are given. The police department already organized (see Je 16, 1845) is continued, the mayor, however, being made "the head thereof," with the chief-of-police subordinate to him at the head of a bureau of the department. The department of finance, with the comptroller at the head, is to consist of the chamberlain's bureau, the bureau of the "receiver of taxes," and the bureau of the "collector of city revenue." The street department, headed by the street commissioner, is to have two bureaux, the chief officers of which are to be designated the "collector of assessments," and the "superintendent of wharves." The department of repairs and supplies shall have four bureaux, the chief officers of which shall be respectively denominated the "superintend[ent] of roads," "superintendent of repairs to public buildings," "superintendent of pavements," and "chief engineer of the fire department." The department of streets and lamps, with the "commissioner of streets and lamps" at the head, shall have a "superintendent of lamps and gas," a "superintendent of streets," and a "superintendent of markets," presiding over separate bureaux. The "city inspector's department," which takes its name from its chief officer, has no subdivisions; matters "relative to the public health" shall be its concern. This became the health department later. Another department without bureaux is the "alms house department," to be controlled by a board of ten governors (the work of this board was outlined in a special act—see Laws of N. Y., 1849, chap. 246). The law department, headed by the "counsel to the corporation," is planned with two bureaux whose chief officers shall be the "corporation attorney" and the public administrator. Finally, there is to be an executive department called the "Croton aqueduct board," including a bureau for the collection of water revenues. The three members of the board last named are to be appointed for a five years' term by the mayor with the consent of the aldermen. The chamberlain and the receiver of taxes are to be designated in the same way. Department heads, however, are to be elected by the people for a three-years' term; in case of a vacancy the mayor with the consent of the aldermen is to appoint a person to fill the position until after the next election.

The common council is empowered "to establish such other departments and bureaux as they may deem the public interest may require, and to assign to them, and those herein created, such duties as they may direct, not inconsistent with this act; but no expense shall be incurred by any of the departments or officers thereof . . . unless an appropriation shall have been previously made concerning such expense."

It is further provided, doubtless to correct such malpractice as was criticized by Mayor Morris (see My 29, 1843), that "no member of the common council, head of department, chief of bureau, deputy thereof, or clerk therein, or other officer of the corporation, shall be directly or indirectly interested in any contract, work or business, or the sale of any article, the expence, price or consideration of which is paid from the city treasury."

6. The election of city officials is to take place hereafter at the same time as that of state officials, viz., the first Tuesday after the first Monday in November. Provision is made, however, that the mayor elected this month (April, 1849) shall hold office until Jan., 1851, and the aldermen and assistants elected this month shall hold office until Jan., 1850.

7. These amendments are to become effective on June 1, provided they are approved by the electorate at the polls on the second Tuesday of April.—Laws of N. Y. (1849), chap. 187.

The amendments were approved by an overwhelming majority on April 13 (q.v.). Durand says these changes were "destined to work a revolution in city affairs," and he comments on the "movement of the democratic spirit" as "strikingly illustrated in the change from the custom of half a century before, when all the executive officers of the city, including the mayor, were appointive, to this law, which gave directly to the people the selection of a dozen executive officers besides the common council."—Durand, The Finance of N. Y. C., 68–69.

" "Washington Square.—The iron railing around these grounds is now nearly completed, making it one of the pleasant promenades of the city. The old wooden fence is gone, and with it the shabby appearance and dirty looks of the square."—Eve. Post, Ap 2, 1849. See also ibid., Ap 24, 1849.

" The legislature authorises the common council to sell the land occupied as the state arsenal, bounded by Centre, Elm, Franklin, and White Sts., and pay into the state treasury $30,000 out of the returns of the sale, this sum to be full payment for the state's claims to the property.—Laws of N. Y. (1849), chap. 188. See My 11, 1850. This was in consequence of the completion of the new arsenal at Fifth Ave. and 64th St. (see N 15, 1848).

" The legislature makes it a misdemeanour to throw ashes, garbage, offal, or other filthy substances into the streets of New York.—Laws of N. Y. (1849), chap. 190.—See, however, My 14.

1849 Apr. 4 In an act "to designate the holidays to be observed in the acceptance and payment of bills of exchange and promissory notes," the legislature designates Jan. 1, July 4, Dec. 25, and "any day appointed or recommended by the governor of this state, or the President of the United States, as a day of fast or thanksgiving."—Laws of N. Y. (1849), chap 261. For the next addition to this list, see Ap 23, 1870.

5 The legislature changes the name of the "Nautilus Insurance Co." to the "New York Life Insurance Co.," and amends its charter.—Laws of N. Y. (1849), chap. 211.

6 The common council orders that the grade of Fifth Ave. between 34th and 42d Sts. be amended.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XVI: 415. The grade at 37th St. was lowered 6 ft. 6 in., and at 38th St. 9 ft. 11 in.—From records in Title Guarantee & Trust Co., cited in descrip. of Pl. 129-a, III: 693. Lossing thus refers to it: "When Fifth Avenue was graded and the altitude of Murray Hill was diminished, this noble mansion [the Waddell villa] was left in the air several feet above the street, to which the lot sloped in a series of grassy banks. Not long afterward the building was taken down [see O 27, 1856], when it was not more than a dozen years old, and on its site was erected the massive edifice known as Dr. Spring's or the Brick Church."—Hist. of N. Y. City (1884), II: 612–13. For the acquisition of this corner property by the church, see descrip. of Pl. 129-a, III: 693, and S 15, 1856.

" The common council passes an ordinance in relation to the erection of iron posts and brackets in the public streets for the support of awnings: "The owners or occupants of property in any street of this City, exceeding the width of forty feet, and from which the wooden awning posts have been or may hereafter be directed to be removed," are permitted "to erect, in front of their respective buildings thereon, iron posts, and none others, for the support of awnings, with an iron cross-rail, which shall be nine feet, and no more, from the curb stone to the top of said rail; said posts to be placed eight inches within the outer side of the curb stone, and shall conform in all respects to a pattern or model now deposited in the office of the Street Commissioner." Other details of the specifications relate to braces, brackets, etc. Resolutions heretofore passed, conflicting with this ordinance, are repealed. —Proc., App'd by Mayor, XVI: 422.

7 The legislature incorporates the Panama Railroad Co., a stock company, for the purpose of constructing and maintaining a railroad across the Isthmus of Panama, to the Republic of New Granada, under a grant made by that republic to three of the incorporators; also for the purpose of purchasing and navigating steam or sailing vessels in connection with the road. The company's place of business is in New York City.—Laws of N. Y. (1849), chap. 284.

" The legislature makes it a misdemeanour to manufacture slung shot, and a felony to carry, use, or attempt to use it.—Laws of N. Y. (1849), chap. 278.

10 Caleb S. Woodhull is elected mayor.—N. Y. Herald, Ap 11, 1849. He succeeds Wm. F. Havemeyer.—See Ap 11, 1848. He was succeeded by Ambrose C. Kingsland.—See N 5, 1850.

" The legislature amends the act of May 7, 1840 (q. v.), which permitted the N. Y. & Harlem R. R. to build a bridge across the Harlem River, by authorising this company to construct an iron bridge upon piers which shall not be less than 65 ft. apart, and with a draw of not less than 40 ft. in width for the free passage of vessels.—Laws of N. Y. (1849), chap. 317.

" The legislature incorporates the "Williamsburgh Ferry Co.," a stock company, for the purpose of running the ferries between New York and the village of Williamsburgh on Long Island, known as the Peck Slip and the Grand St. ferries, and such others as may be lawfully established between New York and Williamsburgh and granted to this company. The act safeguards the ferry rights of the city of New York.—Laws of N. Y. (1849), chap. 315. See My 1.

11 The act of April 12, 1848 (q. v.), "to simplify and abridge the Practice, Pleadings, and Proceedings of the courts of this state," is extensively amended throughout, and reprinted in the Session Laws with a "Table of Contents of Amended Code."—Laws of N. Y. (1849), chap. 438 (pp. 613–726). This becomes the lawyer's statutory guide for pleading and practice, and the forerunner of the present Code of Civil Procedure. It was again printed in full at the end of the Session Laws for 1851, with its own table of contents and index.

" The legislature creates the "Croton Aqueduct Board" in the city of New York, repealing the act of May 2, 1834 (q. v.), for the appointment of water commissioners. The powers and responsibilities of this new department of the city government are fully defined in the act. The officers or commissioners of the board are to be nominated by the mayor and appointed with the advice and consent of the aldermen. One of them shall be a civil engineer.—Laws of N. Y. (1849), chap. 383. Apr. 11

On July 18, the board of aldermen appointed, on the nomination of the mayor: Nicholas Dean, president; Theodore R. De Forest, commissioner; and Alfred W. Craven, engineer, of this department.

" The legislature passes an act for the establishment of a work-house (see Je 26, 1848) "for the employment of persons committed to the city prisons, penitentiary, and almshouse in the city of New-York."—Laws of N. Y. (1849), chap. 413. See, further, Ap 10, 1850. The work-house was constructed on Blackwell's Island in 1851, the corner-stone being laid Nov. 2, 1850 (q. v.).

13 The amended charter as proposed by the state legislature (see Ap 2) is accepted in a referendum, the vote being 19,339 for, and 1,478 against, the charter.—N. Y. Tribune, Ap 14, 1849.

14 Hungary declares its independence of Austria, and Louis Kossuth is appointed president. Russia, however, came to Austria's aid, and subdued the rebellion, after which "Hungary became a mere province of Austria, and was crushed beneath the iron heel." Kossuth and the other leaders were forced to flee.—Hazen, Europe since 1815, 180–81.

17 Up to this time, 19,717 citizens of the United States have gone from this country on gold-seeking expeditions to California. By far the greater part of this number sailed from the port of New York.—N. Y. Herald, Ap 19, 1849.

21 In the will of the late Gen. Andrew Jackson is a clause leaving to his son, A. Jackson, Jr., the gold box presented to him by the city of New York, with directions that, "should our happy country not be blessed with peace," his son will, at the end of the conflict, present the gold box "to that patriot" residing in N. Y. State "who shall be ajudged by his countrymen or the ladies to have been the most valiant in defence of his country, and our country's rights." The common council now passes a resolution averring: "That contingency has now arrived [the end of the Mexican War], and a call has been made by A. Jackson, jr., through the public press, for claimants. . . ." The board therefore appoints a committee "to examine and report what individual from New York, is now deserving of the gold box. . . ."—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XVI: 449–50; Parton, Life of Andrew Jackson, III: 652. May — In this month, the Church of the Mediator (Episcopal) was organized. The congregation met in the chapel of N. Y. University until the autumn when it removed to the Reformed Presbyterian Church (see 1842), on the north side of 8th St. facing Lafayette Place, which had ceased to be occupied as a Presbyterian church on Sept. 20, 1846 (q. v.).—The Great Metropolis or N. Y. Almanac for 1851, 64.

1 The preface of A Project for a Railroad to the Pacific, by Asa Whitney, of New York, bears this date. A paper-covered 8vo volume of 112 pp., it contains reports of committees of congress, resolutions of state legislatures, and many facts relating to the subject, with maps. It is the result of seven years' study, he being the projector of the plan and its most earnest advocate.

" The Delaware & Hudson Canal Co. leases the "Red Fort" or "North Battery" at the foot of Hubert St.—From Letter-book (1848–1858), in comptroller's office, 20; L. M. R. K., III: 945.

" French's Hotel, at the north-east corner of Frankfort St. and City Hall Square, erected by R. French, is opened to the public.

1849 May 1 For wood-cut view and description, see The Citizen and Strangers' Pictorial and Business Directory (1853), 96–97. It was seven storeys high, fronting 93 ft. on Chatham St., extending eastward 108 ft. on the Frankfort St. side.

On Frankfort St. it covered the site of St. John's Hall (see Je 8, 1803), which stood at No. 8 (L. M. R. K., III: 986), with a depth of 80 ft.—Eve. Post, Ja 20, 1848. The hotel is shown (in 1874) on Pl. 155-a, Vol. III, and its ground-plan on the Perris insurance map of 1852, Pl. 10.

St. John's Hall was demolished at this time. Its corner-stone (see O 13, 1802) was presented to Henry C. Atwood, grand-master of St. John's Grand Lodge (schismatic), which, in 1850, united with the Grand Lodge of New York. In 1853, Atwood seceded from the Grand Lodge, and formed a second St. John's Grand Lodge; this had a feeble existence until 1858.—Proc. of the Grand Lodge of N. Y. (1918), 74–75; Lang, Hist. of Freemasonry in the State of N. Y. (1922). See, however, 1854. Cf. L. M. R. K., III: 985.

" A ferry, from the foot of Grand St., East River, to the foot of Grand St., Williamsburgh (see Ap 10), is established; it is to be leased for the term of ten years.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XVI: 108. For an earlier ferry from Grand St., see Jl 29, 1805. This ferry is listed in Valentine's Manual for 1849, p. 258, with others, under the head of "Leases of Ferries from the city of New-York to Adjacent Places." It there appears that it paid an annual rental of $6,000, which, next to the combined rental of South and Fulton Ferries ($30,000), was the largest rental paid under any of the city's ferry leases. Cf. Valentine's A Compilation of the Existing Ferry Leases and Railroad Grants (1866).

7 "Disgraceful Row at the Opera House.—The Astor-place Opera House was the scene of a most disgraceful row last evening [May 7], on the occasion of Mr. Macready's appearance. The play was Macbeth. . . . As soon as Macduff (Mr. C. W. Clarke) made his appearance, there were 'three cheers for Clarke!'—and when Mr. Macready presented himself, he was received with cheers, waving of handkerchiefs, groans, hisses, . . . rotten eggs, potatoes and pennies were thrown on the stage, and cheers for Forrest and cheers for Macready given. . . . After this, . . . chairs were thrown . . . to the stage, but fortunately injured no one. Mr. Macready, pointing to the fragments strewn around him, bowed to the audience and made his exit. . . ."—N. Y. Daily Tribune, My 8, 1849.

As described by Lossing, the Astor Place riot, of which this was only the beginning, grew out of a personal quarrel between the two actors, Edwin Forrest, an American, and William Charles Macready, an Englishman.

Each player was announced to appear as Macbeth on the same night, Macready at the opera house under the management of Niblo and Hackett, and Forrest at Wallack's Broadway Theatre. "Mr. Niblo, stimulated by the spirit of rivalry, and determined to have a full house, unwisely gave out more tickets than the building would hold, and when, before sunset, they were all taken, he was alarmed by a suspicion that the purchasers might be largely enemies of Macready." Lossing gives a vivid description of the scenes that followed, both before the curtain and on the stage. "With genuine English pluck," Macready "stood his ground until he found his life was in danger, when he too fled behind the curtain, and it fell upon the scene. . . . To the utter dishonor of Mr. Forrest, it must be recorded that he did not utter a word of denunciation of this outrage. The impression was universal that he had countenanced if not incited the disgraceful proceedings.

"Every high-minded person in the community cried 'Shame!' and all felt personally aggrieved by the outrage, which cast disgrace upon the city. When it became known that Macready contemplated throwing up his engagement, many of the best men of New York, in every rank of social life, feeling that the city had been dishonored, addressed to him a letter expressing their extreme regret because of the treatment he had received, promising him protection in the exercise of his rights, requesting him not to yield to the lawless spirit which had assailed him, and asking him to give the city an opportunity to wipe out the disgrace which had been inflicted upon its character. Mr. Macready yielded, and Thursday, the 10th of May, was fixed upon for his appearance in the same play.

"So soon as placards announced the intended reappearance of Macready, others, proclaiming that Forrest would appear in the same play on the same night at the Broadway, were put up alongside them. The following incendiary handbill was also posted all over the town: May 7

"'WORKINGMEN!
SHALL AMERICANS OR ENGLISH RULE IN THIS COUNTRY?
The crew of the British steamers have threatened all Americans who shall dare to appear this night at the ENGLISH ARISTOCRATIC OPERA-HOUSE
WORKINGMEN! FREEMEN! STAND UP TO YOUR LAWFUL RIGHTS!'"

—Lossing, Hist. of N. Y. City, II: 510–12.

Hone recorded under date of May 8: "A violent animosity has existed on the part of the latter theatrical hero [Forrest] against his rival, growing out of some differences in England; but with no cause, that I can discover, except that one is a gentleman [Macready], and the other is a vulgar, arrogant loafer, with a pack of kindred rowdies at his heels." After describing what occurred, he adds: ". . . the respectable part of the audience dispersed, and the vile band of Forresters were left in possession of the house. This cannot end here; the respectable part of our citizens will never consent to be put down by a mob raised to serve the purpose of such a fellow as Forrest. . . ."—Hone's Diary, II: 359–60. See, further, My 10.

" The common council grants a petition that Broadway be lighted with gas between 23d and 33d Sts.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XVI: 485.

" The common council appropriates $750 to pay for the necessary mains to light Union Square with gas.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XVI: 488.

It appropriates $1,500 for the same purpose to light Tompkins Square.—Ibid., XVI: 494.

8 In his message to the common council, Mayor Woodhull says: "The system of cleaning the streets by contract, has signally failed of fulfilling public expectation, and I assume that it is no longer entitled to public favor. At first it seemed to promise important advantages, both as to economy and efficiency, but in its operation it has proved entirely inadequate to accomplish either of these desired results. The interests of the different parties to the contract are too much at variance to insure satisfaction to both; for while one party seeks to obtain clean streets, the other, according to past experience, has been more intent on obtaining clean profits.

"I would therefore, recommend an abandonment, as soon as practicable, of the contract system, and the entrusting of the entire business to the Superintendent of Streets, under the supervision of the proper department, which should be held responsible for its faithful execution. To insure a higher degree of cleanliness in the streets, which is so strenuously demanded by all classes of citizens, I would also suggest that the sweepers, instead of proceeding in gangs of tens or twenties, as has heretofore been the practice, should be separated, and assigned to certain streets or parts of streets, to be swept by them respectively. Each should be required to clean and keep clean the particular portion of street assigned to him, and be subject, on complaint, to be dismissed for every neglect of duty. In this way, I think, the public would be better served, and the expenses of this service essentially reduced."—Proc., Bd. of Ald., XXXVII (part 1): 20–21.

10 "The riot at the Opera-House on Monday night [see My 7] was children's play compared with the disgraceful scenes which were enacted in our part of this devoted city this evening, and the melancholy loss of life to which the outrageous proceedings of the mob naturally led."—Hone's Diary, II: 360. See also Eve. Post, My 11, 1849.

As described by Lossing (whose array of particulars was probably derived from the newspapers and other contemporary records, or recollections of eye-witnesses), "tickets were sold or given away by the managers [of the Astor Place Opera House] only to those who were known to be friends of Macready. . . .

"On the evening of the 10th about three hundred well-instructed police were quietly placed in charge of the Opera-House, outside and in, and an immense crowd had gathered in front of it. When the doors were opened the populace made a rush to enter, but were kept back by the police. When all who had tickets were within, the doors were closed and barred. The windows had been barricaded also with heavy plank. These the mob assailed with stones, and they tried to batter down one of the doors. They were defeated 1849 May 10 by the police, and in their rage they demolished the street-lamps in the neighborhood. A huge stone hurled through one of the windows shattered the magnificent chandelier and its fragments fell on the frightened occupants of the pit.

"The play began. In spite of all precautions, many of the roughs were inside the house, and were prepared at a given signal of their leader, to rush upon the stage and seize Macready. The police had mingled with them in disguise all day, and knew their plans." They thrust most of the rowdies outside the building, but confined the ring-leaders inside.

"The mob furiously attacked the police outside, and had nearly overpowered them when the Seventh Regiment National Guard, with their colonel, Duryée, at their head, appeared on the scene. They had been marched up from their armory in Centre Market, furnished with ball cartridges, preceded by the National Guard Troop. The latter turned into Astor Place from Broadway and charged the mob.

". . . In Astor Place the paving-stones had been taken up and piled in heaps while excavating for a sewer. These, with ragged fragments of stones from a marble-yard near by, furnished the rioters with fearful missiles, with which they assailed the mounted men . . .

"Colonel Duryée now prepared his infantry for the struggle. His men loaded their muskets, but the crowd was so dense they could not move in column. . . . The frantic mob, with yells and execrations, assailed them fiercely with missiles. . . . Forbearance was no longer a virtue, and Recorder Tallmadge, who represented the chief magistracy of the city in the absence of Mayor Woodhull, was told that unless the troops should receive orders to fire they would be withdrawn." Sheriff Westervelt gave the order to fire, but to fire over the heads of the rioters to intimidate them; but the latter, believing blank cartridges had been used, became more furious than ever. General Duryée addressed them, saying unless they desisted, ball cartridges would be used. This was without effect. Then, in self-defense, orders to fire were given, and volley after volley took toll among the rioters.

"It was now eleven o'clock at night. So savagely threatening still appeared the baffled mob that more troops were sent for, with two cannons. They came, with a section of a six-gun battery under Colonel Hincken. The guns were charged with grapeshot. They dashed up and took position for attack, when the mob dispersed, and all danger was overpast.

"Upward of two hundred persons were killed or wounded in this riot. Among the latter were Colonel Duryée, Generals Hall and Sanford, Lieutenant-Colonel Brinckerhoff, Captains Shumway and Pond, Lieutenants Todd and Negus, and one hundred and twenty-one of the rank and file of the Seventh Regiment. On the part of the mob thirty-four were killed (a few innocent spectators), and a large number were wounded." After the play, the afterpiece being omitted, "Mr. Macready escaped in disguise through a private door and hurried to his hotel." The dead and wounded were removed before midnight, and a military guard remained on duty until morning.—Lossing, Hist. of N. Y. City, II: 512–16. See also a pamphlet entitled Account of the Terrific and Fatal Riot at the New-York Astor Place Opera House; with the Quarrels of Forrest and Macready (N. Y., 1849), having view of the riot taken from a Currier lithograph (see Eno coll.). " "Greenwich street is becoming the German portion of the town. Almost every sign in the lower part is in German."—Eve. Post, My 10, 1849.

11 Hone records: "I walked up this morning to the field of battle, in Astor place. The Opera-House presents a shocking spectacle, and the adjacent buildings are smashed with bullet-holes. Mrs. Langdon's house looks as if it had withstood a siege. Groups of people were standing around, some justifying the interference of the military, but a large proportion were savage as tigers with the smell of blood."—Hone's Diary, II: 361–62. See also Eve. Post, My 11 et seq., 1849.

Lossing says the city "was stirred by the wildest excitement and the deepest anxiety." On this day, "a placard was posted all over the town requesting 'the citizens of New York opposed to the destruction of human life to assemble in the Park at six o'clock in the evening, May 11, to express public opinion upon the lamentable occurrence of last night' May 11

". . . The 'indignation meeting' in the Park was composed of a vast multitude of citizens of every class. Speeches were made by demagogues denunciatory of the civil and military authorities for the part they had taken in the events of the preceding night, but not a word was said in condemnation of the inciters to the riot. Resolutions of censure of the authorities were adopted by acclamation, apparently forgetful or ignorant of the fact that leniency to a traitor is an injury to the State. . . ."—Hist. of N. Y. City, II: 516–17.

The first cholera case in 1849 appears at the Five Points. The health department immediately appointed a sanitary committee. A three-storey building known as Monroe Hall, on the corner of Pearl and Centre Sts., was converted into a cholera hospital. It was put under the charge of Dr. Buel, and was known for years afterward as the Centre Street Hospital. Public school buildings were also appropriated for hospital purposes.—Lossing, Hist. of N. Y. City, II: 522–23. See also Eve. Post, My 16 et seq., 1849. Cf. Man. Com. Coun. (1850), 330, 334. See Je 16. 14

"Improvements in Wall Street.—The famous old buildings formerly known as Nos. 20 and 22 Wall street, and since the new numbering, 37, 39, 41 and 43, have been torn down, preparatory to the erection of a building or a suite of buildings with a court in the centre and offices on both sides, a little after the manner of Jones's building, nearly opposite the Merchants' Exchange. The second floor of old No. 22 was for years occupied by the brokers' board. . . . The amount of transactions effected in that room from first to last is doubtless hundreds of millions of dollars. . . . In the rear was an old brick rookery covered with Dutch tiling, where the Journal of Commerce was printed during the first nine years of its existence, say from 1827 to 1836. Said rookery is also memorable for having stopped the great fire of Dec. 16th, 1835 [q.v.], which nothing else could do."—N. Y. Com. Adv., My 26, 1849, citing the Jour. of Com. 26

News having been received in New York of the death of Maj-Gen. Worth at San Antonio, Texas, on June 7, the common council passes resolutions of eulogy for his character and services, and of sympathy for his family. "The distinguished and patriotic services of the deceased to his country at Chippewa Plains and Niagara in the last war with Great Britain; at Palaklaklaha, in Florida; at Monterey, Vera Cruz, Puebla and Molino del Rey, in the late brilliant campaign in Mexico, have rendered his name dear to the American people, and shed an additional lustre on the American arms." The board orders that flags be displayed at half-mast on the city hall on Wednesday next, and that the proprietors of public places be requested to do the same.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XVII: 176–77. 20 The Corporation library room (see Ja 25)—room No. 12 in the city hall—being nearly completed, and as it contains "choice and valuable collections requiring care and supervision," the common council resolves that this "be confided to the Clerk of the Common Council, under the direction of the Committee on Arts, Sciences and Schools of both Boards."—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XVII: 183; Man. Com. Coun. (1856), 568.

This library has continued to the present time in the city clerk's custody, its quarters having been changed to room 357 in the new Municipal Bldg. in 1914. Its importance has been overshadowed by the organization in recent years of the "Municipal Reference Library," a branch of the New York Public Library, in room 512 in the Municipal Bldg.

" The common council orders that curb- and gutter-stones be set around "the public place at the junction of Broadway and Fifth avenue," and trees planted in and around it.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XVII: 181. This is the plot of ground where the Worth monument now stands.—See D 12.

29 The common council orders that a lease be granted to Grinnell, Minturn & Co. for three years, from Aug. 1, of the west side of Pier No. 19, and the east side of Pier No. 20, East River, with half the bulkhead adjoining each, and half the end of Pier No. 20, for the exclusive use of their London and Liverpool packets, at a rental of $3,510 for "each of the said premises."—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XVII: 195, 256.

30 The city acquires of Eliza B. Jumel, for a consideration of $1.00, the first parcel of the "Jumel Mansion" lands.—Liber Deeds, DXXV: 167. By condemnation proceedings, at various times from Nov. 28, 1876 to June 19, 1906, the city acquired the rest of the land now comprised in the High Bridge Park.—Prendergast, Record of Real Estate (1914), 53.

July 4 The new Niblo's Garden is opened. "With characteristic energy, Mr. Niblo has reared upon the ruins of the old establishment [see S 18, 1846], within the space of about three months, a splendid and commodious structure, embosomed in a grove of trees all planted this spring, and all now flourishing as green as if they were resting in their native forest. The saloon is constructed to accommodate three thousand people."—Eve. Post, Jl 5, 1849. See also ibid., Ap 9, Je 30, Jl 28 and 31, 1849; Brown, 212–13.

12 The common council permits the New England Telegraph Co. "to erect a line of telegraph posts, under the direction of the Street Commissioner, along Wall street and Broadway, to and through Cedar and Greenwich streets and the Eighth avenue, the same to be removed at any time the Common Council shall direct."—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XVII: 214.

16 The common council orders "That the ground known as Fort Gansevoort be filled up, under the direction of the City Inspector, forthwith."—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XVII: 223.

17 The common council directs the street com'r to take the necessary measures "to remove the building known as the 'old Hospital,' and now standing in Twenty-seventh street, between First and Second avenues."—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XVII: 222.

18 The common council appropriates $7,000 for building "a three story house, on the corner of Greenwich avenue and Amos street, the two upper stories of which to be fitted up for the accommodation of the Police and Justices' Courts, and rooms for cells; and the lower or first story thereof to be fitted up for stores."—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XVII: 239.

Aug. 9 The common council authorises the comptroller to draw his warrant for a sum not exceeding $1,000, on the requisition of the special committee appointed to make arrangements to bring to New York the remains of the late Maj.-Gen. Worth and Col. Duncan, for the purpose of defraying the expenses thereof.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XVII: 249, 270. See N 15.

The common council permits Anson G. Phelps, Heman W. 14 Childs, and S. Russell Childs to build a bulkhead in front of their property on the East River, which shall be 450 east of the easterly side of First Ave., and extend northward from a point 98 ft. 9 in. north of the northerly side of 28th St. to a point 68 ft. north of 30th St., making the whole length 484 ft. 3 in., "with return bulkhead toward the shore."—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XVII: 300.

"The Astor Library.—It is a matter of public gratulation that " the long promised establishment of a Free Public Library on the plan of the British Museum, is at length about to be realized, and on a scale of munificence alike worthy of its founder and the requirements of the age. . . . The plan of the edifice, designed by Mr. Saeltner, is modelled after the plan of the Florentine Palaces, or Byzantine style; it is to be of brown stone, fire-proof, the internal portions of the structure being mainly of iron,—scarcely a particle of wood entering into its composition. . . . Its dimensions are to be one hundred and twenty feet in length, by sixty-five in width, and sixty-seven in height. . . .

"The library hall, occupying the second floor, will be a truly elegant apartment, measuring one hundred feet in length by sixty in width. . . . On the first floor will be the lecture and reading rooms, with accommodations for five hundred persons. . . .

"Prof. Cogswell, the librarian, has recently returned from his bibliographical tour in Europe, having secured some 20,000 volumes of great rarity and value. . . . These works are to remain in the keeping of Dr. Cogswell, at 32 Bond street, till the Astor library shall be erected, the building of which will occupy between one and two years. It is about to be commenced forthwith on the grounds known as Vauxhall Gardens."—Eve. Post, S 14, 1849.

The common council authorises the Hudson River R. R. Co. 25 "to lay down a double track of rails, with suitable curves and turnouts, from the northerly line of Canal street, at West street, through Canal and Hudson streets to Chambers street, . . ."—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XVII: 322. See D 19 and 31.

The common council gives permission to the "Whig General Oct. Committee" to take down a liberty-pole standing on the corner of 6 Broadway and Grand St., and then to move one from Canal St. near Broadway to the corner of Broadway and Grand St.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XVII: 350. See Pls. 113 and 140, Vol. III. See also Eve. Post, O 15, 1849.

"The last vestige of olden times in Wall street has at length 8 given place to a series of seven new and commodious brick buildings, intended for lawyers' offices, and offices for insurance companies, railroads, etc. These buildings bear the name of Jauncey Court, occupying, as they do, the site of the old Jauncey stables, which stood on the estate, we understand, something over a century. Every relic of antiquity in Wall street is now swept away, and the mementoes of past times in this once central locality of our city now exist only in the chronicles of the historian."—Eve. Post, O 8, 1849. Jauncey Court covered the land then and now known as 37–43 Wall St. The Perris Atlas, 1852, shows the court, opening on Wall St., on three sides of which the building was built. The Equitable Trust Co. bldg. now covers the site.

The common council appropriates $7,500 to erect a fountain in 11

1849 O 11 each of the two enclosures of Stuyvesant Square.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XVII: 353.

20 Lieut. Woodhull completes the survey at Hell Gate and at the mouth of the Harlem River, which are two places dangerous to river commerce, for the purpose of removing the rocks and shoals of Hell Gate and the remains of the old stone bridge connecting New York and Ward's Island.—N. Y. Com. Adv., O 20, 1849. See also his report to the supt. of the U. S. Coast Survey, in ibid., N 22, 1849. See, further, S 24, 1876.

Nov. 7 The common council orders that the Battery be lighted with gas, and appropriates $1,500 for the purpose.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XVII: 419.

10 "Mr. Barnum, of the American Museum, we observe, has offered, through his agent, to Miss Jenny Lind, the Swedish vocalist, the sum of $1,000 per night, for two hundred nights, together with the expenses of her visit, &c. He also agrees to defray all costs of getting up concerts, and for auxiliary talent, &c. As a guarantee for the fulfilment of the contract, he proposes to deposit $50,000 in the hands of her London bankers prior to her leaving Europe."—Eve. Post, N 10, 1849.

12 The common council authorises the commissioner of repairs and supplies "to have gates placed at Madison square, at the corner of Twenty-sixth street and Madison avenue; and also at the corner of Twenty-sixth street and the Fifth avenue."—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XVII: 429.

15 An imposing funeral procession in honour of Maj.-Gen. W. J. Worth (see Je 11), Major C. R. Gates, and Col. Duncan, three officers who served in the Mexican War, is held. John Van Buren delivers a funeral oration in the Park at the conclusion of the ceremonies.—N. Y. Herald, N 16, 1849. The remains of Gen. Worth were interred in Greenwood Cemetery.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XVIII: 171. On June 13, 1851, the common council directed payment of a bill of $87 for music furnished by the band of the 7th Regiment for these ceremonies.—Ibid., XIX: 262.

20 The common council permits the North Am. Telegraph Co. (cf. Jl 12) to erect "telegraph poles" through the following streets: beginning at the foot of 86th St., Hudson river, thence along 86th St. to Seventh Ave., along said avenue to Greenwich Lane, along said lane to Perry St., along said street to West St., along West St. to Cortlandt St., along said street to Maiden Lane, along said lane to Nassau St., along said street to Wall St., and along Wall St. to the office of the company, under the direction and approval of the street commissioner, the poles to be removed at any time the common council shall direct.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XVII: 437.

Dec. 1 The common council establishes a ferry from the foot of 16th St., East River, to Greenpoint, L. I., leasing it for ten years from May 1, 1850.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XVII: 461.

6 Bids from several firms for enlarging the Battery are published, the lowest being $27,152.—Com. Adv., D 6, 1849.

10 "Hahnemann Medical College.—The homœopathic physicians of this city have just organized a separate academy of medicine, and have duly provided for its incorporation under the law of the state."—Eve. Post, D 10, 1849.

12 The common council orders "That the high board fence, enclosing the triangular piece of land known as a public place [see Je 20], between Twenty-fourth and Twenty-fifth streets, at the intersection of Broadway and the Fifth avenue, be removed, and a low picket fence, similar to that enclosing Madison square, be put up;" the cost is limited to $150.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XVII: 473.

14 The common council authorises the street com'r to accept a proposal of John Randel, Jr., to furnish a map of the city of New York, from the Battery to 155th St., on a scale of 400 ft. to the inch, with all the streets, lanes, roads, avenues, and the intervening blocks and squares delineated therein, and each square or block designated by a number. The board appropriates $300 to defray the expense of it.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XVII: 471–72.

" The Merchants' Exchange Co. becomes bankrupt.—N. Y. Herald, D 14, 1849. See Ja 27, 1823; Mr 26, 1852.

18 The common council appropriates $1,000 for "binding the collection of books, maps, &c., presented to the Common Council by Mons. Vattermare, and for carrying out the object of international exchanges" (see D 8, 1848; Ja 25, 1849).—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XVII: 503.

19 The common council appropriates $100 for the comptroller to expend in causing lithographic maps of the Common Lands to be made.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XVII: 491.

Dec. 19 The common council grants a petition of the Hudson River R. R. Co. for a lease for ten years of "the triangular piece of ground, bounded by Canal, Hoboken, and West streets, with the building thereon, known as the Clinton country market," at $1,500 a year.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XVII: 495. On Jan. 7, 1850, the board permitted the company to extend one of their tracks around this market at the foot of Canal St., with suitable curves and turnouts, "so as to connect with the track on West and Canal streets, already constructed by them."—Ibid., XVII: 590. See Jl 9, 1850.

" The common council, by resolution, starts a movement to secure, through popular demand, an appropriation from the legislature for the erection of a monument in Greenwood Cemetery to the memory of Maj.-Gen. Worth, Col. Duncan, "and other gallant soldiers, natives of this state, whose lives have been sacrificed in the service of their country."—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XVII: 492.

26 The common council directs the Croton aqueduct board to erect a fountain in Bowling Green, and appropriates $2,000 for it.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XVII: 517. It was finished in 1850, an additional appropriation of $523 having been made.—Ibid., XVIII: 97, 377.

29 The common council appropriates $2,000 to cover the cost of working Fifth Ave. as "a country road" from 109th to 120th St.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XVII: 527.

31 The Hudson River R. R. having been opened on Sept. 30 for public travel between 31st St., New York, and Peekskill (see S 13), on Dec. 31, the entire line was brought into use from Chambers St. to Poughkeepsie.—Third Ann. Report of the Directors (1850), 21.

" The company buys land for a passenger station at the terminus in New York, comprising 100 ft. on Chambers St., the same on Warren St., and 175 ft. on College Place.—Ibid., 9. See D 19, 1849; O 24, 1851.

" In this year, there were 22,372 deaths in New York City, 5,072 of which were from cholera.—Eve. Post, Ja 2, 1850.

1850

— In this year, Count Camillo di Cavour became the leading minister of King Victor Emmanuel II of Piedmont, and until his death in 1861 worked for the liberation and union of Italy.—Hazen, Europe since 1815, 216 et seq.

— The Democratic party's policy of "popular sovereignty" or "squatter sovereignty," as it was called, carried the party through the great struggle of 1850.—Winsor, VII: 293.

— In this year, 212,796 alien immigrants arrived at the port of New York. Of these, Ireland sent 117,038; Germany, 45,535; England, 28,163; Scotland, 6,772; France, 3,462, and other countries lesser numbers.—Rep. on Emigration by a Special Com. of the Ch. of Commerce, Ja 5, 1865 (N. Y., 1865), 18.

— The population of New York City is 515,394. This is an increase of about 144,000 in five years, or nearly 30,000 per annum. "The suburbs of New York, lying within one mile of the city, consisting of Brooklyn, Williamsburgh, Jersey City, and Hoboken, contain in round numbers 150,000 inhabitants, which, added to the present population, makes a total of at least 650,000."—Man. Com. Coun. (1851), 357. The U. S. Census Bulletin, of 1910, gives the population of Manhattan Island for 1850 as 515, 547.

— In this year, the expenditures for the city government amounted to $2,587,490.24 and the receipts to $108,315.75. The real estate was assessed at $207,146,176.26 and the personal estate at $78,939,240.48.—Man. Com. Coun. (1851), 205, 209.

— During this year, "Uncle Tom's Cabin" was published in the National Era, in Washington. In March, 1852, it appeared complete in book-form.—Rhodes, Hist. of the U. S., I: 279. This book had a powerful influence in crystallizing public opinion in the North on the slavery question.

— About this time, the so-called Hudson River school of American landscape painting began to flourish. Among the painters whose technique and other artistic qualities eventually identified them with this school, were John W. Casilear, John F. Kensett, T. Addison Richards, Worthington Whittredge, J. F. Cropsey, John B. Bristol, Sandford R. Gifford, George Inness, F. E. Church, Albert Bierstadt, Jervis McEntee, William Bradford, L. R. Mignot, Samuel Colman, William T. Richards, Homer D. Martin, A. H. Wyant, Thomas Moran, and R. Swain Gifford. Regarding their careers and notable canvases, see Isham's Hist. of Am. Painting, 232–70.

— In this year, Henry Hoff, of 180 William St., issued a series of 1850 lithographed Views of New-York, comprising 20 plates, beautifully — coloured, and mounted on cards having decorative borders in gold which enclose the inscriptions above and below the views. The artists were J. Bornet, C. Autenrieth, A. Fay, and W. Heine. The subjects were: High Bridge (missing from Eno collection); View of New York from the South East; Battery and Castle Garden; Trinity Church; Merchants' Exchange; Custom House; St. Paul's Church; City Hall; Odd Fellows' Hall; Broadway, from Chambers St., looking North; Metropolitan Hotel; University; Astor Place Theatre, with surroundings; Grace Church; Union Square; The Croton Water Reservoir; N. Y. Institution for the Blind; U. S. Naval Hospital (Brooklyn); The Borough Hall, Brooklyn. These titles are taken from the check-list of the Eno collection of prints, pub. in the Bulletin of the N. Y. P. L., XXIX: 389–90 (Je, 1925). The N. Y. Hist. Soc. also possesses the views.

Mr. Fridenberg says that the title-page of the complete work reads, The Empire City Of New York. Twenty Beautiful Colored Views, Of the most remarkable and prettiest places, buildings, and streets of New-York and Brooklyn, and that the title missing from the Eno list (which mentions only 19) is the Tombs (Halls of Justice). The plates were later republished by Charles Magnus with his imprint.

— In this year, C. Lowenstrom published the New-York Pictorial Business Directory of Wall St. (copyrighted, 1849), showing on a series of ten plates, measuring about $8\frac{3}{4}$ by $7\frac{5}{8}$ in., a panorama of Wall St. from Broadway to South St. and East River.—See descrip. of Pl. 147, III: 719.

— About this year, Lowenstrom also published a pictorial directory of William St., showing, block by block, outline sketches of the business houses on both sides of the street, with the names of the firms occupying them. A copy, without date or title-page, is owned by the N. Y. Hist. Soc. See also descrip. of Pl. 147, III: 719.

— In Valentine's Manual for 1850 were published a map of the city, 1850, frontispiece; views of Fort Gansevoort (old "White Fort"), 265; a hydrographic map of New York, Westchester, and Putnam Counties (showing the line of the Croton aqueduct), 268; the Croton aqueduct at Mill River, 268, and at High Bridge, 268; the N. Y. State arsenal on Fifth Ave., 402; No. 1 Broadway, 416; No. 120 William St. (the first place of Methodist worship in Am.), 422 (see also descrip. of Pl. 43, I: 345).

For view of Catherine Market, 1850, see Man. Com. Coun. (1857), 312.

For view of Peck Slip, 1850, see ibid. (1857), 392.

For view of Macombs Dam, Harlem River, 1850, see ibid. (1860), 240.

— For views, in 1850, of the Peter Goelet residence, at the northeast corner of Broadway and 19th St., and of the Robert Goelet residence, at the north-west corner of Broadway and 17th St., see Brown's Book of Old N. Y. (1913), 221, 245.

— In this year, the board of education of the city and county of New York was under the jurisdiction of the secretary of state, who was also superintendent of common schools, with offices in Albany. There were commissioners of common schools, two from each of the 18 wards, who were distributed to serve on 15 standing committees. There were also inspectors of common schools, two for each ward; and trustees of common schools, five for each ward. The ward schools were under the supervision of the trustees of the several wards. There were 23 of these ward schools, numbered from 1 to 25 (schools Nos. 11 and 15 not appearing in the records); also two ward primary schools (Nos. 2 and 4), and two coloured ward schools.

The Public School Society operated through a board of trustees, a president, vice-president, treasurer, secretary, and standing committees. The immediate supervision and care of each public school and its nearest primary schools, were committed to a section of the trustees annually appointed. There were 18 of these corporate public schools; two public schools for coloured children; 55 primary schools; and five public primary schools for coloured children (numbered from 2 to 6 inclusive); also the Manhattanville Free School, and the Hamilton Free School (at Fort Washington).—Man. Com. Coun. (1850), 290–321.

The city had 15 ferries,—South, Fulton, Catherine St., Walnut St., Grand St., Peck Slip and Williamsburgh, Houston St., Hell-Gate, Staten Island, Elizabeth Port, Jersey City, Barclay St., Canal St., Christopher St., and Fort Lee and Bull's Ferries.—Ibid. (1850), 383. For locations, lessees, etc., see ibid.

There were 11 markets,—Washington, Fulton, Centre, Essex, 1850
Catherine, Jefferson, Union, Tompkins, Clinton, Gouverneur, and —
Franklin.—Ibid. (1850), 384.

There were 11 public squares and places,—Abingdon Square, Battery, Bowling Green, Gramercy Park, Hamilton Square (at Yorkville), the Park, Madison Square, St. John's Park, Tompkins' Square, Union Place, and Washington Square.—Ibid. (1850), 384.

There was a police force of 900 men, including captains, assistant captains, and sergeants. The chief of police, appointed by the mayor and board of aldermen, was paid $1,600 a year; captains, $700 each; assistant captains, $600 each; sergeants and policemen, $500 each.—Ibid. (1850), 138–39, 187.

The paid force of the fire department consisted of a chief engineer (at $2,000 a year), and nine assistant engineers, known as fire wardens (at $500 each per annum). There were also paid workmen at the public yard (hose makers and greasers) employed by the chief engineer. The officers of the fire department consisted of president, vice-president, secretary, treasurer, and collector; and a board of trustees consisting of president, secretary, and committees on donations, schools, fines and penalties, finance, wood and coal, etc. At all the houses of the engine, hose, and hook-and-ladder companies, and the police stations, books were kept to receive reports of chimneys being on fire. There were 34 fire-engines in the city, including those at Harlem, Yorkville, Manhattenville, and Harsenville; 46 hose companies, and 9 hook-and-ladder trucks. The city was divided into 3 fire districts, each of which had a hydrant company, whose duty was to take charge of the hydrants in case of fire. The number of strokes on the district fire-bell guided the firemen to the correct part of the district. There were in this department 1,853 men; and 52,500 feet of hose.—Ibid. (1850), 172–77, 180, 190.

The highest paid officials of the city and county governments were the corporation counsel and 6 justices of the superior court ($3,500 each); the mayor, recorder, county clerk, register, surrogate, district attorney, and 3 judges of the court of common pleas ($3,000 each); the comptroller, and clerk of the superior court ($2,500 each); the clerk of the board of assistants, receiver of taxes, street commissioner, commissioner of repairs and supplies, chief engineer of the fire department, corporation attorney, 2 justices of the marine court, and the president, assistant commissioner, chief engineers, and engineer of the Croton aqueduct department ($2,000 each.) The clerk of the board of aldermen (David T. Valentine) received in this position $1,500 a year; but he was also clerk of the board of supervisors (at $200), received for preparing minutes for publication $150, and was allowed by the common council (by resolution approved July 25, 1848) $500,—a total of $2,350.—Ibid. (1850), 178–93.

In this year, the assessed valuation of New York City real estate was $207,146,176.26; and that of both real and personal property, $286,085,416.74.—Ibid. (1851), 209.

In this year, Wm. B. Astor erected a five-storey building on the — site of the City Hotel, covering the block between Cedar and Thames Sts., and running from Broadway to Trinity Place. The building was divided into four stores, Nos. 113, 115, 117, and 119 Broadway. For the names of the occupants, and a view of the building, see The Great Metropolis for 1851, 59–60. See also L. M. R. K., III: 977.

About this year, Barnum secured the property adjoining his — museum at the corner of Broadway and Ann St., "expended about $30,000 in the enlargement of his already immense building, and placed among his world of curiosities the whole of the famous Chinese Collection." Various other attractions were described three years later, including the "tiny lecture room," which was transformed "into a spacious and elegant saloon, capable of seating 3,000 persons with comfort . . ."—Illustrated News, II: 236–38 (with views of both the interior and exterior of the Am. Museum). See also Je 15.

"From 1842 to 1854 the Board [the N. Y. Stock and Exchange — Board] occupied 'the large hall over the Reading Room' in the new Merchants Exchange building, which covered the block bounded by Wall Street, Hanover Street, William Street, and Exchange Place. The windows of the Board Room looked out upon William Street. . . . A rival organization called the 'Bourse,' or the 'New Board,' met in the same building."—Eames, The N. Y. Stock Exchange, 34.

At this time, the Rathbone Hotel, at No. 163 Broadway, and —

1850 the Franklin House, at the north-west cor. of Broadway and Dey
— St., enjoyed popularity.—Man. Com. Coun. (1865), 544. The Franklin House is shown on A. Pl. 25-b, Vol. III.

— On Fifth Ave., between 34th and 42d Sts., where the grade was reduced, two lines of 36-inch water pipe were lowered, in this year, without breaking joints, at an expense to the city of only $12,633.68. The work had been previously estimated to cost between $60,000 and $100,000.—Man. Com. Coun. (1854), 223.

In this year, an iron stairway was erected at High Bridge. A plot of 100 acres, immediately north of the receiving reservoir, was selected by the "Water Department," as a location for the new receiving reservoir proposed by Mr. Van Schaick in 1848 (q.v., N 2).—Ibid. See, however, F 5, 1851.

— In 1850, the churches on Fifth Ave. were the Washington Square Church (Dutch Reformed), erected in 1840; the Church of the Ascension (Episcopal), 1840; the Church of St. John the Evangelist (Catholic), 1842; the First Presbyterian, 1845; the South Church, 1849.—The Great Metropolis for 1850, 109–17; and Je 8, 1849. For their locations, see L. M. R. K., III: 928 et seq.

— The Homœopathic Dispensary, at 448 Broadway; The American Hotel, cor. of Grand St. and the east side of Broadway; Washington Hall, at 598 Broadway; Masonic Hall, at 600 Broadway; Hope Chapel, at 718 Broadway; the Am. Musical Institute, at 563 Broadway; the Nat'l Academy of Design at 663 Broadway; the N. Y. Hotel, at 721 Broadway; the Union Place Hotel, at 860 Broadway, all date from this year.—Man. Com. Coun. (1865), 635–36, 652. For a history of the Union Place Hotel (known as the Morton House after 1868), at the south-east corner of Broadway and 14th St., see the N. Y. Times, Je 12, 1921.

— At this time, the Broadway Theatre, on the east side of Broadway, between Pearl and Anthony Sts., was in prosperous operation. —Man. Com. Coun. (1865), 588.

— The private residences of Thomas Cooper and Stephen Price, at 350 and 352 Broadway, n. e. corner of Leonard St., at this time had been converted into a hotel called the Carlton House. —Man. Com. Coun. (1865), 596.

— In this year, the American Art Union was in flourishing condition, with galleries at No. 497 Broadway. For an account of this enterprise, with view of the gallery, see The Great Metropolis for 1850, 72–73.

— In this year, the Baptist Tabernacle Church was projected, the site selected being on the east side of Second Ave., between 10th and 11th Sts., opposite Stuyvesant St. For description and view of the building, see The Great Metropolis for 1850, 61–62.

— The history of the elevator as used in New York began in this year. "In America the first man to manufacture platform freight elevators seems to have been Henry Waterman, of New York city. As early as 1850 one of his machines was in use by Hecker, of New York [at 201-3 Cherry St.]. The Tathams had them in 1853, and at about the same time either Waterman's machines or some very like them were in use in the establishment of Harper and Brothers . . . Waterman's shop was in Duane Street, near Centre . . ." —From "The Vertical Railway," by W. Sloane Kennedy, in The Galaxy, N, 1882, p. 889. See also ICONOGRAPHY, III: 670. An elevator was proposed by John Randel, Jr., in connection with his invention of an elevated railroad, in 1846, the design of which was published in 1848 (see Pl. 133-a, Vol. III), but this was never built. See, further, Je 30 and Jl 14, 1853.

— In this year, numerous resolutions were passed by the common council that gas lamps be placed in front of specified churches.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, Vol. XVIII; see also XVII, XIX, etc.

— In the early Fifties, the private school of Wm. Forrest (later Forrest & Quackenbos) was established at the north-west cor. of Sixth Ave. and 14th St. The youth of many prominent New York families of the period were pupils there. For Henry James's account of it, see descrip. of Pl. 135, III: 703.

— In this year, the first three volumes of the Documentary History of New York, compiled by Dr. E. B. O'Callaghan, were published. The fourth, and last, volume appeared the next year.—See Ap 11, 1848.

— This is the last year covered by Thos. F. De Voe's manuscript index to the early newspapers of New York and vicinity, contained in two ledger volumes, now owned by the N. Y. Hist. Soc. The entries mention briefly the notable daily events which he collected by a careful page-by-page analysis of the world's news which had been published in The Flying Post in England in 1696, the Boston News Letter (1704 et seq.), the Am. Mercury (Phila., 1721 et seq.), 1850 the Boston Gaz. (1724 et seq.), the N. Y. Gaz. (1727 et seq.), and — many other papers of later date in New York collections.

His index covers a great variety of subjects, and the present Chronology is much indebted to De Voe's painstaking researches and reading, which continued for 40 years, for the guide to many of the items in contemporary newspapers cited in this work. While it was practically impossible for one man to include, in such a page-by-page review, all the newspapers published in New York after 1800, or to index all the events and new advertisements of important news value in those examined, these two ledger volumes, nevertheless, are a most useful and valuable contribution to the history of New York.

From 1850 to 1860 there is a decade untouched by this or any other similar work. After that, the Times Index offers a somewhat similar guide to the news published in that one New York newspaper. The Tribune in 1875 supplemented this by an index to the news published in its pages, but this was discontinued in 1906. The Times Index is continuous from 1860 to date, with the exception of 1861, 1862, and a hiatus from 1905 to 1912 inclusive.

The N. Y. Hist. Soc. also possesses much data collected by De Voe relating to the military history of New York, he himself having been colonel of the "Washington Greys" (later the 8th Regt.); also a large scrap-book of New York views, illustrated advertisements, portraits, etc. from contemporary magazines, Valentine's Manuals, etc., which he gathered from about 1840 to about 1890. De Voe published three books: The Market Book (N. Y., 1862), a history of the old markets of New York, frequently cited in the Chronology; The Market Assistant (N. Y., 1867), giving an account of practically every article of human food sold in this country; and Genealogy of the De Veaux Family (1885). He died Feb. 1, 1892.

A summary survey of events in New York from 1850 to 1875, — entitled "N. Y. City in the 19th Century," was published in Am. Hist. Mag., Vol. I (1906), 407–26.

In this year, the International Magazine was first issued, under — the editorial control of R. W. Griswold.—S. N. D. North, The Newspaper and Periodical Press (1884), 117.

In this year was published (in Phila. and N. Y.) a square 12mo — entitled City Cries; or, A Peep at Scenes in Town, By an Observer, containing 24 illustrations of town criers.

"A ferry has been established between Manhattanville and Jan. Bull's Ferry, a lease for the same having been granted for five years, 4 by the Board of Aldermen. This will be a public convenience, both for the purposes of travel and the transportation to this city, of cattle from the West."—Eve. Post, Ja 4, 1850.

"Among the most important of the various seriel works now in 5 course of publication by Messrs. Tallis, of this city and London, is their 'Illustrated Atlas.' These beautiful maps are engraved in the best manner from the latest authorities, and are in a convenient and portable form.—Thirty-two numbers, at 25 cents each, containing two maps, will complete the atlas. Each map is ornamented with vignette views of interesting localities; and taken as a whole, this work may be regarded as the most attractive Atlas yet presented to the public."—Eve. Post, Ja 5, 1850.

The common council creates a "Bureau of the City Hall and " Park." The term "City Hall," as here used, includes all the public buildings in the Park. The officer in charge shall be called the keeper. His duties are prescribed. He and his family may occupy such rooms in the city hall as may be assigned to him by the comptroller.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XVII: 580.

The common council resolves to present the freedom of the " city, in a gold box, to Capt. David Cook, commander of the bark "Sarah," of Yarmouth, Nova Scotia, who, in a gale of wind and rough seas, went to the rescue of the passengers of the ship "Caleb Grimshaw," of New York, which caught fire when near the Azores, in Nov., 1849, and who, after eight days' perseverance and hard labour succeeded in saving nearly 400 persons.—N. Y. H. S. Coll. (1885), 426–27; Proc., App'd by Mayor, XVII: 588–89. The freedom was presented on Jan. 24.—Eve. Post, Ja 25, 1850.

The common council passes a resolution expressing appreci- " ation of "the noble and disinterested efforts of M. Vattemare, in the cause of science, literature and humanity," with thanks for "his valuable donation of books and works of art," which expression of appreciation it is desired he will convey "to the several bureaux of the Republic, the various municipal governments and private individuals, on whose behalf he has presented us with these noble 1850 Jan. 5 monuments of the intellect of France." The resolution also expresses gratitude for "the magnificent statue, emblematical of our sister Republic, presented on behalf of Mons. Gayrard," and requests that M. Vattemare convey to him a copy of this resolution. —Proc., App'd by Mayor, XVII: 587–88. Cf. the bas-relief, in plaster, entitled "The Triumphal March of the Republic" (1848), by A. Ottin, presented by the artist to the N. Y. Hist. Soc. on Je 2, 1857.

" The common council orders that the corporation counsel take the necessary legal steps to open, as a public square, "the triangular piece of ground, lying between and contained by the Bowery, Third avenue and Seventh street."—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XVII: 566. This was at first known as Stuyvesant Square (see Mr 16), but is now Cooper Park.—L. M. R. K., III: 969.

" "The splendid range of private dwelling-houses, situated in Twenty-third street, between Lexington and Fourth avenues, now nearly completed, and estimated at the aggregate cost of $250,000, are shortly to be offered on advantageous terms at private sale."—Eve. Post, Ja 5, 1850.

7 In his second annual message to the board of aldermen, Mayor Woodhull calls attention to the fact that "all the public squares below forty-second street, comprise only in the aggregate, about sixty-three acres, being less, (all together) than one-fourth of the size of one of the large parks in the city of London.

"The advantages of open squares in a populous city, are so apparent and so important, that no well governed city was ever content to be without them. They not only greatly beautify a city, but are essential aids to the public health. They are the great breathing places of the toiling masses who have no other resort in the heat of summer or in time of pestilence, for pure air and healthful recreation, either for themselves or children."—Proc., Bd. of Ald., XXXVIII: 19.

The first suggestion for the present Central Park is attributed to Andrew J. Downing, a prominent landscape architect and editor of the Horticulturist. "In 1849, while Mr. Downing was in London, he wrote a letter to the Horticulturist on the importance of parks in the growing city of New York. The letter attracted a great deal of attention. In 1850 he followed with a series of letters pointing out the lack of open spaces and places for recreation and urged the necessity of a great park. 'This,' said the late Charles H. Haswell, in his 'Reminiscences of an Octogenarian' [p. 465], 'was the actual beginning of the Central Park, the birth of the idea, and Downing should be forever remembered with gratitude by our people, and his statue should be raised by them in the place which they owe to his foresight and trained intelligence.'

"Another strong advocate of a park in the central part of the island was Fernando Wood, who had been abroad and who was impressed with the beauty of the foreign parks, particularly those of Brussels; and when he was nominated for mayor in 1850 he made the park question one of the issues of the campaign. But he was defeated for the mayoralty by Ambrose C. Kingsland, who took office in January, 1851. Mayor Kingsland then took up the idea of a park," and on May 5, 1851 (q. v.) sent to the common council a message on the subject.—16th Ann. Rep., Am. Scenic & Hist. Pres. Soc. (1911), 449.

17 "There are in the city 4,524 places where intoxicating drinks are sold, 2,920 of the number are opened on Sundays, and 760 are unlicensed!"—Eve. Post, Ja 17, 1850.

21 "The noble mansion on the Fifth avenue and Ninth street, belonging to the family of the late Henry Brevoort [see 1834], with ninety-two feet of ground on the avenue and one hundred and twenty-six feet in depth, has been purchased by Mr. Henry C. de Rham, for $57,000."—Hone's Diary, II: 370. See F 7.

26 Hone mentions in his diary the "superb mansion" of Mr. and Mrs. Vail, at the corner of Fifth Ave. and 15th St., where he is a dinner guest.—Hone's Diary, II: 371.

28 Three steam vessels, costing in the aggregate more than $1,000,000, are launched from the shipyards of Wm. H. Brown, at the foot of 12th St., East River. One is the "New World," intended for the rivers of California; one, the "Boston," intended to run between Boston and Bangor; one, the "Arctic," of the Collins' Line, the largest vessel ever built in the U. S., and intended to run between New York and Liverpool. Hone briefly describes them.—Hone's Diary, II: 372–73.

29 Henry Clay introduces resolutions in congress as a basis for compromise of the slavery question.—McMaster, Hist. of the People of the U. S., VIII: 13.

Feb. 4 The greatest loss of life which ever occurred in any single accident or war in New York City up to this time happened in the so-called "Hague St. disaster" on this day, when an explosion of a steam boiler at Nos. 3 and 5 Hague St. caused the death of 67 persons and the injury of 50 others. The accident was later examined by a committee of aldermen and was reported in Doc. 34, Bd. of Ald., Jl 12, 1850; Proc., App'd by Mayor, XVIII: 21–22; Eve. Post, F 4 et seq., 1850.

7 The Brevoorts give a farewell ball—"a farewell to the house, which has been sold to De Rham" (see Ja 21).—Correspondence of James Fenimore-Cooper (1922), II: 659. The house stood until the summer of 1925, having been occupied last by Mr. and Mrs. Chas. de Rham. For brief history of the house, see 1834 and references there given.

12 Congress passes a resolution for the purchase of the MS. of Washington's Farewell Address (see S 17, 1796).—Laws of U. S., 31st cong., 1st sess., 197.

Henry Stevens, in his Recollections of Mr. James Lenox of New York and the formation of his library (1886), 100, explains the acquisition of this MS. by Mr. Lenox as follows: "About 1847 or 1848 [probably error for 1849], it was announced by the administrators of the late David C. Claypoole of Philadelphia, proprietor and editor of the 'Daily Advertiser,' that they were about to sell by auction in that city the original autograph manuscript of Washington's Farewell Address, given to Claypoole by Washington himself in September 1796 [q. v.]. Mr. Lenox bought it against the Congress Library for $2,200 I think, while some blamed him for competing against the Government Library, where such a national relic ought to find a resting-place. He however offered the library committee not to compete under their limit, if they would tell him how far they intended to go. They declined to tell him their limit, or even if they intended to buy it, so he very properly disregarded them. . . ."

Mr. Stevens further states (p. 101) that Mr. Lenox, in 1850, "privately printed this precious manuscript with variorum notes and other illustrative papers in one of the most sumptuous volumes ever issued in the United States up to that time. . . ."

The MS. of the Farewell Address is now in the N. Y. P. L., having been deposited in the Lenox Library in 1885.—Lydenberg, Hist. of the N. Y. Pub. Library (1923), 117.

18 Hone records: "The dreadful question of slavery, which has cast an inextinguishable brand of discord between the North and the South of this hitherto happy land, has taken a tangible and definite shape on the question of the admission of the new State of California into the Union with the Constitution of her own framing and adoption. . . . Compromise is at an end. . . . When will all this end? I see no remedy! If California is admitted with the prohibition of slavery which themselves have adopted, or if the national district is freed by the action of Congress from the traffic in human flesh, the South stands ready to retire from the Union, and bloody wars will be the fatal consequence. . . . On the other hand, the abolitionists of the North will listen to no terms of compromise. Equally regardless of the blessings of union, they profess to hold it of no value unless the power is conceded to them of restraining the extension of the great moral evil which overshadows the land."—Hone's Diary, II: 373–74. California, which was formed from the territory ceded to the U. S. by Mexico by the treaty of Feb. 2, 1848 (q. v.), was admitted to the Union on Sept. 9. —Ibid., II: 389–90; Rhodes, Hist. of the U. S., I: 182; Lossing, in Harper's Popular Cyc. of U. S. Hist., I: 193.

23 J. Fenimore Cooper, writing from the Globe Hotel, New York, to Mrs. Cooper, Cooperstown, says: "Mrs. Brodie told me yesterday that a Mrs. Wetmore appeared at Mrs. Curtiss' party, . . ., in a dress that cost, including jewels, $30,000—pretty well for New York. Mrs. Philip Rensselaer comes out this winter in great beauty and great magnificence. In a word, the town is a great arena for the women to show off their fine feathers in."—Correspondence of James Fenimore-Cooper (1922), II: 669.

25 There is a great meeting, at Castle Garden, "of men of all political parties, to express a determination to stand by the 'Union, the whole Union, and nothing but the Union,' at all hazards, and to support the principles of Mr. Clay's compromise resolutions. . . ."—Hone's Diary, II: 375; and see ibid. under March 5, 6, 12, 14 et seq., regarding the debates in congress.

26 The common council appropriates $1,000 to purchase a copy of Audubon's The Birds of America.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XVIII: 22. See also Je 6.

1850 Mar. 7 By concessions to the demands of the slaveholders, in a great speech in the U. S. senate on this day, Daniel Webster weakened his influence, in the free-labour states, among anti-slavery men.—Lossing, in Harper's Popular Cyc. of U. S. Hist., II: 1501. Nevertheless, large numbers throughout the Union approved the principles and sentiments which he expressed.—Hone's Diary, II: 376–77. In New York, on March 28, several gentlemen, calling themselves "sons of New England and merchants of New York," presented him with a gold watch and chain in appreciation of this speech for "The Constitution and the Union."—Private Correspondence of Daniel Webster, ed. by Fletcher Webster (Boston, 1857), II: 361.

" The common council appropriates $13,000 to purchase from the government of the U. S. "the lands claimed to be owned by it at Fort Gansevoort."—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XVIII: 37.

11 Steamboat service from Albany to Poughkeepsie is inaugurated by the Hudson River R. R., to connect with trains for New York at the latter point, which is the most northern point to which the railroad has thus far extended (see D 31, 1849).—From chron. supplied by the company.

16 The legislature alters the Commissioners' Map of 1807–11 by laying out "a public place known as Stuyvesant Square," in the Seventeenth Ward, bounded on the north by 7th St., on the west by Fourth Ave. ("formerly the bowery"), on the south by 6th St., and on the east by Third Ave.—Laws of N. Y. (1850), chap. 65. The legislators of this time appear to have been oblivious of the fact that, in 1836, a "Stuyvesant Square" had been laid out in another location.—See My 18, 1836. See also Ja 5, 1850.

" The Academy of Design (see 1849) opens its new building at 661–663 Broadway, opposite Bond St.—Eve. Post, Mr 16, 1850; The Great Metropolis . . . for 1850, 74; L. M. R. K., III: 957. The twenty-fifth annual exhibition opened at this time.—Cummings, Historic Annals of the Academy; Hone's Diary, II: 378–79. Scenes at the opening, together with an historical account of the institution, are published in Illustrated News, Ap 30, I: 280–82. An illustration of the principal room of the academy appeared on May 7.—Ibid., I: 296.

18 The common council directs the comptroller to draw his warrant for $150 in favour of Calvin Pollard, "in payment for the plans and elevations for a market house on the site of the present Washington market, adopted by the Committee on Markets of the late Board of Assistant Aldermen."—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XVIII: 42; cf. ibid., XV: 63. See also Market Book, 453. See, further, D 30, 1851.

21 The mayor signs a joint resolution that Fifth Ave., between 34th and 42d Sts., be regulated and graded, and that curb- and gutter-stones be set therein.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XVIII: 48.

22 The common council orders the renumbering of houses on Broadway between 10th St. and Union Square.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XVIII: 55.

25 By special act, the legislature declares that the building law of March 7, 1849 (q. v.), and its amendments, shall not be construed so as to prevent A. T. Stewart "from continuing and completing his store and building on the easterly side of Broadway, from Read to Chambers streets . . ., so that the portions already erected, with the additions thereto, may be uniform in structure and material, and in conformity with the plans of said building."—Laws of N. Y. (1850), chap. 96.

30 "Russ & Reid are soon to resume their paving operations in Broadway. What they have done already in this line reaches from Stewart's store on Reade street, to the Howard Hotel on Maiden lane, and forms, all things considered, the best specimen of durable pavement in the city. Their next contract is for that portion of the street, between Maiden Lane and Wall, which will be begun immediately, and finished as fast as the stones can be obtained from the quarry and laid. . . ."—Eve. Post, Mr 30, 1850.

Apr. 5 The Jesuits obtain title to a plot of ten lots, between Fifth and Sixth Aves., 15th and 16th Sts. Here, at 49 W. 15th St., they erected the first college building built by the Society of Jesus (see S, 1847).—The College of St. Francis Xavier (1897), 9, 11, 15, 25, 32. See N 25.

" The common council requires that, in all cases of renumbering houses, under the direction of the commissioner of streets, he shall "furnish to the Croton Aqueduct Department, a transcript of all changes made, showing in parallel columns the old and new street numbers."—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XVIII: 83. Apr. 5

The legislature divides the Twelfth Ward into two wards by running a line through the centre of 86th St. from river to river. The portion north of it is to retain the name of the Twelfth Ward, and the portion south of it is to constitute the new ward named the Nineteenth Ward.—Laws of N. Y. (1850), chap. 187. 6

By act of the legislature "the office of City Judge in the city and county of New-York" is created. This official is to be elected by the people for a four-year term, his salary to be fixed by the board of supervisors, but at not less than $2,000. "All judicial powers vested by law in the recorder . . . are hereby conferred upon such city judge, and said city judge shall concurrently with said recorder perform and discharge all judicial duties imposed upon such recorder."—Laws of N. Y. (1850), chap. 205. 8

The common council accepts "the proposition from Mrs. Elisa B. Jumel, to cede to the Corporation of the city of New York, all the land in One hundred and seventy-third street, from the Tenth avenue to the King's Bridge road, on the condition that the said Corporation open and work the street as a country road, without any expense to her."—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XVIII: 86. "

The legislature incorporates the New York Medical College. Among the incorporators are Robt. H. Morris, Erastus C. Benedict, and Anson G. Phelps, Jr.—Laws of N. Y. (1850), chap. 206. See Jl 31. "

The legislature changes the name of "The Hope Chapel Baptist Church and Congregation" to "The Broadway Baptist Church."—Laws of N. Y. (1850), chap. 195. Hope Chapel stood at 718 Broadway, opposite the N. Y. Hotel.—Man. Com. Coun. (1865), 635; N. Y. Com. Adv., O 20, 1849. "

The common council orders that the keeper of the city hall "discontinue to furnish hereafter, at the public expense, refreshments of every nature to the members of the Common Council, as well as to all other persons."—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XVIII: 84. "

Hone mentions dining recently with August Belmont, "the agent of the great house of Rothschilds," at "his splendid mansion in the Fifth avenue."—Hone's Diary, II: 378. "

The legislature passes a new public health law, relating to the city of New York, and involving a revision of quarantine regulations. The common council is constituted the board of health.—Laws of N. Y. (1850), chap. 275; amended Jl 11, 1851, by ibid. (1851), chap. 523. In 1790, the quarantine station was at Red Hook (Atlantic Dock); then at Bedlow's Island, until about 1798 when the U. S. government required that location for a fort, and it was removed to Staten Island.—N. Y. Com. Adv., S 5, 13, 1848; F 2, Mr 10, 1849. 10

In an act "to explain and extend the powers and duties of the governors of the alms-house of the city and county of New-York," the legislature gives them exclusive control of the potter's field, the upkeep of the department's buildings, and the erection of the workhouse authorised on April 11, 1849 (q. v.). While they are given power to enlarge or increase the number of buildings on Randall's Island, or Blackwell's Island, or "within the enclosure of Bellevue Hospital," they are required to obtain the consent of the board of supervisors of New York before the erection or enlargement of any building costing more than $5,000. The act provides for raising money to establish the workhouse through an annual tax to be raised by the board of supervisors; also that minors may be bound out as apprentices.—Laws of N. Y. (1850), chap. 329. "

By another act of this date, the legislature authorised the common council to raise $75,000 by a loan for erecting the workhouse.—Ibid. (1850), chap. 289.

"My grandfather had ships that went to Holland and he brought skates home to his children, and they used to skate on the Canal that is now Canal Street and on the pond where the Tombs is now, and my mother says the poor people used to get a rib of beef and polish it and drill holes in it and fasten it on their shoes to skate on. The Canal ran from Broadway to the North River, and had a picket fence on both sides of it, and there were only three houses on its side, and they were little white wooden houses with green blinds."—Havens, Diary of a little girl in Old New York, 77–81. 12

The mayor approves an ordinance which entitles aldermen and assistants "to receive as compensation for their legislative services, four dollars for each day such member shall sit in the Common Council." Another provision of the same ordinance fixed the stated sessions of the boards for the first Monday of the month at 5 p. m., 13

1850 Apr. 13 such sessions to "continue by adjournment from day to day at the said hour until the public business shall be disposed of."—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XVIII: 100. Never before had the members of the common council received pay for their services (see F 15, 1858). The second provision of the ordinance was repealed on Dec. 7 (ibid., XVIII: 476), probably because the amended charter (see Ap 2, 1849) was to become effective the following month.

19 The Clayton-Bulwer treaty is signed at Washington. It provides that neither Great Britain nor the U. S. shall obtain exclusive control over the inter-ocean ship-canal to be constructed through Nicaragua, or erect any fortification in that country.—Macdonald, Select Docs., etc., 373–77.

" The common council awards a contract, carrying an appropriation of $1,000, "to build two vaults on Randall's Island, of the capacity of two thousand coffins, for the purpose of depositing therein the remains of those interred at the city expense."—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XVIII: 105.

27 The "Atlantic," the first ship of the Collins Line (an American line), sails from New York on its first voyage to Liverpool.—Eve. Post, Ap 27; N. Y. Daily Tribune, Ap 29, 1850; Hone's Diary, II: 381. See Ag 14, 1851.

May 1 St. Luke's Hospital is incorporated under the provisions of the act of April 12, 1848 (q. v.), which was the general act "for the incorporation of benevolent, charitable, scientific and missionary societies." This fact, except the date, is specifically stated in an amendment to its charter, passed March 28, 1851, and recorded in Laws of N. Y. (1851), chap. 64. The day, May 1, is found in the certificate of incorporation, and in the inscribed tablet in the hospital, Amsterdam Ave. and 113th St. See also Richmond's N. Y. & Its Institutions, 367, 370. See My 24 and N 20, 1851.

4 "The Bowling Green fountain is undergoing quite a metamosphose, and promises to present a more inviting aspect than the former gloomy attempt at rustic beauty."—Eve. Post, My 4, 1850.

7 The American Anti-Slavery Society holds its annual anniversary in the Tabernacle, on the north-east corner of Broadway and Anthony (afterward Worth) St. William Lloyd Garrison, president of the society, presides, and among other distinguished anti-slavery leaders present are Wendell Phillips, Edmund Quincy, Charles F. Hovey, William H. Furness, Samuel May, and Jos. and Frederick Douglass. The occasion became historical, especially through the ineffectual efforts of a mob, led by Captain Isaiah Rynders, to disrupt the meeting. Mr. Garrison, writing to his wife after the meeting, said: "Well, we have had our meeting and, thus far, thank God, all goes well, even triumphantly with us. . . . The Tabernacle was crowded beyond all precedent. . . .I proceeded to make my speech about the religion of the country, when, at last, the pent-up feelings of the mobocrats broke out, and, with the notorious Capt. Rynders at their head, they came rushing on to the platform, yelling, cheering, swearing, etc., etc. But, after much tumult and many interruptions, I got through with my speech—then Mr. Furness made a capital speech—then an opponent spoke—then Douglass and Sam'l Ward—and we wound up with electrical effect. Wendell had no time to speak." The meeting of the society on the following day was also over-awed by another mob led by Rynders.—William Lloyd Garrison, 1805–1879, The Story of His Life, by Wendell Phillips Garrison and Francis Jackson Garrison (Boston, 1894), III: 285–99.

11 The common council appropriates $30,000 to buy the state's interest in the arsenal lands bounded by Centre, Franklin, Elm, and White Sts., which the legislature has agreed to surrender (see Ap 2, 1849).—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XVIII: 150. See S 5.

" The common council directs the comptroller to draw his warrant in favour of David T. Valentine, clerk of the board, for $300 "for extra services in compiling and supervising the publication of the Corporation Manual for the year 1850, . . . and that he be allowed to sell numbers of the said manual, after placing one thousand copies thereof at the disposition of the members of the Common Council."—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XVIII: 139. From 1841 (q. v.) to 1866, inclusive, Valentine compiled the Manual by order of the common council, principally from documents in his keeping as city clerk.

18 "The New Pavement.—The new pavement in Broadway, above the City Hall, is attracting much attention, not more on account of its novelty than the unconscionable length of time taken to complete it. The inventors of this new style claim for it many advantages over the Russ and other pavements. It is said to be more durable and less dangerous to horses and vehicles passing over it than the former, while the materials used in its construction are more lasting. After the removal of the old pavement, excavations are made to the depth of about eighteen inches below the surface, and a solid and uniform bed is laid and grotued with lime. Large flags are laid closely over this, with the smooth sides down by which the grooves are formed in the surface, which are filled with bituminous cement. A layer of broken stones is next put on the flags, the interstices of which are filled up with gravel. Over the surface of this gravel still finer gravel is laid, on which again is put a layer of coarse sharp sand. The whole is solidified by water and running. The surface pavement consists of four granite block dragways, five feet in width, laid diagonally. The intermediate spaces between each of these dragways are laid with cobble stones, selected according to their size, and laid separately, with their broad ends downwards. The granite blocks form angles on the sides, in which the cobble stones are laid with their flat sides to the sides of the angles. The cobble stones, after being well driven, are covered with thin broken stones.

"The bed, composed of broken stones and gravel, forms a drain which conveys the water to the sewer, while the bituminous cement is rather strengthened than injured by its action, thus differing very materially from the concrete bed underlying the Russ pavement, which is easily injured by water."—Eve. Post, My 18, 1850.

22 The American Arctic expedition in search of Sir John Franklin, consisting of the "Advance" and the "Rescue," owned and fitted out by Henry Grinnell of New York, in connection with the U. S. Government, and in command of Lieut. Edwin T. De Hoven, U. S. N., and Elisha K. Kane, M. D., are towed from the Brooklyn Navy Yard and pass out to sea through the Narrows.—Lossing, Hist. of N. Y. City, II: 642–43, and N. Y. newspapers. The expedition returned Sept. 30, 1851 (q. v.). See also Winsor, VIII: 91–126; Kane, Adrift in the Arctic Ice Pack.

30 Hone records: "The mania for converting Broadway into a street of shops is greater than ever. There is scarcely a block in the whole extent of this fine street of which some part is not in a state of transmutation. The City Hotel has given place to a row of splendid stores; Stewart is extending his stores to take in the whole front from Chambers to Reade street; this is already the most magnificent dry-goods establishment in the world . . .; with the addition now in progress this edifice will be one of the 'wonders' of the Western world. . . ." He mentions other changes on Broadway.—Hone's Diary, II: 384.

2 The "American Rifles" is organized. From it the 71st Regiment was developed. The first meeting was at the "Eagle Drill Room," corner of Christy and Delancy Sts. Each company had its own place of meeting, such as the Branch Hotel, below the old Bowery Theatre, and Military Hall on the Bowery above Broome St. The first entry in the minute-book of the regiment is an article copied from the Evening Express, Sept. 5, 1856, as follows: "The American Guard, 71st Regiment, will make their full parade on Wednesday afternoon, September 10. The regiment will proceed to Tompkins Square for drill and review. This will be their first parade under their new name, which was changed from American Rifles in consequence of a change of arms, from the rifle to the musket. They are to be supplied with the new Minie musket, by the 1st of October, in place of the old, worn out, altered and repaired State arms they now use." It was not until June 29, 1857, that the new rifled muskets were given to the 71st Reg't, the 7th Reg't having already been supplied with them, and these "were the only militia regiments in the United States" at that time provided with "this terrible and destructive weapon," which "made them the two best equipped volunteer regiments in the world."—Whittemore, Hist. of the 71st Reg't (1886), 2, 5, 9, 153, 156, 168, 175, 178, 179, 181, 184, 188, 198.

6 The common council appropriates an additional sum of $550 to procure "a copy of the folio edition of the 'Birds of America,' published by John J. Audubon, and a copy of the imperial folio edition of the 'Quadrupeds of North America,' published by John J. Audubon and the Rev. Dr. Bachman, to be presented in behalf

1850 the city of New York, through Mons. A. Vattemare, to the city
June of Paris, and to defray other incidental expenses connected with the 6 subject of international exchanges. . . ."—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XVIII: 174–75.

7 The common council requests the mayor, the president of the board of aldermen, and the president of the board of assistant aldermen, "to tender the hospitalities of this city to such of the authorities of the city of Boston as are now in this city."—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XVIII: 185.

10 The Am. Bible Union is organized by Baptists, who have seceded from the American and Foreign Bible Society.—Man. Com. Coun. (1856), 566.

12 The common council appoints a committee to tender to Senator Daniel S. Dickinson the hospitalities of the city, on his arrival on Monday next, in recognition of his aiding the passage of a bill in the U. S. senate for establishing in this city a branch mint of the U. S.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XVIII: 197–98.

13 The ruins of the Park Theatre are being demolished.—Com. Adv., Je 13, 1850.

14 The so-called "Jenny Lind Concert Hall," on the La Farge property in Mercer St., adjoining "the Bond street House" which "fronts on Broadway," is under construction. A description of it mentions rosewood seats, sofas cushioned with crimson velvet or damask, frescoes, and many other details. The architect and builder is John M. Trimble; the cost is estimated at $85,000. The building is being erected and owned by A. P. Tripler, with the understanding that Mr. Barnum will lease the hall for a certain number of nights. —N. Y. Com. Adv., Je 14, 1850. It was eventually named Tripler Hall, and had a notable career.—L. M. R. K., III: 986. See O 17.

15 Barnum's new theatre is opened.—Eve. Post, Je 15 and 17, 1850. See also 1850, supra.

July The common council permits the industrial convention, now
6 in session in this city, to use the supreme court room in "the new City Hall."—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XVIII: 220.

9 President Zachary Taylor dies in Washington. The next day, Vice-President Millard Fillmore took the oath of office as president. —N. Y. Herald, Jl 11, 1850.

" The common council appoints a committee "to confer with the General Government, relative to selecting a site and erecting a suitable building in the city of New York, for the accommodation of the Post office and United States Courts, Marshal's office, &c."—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XVIII: 234.

" The common council permits the Hudson River R. R. Co. "to run their dumb engine to Chambers street, to test its power and probable safety for conducting their cars to Chambers street."—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XVIII: 227. On Aug. 9, the board accepted an invitation from the railroad company "to witness the operation of their street locomotive engine."—Ibid., XVIII: 286. See D 4.

" The common council orders that the commissioner of repairs and supplies remove "the bow window now projecting from one of the upper windows of the front of the City Hall," and "that the window be restored to its original form, and similar to the other windows of the Hall."—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XVIII: 233.

12 The common council passes resolutions of grief and sympathy on account of the death of President Taylor. It appoints a committee to arrange a suitable demonstration of respect for his memory, and orders that the members of the board shall wear mourning, and cause their respective meeting-places to be hung with it, for 30 days.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XVIII: 263–64.

15 The common council gives permission to James Hall, a contractor, "to lay down a railroad from the rail of the Harlem railroad in Centre street, at Chambers street, through said Chambers street to 150 ft. west of Centre street," to convey marble or granite for the new building of A. T. Stewart & Co., at the north-east corner of Broadway and Chambers St. The permission is not to extend beyond six months, when Hall is to restore the street to as good condition as when the railroad was laid.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XVIII: 250. On June 13, 1851, the board ordered that the track be taken up.—Ibid., XIX: 257.

19 New York is made an archi-episcopal see (Roman Catholic), the suffragans of it being the dioceses of Albany, Brooklyn, Buffalo, Ogdensburg, Rochester, Syracuse, Newark, and Trenton.—Cath. Encycl., XI: 20.

An elaborate funeral pageant is held in honour of the memory July of the late President Taylor (see Jl 9). For full particulars, see 23
N. Y. Herald, Jl 24, 1850; Hone's Diary, II: 386. On Aug. 9, the common council appropriated $3,500 to pay for this.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XVIII: 284.

Gen. Paez, ex-president of the Republic of Venezuela, is wel- Aug.
comed to the city by the mayor, common council, and citizens.— 2
Eve. Post, Ag 3, 1850. On Nov. 9, Gen. Paez presented to the city his sword.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XVIII: 425.

Gen. Garibaldi, the Italian patriot, arrives in New York.— 4
Eve. Post, Ag 5, 1850. He declined a public reception on account of feeble health.—Ibid., Ag 10, 1850. See Ap 28, 1851.

There are at this time 19 public parks in the city, containing in 5 all 170 acres of land. This is considered very disproportionate to the size of New York and the number of its inhabitants.—Eve. Post, Ag 5, 1850.

"On the corner of Fifteenth Street next to Spingler Institute 6 is the Church of the Puritans. Dr. Cheever is the minister, and he and the church people are called a long name, which means that they think slavery is wicked, and they help the black slaves that come from the South, to get to Canada where they will be free."—Havens, Diary of a little girl in Old New York, 93–94. See Pl. 136, Vol. III.

The common council orders that the N. Y. & Harlem R. R. Co. 8 erect parapet walls and arches along their railroad in Fourth Ave. between 32d and 42d Sts., according to stated specifications and in conformity to a plan drawn by Edwin Smith, city surveyor, dated May 15, 1850. The work shall be commenced by Oct. 1, 1850, and completed by May 1, 1851.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XVIII: 274–75. For other improvements which this road was allowed to make in New York this year, see ibid., XVIII: 44, 244, 246, 259, 338, 361. The open cut was bricked over, and converted into the present arched tunnel at that time.

The common council orders that the com'r of repairs and sup- 9
plies "cause the City Hall to be thoroughly repaired, the court rooms ventilated, its interior repainted, and a new roof placed on the same; also the dials of the clock regilded," for all which the sum of $18,000 is appropriated.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XVIII: 284–85.

The common council appropriates $50,000 for erecting work- " house buildings on Blackwell's Island.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XVIII: 289.

"Mr. Silas Wood has in course of erection in Cherry street, be- 20
tween Rosevelt street and Franklin Square, a large house which when completed will have no less than one hundred and forty-four residences. It is built with the design of supplying the laboring people with cheap lodgings, and will have many advantages over the cellars and other miserable abodes, which too many are forced to inhabit. The depth of the building is two hundred and forty feet, with a front of thirty-five feet. Each tenement consisting of two rooms and a hall; is nearly eighteen feet in width, and about twenty feet in length; giving twenty-four residences to each floor.

"This is a praiseworthy enterprise and well worthy of imitation."—Eve. Post, Ag 20, 1850. This seems to be the start of the "improved dwellings" movement in New York.

"The old rail on the Harlem Railroad, between Twenty-first 26 and Twenty-fifth streets has been taken up to give place to a heavier and better one. The remainder of the road from Twenty-first street to the depot at the Park will shortly be laid."—Eve. Post, Ag 26, and N 20, 1850.

The corner-stone of the N. Y. Medical College is laid on 13th 29
St., east of Fourth Ave.—Eve. Post, Ag 30, 1850. The building was completed in September, the clinics were opened in October, and lectures commenced in November. The building occupied the site of the circular reservoir in East 13th St. between Third and Fourth Aves. (see 1831). For names of its officers and faculty, and other information, with wood-cut view of the façade, see The Great Metropolis: or New-York Almanac for 1851, 57, and N. Y. Herald, Ag 30, 1850. Cf. 1851.

Mayor Woodhull transmits to the board of aldermen a commu- 2 nication from a committee of the Brooklyn board stating that they have been appointed "a Select Committee to examine and report 1850 Sept. 2 upon the expediency of uniting the cities of New York and Brooklyn." The committee desires the common council of New York to appoint "Committees from their two Boards, with whom they may have an opportunity of conferring on the subject." A committee of the Williamsburg board (Williamsburg was not united with Brooklyn until 1855), they say, desires to join in such a conference. The mayor urges the board to give this request "from a friendly neighbor" such consideration "as the nature of the subject may be deemed to require."—Proc., Bd. of Ald., XXXIX: 566.

5 The common council resolves to lease to the N. Y., New Haven, & Hartford R. R., for 21 years, at an annual rental of $6,000 plus taxes and assessments, the block bounded by Centre, Franklin, Elm, and White Sts. The arsenal buildings on Elm and Franklin Sts. are to remain for the use of the military until May 1, 1851. The company is to improve the premises within a year from the date of the lease. The lease shall contain covenants for renewal at the expiration of the term. The premises are "to continue during said leases for a railroad depot." The lease shall not be construed as a consent by the city for the company to use any street or avenue "for the purpose of running cars thereon, by virtue of an agreement with the Harlem Railroad Company," or as a waiver of the city's right "to regulate and control the said New York and New Haven Railroad Company, to the same extent it can now control the New York and Harlem Railroad Company."—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XVIII: 299–300. A freight depot was erected here, which was abandoned in 1885.—L. M. R. K., III: 975.

" The common council orders that curb- and gutter-stones be set on 42d St., between Fifth and Tenth Aves., that the sidewalks be 30 ft. wide between Fifth and Eighth Aves., and that a space 4 ft. wide be flagged through this sidewalk.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XVIII: 300–1.

7 The common council directs the clerk of the board to cause to be published 500 copies of "Kent's charter, with notes, as published, and the amended charter of 1849;" and appropriates $1,000 for the purpose.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XVIII: 313.

11 Jenny Lind gives her first concert in America, at Castle Garden, the tickets having been sold at auction by her manager.—N. Y. Herald, S 12, 1850. See also Brown, Hist. of the N. Y. Stage, I: 91; Hone's Diary, II: 389, 390, 391; Lossing, Hist. of N. Y. City, II: 678, 680. There is an engraving of the "First Appearance of Jenny Lind in America" in the Emmet coll., item No. 11543, in N. Y. P. L. The scene in Castle Garden during her famous concert on this occasion is also shown in a lithographic view by N. Currier, in Eno collection, N. Y. P. L. Other Castle Garden views, sketched during her concerts in New York, were published May 17, 1851, in Gleason's Pictorial, I: 40, 41.

Her share, under a contract with Barnum, after deducting the large expenses of her first concert, amounted to $12,600, all of which she distributed among the charitable and benevolent institutions of New York City.—Hone's Diary, II: 391–92.

13 Amir Bey, Turkish ambassador to the U. S., is publicly welcomed to New York.—Eve. Post, S 14, 1850. On Sept. 16, he received visitors at the city hall.—Ibid., S 16, 1850.

" The common council authorises the N. Y. & Harlem R. R. Co. "to take up their double track, from the corner of Grand and Centre streets, to the Bowery, and lay down a single track in the centre of the street, from the corner of Grand street, through Centre and Broome streets to the Bowery; down the Bowery to Grand street, and through Grand street to Centre street."—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XVIII: 338.

19 "Stewart is making a palace of a store. He takes in the whole front of the block on Broadway, with fifteen windows in front, and all of marble."—Correspondence of James Fenimore-Cooper (1922), II: 687. The building still stands, on the east side of Broadway between Chambers and Reade St., the northern portion, at the Reade St. corner, occupying the site of Washington Hall.—See L. M. R. K., III: 986, under "Washington Hall," where, however, the situation of this hall is erroneously given as on the "N. E. cor."

20 Philip Hone writes: "The Union Club has removed to the large house belonging to Mr. Kernochan, opposite to me."—Hone's Diary, II: 392. This was 691 Broadway.—City Directory, Wilson, Mem. Hist., IV: 236; Union Club List (1912), 2; L. M. R. K., III: 939. In 1855 (q. v.), the club moved into its own building, at the north-west cor. of Fifth Ave. and 21st St. Sept. 20

Jenny Lind leaves New York for Boston.—Eve. Post, S 26, 1850. 25

Under an act of congress of Aug. 8, 1848, the city now acquires title by government grant to part of the land at West, Washington, and Gansevoort Sts., on which Gansevoort Market was afterwards built. Another part of the ground was already vested in the city by the original charter grants, and a third parcel was acquired, by purchase, of a private owner.—Prendergast, Record of Real Estate (1914), citing libers of conveyances. Oct. 12

Tripler Hall is publicly opened for the first time.—Eve. Post, O 18, 1850; see also handbill in Emmet coll., item No. 11872. It was originally to be called Jenny Lind Hall, as it was planned for the great Swedish singer.—Eve. Post, S 7, 27, O 10 and 15, 1850. It was sold under foreclosure, Nov. 25, 1851, to John La Farge.—Ibid., N 26, 1851. For the later changes in name, see L. M. R. K., III: 986, and King's Handbook, 580. A handbill of April 13, 1861, when it was the Winter Garden, is in the Emmet coll., item No. 11873. 17

The common council orders that the commissioner of repairs and supplies "have a suitable building erected on the northeast corner of Elm and White streets, for the use of first division of the New York State Militia," at an expense not exceeding $10,000.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XVIII: 406. On Mar. 24, 1851, $8,000 was added to the appropriation.—Ibid., XIX: 105. 18

The common council appropriates $2,000 for constructing a fountain in Washington Square, the amount to be taken from the balance of the appropriation now remaining for the purpose of erecting an iron railing around the square.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XVIII: 415. 19

Jenny Lind returns to New York from Philadelphia.—Eve. Post, O 22, 1850. On Oct. 24, she began a series of concerts at Tripler Hall.—Ibid., O 24 and 25, 1850. 21

The corner-stone of the workhouse on Blackwell's Island is laid. The projected building is described.—Eve. Post, N 4, 1850. Nov. 2

Ambrose C. Kingsland is elected mayor.—N. Y. Herald, N 6 and 7, 1850; Hone's Diary, II: 395. He was sworn in on Jan. 1, 1851, succeeding Caleb S. Woodhull (see Ap 10, 1849).—Ibid., Ja 3, 1851. Kingsland was succeeded by Jacob A. Westervelt.—See N 2, 1852. 5

James Gordon Bennett, editor of the Herald, is assaulted on Broadway by John Graham, defeated candidate for district attorney, upon whom he had made "most gross and unprovoked attacks," previous to the election.—Eve. Post, N 9, 1850; Hone's Diary, II: 395. See also Post, N 11, 1850. 9

" The common council orders that a fountain be placed in Tompkins Square, under the direction of the Croton Aqueduct Dept., and appropriates $2,000 therefore.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XVIII: 423.

15 The common council orders that signs be placed where required on the corners of all streets above 21st St.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XVIII: 439.

19 Webster, on his way to Washington, attends Jenny Lind's concert in New York, and he is cheered with great enthusiasm as "the advocate of the Union and supporter of the Constitution." Hone records an incident, as related by N. P. Willis, describing his deportment and that of the singer.—Hone's Diary, II: 396–97.

22 Cooper writes to his wife from the Broadway Hotel: "The Germans are driving the Irish from the field. Even the groceries are passing into the hands of the Germans and beer is supplanting whiskey.

"The growth of the town is incredible. Brooklyn has 120,000 souls; Williamsburg 30,000 and Manhattan 550,000, it is said."—Correspondence of James Fenimore-Cooper (1922), II: 693.

23 "The amount of real estate owned by the city, in markets alone, is valued at $1,116,000, from which is derived an annual revenue of $52,990. There are at present not more than eleven markets in New York—a very inconsiderable number for the size and demands of the city."—Eve. Post, N 23, 1850.

" The common council permits William Perris to survey a part of Manhattan Island from 42d St. to the Harlem River.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XVIII: 421. See D 10.

1850 Nov. 28 Speaker Howell Cobb and Gen. Lewis Cass hold a public levee in the governor's room in the city hall. Speeches are made in favour of perpetuating the union of the states, in opposition to the feeling of disunion now widely prevalent.—N. Y. Herald, N 28, 29, 1850.

Dec. 4 The common council permits the Hudson River R. R. Co. "to propel their cars from Chambers street to Thirty-first street, by their street locomotive, or 'Dumb Engine' [see Jl 9], upon the condition that the same shall not be run at a greater speed than six miles an hour; and also, that they shall employ a proper person to precede the trains on horseback, to give necessary warning in a suitable manner of their approach, . . ."—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XVIII: 466. See O 24, 1851.

10 The common council orders that the corporation counsel take the necessary steps for opening Bloomingdale Square, between Eighth and Ninth Aves., 53d and 57th Sts.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XVIII: 483–84. On March 6, 1857 (q. v.), this square was ordered closed.

" The common council orders that the clerk of the board purchase 150 of Wm. Perris's maps of the city of New York (with the new fire districts laid out thereon) at $1.50 per map, and that a copy of each he furnished to each engine, hose, and hook-and-ladder company.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XVIII: 484.

23 The "Swamp Church" (Lutheran), so called from its location in the marshy region of the "Tan Yards" (at the junction of William and Frankfort Sts., east of French's Hotel), is being demolished. "Of late years it has sadly fallen from its former high estate. Since it was vacated by its original occupants, it has been used as a place of worship by a society of colored people [1831 to 1848], then as an auction house, and lastly as a stable. . . . From its site is to rise speedily a large hotel."—N. Y. Jour. of Commerce, D 23, 1850. It was built in 1767 (q. v.).—Greenleaf, 53–54; Doc. Hist. N. Y., III: 725; L. M. R. K., III: 929.

" Brougham's Lyceum on Broadway near Broome St. opens.—Eve. Post, D 23, 1850. There is a handbill of this theatre in the Emmet coll., item No. 11862. Its later changes in name were as follows: In 1852 it became Wallack's Lyceum. It was abandoned by the Wallacks in 1861, and on May 22, 1861, the theatre was opened as the Broadway Music Hall. On March 1, 1862, it was rechristened "The New York Athenæum." On March 17 of the same year, its name was changed to "Mary Provost's Theatre," and on April 21, to the "Olympic Theatre." On Sept. 7, 1863, it reopened under the title of "The New York Theatre." On Nov. 10, 1863, its name again changed to "The Broadway Amphitheatre," and on May 2, 1864, it became "The Broadway Theatre."—Brown, I: 472, 477, 508–12. See also L. M. R. K., III: 982.

31 More cotton was received in New York City during the year just ending than in any other American city except New Orleans and Mobile; New York was surpassed in its exportation of cotton during the same time only by New Orleans, Mobile, and Charleston.—E. R. Johnson, History of the Domestic and Foreign Commerce of the U. S., I: 342.

— In this year, Robert Bonner purchased The Ledger, a commercial sheet, and converted it into a family newspaper.—S. N. D. North, The Newspaper and Periodical Press (1884), 119.

— In this year, the clipper "Flying Cloud" sailed from New York to San Francisco in 89 days and 18 hours, making 374 miles in one day.—New International Encyc. (1923), V: 467.

— In this year, Lossing published his Pictorial Field-book of the Revolution.—Winsor, VIII: 480.

— A very scarce coloured lithographic view of the "Bay of New York Taken from the Battery," reproduced and described as Pl. 137-a, Vol. III, bears this date.

— In this year were published the two large Dripps maps (the first of a series that continued until 1880), one showing the locations of houses in the built-up parts of the city south of 50th St., and the other the locations of country residences, etc., north of 50th St.—See Pls. 138 and 138A, Vol. III, and their descriptions, III: 706–7. See also Eve. Post, Jl 16, 1851. See D 18.

— In this year was published The charter of the city of New York, with notes thereon. Also, a treatise on the powers and duties of the mayor, aldermen and assistant aldermen. Prepared at the request of the Common Council, by Chancellor Kent.—See copy in the N. Y. P. L. A work of the same title appeared in 1836.

1851 — In this year, Asher Taylor, the "First Marshal" in the mayor's office, compiled and published A hand book of streets & distances, showing the length, and intermediate distance from street to street, of all the streets in the city of New York. Compiled for use in the Mayor's office. One of its uses was to determine distances travelled by cartmen and hackmen, so that persons employing them might verify the charges for service.

— In this year, the first (and only) issue of Doggett's New York City Street Directory appeared, a directory arranged according to the streets and house numbers, instead of alphabetically by names. The territory covered by the volume extended from the Battery to 25th St. and included about 85,000 names. This directory is now very scarce. There is a copy in N. Y. P. L.

— The Great Metropolis or New-York Almanac for 1851, by H. Wilson, contains, among other new information, an account of the city's daily newspapers of the time, which is particularly informing (pp. 83–88, 125), and a well-digested catalogue of the secret societies, lodges, etc., in New York (pp. 118–25). Among the advertisements is a wood-cut view of the interior of W. H. Disbrow's riding-school, at 20 Fourth Ave.

— In this year, H. A. Jones made a map of the city north of 50th St.—See map No. 1173 in bureau of topography, borough president's office.

Striker at foot of "52d St." (error for 53d St.—see L. M. R. K., III: 952), North River, 450.

— In this year, the old homestead of Jacob Kip, at Kip's Bay, overlooking the East River (first erected in 1654, q. v., or 1655, partially destroyed by fire in 1696 and rebuilt), was demolished on the opening of 35th St. through the exact site of the house.—Post, Abstract of Title of Kip's Bay Farm, I: iii; Man. Com. Coun. (1852), 472; "New York Society in the Olden Time," by Bishop Kip, in Putnam's Mag., S, 1870, reprinted in Stone's Hist. of N. Y. City, Appendix XVI (p. 100). On April 30, 1920, the Kip's Bay Neighbourhood Assn. celebrated with pageant and fête some of the noted incidents that happened on and near this property. These are described in the N. Y. Times, Ap 18, 1920. See also L. M. R. K., III: 950; Proc., App'd by Mayor, XIX: 358. For exact location of the house in relation to the old roads, see map No. 142 in the bu. of engineering, div. of design, municipal bldg. It stood on the north side of a cross-road leading from the Kingsbridge Road to East River north of Kip's Bay. See also O 27, 1843.

— In this year, the N. Y. & New Haven R. R. Co. erected a depot at the south-east corner of Broadway and Canal St.—From chron. supplied by the company; L. M. R. K., III: 975; Dripp's Map of 1851.

— In this year, the Roman Catholic Orphan Asylum (see Jl 28, 1846) was built, on the east side of Fifth Ave. between 51st and 52d Sts. For building developments in this connection, see King's Handbook (1893), 430; L. M. R. K., III: 955; Lossing, Hist. of N. Y. City, II: 701; Perris's Insurance Map, 1859; Bromley's Atlas, 1879. See, further, Ap 13, 1852.

— In this year, the De Milt Dispensary was established.—King's Handbook of N. Y., 488.

— The Union Hotel, at 496 Broadway; the Collamore House, cor. of Spring St. on the east side of Broadway; the Philharmonic Soc. (see 1853), at 483 Broadway; Brougham's Lyceum, at 485 Broadway; the College of Pharmacy, at 511 Broadway; the Tripler Hall (see, further, 1853), at 677 Broadway; the Eolian Hotel, at 834 Broadway, all date from this year.—Man. Com. Coun. (1865), 635–36, 652. For the Metropolitan Hotel, see S 13. Brougham's Lyceum was opened Dec. 23, 1850 (q. v.).

— In this year, Barnum's Hotel was named the Howard House. See also A. Pl. 25, Vol. III. It stood at No. 434 Broadway, east side. —Man. Com. Coun. (1865), 544, 635.

— In this year, the city had 239 churches, divided as follows: 30 Baptist; 9 Congregational; 17 Dutch Reformed; 3 Friends; 10 Jewish Synagogues; 6 Lutheran; 34 Methodist Episcopal; 3 Methodist Protestant; 40 Protestant Episcopal; 2 New Jerusalem; 36 Presbyterian; 5 Associate Presbyterian; 2 Associate Reformed Presbyterian; 4 Reformed Presbyterian; 3 Primitive Christians; 20 Roman Catholic; 2 Unitarian; 4 Universalist; 1 Wesleyan Methodist; 7 miscellaneous.—Man. Com. Coun. (1851), 357.

— In this year, the medical faculty of New York University sold

1851 — the Stuyvesant Institute (see 1841), bought a lot on 14th St., the site of the present Tammany Hall, and erected there a new building for the use of the school. This was used until the spring of 1866 (q. v.), when it burned. The Medical College then took up temporary quarters in the New York Hospital.—N. Y. University Bulletin, Je 30, 1911; Chamberlain, N. Y. University (Boston, 1901). Cf. Ag 29, 1850.

— In this year, the Kennedy mansion, at No. 1 Broadway, became "The Washington." It continued under this name until 1881.—See description of Pl. 98, III: 590. See also L. M. R. K., III: 950, where, however, an error occurs in the statement that this hotel is shown in the view by C. Burton in the Bourne Series of N. Y. views. It was a view of "Washington Hotel," at the s. e. cor. of Broadway and Reade St., which Bourne published.

— In this year, Trinity Chapel, on west 25th St., near Broadway, was commenced; it was completed in 1856, having been consecrated April 17, 1855.—Trinity Church Bicentennial Celebration, My 5, 1897.

— In this year was published the first of the series of guide-books, issued by C. S. Francis & Co., entitled (on cover) Francis' Picture of New-York and Strangers Guide. It bears copyright date of 1845. Later issues owned by the N. Y. H. S. are those of 1854, 1857, and 1859. See also Gen. Cat. of N. Y. P. L., title "N. Y. City," subdiv. "Guide Books."

— Gosling's popular-priced restaurant, occupying the former German church on Nassau St., "dines over a thousand people every day," including Sundays.—The Stranger's Handbook (1851), 81.

"The Park contains the largest fountain in the city. The basin is one hundred feet in diameter, and the circumference is sometimes entirely filled by the various jets of the 'Holiday fountain.' The machinery of the fountain is so arranged as to supply a variety of forms in the jets . . .

"In the summer season the [rock] fountain [in Bowling Green] is occasionally illuminated with coloured lights, . . . The enclosure is now made to hold some deer, geese and other live animals . . .

"Hudson Square, or St. John's Park, . . . is accessible to the people in its neighbourhood who have keys. . . . It contains a very tasty fountain, and is by far the most beautiful public square in the city. . . .

"Tompkins' Square, which is used for a parade ground, is one of the largest squares in the city. It is not yet much frequented, as the trees are young, and the place not finished. It is between Avenue A and B, and between Sixth and Tenth streets."—Ibid., 83–85.

— In this year, the 69th New York (Irish Brigade) was organized.—Chas. S. Clark in The Eve. Post, F 26, 1916.

Jan. 3 By this time, Lexington Ave. had been opened from 42d to 66th St., at a total cost of $63,500.84.—Man. Com. Coun. (1857), 538. See Ap 24, 1848.

4 As it "has been the custom of the Common Council . . . for nearly half a century, to obtain a portrait of the Chief Magistrate of the state," the board now orders that the com'r of repairs and supplies, under the direction of the com. on arts and sciences, be instructed to obtain a full-length portrait of Gov. Hamilton Fish, to be placed in the governor's room; $500 is appropriated for it, and $100 for framing it.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XVIII: 538.

10 The common council directs the commissioner of repairs and supplies, acting under the direction of the committee on arts and sciences, to procure a portrait of Mayor Caleb S. Woodhull, to be suitably framed and placed in the governor's room and it appropriates $250 for this object.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XIX: 4.

13 Henry James delivers a lecture on "Democracy," before the Mechanics Institute, at Hope Chapel.—Eve. Post, Ja 14, 1851. On Jan. 21, he began a series of lectures on art at Stuyvesant Institute.—Ibid., Ja 22, 1851. Hope Chapel was at 718 Broadway, and dated from 1850.—Man. Com. Coun. (1865), 635.

15 Six buildings, in course of erection in 21st St. between Fifth and Sixth Aves., collapse and kill or injure 30 workmen.—Eve. Post, Ja 16, 1851.

17 "The operations in the building line, during the present year, will doubtless, judging from the number of contracts which have been already entered into, exceed those even of 1850, when near two thousand houses were erected. It is rumored that one of the Astor family has contracted for the erection of two hundred buildings, from three to five stories high, on Forty-fourth, Forty-fifth, Forty-sixth and Forty-seventh streets, the foundations of which will be laid as soon as the contract is completed. These buildings will be situated mainly between Broadway and the Ninth avenue. The property on which they are to be erected, is at present occupied by several small frame houses and shanties. . . ."—Eve. Post, Ja 17, 1851. Jan. 17

25 The common council orders that the commissioner of repairs and supplies "contract with Richard H. Bull for the immediate completion of the telegraph wire and apparatus to all the fire alarm stations in the city;" also that he "cause them to be connected with the astronomical observatory, on the corner of Eleventh street and Second avenue, and the bell ringers be instructed to strike at 9 o'clock in the evening, upon a signal to be given from said observatory;" $600 is appropriated for these objects.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XIX: 26.

Feb. — By this time, the missionary work of Rev. L. M. Pease (see 1848) was well under way at Five Points, where he had established in rented houses various branches of a work which later developed into the Five Points Mission and House of Industry. For an account of this, see Lossing's Hist. of N. Y. City, II: 632, passim. See Mr, 1852.

5 In view of the recent annual report of the Croton aqueduct dept., "that the means of storing a larger supply of water upon this island, cannot with safety be much longer deferred," the common council directs that department "to purchase, without unnecessary delay, enough of suitable ground upon which to construct a new reservoir, of capacity sufficient with those already built, to contain a supply for at least sixty days consumption . . ."—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XIX: 58–59. See Je 30, 1853.

6 The common council authorises the N. Y. & Harlem R. R. Co. to lay "Groove rails . . . for a single track, on the westerly side of Chatham street, from the present terminus at Centre street, to the southerly end of the Park, with a turn-out, . . . for the exclusive use and purpose of running their city line of small passenger cars upon, to that point. . . ." The rails shall not be laid within 20 ft. of the cross-walk at the corner of Broadway and the southern end of the Park.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XIX: 60–61.

7 "The real estate and other property owned by the city, consisting of parks and other public grounds, school houses and lots, markets, ferry property, municipal institutions, offices, etc., is valued at $19,505,310.88. The amount expended for the Croton Aqueduct and Receiving and Distributing Reservoirs has been calculated at $14,327,583.95."—Eve. Post, F 7, 1851.

12 That there was a "city flag" at this time is shown by an order of the common council for a new one, the present one being "so out of repair as to be unfit for use."—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XIX: 76.

22 Washington's birthday is celebrated with unusual demonstrations. Among the principal features are the decorations and illumination of the city hall, which included a "colossal, full-length portrait" of Washington, and a dinner to 500 guests at Niblo's Garden, at which Edward Everett was the principal speaker. Everett "drew a picture of the past history and progress of the United States, and contrasted the position which, in the nature of things, the country would occupy in case of a dissolution of the confederacy, in a masterly manner." For full description, and reports of the speeches, see N. Y. Herald, F 23, 24, 1851.

" There is a "Grand demonstration" of the Order of United Americans (see 1851) in Tripler Hall. This organization appears to have had over 50 local chapters at this time.—From program of the meeting, filed in room 319, N. Y. P. L.; Eve. Post, F 24, 1851.

28 The first commencement of the N. Y. Medical College is held in the college building on 13th St. near Broadway.—Eve. Post, Mr 1, 1851.

Mar. — In this month began The Republic: a Monthly Magazine of American Literature Politics and Art, edited by Thomas R. Whitney, and published at 100 Nassau St. This publication served the interests of the Order of United Americans (see F 22), of which Editor Whitney was the secretary, and was declared to be "a purely American Journal for the parlor and fireside."—From prospectus of first issue, in room 319, N. Y. P. L. The first issue in the N. Y. P. L. is that of Dec., 1851.

1 Hone records that he has been "reading a book, . . . called 'Reveries of a Bachelor,' by a very clever, ingenious writer, under the assumed name of Ik Marvel," which, representing "imaginary scenes in life," and "written in an easy, unpretending style, of deep pathos," causes "tears to flow," and is "alternately bright with the radiant sunshine of life."—Hone's Diary, II: 399–400. This is

1851 near the end of his journal, the last entry being dated April 30,—
Mar. a poem of eleven stanzas on "Prayer."—Ibid., II: 402–3. See,
1 further, My 5.

2 On Sunday morning, March 2, St. Thomas's Church, at the north-west corner of Broadway and Houston St. (built in 1824–6), was destroyed by fire.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Mr 3, 1851; L. M. R. K., III: 934. For view of the building, see the Evergreen, My, 1849. For new church on the same site, see Ap 3, 1852.

24 The old Gouverneur Market is to be demolished, and, an appropriation having been made to erect a three-storey building in the centre of the block at the head of Gouverneur Slip, bounded by Water and Front Sts., the contracts are awarded.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XIX: 105, 132. The new building was completed in 1852.—Ibid., XX: 424.

Apr. The legislature provides for the appointment by the governor
5 of an agent to be sent to the World's Fair, to be held in London in May of this year, whose duty shall be to superintend the exhibition of articles which shall be sent there in his keeping from this state.—Laws of N. Y. (1851), chap. 89.

12 The legislature enacts that "The clerk of the court of appeals shall, within twenty days after the passage of this act, transfer and deliver all records, documents and papers now in his custody relating to the opening, widening, altering, extending, or improving streets, roads, avenues, public squares or public places in the city of New-York, to the clerk of the city and county of New-York." The latter shall arrange them for convenient reference in his office. —Laws of N. Y. (1851), chap. 156.

16 The legislature lays out a "new street" (not laid down in the Commissioners' Map of 1807–11), by extending Broadway from 71st to 86th St., this section of the (later) Broadway being part of the old Bloomingdale Road.—Laws of N. Y. (1851), chap. 183. The estimated cost of this improvement was found, a year later, to be $37,155.87.—Man. Com. Coun. (1857), 539. Cf. Mr 31, 1849.

22 The Erie Railroad, which was chartered on April 24, 1832 (q.v.), is completed and opened to Dunkirk on Lake Erie from Piermont on the Hudson (opposite Dobb's Ferry).—N. Y. Tribune, Ap 25, 1851. See My 14.

28 Gen. Garibaldi (see Ag 4, 1850) sails from New York for California. "During the past winter, Garibaldi has been residing on Staten Island, engaged in the business of making candles, in company with a fellow-countryman."—Eve. Post, Ap 30, 1851.

May The first number of Gleason's Pictorial makes its appearance,
3 in Boston. Ballou's Pictorial succeeded it. Both series were profusely illustrated with American and foreign scenes and portraits.

" The citizens of New York recently presented to Daniel Webster, secretary of state, as a token of respect for his defence of the Constitution, a handsome carriage, made to order by Wood, Tomlinson & Co. of New York, and a span of horses, the total cost of which was $2,500.—Gleason's Pictorial, I: 8 (My 3, 1851), with illustration.

5 In a message to the common council, Mayor Kingsland calls attention to the need of recreation spaces up town: "It seems obvious to me that the entire tongue of land south of the line drawn across the Park [the present City Hall Park], is destined to be devoted entirely and solely, to commercial purposes; and the Park and Battery, which were formerly favorite places of resort for pleasure and recreation for citizens whose residences were below that line, are now deserted. The tide of population is rapidly flowing to the northern section of the island, and it is here that provision should be made for the thousands whose dwellings will, ere long, fill up the vacant streets and avenues north of Union Park. . . .

". . . There are thousands who pass the day of rest among the idle and dissolute, in porter-houses, or in places more objectionable, who would rejoice in being enabled to breathe the pure air in such a place, while the ride and drive through its avenues, free from the noise, dust and confusion inseparable from all thoroughfares, would hold out strong inducements for the affluent to make it a place of resort.

"There is no park on the island deserving the name, and while I cannot believe that any one can be found to advance an objection against the expediency of having such a one in our midst, I think that the expenditure of a sum necessary to procure and lay out a park of sufficient magnitude to answer the purposes above noted would be well and wisely appropriated, and would be returned to us fourfold, in the health, happiness and comfort of those whose interests are specially intrusted to our keeping—the poorer classes.

"The establishment of such a park would prove a lasting monu- May ment to the wisdom, sagacity and forethought of its founders, and 5 would secure the gratitude of thousands yet unborn, for the blessings of pure air, and the opportunity for innocent, healthful enjoyment. . . ."—16th Ann. Rep., Am. Scenic & Hist. Pres. Soc. (1911), 449–50.

The message was referred to the committee on lands and places, and this committee recommended that the 160 acres lying between the East River, Third Ave., 66th and 75th Sts., belonging principally to Jones and Schermerhorn, be taken for a park.—Ibid., 451. See Ja 7, 1850; Je 6, 1851.

" Philip Hone, former mayor and for many years a prominent citizen of New York, dies at the age of 70.—Eve. Post, My 5, 1851.

7 Jenny Lind begins her final engagement in New York with a concert at Castle Garden.—Eve. Post, My 7 and 8, 1851.

13 President Fillmore and his cabinet come to New York to participate in the celebration on the opening of the Erie Railroad (see My 14).—N. Y. Herald, My 14, 1851; Proc., App'd by Mayor, XIX: 111–12. For views of the president's landing at Castle Garden, the procession up Broadway to the city hall, etc., see Gleason's Pictorial, I: 88–89.

14 The completion of the Erie Railroad (see Ap 22) is celebrated along the entire route. President Fillmore and his cabinet proceed up the Hudson by steamboat from the foot of Duane St., with many other guests, to the beginning of the railroad at Piermont. The journey of 462 miles westward was broken at Elmira, and at Buffalo. Among the guests in the party from New York were various state officials, ex-Mayor Mickle, Anson G. Phelps, R. H. McCurdy, etc.—N. Y. Herald, My 15, 16, 17, 1851. For a history of the origin, progress, and completion of the road, see ibid., My 2, 1851. A scarce and unusual collection of early books and pamphlets relating to the Erie Railroad was disposed of at the Henry F. De Puy sale at The Anderson Galleries, New York, Nov. 18, 1919, for titles of which see catalogue. See also Mem. Hist. of N. Y., III: 415–18.

20 "The improvements in the vicinity of the High Bridge, have made it a place of very convenient resort; a flight of commodious steps lead down the west bank of the river to the aqueduct; a fine large hotel will be opened near it for company in about two weeks, and the drive through Carmanville is highly picturesque. The view from the hotel is one of the finest we have ever seen."—Eve. Post, My 20, 1851.

24 Among the many improvements now under way in New York, preparations are in progress for the erection of the Bank of the Republic, at the north-east corner of Broadway and Wall St. The Mercantile Bank is about to build at the corner of Broadway and John St. All the buildings on the south side of Dey St. "are being either wholly or partially taken down—partly for the purpose of widening the street ten feet, and partly for the erection of a better and more respectable class of buildings."—N. Y. Herald, My 24, 1851.

" A conveyance of land on Fifth Ave. between 53d and 54th Sts. having been made by the city to the Anglo-Am. Free Church of St. George the Martyr, the common council extends the time two additional years to enable the church to erect a hospital and chapel on the land granted to them; at the same time, the board orders that the conveyance be corrected so that it will describe the property conveyed as lying between 54th and 55th Sts. instead of 53d and 54th Sts.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XIX: 158. See, however, N 20.

June The mayor approves a joint resolution that Wall St. be wid-
4 ened four feet on the north side. The building on the corner of Wall and Nassau Sts. is permitted to remain until June 1, 1860.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XIX: 230.

" The common council directs the com'r of repairs and supplies to procure plans for rebuilding Essex Market (see O 21, 1836); and orders that, "when the new market is erected on Grand street, between Essex and Ludlow streets," the com'r of the sinking fund be directed to sell the lots in the rear belonging to the city.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XIX: 229. The committee advertised in Dec. for proposals to rebuild.—Ibid., XIX: 229. See also L. M. R. K., III: 958.

" The city pays John Vanderlyn $100 to cover his expenses in going to Washington to paint the portrait of Gen. Taylor, late president of the U. S.

It also pays Chas. Jarvis $200 in full payment of his portrait of 1851 Je 4 Gen. Paez, and orders that it be placed in the governor's room.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XIX: 228.

5 The common council awards several contracts, carrying appropriations totalling $96,715, to the lowest bidders, "for building a three story building in the Park, between the new City Hall and the Rotunda, for court rooms and offices," and orders that the building be completed on or before May 1, 1852.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XIX: 241. See 1852.

6 The common council directs the corporation counsel to apply to the legislature for the appointment of commissioners to take for use as a public park the land between 66th and 75th Sts., Third Ave. and East River, and the portion of the Schermerhorn estate lying adjacent to it between 64th and 66th Sts., Third Ave. and East River; also that the comptroller and mayor be authorised to negotiate for the purchase of this land any time before the appointment of such commissioners.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XIX: 241–42. This was Jones's Wood, so named from the fact that about 90 acres of the proposed tract was covered with trees and belonged to John Jones, whose house stood on the line of 68th St., east of Avenue A.—16th Ann. Rep., Am. Scenic & Hist. Pres. Soc. (1911), 451.

John Flavel Mines ("Felix Oldboy"), writing in 1886–90, said of Jones's Woods: "It was the last fortress of the forest primeval that once covered the rocky shores of the East river, and its wildness was almost savage. . . . Later, its shores were renowned for its fisheries, and under the shadows of its rocky bluff and overhanging oaks the youth of a former generation cast their lines. . . . The ninety acres which composed the wooded farm was known in olden time as the Louvre."—Ibid.; L. M. R. K., III: 966. See, further, Jl 11.

9 The first of the annual firemen's parades is held in New York.—N. Y. Herald, Je 10, 1851. The second was held on June 14, 1852, and the third, the most imposing, on Oct. 13, 1856.

12 During this year, the work of completing the Hudson River R. R. from Poughkeepsie to Albany was under way. On June 12, an experimental trip was made from Albany to Hudson. On the 14th, there was an excursion from Albany to Hudson for the benefit of the Hudson Orphan Asylum. On the 16th, the road was opened for business between these points. On July 7, it was opened for business from Albany to Catskill; and, on Aug. 7, from Albany to Tivoli.—From chron. supplied by the company. See O 1.

13 The common council directs the street commissioner to procure a plan for laying out streets and avenues in the city north of 155th St.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XIX: 250.

" The common council passes resolutions of appreciation in connection with the completion of the N. Y. & Erie Railroad, which it calls "emphatically the work of the age."—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XIX: 265–66.

15 The common council directs the N. Y. & Harlem R. R. "to erect, without delay, bridges across their road" at 83d, 84th, and 88th Sts., like the one at 85th St.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XIX: 253.

20 The legislature appropriates $50,000 for the use of the Society for the Reformation of Juvenile Delinquents to enable it to erect new buildings.—Laws of N. Y. (1851), chap. 254. See S 25.

21 The yacht "America" sails from New York for England. For description, see N. Y. Herald, Je 21, 22, 1851; Gleason's Pictorial, I: 76. Regarding the race, see Ag 22.

22 The "Fourteenth Street Presbyterian Church," on the southwest corner of Second Ave. and 14th St., is dedicated.—For woodcut view and description, see The Citizen and Strangers' Pictorial and Business Directory (1853), 57; see also Perris, N. Y. City Insurance Maps (1853), Vol. IV.

23 The legislature incorporates the N. Y. Academy of Medicine.—Laws of N. Y. (1851), chap. 274.

27 The common council directs the comptroller "to collect and place in his office all of the original charters of the Corporation, and that he procure a suitable fire-proof box or safe in which the same may be kept."—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XIX: 274.

28 The legislature authorises the common council to raise money by loans, and to create a public fund, to be called "Public Building Stock, No. 3," for the purpose of reimbursing the city treasury for amounts already expended and to be expended for erecting public buildings.—Laws of N. Y. (1851), chap. 304. See, for example, D 30.

30 The legislature incorporates the N. Y. Juvenile Asylum. Among the incorporators are Robt. B. Minturn, Myndert Van Schaick, Benj. F. Butler, Luther Bradish, Charles O'Conor, John Duer, and Peter Cooper. Its object is to care for, support, and educate children between five and fourteen years of age, voluntarily intrusted to them by their parents or guardians, or committed to their charge by competent authority.—Laws of N. Y. (1851), chap. 332. For an account of this society's work in later years, see the N. Y. Times, Ja 31, 1860; Lossing, Hist. of N. Y. City, II: 687. June 30

The legislature passes an act "to amend, consolidate, and reduce to one act, the various acts relative to the Common Schools of the city of New-York."—Laws of N. Y. (1851), chap. 386. See Ap 11, 1842; My 7, 1847; Mr 25, 1848. July 3

The 75th anniversary of the signing of the Declaration of Independence is celebrated in New York with an immense parade. Views of the cortege passing "Brougham's Lyceum" (the north side of Broadway between Broadway and Centre St.) and "Stuart's Marble Palace" (the present Stewart building, on the east side of Broadway, bet. Chambers and Reade Sts.) appear in Gleason's Pictorial, I: 200, 201. For these buildings, see L. M. R. K. 4

The legislature incorporates the New York House and School of Industry, the object of which is "to supply work to the aged, distressed and ignorant poor, and to instruct them in such branches of work as they may be able to do, and to aid them in doing the same, and to allow them wages or compensation therefor as they may find suitable . . ."—Laws of N. Y. (1851), chap. 394. 8

The legislature alters the Commissioners' Map of 1807–11 by extending Washington St. from Gansevoort St. to 12th St.—Laws of N. Y. (1851), chap. 443. 9

The legislature divides the Sixteenth Ward into two wards by a line running through the centre of 26th St. The portion lying south of the line shall remain the Sixteenth Ward; that lying north shall constitute the Twentieth Ward.—Laws of N. Y. (1851), chap. 453. "

The legislature gives the N. Y. Medical College power to found and maintain a hospital connected with this college.—Laws of N. Y. (1851), chap. 465. "

The legislature incorporates "The Collegiate Institute of the City of New York," three-fourths of whose trustees shall be members of the Methodist Episcopal Church.—Laws of N. Y. (1851), chap. 494. 10

The common council, instead of having only three sessions a year (see Ap 2, 1849), is to hold monthly sessions "commencing on the first Monday of each month, but at no such session shall the members be entitled to draw any per diem allowance for a longer period than eight days."—Laws of N. Y. (1851), chap. 543. 11

The legislature provides, by passing the "Jones's Wood Park Bill," for the city's taking for a public park the land in the Nineteenth Ward, lying between 64th and 75th Sts., Third Ave. and East River (see Je 6). Commissioners are to be appointed to conduct the proceedings, whose acts are to be subject to ratification or rejection by the common council.—Laws of N. Y. (1851), chap. 529. See, however, Proc., App'd by Mayor, XIX: 392; 16th Ann. Rep., Am. Scenic & Hist. Pres. Soc. (1911), 451–52. "

"The passage of this act gave rise to a discussion regarding the relative advantages of other pieces of ground for this purpose, and the Board of Aldermen adopted on the 5th of August, 1851, a resolution appointing a special committee to examine and report, whether there was not, within the limits of the city, a piece of ground more suitable for the purpose of a public park, than that designated in the act . . . [of July 11]."—First Ann. Rep. on the improvement of the Central Park (1857), 6. For Andrew J. Downing's contribution to this discussion, see 16th Ann. Rep., op. cit., 452, citing the Horticulturist, Ag, 1851. For the committee's report, see Ja 2, 1852.

The legislature passes a new mechanics' lien law, repealing laws of this kind passed in 1830 and 1844.—Laws of N. Y. (1851), chap. 513. "

An illustration of High Bridge at Harlem is published. The description states: "This magnificent bridge of stone forms a part of the immense work erected to bring the water of the Croton River to New York. The length of the aqueduct, from Croton River to the City Hall is 44½ miles, and cost the enormous sum of $13,000,000. It is one of the most stupendous efforts of modern times, and one which has proved as successful as it was grand in conception. The bridge itself was erected at a cost of $1,000,000 [cf. N 15, 1848]. Its height is 114 feet from high water mark, and its length is 1450 feet."—Gleason's Pictorial, I: 164. 12

The common council appropriates $1,500 for "the erection of a three-story building in the Park, fronting on Chambers street, and 14

1851 July 14 to extend from Centre street to near the Rotunda, . . .; said building to be occupied by engine company No. 22, hose company No. 28, and hook and ladder company No. 1, and for such other public purpose as may be designated by the Common Council." The com'r of repairs and supplies is directed to advertise for proposals.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XIX: 274.

21 The property of old St. George's Church in Beekman St. is conveyed to the Church of the Holy Evangelists, in accordance with articles of agreement between it and Trinity vestry dated Nov. 30, 1850. The latter church was in Vandewater St., having been established by the City Mission Society, and was now in embarrassed circumstances because of its undesirable location. Among the conditions of the agreement was a provision that the name St. George's Chapel, or Old St. George's Chapel, should be maintained, and that Trinity should be allowed to place a marble slab in front of the tower, inscribed with that name, and bearing dates of erection, destruction by fire, and rebuilding.—Anstice, Hist. St. George's Church, 192–93; descrip. of Pl. 153-b, III: 774. Regarding the end of the tenure of this property by the Church of the Holy Evangelists, see Anstice, 211–14. The property was conveyed to the firm of Phelps, Dodge & Co. in 1868.—Ibid., 214.

24 "Rathbun's Hotel like the City Hotel, Franklin House, and many other popular hotels down town, has been turned into stores. The high rents paid for jobbing stores in Broadway, have forced hotels up town; and the result must be, that business will follow."—Eve. Post, Jl 24, 1851.

29 A high wooden fire-bell tower, at the intersection of Sixth Ave. and W. 10th St., is destroyed by fire. The bell, weighing 9,000 lbs., falls. Soon after, another wooden tower was erected at the northwestern end of the market ground, adjoining the country and fish market-house (see Mr, 1836).—Market Book, 570–71; Haswell's Reminiscences, 477. See also contemporary photographs of this tower in De Voe's scrap-book of N. Y. views at N. Y. Hist. Soc.

30 The common council grants permission to the Eighth Ave. Railroad Co. to lay a double track in the following streets: From the intersection of West Broadway and Chambers St.; through West Broadway to Canal St.; down Canal to Hudson St., and along Hudson St. and Eighth Ave. to the Harlem River.

It grants permission to the Sixth Ave. Railroad Co. to lay a double track in the following streets: Commencing at the intersection of West Broadway and Chambers St.; thence through Chambers to Church St.; Church to Canal, Canal to Wooster, and Wooster to Fourth St., with a single track; thence through Fourth St. to Sixth Ave., and through Sixth Ave. to Harlem, with a double track; also to lay a single track in Thompson St. from Fulton to Canal St., to connect with the Eighth Ave. Railroad. This route was slightly altered the following year.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XIX: 277–80; and XX: 323. See also Man. Com. Coun. (1860), 412; The Metropolitan City of Am., a guide-book (1853), 209. See S 5.

When constructed, the Eighth Ave. R. R. started, at its southern end, at the corner of Barclay and Church Sts., and ran through Church, Chambers, West Broadway, Canal, and Hudson Sts., and Eighth Ave., to 59th St.; returning by the same route, and with a single track through College Place.

The Sixth Ave. R. R. started from the corner of Barclay and Church Sts., and ran through Church and Chambers Sts., West Broadway, Canal, Varick, and Corinne Sts., and Sixth Ave. to 44th St.; returning by the same route, with a single track through College Place.—Man. Com. Coun. (1855), 334.

Aug. 9 "This morning, the attachés of the Custom House were thrown into a state of great excitement by the appearance among them of a lady dressed in the Bloomer costume. . . ." This is described.—Eve. Post, Ag 9, 1851. It was in this year that the Bloomer costume, originated by Mrs. Elizabeth Smith Miller, was adopted and made famous by Mrs. Amelia Bloomer and received her name.—D. C. Bloomer, Life and Writings of Amelia Bloomer, 65–81. See also McMaster, Hist. of the People of the U. S., VIII: 121–22. See Ag 9.

11 The common council orders that benches be placed in "Madison Park" under the direction of the street com'r.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XIX: 289.

14 The common council passes the following resolution in commendation of the Collins Line of steamships (see Ap 27, 1850): "Whereas, In the establishment of a line of steamers between this city and Liverpool, our citizens have exhibited their enterprise and embarked a large capital in the building and equipment of a line of vessels, the most magnificent of their class on the ocean, excelling in speed and accommodation for travelers all ships heretofore constructed; and Aug. 14

"Whereas, The success attendant upon the voyages of these vessels reflects great credit upon our artisans by whom they were constructed, and upon the professional skill which guides them on the ocean, as well as upon E. K. Collins, Esq., and other public spirited individuals who have, by the expenditure of their time and capital, succeeded in establishing an American line of steamers between this port and Liverpool; and

"Whereas, It is deemed proper that the Common Council, on the part of the citizens of New York, should express the gratification so generally felt at the success attendant upon the voyages of the steamers referred to; therefore

"Resolved, That in the establishment and successful operation of the United States Mail line of steamers between this port and Liverpool, this city and country have cause to feel a deep gratification, and to cherish and foster the interests of the company by means of whose capital and influence we are indebted for this additional exhibition of American skill and enterprise.

"Resolved, That this Common Council would commend the steamers of the New York and Liverpool U. S. Mail line, to the support and confidence of their fellow citizens, as well as to the liberal encouragement of the General Government."—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XIX: 311–12.

" The common council adopts an ordinance for paving Madison Ave. from 26th to 40th St.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XIX: 295. On Sept. 23, the board directed that the sidewalks on Madison Ave., from 23d to 40th St., be flagged for a space four feet wide through the centre of it, where not already flagged, and repaved where necessary.—Ibid., XIX: 387.

18 The common council passes a resolution approving an effort now being made by enterprising citizens of New York to establish steam communication between New York and Galway.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XIX: 320.

20 The common council grants a lease to Henry Concklin to establish and conduct a ferry from the foot of 86th St., North River, to a point at or near Bull's Ferry.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XIX: 338.

" The common council directs that 23d St. between Fourth and Fifth Aves. be paved and the sidewalks flagged.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XIX: 334. This is only one of the many operations recorded during this period in the process of laying out or improving streets during the northward growth of the city.

21 "Since the erection of the new iron bell tower in Thirty-third street, which was completed but a few days ago, a bell larger at present than any in this city, and said to be much superior in tone to that suspended in the belfry of the City Hall, has been cast in Boston, and will most probably arrive here sometime this afternoon. Some conception may be formed of its size, when it is known that fourteen tons of metal were used in its casting, and its weight when cast was over twenty-three thousand pounds. . . . On the outside of the bell are the arms of the city, the date of casting, and the following inscription: 'Sigillum Civitatis Novi Eboresci.'"—Eve. Post, Ag 21, 1851.

This was the first iron fire-tower in the city. It was ten-sided, seven storeys (about 100 ft.) high, and the floors were supported by ten iron columns. A circular iron stairway led from the base to a look-out on top. The cost of this tower was $6,000. Its bell was the largest bell on the continent, and fifth heaviest in the world.—Illustrated News, Ja 22, 1853, I: 61, with view of the tower. For the second fire-tower, see Ja 22, 1853.

22 The "America" (see Je 21), a schooner of 170 tons, built in this year by Geo. Steers, New York, and owned by five members of the N. Y. Yacht Club, defeats all comers in a regatta of the Royal Yacht Squadron at Cowes, England.—N. Y. Herald, Ag 29, S 4 and 6, 1851. These owners won a cup which was offered by the Squadron as the prize to be competed for by yachts of all nations, without regard to difference in tonnage, sailing round the Isle of Wight, the usual course for the annual regatta of the Royal Yacht Squadron. The "America" beat eight cutters and seven schooners. Ever since then the cup has been known as "The America's cup," and, although British challengers have tried repeatedly to win it back, it remains (1926) in undisturbed possession of the N. Y. Yacht Club, to which the winning owners of 1851 presented it on July 8, 1867.—Thompson & Lawson, The Lawson Hist. of the America's Cup (1902).

1851 Aug. 22 For full account of the subsequent races, in all of which the cup has been successfully defended, see ibid., and The "America's" Cup Races, by Herbert L. Stone, ed. of Yachting (1914).

" Pot Rock, in the East River, is being blasted away under the supervision of Monsieur Maillefert.—Eve. Post, Ag 22, 1851. See also S 18.

" A meeting in favour of the present revolution in Cuba is held in City Hall Park.—Eve. Post, Ag 23, 1851.

Sept. 5 The common council adopts a form of agreement granting permission to build the Eighth Avenue Railroad (see Jl 30), and directs that one be prepared by the corporation counsel for constructing the Sixth Avenue Railroad.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XIX: 357.

11 "Mutilating the Park.—The city authorities, who are so slow in providing a place to breathe in up town, are swift to deface and curtail whatever small open plots of ground may have been reserved for the public benefit. They have ordered the northeastern corner of the Park to be given up to engine houses, so that this promenade, already sufficiently circumscribed, is to be encroached upon still more. There is surely room enough in that neighborhood for engine houses, or any other buildings of the kind, without trespassing upon the rights of the people. We suppose that it is too late to arrest the Vandalism, but, at the same time, we should like to know by whose order the iniquity is about to be perpetrated."—Eve. Post, S 11, 1851.

13 An illustration of "The Celebrated Niblo's Hotel, New York City," is published. A description states: "Mid the many and splendid edifices on Broadway, N. York, the magnificent hotel now in progress of erection on the former site of Niblo's Garden, at Prince Street, is one of the most conspicuous and imposing. With a frontage of 300 feet on Broadway, six stories in height, built of the fine brown freestone so much in use for fronts, with heavy carved cornices over the almost innumerable windows, and withal standing on the highest ground in that neighborhood, it is at once a noble and imposing structure."—Gleason's Pictorial, I: 305. The new hotel was the Metropolitan Hotel, at the north-east corner of Broadway and Prince Sts.—L. M. R. K., III: 979. Niblo's Theatre had its entrance there.—King's Handbook, 233, 604. See also 1852.

14 James Fenimore Cooper dies at Cooperstown.—Eve. Post, S 16, 1851. On Sept. 24, a meeting of literary men was held at the city hall and a committee appointed to make arrangements for honouring his memory.—Ibid., S 25, 1851.

18 Diamond Reef, about midway between the Battery and Governor's Island, is being blasted away by Monsieur Maillefert.—Eve. Post, S 19, 1851.

" The first issue of the New-York Daily Times appears, its publishers being Henry J. Raymond, George Jones, E. B. Morgan, D. B. St. John, and E. R. Wesley. The firm afterwards was styled Henry J. Raymond & Co. Raymond was editor. A complete facsimile of the first issue was published, on its 70th anniversary, in The New York Times, Sept. 18, 1921.

19 The common council orders "That all the papers relating to the enlargement of the Battery, together with the opinion of the Counsel to the Corporation, be taken from the table and placed on file, and that the Clerk of this Board be directed to furnish the Street Commissioner with a certified copy of all said papers."—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XIX: 647–48. Later in the year, the common council placed a contract with a Mr. Conkling for the extension of the Battery. The work was undertaken and carried on slowly. In 1853, the contract was transferred to George Law, and thereafter the work still progressed slowly until 1865 (q.v., F 6), when the legislature placed the control of this improvement in the hands of the city's pilot commissioners and provided for its early completion.—Rep. of a Special Committee of the Chamber of Commerce &c on the Battery Extension (1865).

23 The common council orders that Dey St., from Broadway to Greenwich St., be regulated, that curb- and gutter-stones be set there, and that the carriage-way be repaved.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XIX: 387–88. Valentine says it was widened.—Man. Com. Coun. (1865), 544.

25 The common council appropriates part of Randall's Island (36½ acres) for the use of the Soc. for the Reformation of Juvenile Delinquents for a new and enlarged house of refuge. It requires that the society shall erect a wall at least ten feet high, and shall convey to the city land purchased by them for a location on Ward's Island.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XIX: 394; Man. Com. Coun. (1859), 578; ibid. (1870), 762; L. M. R. K., III: 954. For the corner-stone, see N 24, 1852. Permission to sell the premises on East River, between 23d and 24th Sts., and move to other premises, had been given by the board on Feb. 18, 1850.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XVIII: 14–15. Sept. 25

The common council appoints a committee to extend to the Hungarian patriot Kossuth a hospitable welcome on his arrival in this city, "in order to show to the world our admiration of the man and of the principles for which he struggled."—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XIX: 405–6. See D 5. 26

The common council grants a lease to Alex. H. Schultz, permitting him to run a ferry from the foot of 14th St., East River, to Greenpoint, L. I.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XIX: 400. "

The "Advance" and the "Rescue," sent out by Henry Grinnell and other New Yorkers to find Sir John Franklin (see My 22, 1850), return to New York without success.—Eve. Post, S 30, 1851; Kane, Adrift in the Arctic Ice Pack, 402. 30

"The excavations which have been made in the square of land bounded by Centre, Franklin, Elm and White streets, are preparatory to laying the foundation of a structure which will probably be the largest in the city. It is intended for the depot of the New Haven and New York, and New York and Harlem railroad lines, and will cover the whole block. The building will be four stories high, in the shape of a hollow square, the lower story to be appropriated to cars and freight, and the upper to offices. . . . The walls above the first story will rest on large granite piers with arches, at the centre wall interspersed within with iron pillars crossed by heavy girders, thus leaving the spacious lower story unincumbered by partitions, and well lighted at the sides, and from the roof of the hollow square in the centre. . . . The cost of the building will not probably be less than $76,000. The architect is Mr. R. G. Hatfield."—Eve. Post, O 2, 1851. This was formerly the state arsenal site.—L. M. R. K., III: 923. Oct. 2

The common council resolves "That a space forty feet in width, and extending through the middle of the Fourth avenue, from Thirty-fourth to Thirty-eighth street, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated for the purpose of a public park or pleasure ground, and that the same be laid out, under the direction of the Street Commissioner, in accordance with the general plan herewith accompanied, and that the same be carried into effect, as soon as the Harlem Railroad Company shall have completed the arching of the Fourth avenue, . . ."—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XIX: 406–7. The arching of the tunnel was evidently in progress. 7

The completion of the Hudson River R. R., over the entire route, from N. Y. to Albany, is celebrated.—Eve. Post, O 9, 1851. See also O 24. 8

The common council accepts from Goupil & Co. the gift of a picture of Kossuth, and others identified with him in the Hungarian revolution, and orders that it be placed in the governor's room.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XIX: 427. 17

The common council orders that the commissioner of repairs and supplies procure "a stone of Eastchester marble," 8 ft. long, 5½ ft. wide, and at least 12 in. thick, that it be "sculptured in accordance with the accompanying design," and when completed presented by the mayor in behalf of the city "to the Washington National Monument Association, to be placed in the monument now being erected to the memory of Washington" (in the city of Washington—see Jl 4, 1848); $2,500 is appropriated to pay the cost of it.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XIX: 438–39. See O 29. 22

The common council passes a resolution stating "That in the construction of the important and magnificent work of the Hudson River Railroad [see O 8], the citizens of New York have great cause of congratulation, from the increased travel and additional prosperity, which this great enterprise promises to contribute to the commercial emporium of our state and country;" and thanking the officials, engineers, etc. of the company on behalf of the municipal authorities for "the zeal, time and devotion bestowed by them towards the successful prosecution of the enterprize . . .—the construction of a direct line of railroad between the cities of New York and Albany."—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XIX: 453–54. See also Dunbar's A Hist. of Travel in Am., 993. 24

The Hudson River R. R. ran along the west shore of Manhattan Island (see My 6, 1847; S 25 and 29, and D 19, 1849; Jl 9 and D 4, 1850). Its southern terminus was at College Place (now West Broadway) and Chambers St. (see S 25 and 29, 1849; Jl 9 and D 4, 1850). Here a station stood in 1851; for a view of this, on site of the Gerken building, see the "New Terminal Supplement"

1851 O 24 of The Eve. Post, F 1, 1913. Its most southerly and principal passenger station was later situated at Ninth Ave. and 30th St.

" The common council accepts an invitation from Goupil & Co. to attend their exhibition of the picture of "Washington Crossing the Delaware."—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XIX: 453.

" The common council orders that 42d St. be lighted with oil, from Fifth to Third Ave.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XIX: 458.

29 The common council passes the following resolution: "Whereas, The efforts of a society established in the city of Washington [see O 22], to honor the name of the Father of his country, by the erection of a magnificent national monument to his memory, deserves the thanks, and should receive the cordial co-operation of every American, and corporate body throughout the Union; and

"Whereas, The grand structure now in progress is intended to do honor not only to the great patriot to whose memory it is to be dedicated, but is calculated to do honor to the patriotic and grateful feelings of those by whose contributions it is to be erected; therefore

"Resolved, That we commend the work undertaken by the Washington National Monument Society [see O 22], to our fellow-citizens, as one peculiarly deserving of liberal aid and generous patronage, and recommend Mr. Daniel Douglass, the authorized agent of the Society, to receive donations for said object, to every inhabitant of this city. . . ."—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XIX: 474. See, further, 1855.

Nov. 7 "We perceive that the Sixth Avenue Railroad Company have already commenced the construction of their road. The pavement has been taken up in Canal street, and in a few days more than a hundred yards of rail will be laid. The rails to be used will be on a level with the surface of the streets, and set between granite blocks similar to those used in the Russ pavement."—Eve. Post, N 7, 1851.

20 A false cry of fire in Ward School No. 26, in Greenwich Ave., north of Jefferson Market, creates a panic among the children, and causes the death of about 50 of them, by their falling from the upper storeys down a stairway shaft. The outer doors, swinging inward could not be opened.—Eve. Post, N 21, 1851. This shocking occurrence led to the passage of an act, on Jan. 2, 1852 (q.v.), compelling doors of public buildings to be made to swing outward.

De Voe, in this connection, mentions the public buildings in the immediate vicinity of this market.—Market Book, 571. There is a survey of Jefferson Market, dated 1852, filed as map No. 94 in the real estate bureau of the comptroller's office; and contemporary photographs of it in De Voe's scrap-book of views, at the N. Y. Hist. Soc.

" The common council orders that the land on Fifth Ave., between 54th and 55th Sts., heretofore granted to the corporation of the Church of St. George the Martyr (see My 24), be transferred to the corporation of St. Luke's Hospital (see My 1, 1850), when the latter shall procure the written assent of the corporation of Trinity Church, under seal, and deposit it with the city comptroller, and shall also make an agreement with the common council to complete the building of its hospital within two years from this date.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XIX: 512.

26 The corner-stone of the "Marble Collegiate Church" is laid at the north-west corner of Fifth Ave. and 29th St.—De Witt's Discourse (1857), 91, where the church is fully described. For its dedication, see O 11, 1854.

Dec. 2 Louis Napoleon executes a remarkable coup d'état, by which he abolishes all opposing leadership and makes himself, though nominally president, an absolute sovereign. He dissolved the assembly and proposed changes in the constitution which would give him more power. The troops were called out to put down all opposition and on Dec. 4, occurred the famous "massacre of the boulevards," in which over 150 were killed and a large number wounded. All who appeared dangerous to him were either exiled or imprisoned.—Hazen, Europe since 1815, 203–5, 330.

4 "The eastern and western gates of the Park are in a dilapidated condition, and not of sufficient width to admit of the passage of the military and other bodies, on occasions of public processions." It is resolved by the common council "That the Commissioner of Repairs and Supplies, cause new gates to be built, at least thirty feet in width between the columns at the eastern and western sides of the Park, and that the expense thereof be taken from the appropriation for Lands and Places."—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XIX: 535.

5 The U. S. mail steamship "Humboldt" reaches Staten Island at 2 o'clock this morning, having on board the Hungarian patriot, ex-Gov. Louis Kossuth, Madame Kossuth, M. and Madame Pulszky, an aide-de-camp, and secretaries. Kossuth is greeted amidst the firing of cannon, and is first addressed by the health officer, who, in a speech of welcome, presents him with a letter from the mayor, which describes the preliminary arrangements made for his reception. Other addresses and replies from Kossuth are made while still at Staten Island. An elaborate programme is published for his reception in New York on the 6th.—N. Y. Herald, D 5, 6, 1851. See D 6. Dec. 5

The programme arranged for the reception of Kossuth in New York (see D 5) is carried out with great enthusiasm. Immense crowds welcome him at Castle Garden, where the mayor addresses him, and along the line of procession up Broadway, through Astor Place, and down The Bowery to the city hall, and Irving House at the north-west corner of Broadway and Chambers St. It was one of the most imposing receptions ever given to a visitor, and fraught with sympathetic interest in Kossuth's struggle for the liberty of Hungary. For full description of the scenes along the route, see the N. Y. Herald, D 7 and 8, 1851; White, Red, Black—Sketches of American Society in the U. S. during the visit of their guests, by Francis and Theresa Pulszky (N. Y., 1853), I: 52–53, 55–57; Rep. of the Special Com. Appointed by the Com. Coun. (1852). See also Gleason's Pictorial, I: 552–53 (D 27), in which are published the following views: "Entrance on the Battery from Castle Garden," "Entrance into the Park," "Torchlight Procession," and "Serenade in Front of the Irving House," where Kossuth made his headquarters while the city's guest. On Jan. 3, 1852, Gleason printed a sketch "representing Kossuth as he appeared addressing the New York militia at Castle Garden a short time since."—Ibid., II: 12. In the mention of Kossuth's arrival in Vol. III, p. 669, of the present work, at line 17, the words "that year" should read the next year. 6

This being Sunday, Kossuth and his party were conducted by the mayor to St. Bartholomew's Church in Lafayette Place.—N. Y. Herald, D 8, 1851. This issue of the Herald also presents an account of Kossuth's aims and policy in the United States. He seeks political and financial aid in behalf of the freedom and independence of Hungary. For further incidents of Kossuth's stay in New York, see subsequent issues of the Herald and other daily papers. During the week, he received here many addresses from delegations from other cities, to which he made replies. On Dec. 11, a municipal dinner was tendered him at the Irving House.—Ibid., D 9 to 12, 1851. 7

The common council appropriates $3,000 for expenses in connection with "the reception of the Hungarian exiles."—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XIX: 549. 13

By this time, 59th St. had been opened, from Eighth to Tenth Ave., at a total cost of $9,418.88.—Man. Com. Coun. (1857), 538. See also F 14, 1852. "

The common council directs that 50 sets of the maps recently published by Matthew Dripps (see 1851) be purchased, at not over $15 a set.—Proc., App'd by the Mayor, XIX: 555. See Pls. 138 and 138A, Vol. III. 18

The common council grants a petition of Gerard Stuyvesant for permission to enclose the "Stuyvesant pear tree," at the north-east corner of Third Ave. and 13th St., with an iron railing.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XIX: 556; L. M. R. K., III: 967; and see view in Man. Com. Coun. (1861), 532. "

The common council, by resolution, tenders to the general government "such plot of land within the city, on which to erect a United States Mint, as shall be satisfactory." The mayor is requested to transmit copies of the resolution to the members of congress.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XIX: 563. 23

Part of the capitol at Washington and nearly the whole of the Library of Congress are destroyed by fire.—N. Y. Herald, D 25, 1851. This library, which occupied rooms in the capitol from the time of the completion of that building in 1824, lost by this fire about 35,000 volumes, as well as Gilbert Stuart's paintings of the first five presidents.—Eve. Post, D 26, 1851; Standard Hist. of the City of Washington (1914), 441. 24

Charles King, president of Columbia College, delivers a lecture before the Mechanics' Society, at Mechanics' Hall, Broadway, on the Progress of the City of New-York, During the Last Fifty Years. "

1851 D 29 This was printed in 1852. It reviews the principal changes and important events.

30 The common council orders that Washington Market be rebuilt on its present site, after plans "heretofore prepared by Frederick A. Peterson." The board adopts these plans with amendments. One of these is "That the tower . . . be changed from the Washington street to the West street front." The sum of $375,000 is appropriated for this improvement, to be raised by loan in accordance with the act of June 28 (q. v.), which created the fund called "Public Building Stock No. 3." The new market is to be commenced in Feb., 1852.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XIX: 583. See, however, 1852.

31 The common council directs the clerk to purchase from John Doggett, Jr., 100 copies of the reprint of "the Directory of 1786" provided the cost is not over 37½ cents a copy.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XIX: 585–86.

— During 1852–1855 and 1859–1866, Gladstone was chancellor of the exchequer, and "in this capacity was winning the name of the greatest finance minister since Peel, and was laying deep the foundations of his later power."—Hazen, Europe since 1815, 459.

— In this year, Henry Giffard built a cigar-shaped dirigible airship, the forerunner of the modern "dirigible."—Scientific American, Je 5, 1915.

— In this year, Merriweather, a California gold miner, invented the hydraulic system of mining gold.—Ibid.

— In this year, the first power elevator was installed by Elisha Graves Otis. In 1853 (q. v., Jl 14), he exhibited at the Crystal Palace the first elevator with a safety device to prevent the car from falling if the cable should break.—Ibid.

— In this year, William Perris published the first of a series of maps of New York City, from surveys made under the directions of the insurance companies of the city. They show, from year to year, not only the progress of the city in its northward growth, but also the character of the building construction, different water-colour tints indicating the type of construction, and the consequent degree of fire hazard. They continued in 1853–4–5, 1857, 1859, 1862. See also descrip. of Pls. 138 and 138A, III: 706–7.

— A map of the city's parks, squares, places, etc., showing areas, bears this date.—See map No. 1291 bureau of topography, borough president's office.

— In this year, John J. Serrell made three surveys of as many sections of the Common Lands.—See map No. 150 in real estate bureau of comptroller's office. See, further, 1866.

— In this year was published by T. C. Fanning Phelps' New York City Guide; being a pocket directory for strangers and citizens to the prominent objects of interest in the great commercial metropolis, and conductor to its environs. With engravings [wood-cuts] of public buildings. It contains a large folding map. Later issues appeared in 1854 and 1857.

— In this year, John F. Trow commenced the publication of the N. Y. City Directory with which his name has since been connected.—Derby, Fifty Years among Authors, Books and Publishers (1884), 659.

— In this year, the brown-stone building on Chambers St., at the north-east corner of City Hall Park, now known as the city court house, was completed.—See date in the stone-work on the front of the building. For its origin, see resolution of Je 5, 1851; L. M. R. K., III: 973. It appears in views: Pl. 155-a, and A. Pl. 28-c, Vol. III.

— In this year, the cobble-stone pavements were being extensively removed to be replaced by the Russ pavement or Belgian blocks.—Haswell, Reminiscences of an Octogenarian, 482. See also 1849.

— The report of the comptroller for this year shows 17 municipal ferries in operation, all leased to some individual or company for a period of years at a fixed rental per year. The largest rental is $35,000, paid by the lessee of the Fulton Ferry between Fulton and Whitehall Sts. Jacob Sharp, whose name became infamous in connection with his attempts to secure street railway franchises by corrupt methods, is the lessee of the Wall St. Ferry, at $20,000 per year. The comptroller feels that ferry privileges ought to yield a larger revenue, and that the ratio of increase ought "at least to keep pace with the growth of the city, and the surrounding country having intercourse with it, through the medium of the ferries." Unfortunately, he says, the ferry leases which he has examined "do not contain any provision for making reports to the Corporation in regard to the amount received annually for ferriage, or any particulars respecting the operations of the ferry, which would enable the Corporation to fix a value to its property, or the amount of rent to be exacted on a renewal of the lease. The sums received at the several ferries, which are connected with this city, indicating the number of persons passing to and from the city, would be interesting and valuable as a statistical fact merely; and as the sure means of ascertaining the value of the city property, these returns are indispensable," and should always be required. "In all cases where the ferry landings have been reserved or are owned by the city, the rents when leased, or on renewal of a lease, ought to be fixed by a sale of the ferry privilege at public auction. The provision in the lease to have the boats valued at the close of the term, would secure all the equitable rights of the original lessee, and the competition would protect the interest of the city. The revenue arising from ferries is pledged to the public creditors for the payment of interest, and it is incumbent on the Trustees of the Sinking Fund to use every effort in their power to improve this source of revenue."—Comptroller's Report (1852), 11–12. 1852 —

The Metropolitan Hotel (see S 1), on part of the site of Niblo's Garden, at the cor. of Broadway and Prince St.; the City Hotel, at 429 Broadway; the Am. Art Union, at 479 Broadway; the St. Nicholas Hotel, at the south-west corner of Broadway and Spring St.; the Prescott House at the north-west cor. of Broadway and Spring St., the Albion Hotel, at 769 Broadway; and the St. Denis Hotel, at the south-west cor. of Broadway and 11th St., all date from this year.—Man. Com. Coun. (1865), 635, 652. The Metropolitan Hotel was under construction in Sept., 1851 (q. v.). —

In this year, Corporal Thompson's road-house, known as Madison Cottage (see 1839), at the north-west corner of Broadway and 23d St., was demolished.—L. M. R. K., III: 978. There is a rare lithographic view of it in this year, in the collection of Edw. W. C. Arnold. For the next building on this site, see Mr 19, My 2, 1853. —

In 1852–3, "Chelsea," where, in 1822, Clement C. Moore wrote "'Twas the night before Christmas" (see Ag 16, 1750; D 23, 1823), was torn down when the bluffs along the river were being levelled and the water lots filled in.—Landmarks of N. Y., ed. by Peterson (pub. by The City History Club, 1923), 70; cf. Man. Com. Coun. (1854), 536. —

In this year, an effort was commenced, which extended over many years, to obtain rapid transit in New York City. This first attempt was by the introduction of a bill in the legislature by John Schuyler.—The Great Need, pub. by the N. Y. Rapid Transit Assoc., 1873 (in N. Y. P. L.). —

In this year, the Am. Geographical and Statistical Society was organized. The legislature gave it a special charter on May 12, 1854. It occupied rooms in N. Y. University, in University Place. —Man. Com. Coun. (1856), 567. See Ap 1854. —

In this year, Albany St. was extended from Greenwich St. to Trinity Place, in the rear of Trinity Church, at a total cost of $1,860.84.—Man. Com. Coun. (1857), 539; L. M. R. K., III: 992. This extension gave encouragement to the attempts, begun in previous years (see 1813; S 25, 1832; Ja 28, 1833; 1847), to extend Albany St. through Trinity churchyard to Broadway. "It was the determined purpose of a few property owners in the neighborhood, to agitate for the extension. . . . The public sentiment was as strongly against this invasion of a churchyard as twenty years before. Many of the city officials were opposed to the project. So high ran the state of feeling upon this matter that a public meeting was held" on June 8 (q. v.) to oppose it.—Dix, Hist. of Trinity Church, IV: 373–74. —

An oil painting, depicting Broadway at Grand St. in 1852, owned by the N. Y. Hist. Soc., is reproduced and described as Pl. 140, Vol. III. —

A Currier & Ives lithographic view of the Harlem River, reproduced and described as Pl. 137-b, Vol. III, bears this date. —

In this year, J. W. Hill drew a view of New York, which is reproduced as Pl. 144, Vol. III. In 1855, it was engraved by Sigmund Himly and also by C. Mottram. —

In Valentine's Manual for 1852 were published a map of the city, 1852; and a view of Castle Garden, p. 128. —

For view, in 1852, of the old stone house at Turtle Bay, where the Liberty Boys, led by Willett, seized the king's stores, see ibid., (1857), 192.

In this year, a new Gouverneur market-house, the third on the — 1852 site, was built in the block facing Gouverneur Slip, an appropriation of $7,185 having been made for the purpose on March 24, 1851.—L. M. R. K., III: 959, and authorities there cited. Gouverneur Hospital now covers this site.

— It is stated in L. M. R. K., III: 960 (citing Proc., App'd by Mayor, XIX: 582–83) that a new Washington Market was built in this year (see also D 30, 1851). De Voe, however, writing in 1861 (Market Book, 453), said that, after repeated attempts to rebuild the market, nothing was done up to that time. He added: "The present [1861] old delapidated market-houses here are certainly a disgrace to the City of New York, and have been for the last fifteen years. . . ." They were declared a nuisance by the grand jury in 1858–9. Nevertheless, De Voe calls it "the greatest depot for the sale of all manner of edibles in the United States."—Ibid., 454.

— Between 1852 and 1855, the double brick house at Nos. 9–11 Broadway, which was erected by Augustus Jay in 1730 (q. v., Je 2) and which subsequent to 1836 became known as the Atlantic Garden, was demolished, and a frame structure erected on the site. The tavern was continued there, with the same name, until 1860 (q. v., S 2).—Perris's Atlas, 1852, 1855; Lamb, Hist. City of N. Y., I: 757; L. M. R. K., III: 976. The dwelling of Domine Megapolensis once stood on this site.—See 1656, and L. M. R. K., III: 950–51. The ground is now covered by the Bowling Green Building.—Ibid., III: 976.

— In this year, the Anchor Line of steamers between New York and Glasgow was established.—Haswell's Reminiscences, 482.

— In this year, the New York Quarterly Review was first published.—North, 118.

Jan. 2 The special committee of the board of aldermen on parks makes a report on the subject of laying out a new park in the upper part of the city. It presents the respective merits of Jones' Woods, on the East River between 64th and 75th Sts. (see L. M. R. K., III: 966), and "a certain tract of land, situated in the geographical centre of this Island," bounded by Fifth and Eighth Aves., 60th and 106th Sts. In the report these areas are spoken of as "Jones' Park" and "Central Park." They are shown on a topographical map accompanying the report. The latter embraces "the present Receiving Reservoir of 33 acres, the grounds of the State Arsenal, and of the St. Vincent Academy, etc., altogether an area four and a quarter times as great as that of Jones' Park." The presentation of facts greatly favours the Central Park location.—Doc. 83, Bd. of Ald. (1852). This was the first use of the name Central Park.—16th Ann. Rep., Am. Scenic & Hist. Pres. Soc. (1911), 456.

"A resolution to this effect was passed by the Board, and being concurred in, application was made to the legislature for the passage of an act authorizing the appointment of Commissioners of Estimate and Assessment, for the purpose of taking the ground referred to for a public park.

"Accordingly, the legislature passed, on 23d [error for 21st] of July, 1853 [q. v.], an act for taking the ground now known as the Central Park."—1st Ann. Rep. on the Improvement of the Central Park (1857), 6–7.

" The common council appropriates $250 to procure a portrait of David T. Valentine, clerk of the board, to be placed in the city hall. Valentine, for nearly a quarter of a century, has "devoted his superior energies and talent to the service of the city, . . ."—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XIX: 604–5.

3 The common council directs the corporation council to prepare a memorial to the legislature asking for the passage of a law which shall provide "that all outside doors to school houses, and other buildings used or frequented by the public . . . shall open outwards, and that also all the inner doors to every building used as a public school, shall also open outwards from the room of the same; and for such other restrictions as may be deemed, by said Legislature, proper and necessary, for the protection of the lives of those who may frequent said buildings, in case of alarm by fire or other cause." This is prompted by the calamity in the "Greenwich avenue school building" (see N 20, 1851).—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XIX: 610.

" The common council orders the closing of the old Eastern Post Road "from the point where it is now closed," at 52d St., to "the point where said road intersects with Third avenue" at 66th St.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XIX: 636.

10 A view of Castle Garden from the river is published in Gleason's Pictorial, II: 24.

28 "We understand that the Common Council have granted to Mr. Riddle and his associates the use of Reservoir Square, about 400 feet square, for the erection of a Crystal Palace, in which to make their contemplated exhibition of the Industry of all Nations. They have also appropriated funds for flagging the square, and to sustain a complete constabulary force during the period of the exhibition. The lease runs for five years, at the annual rent of one dollar a year."—Eve. Post, Ja 28, 1852. Jan. 28

"The fountains in Washington Parade Ground and Tompkins Square are both completed, and make a great improvement in the appearance of both those places. The borders of the basins of both fountains are constructed of blue stone, and not of white marble, like that of the Park fountain, over which, however, they have the advantage of a larger number of jets. . . . The diameter of the basin [of the Washington Square fountain] is one hundred feet, twenty feet less than that in Tompkins Square. The amount expended in its construction was $2,000."—Eve. Post, Ja 31, 1852. The fountain in Washington Square was begun in Aug., 1851.—Ibid., Ag 15, 1851. 31

Gleason publishes a plan of the building about to be erected in New York for the purpose of holding a World's Fair, similar to the recent exhibition in the Crystal Palace, London. He says: "The locality is not yet definitely settled upon, but it will be in one of the up-town squares of the city. Its length is to be 600 feet, its width 150 feet, its height 100 feet. The materials employed will be glass and iron, but the roof will be slate."—Gleason's Pictorial, II: 101. See also descrip. of Pl. 141-a, III: 709. Feb. 14

" In his annual report to the common council Comptroller Flagg offers suggestions in regard to the propriety of requiring the city railways "to give to the public, in some form, an equivalent for the very valuable privileges secured to them by the agreements under which they enjoy a monopoly, so far as railroad travel is concerned, of the most important portion of an avenue. For this privilege, the company might be required to keep the entire avenue paved between the curb stones, and clean the street. This would be a moderate compensation to the public for furnishing to the company not only a graded line for the road, but a thoroughfare already filled with more passengers than they can accommodate. In all cases of extending the avenues, in the approach to the Harlem river, each railroad company, as a condition of its extension, ought to be required to pay the expense of grading and paving the avenue, in proportion to the number of feet occupied by its double track. And the public ought to have the benefit of all revenue beyond ten per cent., in a reduction of fare; or, a direct annual revenue might be exacted, which would go to lessen taxation on the city.

"The railroads which open great avenues to the city, render valuable equivalents to the public for the privilege of laying their rails on the graded avenues. And yet these roads, affording such great facilities to the trade and commerce of the city, are placed on a different footing from the city railroads. Take for example the Hudson river railroad; at an expense of ten millions and a half of dollars, its stockholders have prepared a road which brings the commercial and political capital of the state within four hours of each other, at a cost to each person of twelve shillings; thus producing a wonderful saving in time and money, to the millions who annually traverse the valley of the Hudson. And yet this company, instead of having the right of way given and the avenue graded for it to Harlem River, paid at least one hundred thousand dollars for the right of way on the island, and five times that amount for grading. Where the avenues were not actually opened, the company paid to the indiviuals fronting on them two hundred dollars a lot for the quantity occupied by the company in the avenue. In addition to this, the company was prohibited in the ordinance from running any stated trains below Thirty-second street, or taking pay for passengers, under a penalty of twenty-five dollars in each case. These were the conditions in a case where a company of capitalists were opening an important avenue to the city for one hundred and forty miles, where the right of way cost them $800,000, and the whole outlay not less than ten and a half millions of dollars.

"In this view of the subject, it seems to me that every person who is not biased by an adverse interest, must come to the conclusion, that these great thoroughfares, graded as they are, if occupied for the special advantage of a few individuals, ought to yield to the public a fair equivalent for this great privilege, and the value of which is to increase with the growth of the city.

"If a reasonable proportion of the expense of opening and grading the avenues is exacted from the railroad companies, which are 1852 Feb. 14 to be benefited, it will be a check on premature movements in opening and grading avenues, and the imposition of enormous expenditures for this purpose. The case of the Second avenue, where $220,000 will probably be assessed on the city to be paid by taxation, should be an admonition to the city authorities on this point. If speculators in railroad stocks and contracts, are to have the avenues by a partial confiscation of the adjoining property and a tax on the city, and then are to have the use of those graded avenues and profitable thoroughfares, to be kept in repair at the public expense, they ought to pay a large revenue to the city. And if the grades of the avenues are raised or cut down to accommodate the railroads beyond what is required for the benefit of the property, the roads thus accommodated ought to be charged with the additional expense."—Comptroller's Report (1852), 14–15. The aldermen directed "ten times the usual number" to be printed, after receiving this report.—Proc., Bd. of Ald. (1853), XLIX: 301.

" The estimated cost (cf. D 13, 1851) of opening 59th St. between Fifth Ave. and Broadway is $10,767.34.—Man. Com. Coun. (1857), 539.

25 "The Jews' Hospital" (afterwards Mt. Sinai) is organized.—See tablet at the entrance of the present building. See, further, N 24, 1853.

" Metropolitan Hall is crowded at a meeting to pay tribute to the memory of the late James Fenimore Cooper. Daniel Webster, Wm. Cullen Bryant, Bancroft, the historian, Dr. Francis, and others, make addresses, and many literary celebrities are present.—Eve. Post, F 26, 1852.

Mar. — . Through the efforts of the Ladies' Home Missionary Soc., the "Old Brewery," a dilapidated structure on Paradise Square (L. M. R. K., III: 971), at Five Points, is purchased "in order to change it from a pest-house of sin to a school of virtue." A Thanksgiving dinner held here in November made a memorable scene.—Lossing, Hist. of N. Y. City, II: 629. See D, 1852. See also view of the "Old Brewery" in Man. Com. Coun. (1853), 180, and references to other views in L. M. R. K., III: 953–54.

2 An order of the common council for repairs shows that, at this time, on the roof of the city hall, there was a "platform, running from the cupola to the bell," and a "Lookout in the cupola."—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XX: 72.

3 The legislature exempts from taxation the mint or branch mint of the U. S. which congress may authorise to be established in N. Y. City.—Laws of N. Y. (1852), chap. 46.

6 "No place of amusement in the city of New York is better known or more popular with all classes than Niblo's Garden, Broadway. It was established more than thirty years since, and has undergone yearly improvements. . . . At first it was laid out as simply a large and finely cultivated garden for the purposes of promenade and the partaking of refreshment. Niblo's Theatre has always been a popular and fashionable resort. . . . The theatre has a light and graceful appearance, the interior columns and tier fronts being of iron, and is well finished and tastefully decorated. Instead of the old fashioned pit, it has a parquette which has become the favorite part of the house for gentlemen, and is much frequented by ladies. There are seats in the whole house for about three thousand persons, and the means of egress are the best of any public saloon in town; all the doors are spacious, and open outward, and the lobbies are roomy and cool." The dimensions of the theatre are: length, 140 ft.; breadth, 84 ft.; height inside, 45 ft. An engraving shows the interior of the garden.—Gleason's Pictorial, II: 145. For brief summary of the transformation of this property, see "Niblo's Garden," L. M. R. K., III: 985, and "Metropolitan Hotel," ibid., III: 979.

11 The legislature incorporates "The Association for the Exhibition of the Industry of all Nations." The incorporators include Charles King, Wm. C. Bryant, Wm. Kent, Mortimer Livingston, August Belmont, Watts Sherman, Alfred Pell, Alexander Hamilton, Jr., Edw. K. Collins, Francis W. Edmonds, Elbert I. Anderson, Theodore Sedgwick, Johnston Livingston, and Chas. A. Stetson. The capital stock, at $100 a share, is not to exceed $300,000.

The purpose is to erect a building at a cost not to exceed $200,000; to enter into contracts with persons desiring to make exhibits; to charge an admission fee of not over 50 cents; to distribute prizes "among the most eminent and skilled of the exhibitors;" to sell the building when the object of the corporation is attained; and to distribute equally among the stockholders the net proceeds from entrance fees and the sale of the building. The corporation shall continue not over five years.—Laws of N. Y. (1852), chap. 56. See Ag 26. Mar. 11

The estimated cost of extending Liberty St. from Broadway to Greenwich St. is $195,216.92.—Man. Com. Coun. (1857), 539; ibid. (1865), 544. 17

"It appears that during the past eleven months, there have been erected in the Sixth and Tenth Wards, 1,500 new buildings; in the Seventh and Eleventh, 500; and in the remaining wards, 600, making a total of 2,600."—Eve. Post, Mr 22, 1852. 22

The legislature incorporates "The New York Exchange Co." Among the incorporators are Jas. Boorman, Moses Taylor, Wm. W. De Forrest, Robert B. Minturn, Wm. H. Aspinwall, John Ward, Wm. S. Underhill, etc. Among the powers granted to them, they "may purchase, hold and convey the parcel of land and buildings situate in the city of New York, now known as the Merchants' Exchange, bounded by Wall, William and Hanover Sts. and Exchange Place, for the purpose of an exchange, and, when they have purchased the same, may receive the rents and profits thereof, and divide the same among the stockholders." The capital stock, divided into shares of $100 each, shall not exceed $1,000,000. Stockholders in the present "Merchants' Exchange Co." are to be given preference in making subscriptions to the stock of the new company.—Laws of N. Y. (1852), chap. 104. See D 14, 1849. This was evidently an organization supplanting the earlier "Merchants' Exchange Co.," which, on July 10, 1851, was authorised by the legislature to reduce its capital stock, and to borrow money to pay its debts.—Ibid. (1851), chap. 477. 26

A new St. Thomas's Church on the site of the old one (see Mr 2, 1851) is consecrated.—N. Y. Herald, Ap 4, 1852. See also N. Y. Times, N 25, 1923; L. M. R. K., III: 934. On Aug. 2, 1865, the church was reported as sold for $175,000 to a Broadway clothing-house, which intended, after May, 1866, to erect a large store there.—N. Y. Times, Ag 2, 1865. The Cable building now covers the site. Apr. 3

The legislature incorporates the N. Y. Academy of Music, the purpose of which is to encourage and cultivate a taste for music "by concerts, operas and other entertainments which shall be accessible to the public at a moderate charge, by furnishing facilities for instruction in music, and by rewards or prizes for the best musical compositions." Its capital stock shall be $200,000, which may be increased to $300,000. The stock is to be divided into shares of $1,000 each.—Laws of N. Y. (1852), chap. 212. 10

"The valuable estate at Harlem, known as the 'Milledoler property,' is to be sold at the Merchants' Exchange, by A. J. Bleecker, on Wednesday next, 14th inst. This is the first large parcel in original hands that has been offered at auction in that vicinity for many years, and a new impulse will doubtless be given to this beautiful portion of our city, which has too long been overlooked by our manufacturers and ship-builders. The fine soil of Harlem, rendering all grading unnecessary, and the facilities for opening streets without expense, point to this magnificent plain as the most suitable location for all sorts of manufacturing purposes. The large front on the River, the depth of the water, and the easy slope of the shore, render this section of the island decidedly the most suitable place unappropriated about the densely populated parts of the metropolis, for the construction of ship-yards, coal and lumber yards, and depots for the various articles of trade required by this great market. The cheapness of travel by railroad, and the certainty of frequent steamboat communication with the lower parts of the city the ensuing summer, offer facilities for the working and laboring classes wishing to settle themselves in New York at moderate rents, to a much greater extent in Harlem than in any other place on this island."—Eve. Post, Ap 12, 1852. 12

The legislature passes an act to enable the Am. Bible Soc. to purchase, hold, convey, or lease, the ground bounded by Third Ave., Fourth Ave., 9th St., and (on the south) Stuyvesant St. and Astor Place, together with the buildings that may be erected thereon.—Laws of N. Y. (1852), chap. 247. 13

The legislature incorporates the "New York College of Dental Surgery."—Laws of N. Y. (1852), chap. 261. "

Only those buildings which are used solely for public worship or public school purposes, and are exclusively the property of a religious society, or of the N. Y. Pub. School Soc., shall be exempt from taxation, as provided in the Revised Statutes.—Laws of N. Y. (1852), chap. 282. 14

The city is authorised by the legislature to fix a permanent "

1852 exterior street along the shore of the Harlem River between the Apr. East River or Sound and the North River, and to extend the 14 streets and avenues to this street.—Laws of N. Y. (1852), chap. 285.

21 "The erection of a new City Armory has been commenced on the corner of Elm and White streets. This building will cost, when completed, $28,000. It is intended, particularly, as a rendezvous for the military in time of riot, and will be capable of containing three thousand men, although it will be so constructed that fifty men may be sufficient to defend it in case of attack. The Armory will cover a space of ground 130 feet by 84, will be defended by four towers, and covered by a trussed iron roof."—Eve. Post, Ap 21, 1852.

May The common council accepts a proposal from Sherry & Byram
5 to furnish a clock for the cupola of the city hall.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XX: 213. A warrant for $748 in favour of this firm was ordered drawn, Oct. 28, 1853.—Ibid., XXI: 467.

10 The N. Y. & New Haven R. R. is opened for business throughout its entire length.—From chron. supplied by the company.

11 "Lyceum Theatre.—Adeline Patti, the child who, at eight years of age, sings Jenny Lind's songs, note for note, with the fair nightingale herself, and executes the most brilliant vocal passages in perfect style, is to sing at this beautiful theatre to-morrow evening [May 12]. The most accomplished musicians and critics have confessed their wonder and admiration of this gifted child, and we have no doubt her success will be commensurate with her great ability." —Eve. Post, My 11, 1852.

15 "A Bird's Eye View of the City of New York" is printed in Gleason's Pictorial, II: 308.

June A public meeting is held at the city hall, presided over by 8 Mayor Kingsland, at which addresses are made showing why a proposal to extend Albany St. through Trinity churchyard to Broadway (see 1852) should be opposed. The constant use of the ground for burial purposes for over 200 years, especially during the Revolution, is mentioned. A preamble and resolution are adopted, setting forth these facts and requesting the corporation of Trinity Church to erect "a becoming monument, with appropriate inscriptions, to the memory of those great and good men," who suffered imprisonment and death from neglect in the old sugar-house prison on Liberty St.

An attested copy of these proceedings being communicated to the vestry, a committee of the vestry was appointed on June 14 to consider the subject. A favourable report was made on Nov. 8 (q. v.).—Dix, Hist. of Trinity Church, IV: 373–75.

15 Fraunces Tavern, a five-storey building now called the Broad Street House, kept by E. Beaumeyer as a hotel, is seriously damaged by fire. "The roof was destroyed, the interior was almost completely burned out, and the walls on the Pearl street side crumbled down so far as the top of the second story. The old floor beams of the lower two stories were not destroyed." One man was burned to death, others jumped from windows, or were rescued by firemen.—Ann. Rep., Am. Scenic & Hist. Pres. Soc. (1907), 71, citing the Com. Adv. and Eve. Post. See 1854.

23 Alboni makes her American début, in a concert at Metropolitan Hall. She is ranked second only to Jenny Lind.—Eve. Post, Je 24, 1852; Brown, I: 425. Her first appearance here in opera took place at the Broadway Theatre on Dec. 27.—Ibid., I: 394.

30 The common council is convened, and hears a special message from Mayor Kingsland, regarding the death of Henry Clay. Eulogies are delivered by several aldermen, including Wm. M. Tweed, at this time the youngest member of the board.—Obsequies of Henry Clay (1852).

The centennial anniversary of the opening of St. George's Church, in Beekman St., is celebrated.—Eve. Post, Jl 2, 1852. July 1

The body of Henry Clay is brought to New York from Philadelphia. The coffin, shrouded in crape, is exposed to view in an open hearse drawn by eight grey horses, appropriately caparisoned with black plumes, etc. It is deposited upon a cenotaph in the governor's room in the city hall, and left in care of the Washington Greys, who acted as guard of honour from Philadelphia. On Sunday, the 4th, over 30,000 persons visited the city hall to view the remains, where a few years before Clay held a popular levee. The next morning, the coffin was taken on board a boat at the foot of Murray St. and conveyed to Albany; thence it was taken by way of Buffalo and Cincinnati to Kentucky.—Gleason's Pictorial, III: 76, 104–5; Obsequies of Henry Clay; Report of the Committee of Arrangements (pub. by the board of ald., 1852). Kossuth leaves America by steamship from N. Y.—N. Y. Times, Jl 15, 1852. 14

Jacob Sharp and others petition the board of aldermen "for the privilege of laying down a railroad in Broadway, from the South Ferry, through Whitehall street, Broadway, to and through the Bloomingdale road to Manhattanville." Instead of being referred to the committee on streets, as would be natural, the petition is referred to a "Special Committee" of five, which the president of the board appointed.—Proc., Bd. of Ald., XLVII: 117–19. Under the caption "Another Railroad Job On Hand," the Tribune editor warns "tax payers and other sufferers" to "lookout for tricks." Hardly had the clerk completed the reading of the document, says he, "when a violent strife arose as to who should boss the job." This "eager interest" on the part of the board "develops the idea of reward, &c., and it is not impossible that the concern will go through with Eight-av. speed."—N. Y. Tribune, Jl 17, 1852. While the matter was under consideration, the board was besieged with petitions both for and against the presence of a railway in the city's most crowded thoroughfare. Resolutions granting the original petition were adopted, on Nov. 19 (q. v.), and returned with Mayor Kingsland's veto on Dec. 18 (q. v.). 16

Funeral ceremonies, consisting of a great civic and military procession and an oration by N. B. Blunt, are held in honour of Henry Clay. The lower part of the city is draped in mourning.—Eve. Post, Jl 20 and 21, 1852. See also descrip. of Pl. 140, III: 708. 20

The steamer "Henry Clay" is burned south of Yonkers in its passage down the Hudson from Albany. Sixty-eight lives are lost, including Stephen Allen, who was mayor of New York in 1821–2 (q. v., Mr 5 and 12).—N. Y. Times, Jl 28, et seq.; N. Y. Tribune, Jl 30 and 31, Ag 2, 1852; *Man. Com. A Tribune editorial reads in part: "The corruption of the Common Council, we are sure, never before approached its present depth and magnitude. The care of the public health is neglected for the sake of a wretched political intrigue; bribes are offered and taken with an openness of unblushing impudence for which the records of municipal dishonesty, though ample, can offer no parallel; the public treasury is held to exist only that it may be drained by the most outrageous jobs; the Aldermen, sworn officers of the law, magistrates even, who sit upon the bench of justice, are leagued with the lowest ruffians, and screen their friendly bullies from the inflictions of justice; and all sense of decency, and the control of public opinion, and the exposures of the press are mocked by our municipal rulers with a reckless and hardened contempt worthy only of depravity the most abandoned."—N. Y. Tribune, Jl 28, 1852. 28

By this time, "Stuyvesant Square" (Cooper Park) had been opened, between Third and Fourth Aves. at 7th St., at an estimated cost of $3,965.12.—Man. Com. Coun. (1857), 539. 31

The Tribune editor makes a strong appeal for reform in the "Primary Meetings." At present, he says, they "destroy genuine democracy (no matter in which party) and give us instead an aristocracy of blackguards. The great mass of honest, quiet, industrious, thrifty citizens have only the delusive semblance of a voice in the choice of their municipal rulers. Long before the Election, a set of hireling bullies and grog-shop rowdies have carried the Primary Aug. 2

1852 Aug. 2 Elections of both parties for those who bid highest for their services, and have so 'fixed things' that one of their two sets of candidates must be elected. If you undertake to kick against the candidates they have manufactured for your own party, you find that the set got up on the other side are no better, and may be even worse so you gain nothing by voting for them but the odium of having defeated your party. And so we drag on from year to year, sinking deeper and deeper into the ooze of corruption, the slime of profligacy, until our City has become a byword for misgovernment and the scandal of Republican institutions." He declares that the present common council is "universally regarded as the most corrupt and profligate ever known even in the annals of this sorely misgoverned and plundered emporium. We doubt whether its equal in prodigality, venality and general rottenness could be found on the face of the earth. Everybody execrates it, no one but its paid organs, the sharers of its plunder, thinks of defending it, and even these do it as gingerly as an ass eats thistles."

The remedy proposed is a party registration book in each ward and a direct primary election by ballot on the basis of that registration.—N. Y. Tribune, Ag 2, 1852. This editorial is remarkable for its suggestion of the direct primary program which has become quite fundamental in our political life of the twentieth century.

10 The Sixth Ave. surface railroad is completed to 50th St., and the first cars are run thereon. This is "the first exclusively City Railroad ever built in New-York."—N. Y. Tribune, Ag 11, 1852.

21 Stage drivers on Sixth Ave. show their dislike for the new street cars; they "seriously hinder the cars by purposely driving across the track, or stopping upon it in such a manner as to make it almost impossible to prevent a collision." The Tribune "cannot believe that such conduct is sanctioned by stage proprietors, since it tends materially to injure their side of any new railroad controversy."—N. Y. Tribune, Ag 21, 1852.

23 "The City Fathers," says the Tribune, are "brushing up for the September session;" they will appear in a few days "upon the broad steps of the City Hall and in the sacred porches of the Tea Room [see Ja 5, 1853], the scenes of their moral and physical glory. The corridors of the Hall have been remarkably silent for the past three weeks, and the hangers about there complain that the place is intolerably dull; there is no bribery, no bullying, no vote-buying, no juggling of contracts, no fun whatsoever to enliven the sultry hours. . . . Probably the most important business of the session will be that in relation to the coming election; and will be transacted over the champaigne and game of the Tea Room."—N. Y. Tribune, Ag 23, 1852.

26 The "Assn. for the Exhibition of the Industry of all Nations" (see Mr 11) begins to enter into contracts for the construction of the "Crystal Palace" on Reservoir Square (now Bryant Park). Sept. 1 The Metropolitan Hotel is opened on the north-east corner of Broadway and Prince Sts., formerly the site of Niblo's Garden (1828). Oct. 2 At this period, Youle's shot-tower, at the foot of 54th St., East River, was in active operation. For a contemporary view and detailed description of it, see Gleason's Pictorial, III: 224 (O 2, 1852). It had been purchased in 1849 by Thos. Otis Le Roy & Co. from Commodore Vanderbilt, according to a letter of Sept. 12, 1912, from E. A. Le Roy, of Greenwich, Conn., formerly a partner in that firm. See also descrip. of Pl. 102-a, III: 599; L. M. R. K., III: 963.

12 "During the last twelve months several hundred square feet have been taken from the dimensions of the Park for so-called improvements. The grass plots immediately in front of the City Hall, have been diminished one-half their former area, on the pretence that there was not sufficient room for military reviews; and the iron railings on the east side are in process of demolition to widen the street by a further innovation on our public pleasure ground. The Park, in fact, is rapidly becoming a public thoroughfare for every kind of vehicle, and if one might judge from the number of carriages which are to be seen almost every day before the City Hall, it will soon be converted into a regular hackstand.

"The first outrage that was committed on the public was the erection of the little free-stone temple, which nothing but the worst taste could have suggested. . . .

"The space at the rear of the Hall of Records is occupied by building materials, which have been lying there now for a period of twelve months, and still the day of their removal seems as distant as ever; and, in addition to all these grievances, it appears that the Common Council intend widening Broadway, by taking a still more extensive slice off the westerly side. Is there no power that can put a stop to these disgraceful encroachments?"—Eve. Post, O 12, 1852.

Nov. — In this month, Commodore M. C. Perry (a brother of the victor on Lake Erie) sailed with ships-of-war on an expedition to Japan, under instructions from Pres. Fillmore, to open friendly negotiations leading to a treaty of amity and commerce with that country. The mission was successful, and the treaty was signed on March 31, 1854 (q.v.).—Lossing, in Harper's Popular Cyc. of U. S. Hist., I: 710.

8 Trinity vestry (see Je 8) adopts a resolution declaring the intention of the corporation "to erect a suitable monument in memory of the officers and soldiers of the Revolution who died in British captivity in the City of New York, many of whom are buried in the north part of Trinity Churchyard opposite to Pine Street." Plans and estimates were obtained, and $7,000 voted for the purpose.—Dix, Hist. of Trinity Church, IV: 374–75. See, however, D, 1853. The monument was not erected until 1858 (q.v.), after repeated attempts were unsuccessfully made by interested speculators to extend Albany St. through the north end of the churchyard to Broadway opposite Pine St.

1852 Nov. 13 story buildings going up on its whole length, of most magnificent elegance in style. The far-famed Metropolitan Hotel [see S 1] with its multiplied splendors of furniture and luxurious elegances, is to be outdone by still another Broadway hotel, now half constructed, and already presenting, with its snowy front of white marble, a most striking architectural picture—we refer to the St. Nicholas [cor. of Spring St.—Man. Com. Coun., 1865, 623]. Indeed public and private buildings are going up in all directions (and especially in the Fifth Avenue) with Aladin-like splendor and celerity."—Gleason's Pictorial, III: 317 (N 1, 1852).

" "Mr. Thackeray.—This gentleman will arrive here this evening, and begin his lectures on Friday [Nov. 19, q.v.], at Mr. Bellows's church. A London paper states that he is to be paid two thousand dollars for his course, by the Mercantile Library Association."—Eve. Post, N 16, 1852. See also With Thackeray in Am., by Eyre Crowe, 43–44. Mr. Crowe, who was Thackeray's amanuensis on his American tour, has illustrated this volume of reminiscences with numerous pen-sketches, after the manner of Thackeray himself. Among them are the following little views of places and events in New York: Mr. Bancroft lecturing before the N. Y. Hist. Soc., dated "Dec., '52" (p. 39); Rev. Theodore Parker preaching in "the Tabernacle" (the Broadway Tabernacle), Jan. 25, 1853 (p. 41); the unfinished front of the Lafarge Hotel, Nov., 1852 (p. 53); Broadway, at the upper corners of Chambers St., showing the Irving House on the west side and Stewart's store on the east side (p. 55); the south-east corner of the iron fence of the Park, and Barnum's Museum (p. 58); Wall St., Dec. 10, 1852 (p. 78); sleighing-stages, drawn by four horses, and having a platform at the side where the conductor may stand when collecting fares (pp. 88 and 89); the Tombs Prison (pp. 90 and 91); the entrance front of Clinton Hall (p. 96); Broadway fashions, April 6, 1853 (p. 163); etc. These and many other features of New York and other cities are described. While in New York, Thackeray stopped at the Clarendon Hotel, at the s. e. cor. of Fourth Ave. and 18th St.

19 The "Special Committee" appointed to consider the petition of Jacob Sharp and others for a railway franchise in Broadway (see Jl 16) presents its report in favour of the grant, a minority report signed by one member being made at the same time. After a rather lengthy consideration of some of the provisions, the majority report as amended was adopted and sent to the assistant aldermen for concurrence.—Proc., Bd. of Ald., XLVIII: 399–414. For serious objections to this grant as seen by Mayor Kingsland, see his veto message of Dec. 18 (q.v.).

23 A newspaper editorial reads: "The composure with which the people of this city submit to be robbed by the Common Council reminds one of Punch's eels that loved to be skinned. Within the past two years, city franchises of sufficient value in railroads and ferries have been given away, to pay a very large share of our city expenses and to reduce the taxes at least a half, and yet the tax payers take the loss as kindly as if the taxes collected, all went into their own pockets. Within the year, three new railroads have been chartered in our most populous thoroughfares, from which the city should have derived at least six hundred thousand dollars revenue. It will not derive six thousand from them all.

"Last night, the Board of Aldermen gave a right of way to a fourth, and by extending, greatly added to the value of one already built. None of these grants are subjected to any scrutiny, none of them provoke any debate. They pass with less opposition than an appropriation to mend a stove-pipe in the City Hall. True, men of wealth and responsibility stand at their sides while they are voting, and offer to give hundreds of thousands of dollars for the privileges which are thus granted for a song, but their proposals are regarded with about as much consideration as the Spanish brigand bestows upon the Cross at his breast, when he is crying 'Stand and deliver.' . . . Nov. 23

"It has been suggested to us that there is a secret financial committee, composed partly of members of the Common Council, to whom every lucrative project is first referred. If these gentlemen approve of it, it is passed; if their thumb goes down, nothing more is heard of it, except, perhaps, a little snarling in the newspapers. All the debating or negotiating—for that we believe is the more suitable term—is done in or with this secret committee, before the contemplated project is even mentioned in the Common Council. The arrangements concluded here, render every public debate unnecessary. Sufficient 'consideration' it is said, is always given to the go-betweens, if not to the measure, before the board are troubled with it, and the committee share their 'consideration' with the Council so equitably, that it is said they are all in the end just as well off as if they had participated in the secret discussions.

"Now, if there be such a wheel within a wheel, about the City Hall—if there be an organization into which the power of the Common Council has been condensed, and which has to be propitiated before a majority of that body can be made to listen to the appeals of justice, of reason, or of right, is it not about time the public knew their names? We have heard some strange stories of large sums divided by this committee, among a portion of their associates in the two boards, about the time certain ferry privileges and railroad grants were conferred; of extensive investments making and made by members of both boards, who had to borrow the money with which they paid the expenses of their election, &c. If these things be true; if there be such a commercial committee, supplementary to the chartered government of the city, the mystery of the railroad movement is solved, and we may expect, before the term of office of the present board expires, that provision will be made for railroads in every paying street in the city, and we shall consider ourselves lucky if they do not grant the use of the City Hall, and the other buildings in the Park, without rent, for boarding-houses, and surrender all the public parks to butchers and drovers."—Eve. Post, N 23, 1852.

26 A contract is signed between Street Commissioner John T. Dodge and Henry R. Concklin for enlarging the Battery. "The enlargement is to be made in accordance with what is termed Ewen's plan. Eleven and a half acres are to be filled in outside of the present sea-wall, which will make the whole area about twenty-four acres. It will take in the outer edge of Castle Garden, going out two hundred feet in the East River, and on the North River to the line of West street."—Eve. Post, N 27, 1852.

Dec. — In this month, the "Old Brewery" at Five Points (see Mr) was demolished to make room for a new mission-house to be erected on its site (see Ja 27, 1853). "What no legal enactment, what no machinery of municipal government could effect [see D 19, 1831], Christian women have brought about quietly, but thoroughly and triumphantly. . . . The great problem of how to remove the Five Points had engaged the attention of both the legislative and executive branches of the city government, and both had abandoned the task in despair. It is to the credit of the Methodist Episcopal Church that they were the first to enter the then unpromising field, and it will be an imperishable honor to the Ladies' Home Missionary Society of that Church that with them the idea originated, and by them has been so successfully carried out."—Lossing, *Hist. of N. 2 Louis Napoleon is proclaimed emperor of France, under the title of Napoleon III, and the "Second Empire" is established.—Hazen, Europe since 1815, 205–6.

1852 Dec. 11 The common council permits the Second Ave. Railroad to lay a grooved track commencing at a point in Second Ave. at or near 42d St.; running through Second Ave. and 23d St. with a single track to First Ave., and thence through Allen St., Grand St., Bowery, Chatham, Oliver, South, Roosevelt, and Front Sts. to Peck Slip, the terminus; returning with a single track through Pearl and Chatham Sts., Bowery, Grand St., Christie St., and Second Ave. to 23d St., where it intersects the double track, and thence to its terminus opposite the Harlem River with a double track; no motive power except horses to be used below 42d St. This permission is granted on condition that the road shall be completed to 42d St. within one year, and from 42d St. to Harlem River within three years from this date.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XX: 585–86; Man. Com. Coun. (1855), 334.

18 Mayor Kingsland vetoes the aldermanic resolution granting to Jacob Sharp and others a street railway privilege in Broadway (see Jl 16 and N 19). In his veto message he expresses his belief that the aldermen have failed "to consult the true interest of the city." He calls to their attention four other petitions for the same franchise while the Sharp petition was under consideration, all of which were more advantageous to the city and the public than the one granted. All that the city gets from petition granted is a license fee of $20 per year for each car the company runs ($3,000 per year if 150 cars are used), and the company is permitted to charge a five cent fare. One of the other petitions, if granted, would bring to the city "an annual income of one hundred and fifty thousand dollars, and the public would be benefitted by being charged only three cents passenger fare." The mayor declares he "cannot think that the community would tacitly submit to such a perversion of their rights." Furthermore, he questions the wisdom of a railway in a thoroughfare so crowded already as Broadway is, reminding the aldermen that the principal main of the Croton aqueduct is laid in the centre of that street. In case of a break that would necessitate tearing up the street, "the cars could not, like the omnibuses, be turned off from Broadway by one street, to return to it through another."—Proc., Bd. of Ald., XLIX: 530–36. Commenting on the veto message favourably, the Tribune says: "We believe there is not a man in town, not personally interested in this great scheme of plunder, who will not condemn, in unsparing terms, the shameless rascality of those Common-Councilmen who voted for the project, and we hope, though without much confidence, that this veto may prevent its execution."—N. Y. Tribune, D 20, 1852. A side light on the veto appears in the following newspaper item: "Mr. Kingsland, the late Mayor, was presented by the omnibus proprietors of New York, with a magnificent clock, valued at $500, as a mark of their approval of his conduct in the case of the proposed Broadway Railroad."—Eve. Post, Ja 4, 1853. The measure was passed over the veto by the aldermen on Dec. 29 (q.v.), despite a temporary injunction issued by the court on the preceding day, Dec. 28 (q.v.).

" The Society Library disposes of its property at the south-east corner of Broadway and Leonard St., which it first occupied in 1840 (q.v., Ap 30). It moved into temporary quarters in the Bible House at Fourth Ave. and 8th St. before occupying its new building at 109 University Place.—Keep, Hist. of the N. Y. Society Lib., 434; L. M. R. K., III: 957. See also Eve. Post, D 21, 1852.

25 Genin, the hatter, whose shop was at 214 Broadway, at the north-east corner of Fulton St., has applied to the common council for permission to erect an iron bridge over Broadway for foot-passengers, in front of his shop, to enable them to pass over Broadway without danger from vehicles. For view of the proposed bridge, see Gleason's Pictorial, III: 416 (D 25). Such a bridge was not built until 1867 (q.v., Ap 15).

28 A temporary injunction is issued against the city magistracy, forbidding them "to charter a Railroad in Broadway," and requiring them to show cause "why the injunction should not be made perpetual." The complaint on the basis of which the injunction was issued reiterates the objections stated by the mayor in his veto message (see D 18), and adds a number of others. "A majority of both Boards," it states, "have given out and threatened to again adopt such grant to Sharp, notwithstanding the Mayor's veto, and for that purpose are keeping the Boards now in session, frequently adjourning for want of a quorum; and the session is protracted, notwithstanding the per diem allowance for the first eight meetings of each session [see Jl 11, 1851] has long since ceased; and the plaintiffs are apprehensive that they will again pass such a grant as soon as they can by law act on the same." The fact that the grant "attempts to bind the Corporation forever" is also emphasized, "an odious and unjust monopoly" not being within the power of the common council to create.—N. Y. Tribune, D 29, 1852. Dec. 28

29 By a vote of 15 to 3, the board of aldermen overrides Mayor Kingsland's veto and grants to Jacob Sharp and others "the privilege of laying a railway in Broadway." Furthermore, resolutions are passed stating their reasons for "utterly disregarding" the injunction issued by the court on Dec. 28 (q.v.). The common council has, they declare, "an equal authority and right to suspect and impute improper motives to any intended judicial decision of any judge, and consequently to attempt to arrest his action on the bench, as such judge has in regard to the legislative action of the Common Council." As to the measure against which the injunction in question is directed, they say it was adopted "on grounds of public expediency, justice and right, for the best good of the city, both in regard to the accommodation and service of the public, and in regard to the interest of the City Treasury; and also on petitions from more than thirty thousand citizens, and that nothing has yet appeared which shakes the ground on which it was so adopted, and that we shrink from no discussion or investigation, judicial or otherwise, into the foundations of these grounds, and the reasons of our action, collective or individual."—Proc., Bd. of Ald., XLVIII: 642–45; Proc., App'd by Mayor, XX: 631–37; N. Y. Tribune, D 30; N. Y. Herald, D 29–31, 1852.

Haswell in his Reminiscences says: "In consequence of the corruption existing in the Municipal Departments, and especially in the Boards of Aldermen and Assistants, they, from the facility, extent, and conditions with which they granted leases of city railroads, ferries, etc., despite the vetoes of the mayor, were designated the Forty Thieves; the boards consisting each of twenty members." —Haswell, Reminiscences, 487. Alderman "Bill" Tweed, destined to become notorious later (see D 16, 1871), is quoted by the Tribune as offering at the board meeting an explanation of the press siding with the "uptown aristocracy" in these words: "We know the virtue of a $50. bill when it is wisely employed, and the echo that it will produce." Retorting, the editor says: "Certainly! The Alderman 'knows the value of a $50. bill' and of any number of fifties; if he didn't how would he ever have been an Alderman and a Congressman elect?"—N. Y. Tribune, D 31, 1852.

The franchise thus acquired by "the associates of the Broadway railway" gave them authority to lay a double track of grooved rails for a railway in Broadway and Whitehall or State St., from South Ferry to 59th St., and from time to time to continue it along Bloomingdale Road to Manhattanville. No motive power except horses was to be used below 59th St. The cars with the horses attached were not to exceed 45 ft. in length. At Bowling Green the associates were permitted to divide the tracks, one of them to extend down Whitehall St. Whenever, on the route, the road should pass a public square, it might be carried with a single track round both sides of the square. The company was required to procure a depot at or near the lower part of the route, for the purpose of storing such cars coming down in the morning as would not be required for the accommodation of the return travel until the afternoon. The cars were to be so constructed "as not to make provision intended for standing passengers to crowd upon the seated passengers;" and, when all the seats were full the cars were not to be stopped to take on more passengers "to be crowded into the said seats, a flag being displayed in front of the car to give notice that all the seats are full." There were also provisions about stopping, and the duties of conductors. The "associates" were required to keep sleighs in readiness, adequate to accommodate the public, when the operation of the cars was obstructed by snow; and they were to cause the streets to be swept. The fare was not to exceed five cents.—See Proc. of the Citizens of N. Y. in Opposition to the Project of a Railroad in Broadway (pamphlet, in N. Y. P. L.).

31 The common council permits the Third Ave. Railroad Co. to lay a double track with grooved rails for a railroad in the following streets: From a point at the intersection of Park Row and Broadway, near the south-westerly corner of the Park; thence along Park Row to Chatham St.; thence along Chatham St. to The Bowery; thence along The Bowery to Third Ave., and thence along 1852 Dec. 31 the Third Ave. to the Harlem River. No steam-power is to be used for the cars; and fare shall not exceed five cents to 61st St. nor six cents to the Harlem River. It is required that the road shall be commenced within six months, and completed to 42d St. within one year from this date; and from 42d St. to the Harlem River as fast as Third Ave. shall be graded.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XX: 627–31. In 1855, the line extended up Third Ave. to 61st St.—Man. Com. Coun. (1855), 334.

— In this year, John Romeyn Brodhead published Vol. I of his Hist. of the State of N. Y. The second volume appeared in 1871.

— In this year was published a Hist. of the City of New York, by David T. Valentine.

— In this year was published A Treatise upon the Estate and Rights of the Corporation of the City of New York as Proprietors, by Murray Hoffman. See also ibid. in 2 vols., 1862.

— In this year, C. S. Francis & Co. issued The Stranger's Hand-Book for the City of New York; or, What to See, and How to See It. Among its interesting observations are the following:

". . . Four bridges cross the Harlem River: viz, the Croton High Bridge, Macomb's Bridge, the Harlem Railroad and the Harlem turnpike bridge. The Hudson River Railroad is carried over Spuyten Duyvel creek. . . .

"The city population extends more than four miles on each river, and the compact part has a circumference of over ten miles. . . .

"Twelve noble avenues, each 100 feet wide, run parallel and lengthwise of the island, giving access to the city, and these are cut at right angles by numerous streets, every tenth one of which is also 100 feet wide, while the narrow streets are 60 feet in width. . . .

"There are upon Broadway alone some twenty-five hotels, all elegant in their appointments, and varying in the extent of their accommodations from 100 to 1,000 guests. . . .

"The Metropolitan, a new hotel, on the corner of Broadway and Prince street, is considered by many the largest and most magnificent establishment of the kind in the world. It is built of brown stone, six stories high, and the building alone cost over half a million of dollars. . . .

"The building is warmed by steam furnished by large boilers, and is provided with the most thorough ventilation. . . .

"There are upwards of two miles of halls in this establishment, and twelve miles of gas and water pipes. There are more than 13,000 yards of carpeting laid down, which cost, with the superb drapery, $40,000. The cabinet furniture cost $50,000; the mirrors, (some of them the largest ever imported,) about $18,000; the silver ware, $14,000. The cost of the whole establishment, including value of the ground, ($300,000) was $950,000.

"Visitors who desire to form an accurate idea of the progress of house-building in New-York during the last twenty years, should commence their survey by repairing to Lafayette Place, on the west side of which are seen the houses known as La Grange Terrace, or Lafayette Row—a colonnade erected eighteen or twenty years since, by Mr. Seth Geer. At the time of their erection, they were esteemed the most elegant private residences in New-York, but have since been, as we shall see, both far and frequently surpassed. A single house built at about the same time with these, is that formerly the residence of the late Henry Brevoort, on the corner of Fifth Avenue and Ninth street, and which was one of the first buildings erected in this luxurious neighborhood.

"Taking Washington Square as our starting-point, let us pass up the avenue, surveying at our leisure the stately mansions that rise on either hand. On the corner of Tenth Street is a house in the style of a French chateau, an agreeable departure from the uniformity of our city residences, owned and occupied by Mr Schiff. Diagonally opposite is the residence of Mr. Cottenet.

"On the right-hand side of the avenue, on the corner of Twelfth street, is the princely mansion of James Lenox, Esq. On the west side, between Thirteenth and Fourteenth streets, a house with heavy stone balcony is occupied by August Belmont, Esq.

"On the north-east corner of Fourteenth street is the spacious residence of Mr. Moses H. Grinnell, well known as an enterprising and liberal merchant.

"On the lower corner of Fifteenth street, east side is the house of Mr. R. K. Haight; opposite to which is that of Charles Parker, Esq. At this point we advise our friends to turn the corner of Sixteenth street to the left, and observe the elegant abode of Col. Thorn, conspicuous from being surrounded by a court-yard, affording room for windows on every side. Returning to the avenue, we have on the right upper corner of Sixteenth street the house of Captain [Lorillard] Spencer, late of the U. S. Navy. This house, though no wise distinguished for architectural beauty, cost, together with the site, $100,000. 1853 —

"On the north-east corner of Eighteenth street, a house remarkable for its simple and elegant proportions is occupied by Mr. Guion. It is very generally admired.

"At the north-west corner of Twentieth Street, we have a very elegant house, recently erected by R. L. Stuart, Esq. The house at the north-east corner, having a porte cochère at the side, is the residence of Mr. Nicholson, formerly of New Orleans, and one of the firm of Brown Brothers & Co.

"At the north-west corner of Thirty-fourth street is the elegant mansion of Dr. Townsend, widely known as the compounder of the famous sarsaparilla syrup. There are besides many other elegant houses upon this avenue, which deserve a separate notice, but this our limits forbid. . . .

"There are in New-York no less than 272 congregations. . . ." Ibid., 26–27, 63, 85–87, 89–90, 102.

Another guide-book to the city issued in this year has the following additional information: —

"Society in New York has many phases—it is cosmopolitan—a conglomerate—an amalgum, composed of all imaginable varieties and shades of character. . . . Its elements drawn from all quarters of the globe, and in some instances including the very dregs of society abroad—the refugees of justice—the wonder would . . . be that so much of high minded integrity and virtue are still to be found amongst us. It is the abuse of our free institutions that they should be accessible alike to all—the good and the bad: it is yet matter of gratulation, that of the multitudes of emigrants—estimated at about 1,000 per diem—with which the city is ever teeming—exhibit an overwhelming balance on the side of integrity and virtue. . . .

"There are in New York twenty daily papers, with a circulation of above 200,000, and the yearly value must exceed half a million of dollars. . . .

". . . Passing down the Fifth Avenue [from the Crystal Palace]—the most magnificent street on this continent, and likely to become the finest perhaps in the world—we reach Madison Square—not long since a rude field—now the centre of the fashion and wealth of the city. . . . It has been suggested that Madison Square would be an admirable site for the erection of a public observatory,—somewhat on the plan of the celebrated Kew, Kensington and Chelsea, in London. We hope the projected scheme may be speedily carried into effect—for nothing could be a greater ornament to the Metropolis, or afford a more delightful place of resort and promenade for its residents. The cost is computed at the moderate sum of $5,000. . . . A general movement is making upward and northward—old established societies are surrendering their former positions down town, to the eager demands of increasing commerce; and Broadway itself, which has ever been in process of completion, exhibits now but here and there remnants of its modest aspect in days of yore. Even Columbia College—the most venerable of our seats of learning, is, it is said, soon to bid adieu to the classic shades of Park Place, and be translocated to the Hosack Botanic grounds, about three miles north of the city. It has been computed that about 1,800 new edifices—many of them of costly magnificence—are now in process of erection, the value of which, when completed, will be over $15,000,000.

"Dr. Townsend's residence, corner of 34th Street and Fifth Avenue, is to cost, with the grounds, upwards of $200,000. The Union Club contemplate erecting a splendid house, which will be worthy of them and the City, somewhat on the model of the Athenaeum Club of London."—Saunders, N. Y. In a Nutshell (1853), 94–109.

Still another description states: ". . . New-York of the future, — while its central seat will still be on Manhattan Island, will reach out her vast arms and take in the whole western end of Long Island, the whole of Staten Island, a vast extent of the coast of New-Jersey, and a considerable portion of Westchester County beyond Harlem River; and within this space is found every variety of surface, soil, and physical configuration. Already these places are becoming the seats of villages, built by capital from the city, and occupied by a 1853 — teeming population from the city, who will continue to spend their hours of business in the great metropolis. Here, too, in every direction, are springing up the suburban villas of more opulent citizens, who seek beyond the din and dust of the city proper, the quiet that is there denied them. Here, too, are rising a multitude of public institutions—charitable, religious, and literary—by all of which the recent scenes of rural industry are becoming transformed into scenes of the animated turmoil of city life.

"The New-York of 1900 will probably be a much less compactly built city than that which now occupies the southern extremity of Manhattan Island [!] The overgrown proportions of the city are rapidly familiarizing the people with long distances. It is now no unusual thing for people to reside three, four, or five miles from their places of business, and things are arranging themselves to suit this state of affairs. Means of conveyance at minimum expenses, both of time and money, are coming into extensive use, by which the regions round about the city, as far as ten miles from the center of business, are brought into such intimate union with the city itself as to render them suitable and even economical places of residence for those who spend their hours of business in the densest part of the town. These facilities for traveling short distances outward and inward are already producing marked effects on the suburbs of New York; and if its population shall continue to increase as it has done, there can be no doubt that yet greater proportional effects will be produced. Fifty years hence a city of cottages with gardens, and villas with parks and pleasure-grounds, and clusters of dwellings among cultivated fields and miniature groves, will cover a circular area of fifty miles diameter, centering at the present site of the City Hall [!]."—*New York; A Hist. This building was abandoned in 1875, when the congregation occupied the present church at the north-west corner of Fifth Ave. and 55th St. (L. M. R. A second injunction against "the Broadway railroad speculators" is granted by Judge James J. Roosevelt of the supreme court, even though he was a prominent petitioner for the railroad.—Eve. Post, Ja 4, 1853. 4

An attempt at political reform is to be noted in the following resolution introduced into the board of aldermen by one of its members: "Resolved, That the Keeper of the City Hall be, and he is hereby directed not to furnish any refreshments to any person, whereby the expense of the same shall come out of the city treasury." By a vote of 9 to 8 the resolution was tabled.—Proc., Bd. of Ald., XLIX: 37. "A resolution to abolish the Tea-table was rejected," is the Tribune's brief comment.—N. Y. Tribune, Ja 6, 1853. The extravagances of this "Tea-table" or "Tea-room," as it was variously called, were the subject of much attention in Comptroller Flagg's report to the common council for the year 1852. (Flagg succeeded Jas. Taylor, Jan. 1, 1853.) He pointed out expenditures "for refreshments consumed by the Common Council" during the past year, either through "the Bureau of the City Hall and Park" or "the Street Department," to the amount of $10,220.42. Such "expenditures in the 'Tea-room' have no justifiable basis to rest on," he declares; "the last account paid, before I en- 5

1853 Jan. 5 tered on the duties of the office, for refreshments for the month of December, was stated and verified as follows:

Corporation of New York
To Jas. Taylor, Dr.
To refreshments furnished Common Council,
for month of Dec., 1852, viz:
Beef, pork, vegetables, bread, butter, tea, coffee, milk, sugar, chickens, oysters, eggs, cake, pepper, mustard, salt, vinegar and help, ... $776.46."

The comptroller remarks that such "accounts for refreshments at the City Hall" are "a novelty in the history of auditing accounts for disbursements of public money."—Comptroller's report (1852), 32–33. A news item in the Times speaks of the practise of the members of the common council going into "the corporation 'Tea Room' to get their supper," and declares that one member last evening called it an outrage "to make the people pay $11,000 per annum, for what was consumed in that 'Tea Room,'" and proceeded to Sherwood's Saloon, "took supper, and paid for it out of his own purse." Such action, the writer believes, will eventually result "in the abandonment of Mr. Taylor's department, the 'Tea Room.'"—N. Y. Daily Times, Ja 6, 1853.

" Another railway grant passes the common council, this time a double tracked road "in Ninth avenue from Fifty-first street to Gansevoort, from which point it will be continued by single tracks through Greenwich and Washington streets to the Battery." The grantees are to pay the city $20 a year for each car and are permitted to charge a five cent fare.—Eve. Post, Ja 6, 1853; Proc., Bd. of Ald., XLIX: 42. This measure was returned with Mayor Westervelt's veto on Jan. 12 (q. v.).

6 The St. Nicholas Hotel, on Broadway between Broome and Spring Sts., is opened for business. It cost $675,000.—N. Y. Daily Times, Ja 7, 1853. See also Gleason's Pictorial, IV: 161. For description, see Francis, Stranger's Hand-Book (1853), 87. A lithographic view of the hotel, made in this year, was sold with the Pyne collection.—See Pyne sales catalogue (1917), item 357.

7 A "large and influential meeting" is held at Metropolitan Hall "to express the Christian sympathy of the citizens of New York, in behalf of the persecuted family of the Madiais, now suffering imprisonment in the Grand Duchy of Tuscany, by the Government thereof, for 'possessing and reading the Holy Scriptures.'"—N. Y. Daily Times, Ja 8, 1853.

11 The "caloric" ship "Ericsson," newly invented by John Ericsson, is given a trial before representatives of the press and proves highly successful. She runs from her anchorage at the Battery down the bay to a point about 9½ miles from the city and back again in about 2½ hours.—N. Y. Daily Times, Ja 12, 1853.

12 About 500 or 600 influential men residing in various parts of the city meet at Stuyvesant Institute "for the purpose of taking action to remedy the corruption of the present City Council." The council is accused, among other things, of having sold the Fort Gansevoort property for half of what it was worth, of having let the contract for filling in Washington Market at a price of $75,000 when offers for doing it for ¼ that sum had been made, and for leasing the Roosevelt St. ferry for ⅓ less than was offered by various responsible persons. Peter Cooper and others make addresses, after which a committee is chosen to decide upon future action.—N. Y. Daily Times, Ja 13 and 14, 1853.

" Mayor Westervelt returns to the board of aldermen with his veto a resolution granting a railway in Ninth Ave. The mayor says he cannot discover that any such railway is asked for except by the grantees, "nor are there set forth in the report any reasons why the road should be constructed at all." He adds: "If such a railroad was required to promote the interests or convenience of our citizens, I cannot but feel that the interests of the city have been injuriously affected by the terms on which the permission to construct the road [see Ja 5] has been accorded. . . . I know of no reason why the course usually pursued with all public work should not have been adopted in this instance, and permission to construct the road awarded to those parties who would perform the work on terms the most advantageous to the city, and to the treasury."—Proc., Bd. of Ald., XLIX: 165–66. The Tribune comments: "The Mayor has shown his hand, on railroad matters, by vetoing the Ninth-avenue grant. If he is to be what this would indicate, stages are up again. But, what is the use? The Common Council—at least a constitutional majority of them—are already sold to certain railroad speculators, and bills will pass, in spite of Mayor Westervelt."—N. Y. Tribune, Ja 13, 1853. Haswell in his Reminiscences declares that in this year the "venality of some members of the Common Council and some members of the Departments was so extensive and so manifest that the tenure of the office of member was held to be more of a reproach than an honor. The fraternity and cohesiveness of common plunder, the auri sacra fames, was superior to all consideration of political and party affiliations and discipline. Republicans and Democrats joined hands; of this I write from observation, for after two years of service I, in 1858, presided over one of these Boards" (the board of councilmen).—Haswell, Reminiscences, 488. Thackeray delivers a lecture on "Humor and Charity," in the Church of the Messiah, for the benefit of the Society for Employment and Relief for the Poor.—N. Y. Daily Times, F 1, 1853. 31

In this month, the Children's Aid Society was formed. Its work began in a small office on the corner of Amity St. and Broadway. Charles Loring Brace was the founder. In March, a circular was sent out announcing the unique plan, which has since become general, of placing homeless orphans by adoption in private homes. In 1854 (q.v., Mr 18), the society opened the first lodging-house for "newsboys," in an old loft of the Sun building, corner Nassau and Fulton Sts. The society was incorporated Jan. 9, 1855, under the general act of April 12, 1848, for the incorporation of benevolent societies.—1st Ann. Rep., Children's Aid Soc. (1854); *20th Ann. In his report for the year 1852, Comptroller Flagg calls attention to the item of carriage hire for members of the common council, which amounted to $4,267. He says: "In regard to carriage-hire, so much as is necessary for the public service, on being properly authenticated, as required by the resolution of 1842, may be allowable. The accounts for carriage-hire, which have been presented to me, do not conform, in any respect, to the requirements of the resolution."—Comptroller's Report (1852), 32–33. See Ag 27. 14

The Astor Library (see Ja 18, 1849) in Lafayette Place (on the site formerly occupied by Sperry's Gardens and Delacroix's Vauxhall) has been completed during the past year. It is "deemed advisable" not to put in the books until April next, so that they will not be injured by any dampness from the walls. The new building will be ready for use by May 1. The amount expended on the building, beside the cost of the site, up to Jan. 1, 1853, was $70,000. The total expenditure up to that date for books was $75,364.40. The library now comprises between 60,000 and 65,000 volumes, and the superintendent, Dr. Cogswell, has gone to Europe to make further purchases. "On the return of Dr. Cogswell from Europe with his next instalment of books, the Astor Library will be the largest in America."—Illus. News, I: 125; L. M. R. 5 "Five thousand citizens of all classes" assemble "to effect a reform in the city government." Peter Cooper is elected chairman, and one of the speakers enumerates the following causes for such a mass demonstration: "The absence of all economy in the expenses of the city—the disposition to add to its permanent debt, and that with a new feature for annual repairs—the frequent discharge without trial, by aldermen, of persons arrested for crime—the grant of valuable franchises and property without adequate remuneration—and the evidences of extravagance, abuse of power, favoritism, and mismanagement which appear in our municipal government." Resolutions were adopted expressive of changes desired in the charter, and a "Committee on Legislation and Reform" was appointed to solicit such amendments from the legislature.—Eve. Post, Mr 7, 1853. For the amended charter adopted by the legislature, see Ap 12.

19 Franconi's Hippodrome is being erected at Madison Square. "The enclosure which covers an area of nearly two acres of ground, is to be surrounded by a brick wall twenty feet in height. . . . Upon the angles formed by the intersection of Broadway and Twenty-third and Twenty-fourth streets, jut out two octagonal towers thirty feet high. . . . The interior is to be surrounded with rows of conveniently constructed seats for the spectators, rising one above the other to a proper elevation around the entire circuit of the Hippodrome, presenting an oblong form, and of sufficient capacity to accommodate, comfortably, 10,000 spectators. . . . The covering of this immense enclosure will be one of the most attractive features of the Hippodrome, the canopy, consisting of light water-proof canvas . . . with alternate stripes of rich and variegated colors, throwing, by means of numberless jets of gas, a soft and effective light around the interior."—*Illus. All of New York south of a line from the North River through 80th St. to Fifth Ave., and through that avenue to 74th St., and through that street to the East River, comprised six dispensary districts, occupied and cared for, respectively, as follows: The New York Dispensary, incorporated in 1795; the Northern, in 1827; the Eastern, in 1832; the Demilt, in 1851; the Northwestern, in 1852; and the Northeastern, in 1862.—Lossing, op. cit. (1884), II: 690. See also descriptions and views of these in the later Valentine's Manuals.

23 The new Essex Market, a large brick building erected on the site of the old, is opened for business. The upper storeys are used by the police court, justice's court, Eastern Dispensary, Tenth Ward Station House, and superintendents of streets, lamps, and markets, and also as an armory.—De Voe, Market Book, 486–87. See also L. M. R. K., III: 958.

25 "The neighborhood of Reservoir-square presents a busy scene. Speculation is active in running up buildings of every description—intended as places of amusement, of refreshment, or lodging for the expected influx of visitors. The prospect at present does not present the most inviting appearance—vacant lots, ragged rocks, and deep pits, with relics of country shanties. It will require brisk work to transform the scene to something worthy the occasion of our 'World's Fair.' . . .

"The massive Reservoir presents a strong contrast to the light aerial structure [the Crystal Palace] erecting under its heavy shadow, and the unsubstantial buildings springing up around. . . .

"Among other speculations we noticed a large wooden tower [the Latting Observatory] which is in course of erection opposite the northern entrance to the Palace. Its shape is Octagon, each corner being firmly secured in the rock foundation. The base is 75 feet in diameter, and it is intended to run to a height of 300 feet—5 feet diameter at the apex. A well 15 feet in diameter will be carried the whole way up through which persons will be hoisted to the different landings—one at the height of 100 feet, another 200, and a third at an elevation of 270 feet. There will be also a spiral staircase. The proprietors are Mr. W. Latting and others. An extensive view of New-York, the noble rivers, the bay, and adjoining cities will be obtained from this tower, the largest wooden structure of the kind."—N. Y. Times, Mr 25, 1853. Contracts have been entered into by the city for the erection of a new Washington Market at Washington, West, Vesey, and Fulton Sts. "The contract price for the erection and complete finishing of this gigantic structure, is $375,000." An engraving made from a drawing by the architect, Frederick A. Peterson, shows the exterior.—Illus. News, I: 205. A survey of the market property, made in this year by J. Serrell, is filed as map No. 94 in real estate bureau, comptroller's office. These contracts were never carried out, and the "old dilapidated market-houses" were still standing in 1862, when De Voe wrote his Market Book, q. v., pp. 453–54. L. M. R. K., III: 960, is in error in stating that the new market was erected in 1852. See also Ja 16, 1867. 26

The Society Library, having sold its building on Broadway (see D 18, 1852), takes a two years' lease of a suite of rooms in the second storey of the new building of the American Bible Society, at the corner of Third Ave. and Astor Place. The New York Corn Exchange is incorporated.—Laws of N. Y. (1853), chap. 74. 2

These important changes in the municipal government are made by the state legislature, subject to a referendum at an election to be held on June 7 (q. v.). 12

1. "The legislative powers of the corporation of the city of New-York shall be vested in a board of aldermen and a board of councilmen [previously called assistant aldermen], who together shall form the common council of the city." As formerly, the board of aldermen is to consist of one alderman from each ward (at this date 20 in number, but increased to 22 a few weeks later—see My 27 and Je 22). The newly designated board is to consist of 60 members "to be elected from as many districts." These districts to be "of contiguous territory, and as near as may be of equal population." Like the assistant aldermen, the members of this new board were to be elected annually. Measures involving the appropriation of money were to originate in this board, "but the board of aldermen may propose or concur with amendments, as in other cases." It is further provided that "a vote of two-thirds of all the members elected to each board" shall be necessary to pass any measure over the mayor's veto.

2. In the board of aldermen only one half the membership shall retire from office in a given year by an arrangement that aldermen from "wards having an odd numerical designation" shall be elected one year, and those from the even numbered wards, the next year (see Je 14, 1853).

3. "No alderman shall hereafter sit or act as judge in the court of oyer or terminer or in the courts of general or special sessions . . . but this section shall not prevent his exercising the power of a magistrate in the arrest, commitment or bailing of offenders."

4. "All ferries, docks, piers and slips shall be leased, and all leases and sales of public property and franchises (other than the grants of land under water to which the owner of the upland shall have a pre-emption right) shall be made by public auction, and to the highest bidder who will give adequate security." It is further provided that hereafter leases shall not be "for a longer period than ten years."

5. "No money shall be expended by the corporation for any celebration, procession, or entertainment of any kind, or on any occasion, except for the celebration of the anniversary of the national independence [see Jl 4, 1854], the twenty-fifth of November, 'evacuation day,' and the anniversary of the birthday of Washington" (see F 22, 1854), unless by a three-fourths vote of all the members.

6. "The officers of the police and policemen shall hereafter be appointed by a board of commissioners, consisting of the mayor, recorder and city judge."

7. "All work to be done and all supplies to be furnished for the corporation, involving an expenditure of more than two hundred 1853 Apr. 12 and fifty dollars, shall be by contract founded on sealed bids, or on proposals made in compliance with public notice for the full period of ten days," all such contracts to be given to the lowest bidder with adequate security.

8. A new bureau is established in the department of finance (for the other bureaux, see Ap 2, 1849) to be called the "auditing bureau," and the chief officer thereof is to be called the "auditor of accounts." This bureau "shall revise, audit and settle all accounts in which the city is concerned as debtor or creditor; it shall keep an account of each claim for or against the corporation, and of the sums allowed upon each, and certify the same, with reasons therefor, to the comptroller."

9. Appropriations required for the almshouse and for the board of education must be submitted in the future to "a board of commissioners, consisting of the mayor, recorder, comptroller, the president of the board of aldermen, and the president of the board of councilmen."—Laws of N. Y. (1853), chap. 217. The electorate approved these amendments on June 7 (q. v.). Durand says: "Considerable but apparently unwarranted expectation of reform was based on an increase in the number of the lower board of the [common] council."—Durand, The Finances of N. Y. City, 73.

15 Two bureaux within the city inspector's department are created by an ordinance of the common council. One is "for the registry of births, marriages and deaths," the chief officer being called the "Registrar of Records;" the other is a bureau of sanitary inspection headed by the "Superintendent of Sanitary Inspection."—Proc., App'd by Mayor (1853–54), XXI: 141–46. The city inspector had presented to the common council quite regularly, since 1813, an annual report of "Deaths and Interments." In his report for the year 1852, City Inspector Downing alludes to the law of 1847 (q. v., Ap 28), providing for the "Registration of Births and Marriages," and declares it is "hardly possible to conceive of any measure more needed than this." However, as there was "no penal clause to launch it into compulsory practice," it had a "vital deficiency." "A reverend clergyman or two, who justly take pride in doing 'as in duty bound,' have favored us with a few marriages. And once in a long while some professional accoucheur will hand in an evidence of his obedience; but seldom are we thus honored." Without a "perfect register of births and marriages in connection with that of deaths . . . how can we truly obtain a knowledge of relative mortality?"—Ann. Report of City Inspector (1853), 278–80. The report for the next year gives monthly returns of births and marriages for the last six months of the year.—Ibid. (1854), 155–57. See Ja 6, 1854.

16 The Astor Place Opera House, at the intersection of Astor Place and 8th St.,—the scene of the riots of May 7 and 10, 1849 (q. v.)—is purchased by the Clinton Hall Assn. of Edmund Coffin and Wilson G. Hunt.—Liber Deeds, DCIX: 673; ibid., DCXLVI: 369. The date 1850, given in L. M. R. K., III: 982, is an error. For the opening of the building as Clinton Hall, see Ap 19, 1854.

20 Thackeray, after a tour of nearly six months in the United States, sails from New York on the Cunard liner "Europa."—Crowe, With Thackeray in Am., 171–73. Writing in May from Kensington to a friend, he said: "It is a whole fort-night since I saw 2nd Avenue . . . and do you know, I haven't the heart to move my watch from New York time? I pulled it out last night and showed it to the people at the ball, and said There that's the real time—they said Isn't this a beautiful ball and says I—Pish—this is nothing—go to New York if you want to see what a ball is . . . as if there could be any balls after New York."—From letter sold at Anderson's, Jan. 9, 1922.

2 Franconi's Hippodrome (see Mr 19) is opened with a performance including a tournament called "The Field of the Cloth of Gold," trapeze feats, a horse race, a chariot race, etc. The audience numbers about 9,000 or 10,000.—N. Y. Herald, My 3, 1853. See also Gleason's Pictorial, IV: 396. For sketches showing the various acts on this and later dates, see Illus. News., I: 305, 312, 313–14, 372, 412, 413. The performances continued for only two seasons, 1853 and 1854. The Fifth Avenue Hotel was later built on the Hippodrome site and opened in 1859 (q. v., Ag 23).—Brown, Hist. of N. Y. Stage, II: 19–20; L. M. R. K., III: 984. The Hippodrome is shown on Pl. 141-b, Vol. III. See also lithographic views in Eno coll., N. Y. P. L.

"The contractors have commenced in earnest the gigantic undertaking of enlarging the Battery. Piles have been driven into the river on both sides of Castle Garden, and the pile-driver is at work, docking out from the south side of the Battery. From the bridge to Battery place a fence has been erected, and on the outside of it part of the railings and sea-wall have been removed, and cartmen are constantly depositing the refuse earth into the river. If the filling up is carried on from the present place, it will not interfere with this most delightful promenade."—Eve. Post, My 3, 1853; descrip. of Pl. 142-a, III: 711. See also Francis, Stranger's Hand-book. The line of enlargement "commences at the westerly side of West-street, and thence runs in a direct line until it strikes the north-westerly angle of the block on which Castle Garden is erected; thence along the block to its westerly angle; and thence in a curve line, until it strikes the new pier No. 1, East River, at a point two hundred feet distant from the southern exterior of the Battery." The Battery when thus enlarged will contain 24 acres.—Illus. News, II: 27, and views in ibid. See also Gleason's Pictorial, V: 127. See, further, Ag 11, 1857. May 3

The scenery, chairs, curtains, plumbing work, carpets, gas fixtures, etc. of the Astor Place Opera House are sold at auction, prior to the demolition of the building and the erection of the new Mercantile Library on the site.—N. Y. Daily Times, My 21, 1853. 20

A colossal bronze statue of De Witt Clinton, 10½ feet high, is placed temporarily in front of the city hall, looking toward the Battery, on an ornamental bronze base 8½ feet high.—N. Y. Herald, My 25, 1853. It is to be placed permanently in Greenwood Cemetery.—Ibid., My 24, 1853. 24

John McComb dies in his 90th year. Besides the city hall, many notable buildings were erected by him as architect. Among them were "St. John's Church, Dr. Mason's Church in Murray-street, Washington Hall, on the ground where now stands Stewart's store; Bleecker-street Church, Bible and Tract houses, . . . Castle Garden," etc.—Illus. News, Je 11, 1853. The statement that he was architect of Castle Garden is evidently erroneous.—See O 9, 1808; see also descrip. of Pl. 25, Vol. I. A daguerreotype portrait taken in this year is in the N. Y. H. S. 25

The legislature passes an act creating the Twenty-first ward out of that portion of the Eighteenth Ward lying northerly of a line running through the centre of 26th St.—Laws of N. Y. (1853), chaps. 282, 348. 27

The editor of the Tribune makes the following comment on the refusal of the comptroller to pay a bill of W. B. Reynolds "for a month's services on his contract for the removal of dead animals, butchers' blood, and other refuse from the streets." The reason for the refusal is, says the editor, "that the contract is not legal and binding on the City, having been made privately, without any opportunity being given for competition, and that the compensation is exorbitant and unjust. The presumption, of course, is that Mr. Flagg is in the right, for he is known to be an honest man, while nobody will pretend that honesty belongs to the Board of Aldermen under whose auspices this contract was made, and made in a way which involves the appearance if not the reality of official corruption. 28

"The facts in the case are given elsewhere at length in our columns, and are sufficiently remarkable. It seems that Mr. Reynolds removes in a month some 500 dead horses and cows at the rate of $2.50 each, or $1,250 per month. That for carrying off dogs, cats and other animals, some 100 to 200 in number monthly, he gets $100 a month. That for removing blood and offal from sham-

1853 May 28 bles, nuisances from soap-boilers, and garbage and bones he receives $2,900 per annum, with $30 monthly for lime used in disinfecting. And that, in addition, he receives for carrying all these things to the docks—a job which we are told employs in winter 28 horses and 40 men, and in summer 40 horses and 100 men—the sum of $19 daily, or $114 per week. The yearly payments made by the City on this contract amount to $63,000, and it has four years to run from the 24th of April last. The offal and refuse is carried by Mr. Reynolds to Barren Island, just beyond Sandy Hook, where he manufactures from it prussian blue, glue, bone-dust and manure on a large scale. He employs a steamboat and two sailing vessels in transportation to and from the island, and has $60,000 invested in the enterprise."—N. Y. Tribune, My 28, 1853.

" For some weeks past workmen have been engaged on the city hall "in tearing up and laying down a new roof, which is now nearly completed, and operations have been commenced upon the cupola which is also to be renewed and painted."—N. Y. Daily Tribune, My 28, 1853.

31 Dr. Kane, in the "Advance," sets out upon his second expedition to the Arctic regions in search of the lost Arctic explorer, Sir John Franklin. A sketch of the "Advance" passing the Battery appeared in a paper of June 18.—Illus. News, I: 392–94. See also N. Y. Daily Times, Je 1, 1853. For an account of the expedition, see Kane, Arctic Explorations, Vol. I, and Winsor, VIII: 99–100, 125.

June 4 The state legislature passes a law providing for the transfer by the Public School Society of "all their corporate property to the mayor, aldermen and commonalty of the city of New-York." The headquarters of the society, "Trustees' Hall, situated at the corner of Grand and Elm streets," is to be used and occupied by the board of education as long as they may think advisable for the meetings and business thereof. The city is to assume the debts of the society, creating "the public education stock" for that purpose. The society may appoint 15 of their trustees to be members of the board of education and to hold office through 1854, also three trustees of common schools for each ward of said city in which one or more of the schools of the society are now established, designating the ward for which each person is appointed. The common schools "from thenceforth" are to be "numbered consecutively" by the board of education.—Laws of N. Y. (1853), chap. 301. Cf. Boese, Hist. of Pub. Ed. in the City of N. Y., 80–81; Man. Com. Coun. (1858), 615. The estimated value of the real and personal property of the Public School Society, in 1853, was $605,221.—Dissolution of the Pub. School Soc. (1853).

" A mass meeting of citizens in favour of the proposed amendments to the city charter (see Ap 12) is held in Metropolitan Hall. A reform committee is named with Peter Cooper as president, and speeches are made denouncing the corruption of the common council and favouring the amendments to the charter.—N. Y. Herald, Je 5, 1853. Another meeting for the same purpose was held in City Hall Park two days later under the auspices of the young men of the Democratic Union Club.—Ibid., Je 7, 1853.

" The editor of the Tribune expresses himself in favour of increased pay for policemen, but at the same time offers the following comment: "Much has been publicly said the last few months respecting the manner of appointing policemen in New-York, and a great deal of righteous indignation has fallen upon the heads of the City Fathers, who have been instrumental in far too many cases, in nominating and securing the appointment of men as policemen merely for the political services they have rendered the Aldermen in their respective Wards, and apparently without the least consideration as to their capabilities and disposition to serve the public as conservators of the peace. Notwithstanding, as we said before, too many political loafers have been appointed policemen, and by their misconduct a stigma has been cast upon the whole department, we presume that a decided majority of the policemen in our City are men of fair character and well calculated to fill the positions which they now occupy. Under the present mode of appointment, however, the Police Commissioners seem to be filling vacancies with men who are intelligent and possessed of the necessary education for the discharge of their duties, and of quite a different class from many of those who preceded them."—N. Y. Tribune, Je 4, 1853. By a provision of the amended charter, which met with the approbation of the voters three days later (see Je 7), policemen were to be appointed by a board of commissioners consisting of the mayor, recorder, and city judge.

7 The amendments to the city charter, passed by the legislature on April 12 (q. v.), are approved at a special election by a vote of 36,672 to 3,351.—N. Y. Herald, Je 8, 1853. In a final appeal to the voters, appearing in the morning paper and subscribed by Peter Cooper, to support the proposed amendments to the city charter, it is stated that the taxes have increased "from $3,380,511.05 in 1852 to $5,174,802.79 for 1853, . . . more than fifty per cent, besides a large addition to the permanent debt. And this large increase has brought no benefit to the city. Life and property remain with inadequate security; the streets are in a deplorable condition; the public health is in constant danger, and discomfort pursues us even to our houses. These things affect every one of you—the poorest as well as the richest. Each one of you must pay your share of the increased tax. You pay it in your rents, which are growing higher and higher every year, and you pay it in the larger price of every article bought in any place which pays a rent. But you have now a chance to secure a large measure of reform, by voting on Tuesday, the 7th of June, in favor of the Charter Amendments."—Ibid., Je 7, 1853. "The effect of the Election," says the Tribune editor, "was noticed last night by the extinction of all the lights in the City Hall, even to the clock. It was supposed to be Aldermanic Mourning."—N. Y. Tribune, Je 8, 1853. Pres. Brown of the board of councilmen, in his opening address to that body (Ja 5, 1854), made this reference to the election: "No election has taken place in this city within the memory of any living man, when the people have exercised the right of suffrage with so much discrimination; in many cases, strong party difficulties have been impotent to defeat the will of the masses."—Proc., Bd. of Councilmen (1853), LIII: 34. June 7

13 The Association for Improving the Condition of the Poor appoints a special committee "to inquire into the sanitary condition of the laboring classes, and the practicability of devising measures for improving the comfort and healthiness of their habitations." The committee's report was made about four months later and constituted the first tenement house report made in America. It called attention to the fact that most of the tenement houses were poorly constructed, much overcrowded, ill-ventilated, dirty, and unsanitary and that these evils led to intemperance, juvenile crime, a high death rate, and lack of thrift. The committee recommended that capitalists and owners of real estate build model tenements and urged that legislative action be taken to regulate tenement conditions and to close up, or cause to be remodelled, those houses which were unfit for human habitation.—De Forest & Veiller, The Tenement House Problem, 76–84. See 1854.

14 The legislature passes an act to supplement the charter amending act of April 12, 1853 (q. v.). It provides that the city clerk, "in the presence of the mayor, recorder and comptroller, or a majority of them," shall decide by lot whether, at the coming election, the aldermen chosen from the odd or even numbered wards shall have the longer term (two years).—Laws of N. Y. (1853), chap. 352.

17 The new Five Points Mission House, on the site of the Old Brewery (see Ja 27), is dedicated.—N. Y. Daily Times, Je 17, 1853. See also Lossing, Hist. of N. Y. City, II: 626–31; and L. M. R. K., III: 953.

" The "tea-room" (see Ja 5) is abolished. It is resolved by the board of aldermen that "the room lately occupied by the Common Council, and known as the tea room, be set apart for the use of the clerk of the Common Council, and that the suite of rooms now in use, together with the tea room, be appropriately fitted up." It is observed that one reason for this change given is greater "security to the official papers" filed in the clerk's office.—Proc., Bd. of Ald., L: 667–68. Cf. N. Y. Times, O 5, 1853.

22 The Nineteenth Ward is divided by a line running through the centre of Sixth Ave., from 40th St. to 86th St. The westerly portion is hereafter to be known as the Twenty-second Ward.—Laws of N. Y. (1853), chap. 448. The Twenty-first Ward had been created on May 27 (q. v.). For a complete description of all the wards at this time, see Hoffman's Laws Relating to the City and County of N. Y., I: 15.

24 Abbott's famous Egyptian collection is being exhibited at Stuyvesant Institute.—N. Y. Daily Times, Je 24, 1853. See also views in Illus. News, II: 19, 54, 55, and description in Francis, Stranger's Hand-Book (1853), 82–83. The collection was later purchased by the N. Y. Hist. Soc. (see Je 30, 1860).

29 The Astor Library being completed (see F 19), the removal of books from No. 32 Bond St., where they have been hitherto deposited, to the new building is commenced.—N. Y. Daily Times,

1853 Jl 2, 1853. See also Gleason's Pictorial, V: 152. The library was Je 29 opened on Jan. 9, 1854 (q. v.).

30 The Latting Observatory (see Mr 25), "the tall tower which has been for some time in course of erection on Forty-second street, between Fifth and Sixth-avenues," is opened to invited guests.—N. Y. Daily Times, Jl 1, 1853. The observatory was the invention of Waring Latting and was erected, at a cost of $180,000, as an attraction to visitors at the World's Fair (see Jl 14). It was thus described in this year: "Its total height is 350 feet. . . . the building itself is quite safe, having been carefully examined by scientific men, who have made a favorable report. It stands on Forty-third street, the entrance being from Forty-second street through a building 125 feet long. On either side of the passage is a continuous bazaar. In the upper story is an ice-cream saloon elegantly fitted up for ladies. The tower is an octagon, 75 feet in diameter at the base, with an extreme height of 350 feet. It is of timber, well braced with iron, and is anchored at each of the eight angles with about forty tons of stone and timber. The first story is a refreshment-saloon, the second a ladies' ordinary. These stories are enclosed, and are together about twenty-five feet in height. Above this are three stories of open work, and then an enclosed landing arranged in good style. Here is the first look-out, 125 feet from the ground. Then come four open stories above which is the second landing, 225 feet from terra firma. Passing three open stories, we reach the third and highest landing, 300 feet from the base, and by reason of the height of ground, about 175 feet higher than the topmost windows in St. Paul's spire. To aid the view there are telescopes at each landing, with maps and directions for the convenience of strangers. Access to the first and second landings is had by a steam elevator, running up a well-way in the centre about 15 feet in diameter. From the second to the third landing is a winding stairway. The tower terminates in a spire, with a flag-staff, in all 50 feet above the highest landing, thus making the extreme altitude from base to top of pole just 350 feet."—Francis, Stranger's Hand-Book (1853), 83–84. See also views and description in Illus. News, I: 309, 313.

The enterprise was not successful, and the structure was sold under execution, after which the base of the building was used as a marble manufactory and the tower as an observatory until the whole structure was destroyed by fire in 1856 (q. v., Ag 30).—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ag 30, 1856.

Real estate records do not reveal the exact location of the observatory; but contemporary references and views (see, e. g., statements above and under Mr 25, and see Pl. 141-a, Vol. III) show that it stood near Sixth Ave., between 42d and 43d Sts., opposite the Crystal Palace. The statement in L. M. R. K., III: 963, that it was on the present site of the Century Club, is therefore erroneous. See also Pl. 145, Vol. III, for perspective view from top of the tower. The marble works erected on the site (vide supra) are fully indicated on the Perris Insurance Map (1859), plate 81.

The elevator in the Latting Observatory was one of the first passenger elevators in America, a freight elevator having been in use in New York in 1850 (q. v.).

" The legislature authorises the city to acquire such lands as are needed, between 86th and 96th Sts., and Fifth and Seventh Aves., for the construction of a new Croton reservoir.—Laws N. Y. (1853), chap. 501. See Ap 17, 1854, and Ap 14, 1856.

" "The Manhattan and New York Gas Companies are extending their works. The former Company have commenced building, on an extended scale, on the East River, the capital having been enlarged $500,000 to meet the proposed expenditure. Six large tanks, or gas-holders, each of a capacity equal to about 368,000 cubic feet, and 97 feet in diameter, are to be built, while a space of ground 400 by 200 feet on Avenue C, between Fourteenth and Fifteenth-streets, is to be covered with purifying buildings; an entire block between Avenues C and D is to be occupied by the engine house, office, machine-shop, blacksmith's shop, scrubbers, condensers, and three retort houses 240 feet long, to cover the whole width of the block. The buildings are to be of brick, and the foundations are partially laid. From Avenue D to the river, a space varying from 200 to 300 feet, will form the coal-yard. Five years ago all this ground was covered by navigable water, from 17 to 20 feet in depth, but has been filled in by encroaching on the river. It is expected that the new Gas Works will be partially in operation next Fall."—N. Y. Daily Times, Je 30, 1853.

Jl 1 The Citizen and Strangers' Pictorial and Business Directory for the City of New-York, and its Vicinity, the first pictorial and business July directory published in New York, is issued by Chas. Spalding & 1
Co. of 307 Broadway. It is occasioned by the World's Fair (see Jl 14). Besides numerous advertisements, wood-cut views, and descriptions of important buildings, it contains the following observations:

"The spirit of progress seriously contemplates the immediate enlargement of the Battery to full twice its present area, by advancing its granite wall to the outmost verge of Castle Garden, . . . connected with the Battery by a wooden bridge. Along each side of this bridge Floating Baths are moored during the summer months, and removed in winter to places of greater safety. Until latter years the Battery was long the only promenade of any interest in the city. The Park proper has never been used as a promenade by the ladies, partly because it was formerly the site of Bridewell and the City Jail, and partly because it was generally thronged to overflowing with police officers, lawyers and loafers attending upon the courts of law. St. John's Park, the only other pleasure ground besides the Park and Battery, below Canal street, has always been controlled by private owners who have kept the keys. But the noble Battery has been free to all from immemorial time, and many are the homeless wanderers who make it, of a summer night, their only home and castle of repose.

"At the South Eastern extremity of this park are the busy Ferries of South Brooklyn and Staten Island, and at its North Western angle is the steam-boat dock of the Camden and Amboy Railroad, while in its centre rises the flag-staff of the port, bearing the floating banner of the stripes and stars." (p. 61.)

City Hall Park "is situated at the focal point of the business energies and travelling movements of the Metropolis. . . . In, and around this Park are now clustered the courts of law, municipal, state and federal; the great steam-urged printing and publishing establishments; several first-rate hotels; and some of the finest stores in the world. . . . As a necessary consequence, property in this locality, is assuming an almost incredible valuation. Many of the new Stores are held at a hundred thousand Dollars; one of them cost two hundred and fifty thousand; and a single building within eighty rods of the Park, rents this year at Sixty-five thousand Dollars, the principal material of which was transported by river, canal and lakes, from the remote brick-yards of Milwaukee.

"The City-Hall Park is, in form, a right-angled triangle, the longest side being that on Chatham-street, and its rectangle at Stewart's marble mercantile palace, and the Irving-House. It contains, besides a marble fountain 80 feet in diameter, with a jet sixty feet in height, the City-Hall, the Hall of Records, the New City-Hall, and the Rotunda. The Commissioners of the Alms-House and the Commissioners of Emigration have their offices in the Park, where also are the head-quarters of the Police. Its shady Avenues, formed by venerable Elms, are favorite resorts for military parade, where many a 'feu de joie' and booming cannonade have celebrated the triumphs of liberty in the New World. Here too the popular orators of the Republic, mounted on temporary platforms, sway the multitudes. . . ." (p. 63.)

"Union Square . . . derives its name from the circumstance that a greater number of principal streets and avenues unite here, than at any other square in the city. . . . Should Brooklyn and Williamsburg, at some future time, choose to coalesce with the metropolis, and the East River become to New-York what the Thames is to London, a bond of union rather than a dividing limit, then the City-Hall Park will have the permanent preference as the business centre of the whole. On the other hand, if the cupidity of commerce and the mania for Mammoth stores, should overstride their own true interests, and force the great hotels to abandon the southern Wards, and climb towards the Highlands and Harlaem River, then would Union or Madison square, or both united as a double centre, form the future focus of the Metropolis.

"As Union Park now is, it presents to the wealthy citizen an elegant site for his residence, and to enterprising landlords a favorite position for hotels. With these two classes of buildings, and a few distinguished boarding schools all sides of it are now completely occupied." (p. 69.)

Madison Square "has a very central position on the Island, indicating, perhaps, the municipal distinction to which it may ultimately arrive, in case the City of New-York should be confined to its present area for a century to come. Elegant mansions are rising rapidly around it, in all the splendor of recent Metropolitan 1853 July 1 improvements. For the coming year its most attractive feature is the Hippodrome [see My 2]."

Grammercy Park "has a substantial and ornamental iron railing, and a hedge of sweet primrose, with gravel walks, shade trees and flowers, refreshed by a lovely fountain." (p. 73.)

"New York has at last become fully awake to the commercial importance of rail-road conveyance by land, as she has been from the beginning of steamboat navigation by sea. Eight important rail-road lines converge in the metropolis, at the present time, occupying all the routes indicated by nature as either necessary or useful. These eight lines are continuous to the remotest parts of the country, in every direction. One traverses Long Island on the route to New England, whilst another takes the same general direction through Westchester County along the Sound. The former is known as the Long Island, and the latter as the New Haven Rail-road. Two also proceed to the Capital of the State, and thence to Boston on the east, Canada on the north, and to all the greater or lesser lakes on the west. Three others meet at Jersey City, one from Lake Erie, one from Easton, Pa. and one from Washington, Baltimore, and Philadelphia, and delivers its freight and passengers at South Amboy, on the way from the southern states. Thus has been completed, within a few years, the entire system of rail-road access to the City, which its social, political, or commercial interests can demand. Independently of these general lines, three others traverse the city from North to South. Of these the Fourth Avenue Harlem Line has its Southern terminus at the City-Hall Park, directly opposite the Astor-House.

"Two others, the Sixth and Eighth Avenue lines have their common terminus at the junction of Church and Barclay-street, directly in the rear of St. Paul's Church and the Astor; and the Sixth Avenue line has a branch track through Canal-street to Broadway. All these lines of Cars relieve Broadway effectually above Fulton-street, whereas South of that street the throng of pedestrians, Carts, Waggons, Carriages, Hacks and Omnibuses, is sometimes not merely impassable, but absolutely immovable.

"The means of relieving this part of Broadway, which is the principal route to all the important ferries, have not as yet been devised. The extension of the Bowery to Pearl street, and a railroad by that route to the Battery, would do much towards effecting the necessary reform; but this would require the latter street to be remodelled, and its breadth increased at least 30 feet, at an expense of millions of dollars. Excepting on the Avenues, or in Broadway, and Greenwich street, few more railroads are either practicable or desirable in the city. The Greenwich-street line has already been assigned to a company incorporated for its construction.

"The Depôt of the New Haven Rail-Road is in Canal-street, opening into Broadway. The Depôt of the Hudson River Rail-Road is at the junction of Chamber-street and West Broadway. That of the Erie Rail-Road is at the foot of Duane-street." (p. 205.)

2 The Third Avenue R. R., from City Hall Park to 61st St., is formally opened, and the event is celebrated by a dinner at Van Cott's Four Mile House. Nineteen passenger horse-cars commenced running on July 4.—N. Y. Daily Times, Je 29, and Jl 4, 1853.

12 The corner-stone of the first Madison Square Presbyterian Church is laid at the south-east corner of Madison Ave. and 24th St.—Unpub. records of the church (courtesy of Rev. Charles H. Parkhurst, D.D.). The church was dedicated in 1854 (q.v., D 24).

14 Pres. Pierce arrives in New York to open the World's Fair at the Crystal Palace. At about 10.30 a.m. he landed at Castle Garden and was cordially received by the mayor and common council, military and naval officers, and private citizens. After reviewing the troops on the Battery, he proceeded on horseback up Broadway through lines of cheering throngs, flag-decked buildings, and welcoming banners.—N. Y. Herald, Jl 15, 1853; Proc., App'd by Mayor, XXI: 267. For sketch of the president during his review of the troops, see Illus. News, II: 41.

" The Crystal Palace is opened with the first World's Fair, distinguished guests being present from all parts of Europe, South America, Canada, and the U. S. The ceremonies include prayer by Bishop Wainwright, a chorale by the N. Y. Harmonic Society, and addresses by Pres. Pierce and the Hon. Theodore Sedgwick. Between 6,000 and 8,000 people are present.—N. Y. Herald, Jl 15, 1853. The palace in its completed form was thus described: "It is probably well known that the only essential materials which enter into the construction of the edifice, are iron and glass. . . . The ground plan of the building is in the form of a Greek cross, the diameter of which is three hundred and sixty-five feet five inches. There are three entrances into the main building. . . . These entrances are on Sixth Avenue, on Fortieth and on Forty-second-streets. . . . The arch of the nave is semi-circular, and has a fan-light forty-one feet in width, and twenty-one feet in height. . . . On each side of the central nave . . . extends an aisle fifty-four feet wide, and reaching to a height of forty-five feet. . . . Over each aisle extends a gallery its equal in width, and which is elevated twenty-four feet above the floor. The crowning feature of the whole edifice is the dome. It is in diameter one hundred feet. . . . The angles made by the cross-form, on the exterior of the building, are filled with triangular additions, which rise twenty-four feet in height, and they give the shape of an octagon to the building. A tower of the same shape rises at each angle. . . . Upon these towers are erected flag-staffs for the display of national colors. The gallery is reached by ten large stair-cases; and there are also eight winding stair-cases. . . . The structure occupies, on the ground, a space of 111,000 square feet. . . . The dome is lighted through the lantern which surmounts it, and also through the windows extending around its sides. Here may be seen thirty-two escutcheons, in colored glass, exhibiting the arms of the Federal Union, and, respectively, of the sisterhood of states which compose the Union. Combined also in the appropriate decoration may be seen various national figures and emblems. The amount of iron consumed in the building will not vary far from twelve hundred and fifty tons. . . . The glass used . . . is equal to thirty-nine thousand square feet."—Illus. News, II: 33–40. See also Francis's Handbook (1853), 133–35, N. Y. Daily Times, Jl 14 et seq., 1853, and Putnam's Mag., II: 121–29, 576–93.

Among the exhibits was an elevator invented by Elisha G. Otis, which was "the first elevator wherein provision was made for stopping the fall of the car in the contingency of the breaking of the hoisting cables." The modern elevator is said to be "a direct evolution" from this machine.—Encyclop. Am., X: 225. The palace is shown on Pls. 141-a and 145, Vol. III. Other views of it were sold with the Pyne collection.—Pyne sales catalogue (1917), items 237–44. It was destroyed by fire on Oct. 5, 1858 (q.v.). See also L. M. R. K., III: 983, and D 15, 1855.

15 Pres. Pierce and his suite take an excursion around the harbour and bay of New York. In the afternoon the president was daguerreotyped at Brady's gallery and received visitors at the Astor House. He attended a banquet in the evening given at the Metropolitan Hotel by the directors of the World's Fair, and later went to Castle Garden to hear Madame Sontag in "Roberto." He was also serenaded by the Democratic Union Club at the Astor House.—N. Y. Herald, Jl 16, 1853; N. Y. Daily Times, Jl 16, 1853.

" "The old Manhattan Reservoir, situated in Chambers-street at the rear of the City Hall, is now in course of demolition."—N. Y. Daily Times, Jl 16, 1853. This statement is either an error or else only part of the structure was removed, for the reservoir remained standing until 1914.—See L. M. R. K., III: 975.

18 The legislature authorises the city "to grant the free use of such a portion or portions of any public park or parks that may hereafter be created, made, or laid out in said city, as may not interfere with the general design and utility of any such park or parks, for the purpose of founding a garden for horticultural purposes, which shall be under the direction of the New-York Horticultural Society during its existence, and which shall be subject to the free admission of the public at all times, with only such restrictions as may be necessary and proper for the preservation of the gardens and the maintenance of order."—Laws of N. Y. (1853), chap. 552.

" Aiken's version of "Uncle Tom's Cabin" is performed at the National Theatre in Chatham St. It achieved an unprecedented success and was played successively more than 200 times.—N. Y. Herald, Jl 18, 1853; Ireland, Records of the N. Y. Stage, I: 608. On 1853 Jl 18 Nov. 7, Conway's version was produced here.—Brown, Hist. of N. Y. Stage, I: 73.

21 An act of the legislature forbids New York, or any other city within the state, hereafter to "loan or give its credit to or in aid of any individual, association or corporation." Furthermore, it is forbidden to incur debts to exceed 8% of the "aggregate valuation of the real estate within its bounds."—Laws of N. Y. (1853), chap. 603.

" The legislature passes an act declaring the land now known as Central Park, bounded by 59th and 106th Sts., Fifth and Eighth Aves., to be a public place, and authorises the city to take said land for the public use.—Laws of N. Y. (1853), chap. 616. See also 16th Ann. Rep., Am Scen. & Hist. Pres. Soc. (1911), 458, and L. M. R. K., III: 969. See N 17.

13 "A club house is to be built on the corner of 5th avenue and 21st street, New York, to cost $200,000."—Gleason's Pictorial, V: III. This was the Union Club; it was opened on April 25, 1855 (q. v.).

27 The total expense for carriage hire for members of the common council, Aug., 1852, to Aug., 1853, was $3,186.75. Alderman Tweed's bill ($438.50) was by far the largest, exceeding the average bill by $365.39. His nearest competitor's bill was for $266.75.—Comptroller's Report (1853), 57–59.

Sept. 1 The "Whole World's Temperance Convention" assembles at Metropolitan Hall. It adjourned on Sept. 9.—N. Y. Daily Times, S 2–10, 1853.

3 The twentieth anniversary of the publication of The Sun is celebrated "in a manner quite novel among the editorial fraternity." During the afternoon, the large printing rooms were thrown open to public inspection, and the "monster steam printing press of eight cylinders, the largest and only one of the kind in New York," was put in operation. In the evening the entire establishment was illuminated with from 1,000 to 2,000 lights—one for each window glass. Later, a banquet was served to the employees of The Sun and the "distinguished editors and gentlemen" of the city.—Illus. News, II: 125, which contains a view of the illuminated building. Oct. 16 St. Michael's Church, erected in 1806 at the corner of 99th St. and Broadway, is destroyed by fire.—N. Y. Daily Times, O 18, 1853; L. M. R. K., III: 934.

19 "Mr. Dion Bourcicault, the eminent dramatic author, is in our city. This gentleman has not, like many of his cotemporaries, preceded his fame. He has been long and favorably known to our theatrical audiences."—N. Y. Daily Times, O 19, 1853. See also Moses, Famous Actor-Families in Am., 115–40.

29 The construction of Cooper Institute (see S 17) is progressing rapidly, all the foundations having been laid. "Peter Cooper, Esq., the well known merchant, is the donor, and we understand has chosen as the title of the institution—'The Union, for the Moral, Mental and Physical Improvement of the Youth of this City, of the State, the Country, and the World.' . . . The site chosen for the edifice is opposite the New Bible House, at the corner of Astor place and Fourth avenue. . . . The building will occupy the entire block bounded by Fourth avenue, Astor place, Third avenue, and Seventh street. . . . In the basement will be a hall 135 feet long and 84½ wide, intended mainly for a lecture room. . . . The institution will be under the government of a board of trustees. . . . To become a member and a student of this institution, requires no other credentials than a good moral character."—Illus. News, II: 240–41, which contains a view of the proposed building. Nov. 5 Another elevated railroad is proposed for Broadway. It is suggested by one Swett and is thus described: "This railway, when adopted, is to be erected on arms branching out from strong single pillars. The locomotive is to run on the rails, and carry a suspended car, which shall pass between the spaces of the supporting arms. Elevated stations, as shown, will be erected at different cross streets, to let out and take in passengers. This road is to be high enough to be out of the reach of all vehicles below, and thus give no annoyance. The posts can be erected near the curb stone, so as to allow the track to occupy the least used portion of the street."—Illus. News, II: 253–54, which also contains a view. See also Gleason's Pictorial, VI: 200, 201. Elevated roads had been proposed as early as 1832 (q. v., Ja 18) and 1846 (q. v., Mr 23), but the first one was not built until 1867 (q. v., Jl 2).

8 The first election of members of the board of aldermen and board of councilmen under the amended charter (see Ap 12) takes place. The membership of the board of aldermen is entirely changed as a result of the election, and the new board of councilmen that is now to supersede the board of assistants does not contain a single member of the former board. The amended charter, therefore, has accomplished its purpose so far as the personnel of the common council is concerned.—Proc., Bd. of Ald., LII: 724–30; N. Y. Tribune, N 9, 1853.

Dec. — At the close of 1853, the scheme of extending Albany St. through Trinity churchyard to Broadway was again revived. Articles appeared in several newspapers, and meetings of those interested were held. The matter came again before the board of aldermen (see 1847, and later references), and at their last session in 1853 an amendment was offered and carried that Albany Street be extended to Broadway. Prompt action was taken by the vestry (see Ja 9, 1854).—Dix, Hist. of Trinity Church, IV: 388.

The fire extends across Pearl St., where the historic Walton house, a residence built in 1754, at No. 326, is burned (except for the front wall and the lower storey), together with the Franklin Square Hotel adjoining it, and the publishing house of George F. 15 The catalogue of the first (which is also the last) annual sale of paintings by the American Art Union (see My 7, 1840; Ja 29, 1844) contains the following note: "A competent legal tribunal [see 1830; D 31, 1833] having decided that the plan hitherto pursued of distributing works of art by lot was in conflict with the provisions of the Constitution, the committee have deemed it expedient to adopt a new medium of communication between the artist and the public." —Howe, Hist. of the Metropolitan Museum of Art (1913), 61. To show the influence of the Art Union, despite its illegality (as a lottery), upon the progress of art, Miss Howe quotes the following facts gleaned by John Durand:

"In 1836 they [artists] could be counted on one's fingers; in 1851 when the Art Union fell under the ban of the law [cf. 1830; D 31, 1833], American artists formed a large body. The collection of paintings that was to have been distributed this year, and sold at auction in 1853 to close up the institution, numbered three hundred and ninety-five works, executed by over two hundred and fifty artists, most of them born on the soil. During the period of the Art Union's existence it distributed two thousand four hundred works, besides numerous original engravings. The institution, if not the creator of a taste for art in the community, disseminated a knowledge of it and largely stimulated its growth. Through it the people awoke to the fact that art was one of the forces of society." —Ibid., 61–62, citing Life and Times of A. B. Durand, 172.

28 The boards of aldermen and assistants, notwithstanding the objections of the mayor, adopt resolutions granting the Ninth Avenue Railroad Co. the right to lay a double track from 51st St. through the Ninth Ave. to Gansevoort St.; thence by a single track through Gansevoort St. to Washington St.; and through Washington St. to the Battery, and through Battery Place, between Greenwich and Washington Sts.—Proc., Bd. of Ald., XLIX: 42; LII: 398–99; *Proc., & Docs., Bd. of Asst. The New Republican party in the United States is formed.— Winsor, VII: 282. —

Wm. Chambers, an Englishman who visited New York in this year, thus described the city: "Reaching the city by a back-way, as it may be called, we have the opportunity of seeing the worst side first—straggling half-built streets, with shabby stores, lumber-yards, heaps of rubbish, petty wooden houses, and a general aspect of disorder. At an assigned point the train stopped, and I imagined we had reached the principal terminus. No such thing. The delay was only to detach the locomotive, and to take the train piecemeal into town by horses. And so, drawn by a team of four horses at a trot, the car in which I was seated went smartly up one street and down another—the rails being laid in the causeway—till we reached the heart of the busy metropolis. . . . —

"At the first look, we see that New York very much resembles the most densely-built parts of London. The houses, tall, and principally of brick, are crowded into narrow streets, such as are een in the neighbourhood of Cheapside, with the single difference, that many of the buildings are occupied in floors by different branches of business, with a profusion of large sign-boards in front. . . .

"Hampered as to space, New York has no room for villas; and in this respect there is a marked difference between it and our English cities. . . .

"The principal object of curiosity in or about New York, is the Croton Aqueduct, which few strangers miss seeing. . . .

"Some traveller speaks of the buildings of Broadway as being a mixture of poor wooden structures and splendid edifices. There may be a few houses of an antiquated class, but any such general description is totally inadmissible in the present day. We see for the greater part of its length, a series of high and handsome buildings, of brown sandstone or brick, with several of white marble and granite. Some of the stores and hotels astonish by their size and grandeur. . . . New York, it seems, is celebrated for its extensive dealings in 'dry goods.' . . . Stewart's Store, a huge building of white marble, adjoining the Park, on Broadway, is pointed out as the largest of these concerns; and the amount of business done in it is stated to be above 7,000,000 of dollars per annum. . . .

". . . Advancing northwards from the more busy parts of the town, the elegance and regularity of the houses become more conspicuous, and at last we find ourselves in the quietude and splendour of a Belgravia. Here the edifices are entirely of brown sandstone, and of a richly decorated style of street architecture; all the windows are of plate-glass; and the door-handles, plates, and bell-pulls silvered, so as to impart a chaste and light effect. The furnishings and interior ornaments of these dwellings, particularly those in Fifth Avenue, are of a superb kind. . . .

"Passing over any notice of the churches of New York—some of them with handsome spires, and generally picturesque in effect—and also the banks, theatres, and other public structures, the edifices most worthy of attention are the hotels. . . .

"In recollection, I am this moment arriving at the Astor House, one of the most respectable hotels in New York, though outdone in dimensions and decoration by some of the newer establishments. Before me is a high building of whitish granite, with a front on Broadway of 200 feet, a height of six stories, and forming altogether an independent block, with rows of windows on every side. The ground-floor consists entirely of retail stores of various kinds, and ascending by a central flight of steps, we reach a spacious lobby with marble flooring and pillars. . . . The number of apartments in the house is 326. . . .

"So much for the Astor, to which there are now many rivals of equal or larger dimensions—the Irving House, the Prescott House, and numerous others, including the two more recently established and peculiarly splendid establishments—the Metropolitan and St. Nicholas, both situated considerably 'up town' in Broadway. The Metropolitan, an edifice of brown sand-stone, with a frontage of 300 feet, is superbly furnished, and laid out with 100 suites of family apartments, and can accommodate altogether 600 guests, whose

Executive Mansion,

Washington, March 24, 1862.

Hon. Horace Greeley-
My dear Sir:

Your very kind letter of the 16th to Mr. Colfax, has been shown me by him. I am grateful for the generous sentiments, and purposes expressed towards the administration. Of course I am anxious to see the policy proposed in the late special Message, go forward; but you have advocated it from the first, so that I need to say little to you on the subject. If I were to suggest anything it would be that as the North are already for the measure, we should urge it persuasively, and not menacingly, upon the South. I am a little uneasy about the abolishment of slavery in the District, and but I would be glad to see it abolished, but as to the time and manner of doing it. If some, or now of the border states would move first, I should greatly prefer it; but if this can not be in a reasonable time, I would like the bill to have the three main features— gradual— compensation— and vote of the people— I do not talk to members of Congress on the subject, except when they ask me— I am not prepared to make any suggestion about confiscation— I may accept you a line hereafter.

Yours truly
A. Lincoln

A PROCLAMATION

By the President of the United States.

I, ABRAHAM LINCOLN, President of the United States of America, and Commander-in-Chief of the Army and Navy thereof, do hereby PROCLAIM and DECLARE that hereafter, as heretofore, the war will be prosecuted for the object of practically restoring the Constitutional relation between the United States and the people thereof, in which States that relation is, or may be, suspended or disturbed; that it is my purpose upon the next meeting of Congress to again recommend the adoption of a practical measure tendering pecuniary aid to the free acceptance or rejection of all the Slave States so called, the people whereof may not then be in rebellion against the United States, and which States may then have voluntarily adopted or thereafter may voluntarily adopt the immediate or gradual abolishment of Slavery within their respective limits; and that the effort to colonize persons of African descent with their consent upon this continent or elsewhere, with the previously obtained consent of the Governments existing there, will be continued, that on the first day of January, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-three, all persons held as slaves within any State, or any designated part of a State, the people whereof shall then be in rebellion against the United States, shall be thenceforward and forever free, and the Executive Government of the United States, including the military and naval authority thereof, will recognize and maintain the freedom of such persons, and will do no act or acts to repress such persons, or any of them, in any efforts they may make for their actual freedom; that the Executive will, on the first day of January aforesaid, by proclamation, designate the States and parts of States, if any, in which the people thereof respectively shall then be in rebellion against the United States, and the fact that any State, or the people thereof shall on that day be in good faith represented in the Congress of the United States by members chosen thereto at elections wherein a majority of the qualified voters of such State shall have participated, shall, in the absence of strong countervailing testimony, be deemed conclusive evidence that such State and the people thereof have not been in rebellion against the United States.

That attention is hereby called to an act of Congress entitled "An act to make an additional article of war," approved March 13, 1862, and which act is in the words and figures following:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That hereafter the following shall be promulgated as an additional article of war, for the government of the army of the United States, and shall be obeyed and observed as such:

Article. All officers or persons in the military or naval service of the United States are prohibited from employing any of the forces under their respective commands for the purpose of returning fugitives from service or labor, who may have escaped from any persons to whom such labor is claimed to be due, and any officer who shall be found guilty by a court-martial of violating this article, shall be dismissed from service.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That this act shall take effect from and after its passage.

Also, to the ninth and tenth sections of an act entitled "An act to suppress insurrection, to punish treason and rebellion, to seize and confiscate the property of Rebels, and for other purposes," approved July 17, 1862, and which sections are in the words and figures following:

SEC. 9. And be it further enacted, That all slaves of persons who shall hereafter be engaged in rebellion against the Government of the United States, or who shall in any way give aid or comfort thereto, escaping from such persons and taking refuge within the lines of the army; and all slaves captured from such persons or deserted by them and coming under the control of the Government of the United States; and all slaves of such persons found on (or being within) any place occupied by Rebel forces and afterwards occupied by the forces of the United States, shall be deemed captives of war, and shall be forever free of their servitude and not again held as slaves.

SEC. 10. And be it further enacted, That no slaves escaping into any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, from any of the States, shall be delivered up, or in any way impeded or hindered of his liberty, except for crime or some offence against the laws, unless the person claiming said fugitive shall first make oath that the person to whom the labor or service of such fugitive is alleged to be due, is his lawful owner, and has not been in arms against the United States in the present Rebellion, nor in any way given aid and comfort thereto; and no person engaged in the military or naval service of the United States shall, under any pretence whatever, assume to decide on the validity of the claim of any person to the service or labor of any other person, or surrender up any such person to the claimant, on pain of being dismissed from the service.

And I do hereby enjoin upon and order all persons engaged in the military and naval service of the United States to observe, obey, and enforce, within their respective spheres of service, the act and sections above recited.

And the Executive will in due time recommend that all citizens of the United States who shall have remained loyal thereto throughout the Rebellion, shall (upon the restoration of the constitutional relation between the United States, and their respective States and people, if the relation shall have been suspended or disturbed) be compensated for all losses by acts of the United States, including the loss of slaves.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done at the City of Washington this twenty-second day of September, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-two, and of the Independence of the United States the eighty-seventh.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

1854 — wants are ministered to by 250 servants. The cost of building and furnishing this prodigiously large house, is said to have been 1,000,000 dollars. The St. Nicholas, I believe, aspires to stand at the head of its order. It is a splendid structure of white marble, containing 150 suites of family apartments, and with accommodation for nearly 800 guests; I understood, indeed, that preparations were making for the acommodation of at least 1,000 people. The cost of this establishment has been spoken of as 1,030 000 dollars; but doubtless this is below the mark.

"Standing on the steps of the Astor House, we have the thoroughfare of Broadway right and left, with the Park in front—Barnum's theatre, covered with great gaudy paintings, across the way—and can here perhaps better than anywhere else, observe the concourse of passengers and vehicles. . . . That which appears most novel, is the running to and fro of railway-cars on East Broadway. . . . The cars on these street-railways are hung low, seated like an omnibus, and will stop at any point to take up or set down passengers. . . .

"The necessity for seeking vehicular conveyance arises not more from the extreme length of the city, than the condition of the principal thoroughfares. I am indeed sorry to hint that New York is, or at least was during my visit, not so cleanly as it might be. Statists assure us that it possesses 1500 dirt-carts, and in 1853 cost the sum of 250,000 dollars for cleaning. Where these carts were, and how all this money was expended, I cannot imagine. The mire was ankle-deep in Broadway, and the more narrow business streets were barely passable.. . . . All along the foot-pavements there stood, night and day, as if fixtures, boxes, buckets, lidless flour-barrels, baskets, decayed tea-chests, rusty iron pans, and earthenware jars full of coal-ashes. There they rested, some close to the houses, some leaning over into the gutter, some on the doorsteps, some knocked over and spilt, and to get forward you required to take constant care not to fall over them. Odd as this spectacle seemed on Saturday at noon, it was still more strange on Sunday, when bells were ringing, and people were streaming along to church. Passing up Broadway on this occasion, and looking into a side-street, the scene of confused débris was of a kind not to be easily forgotten—ashes, vegetable refuse, old hats without crowns, worn-out shoes, and other household wreck, lay scattered about as a field of agreeable inquiry for a number of long-legged and industrious pigs. . . ."—Chambers, Things as they are in America, (London & Edinburgh, 1857), 172 et seq.

— Alfred Pairpoint, an Englishman, describing a trip through the U. S. during 1854–1856, makes the following comments on New York, to which he paid two visits:

"My attention, on landing, was first of all attracted by the great height of the buildings, which rise from seven to nine and even ten stories above the street. . . .

"Another peculiarity that cannot fail to strike a stranger on his first arrival, is the clearness and dryness of the atmosphere; for, as the coal in general use is anthracite, from which there is little or no smoke, the blue sky is almost always visible, and the houses, built either of brown free-stone or bright red bricks, look as clean and fresh as if they had just been renovated with paint or varnish. Marble, however, is now coming much into fashion for the erection of new houses, as it is quarried in large quantities in several of the neighbouring States. . . .

"Another peculiarity in New York, and, indeed, in most American cities, and one that strikes a domesticated Englishman as being strangely uncomfortable, is the very general habit of living in boarding-houses, instead of keeping private houses or living in lodgings. . . .

"Nearly opposite Astor House, in what is called the Park (but which to my idea is more like a small square), stands the City Hall. . . . The cupola, that crowns this hall, commands a noble view of the whole city and its three hundred churches, as well as of the forests of masts belonging to the clean clipperbuilt ships that crowd its wharfs, and show the vast commercial activity in New York. . . .

"The system of Fire-engine Companies, or guilds, is another very remarkable peculiarity of New York, and well deserving of notice. The engines are large and powerful machines, capable of throwing large bodies of water with great force to the top of the very highest buildings; and the Fire-companies (for there are many) are formed by some fifty or sixty young men, who elect from among themselves a foreman or captain, a second foreman, steward, and clerk. These men do precisely the duties performed by the Fire-brigade in London, and that, too, without compensation. They usually live together; and, night and day, in all weathers, are they ready at their posts; nor is it unfrequent that these men pay the penalty of death from their unnatural exertion; for the engines are propelled solely by hand-labour. Long ropes are fastened to them, and they are dragged by the men assisted by boys to the scene of action. . . . 1854 —

"The Washington and Fulton Markets of New York are of great extent, and supplied with an almost endless variety of the choicest articles of food. . . .

"Among the many handsome and extensive stores in the Broadway, Taylor's Saloon carries off the palm from all the rest, by the splendour of its furniture and appointments, which seem rather suited to a fairy palace than a sublunary café and restaurant. . . .

"The principal new buildings, which command the stranger's notice, are the New City Hall, now in progress of erection—a marble edifice, which, when complete, will have cost 2,500,000 dollars; and Cooper's Institute, a very handsome structure, set apart for the cultivation of learning and science. . . .

"Whatever may be said in disparagement of the sewerage and street régime of New York, there has been at all events a most ample supply of water since the completion, in 1848, of the Croton Aqueduct and Waterworks, which may vie in magnificence with the noblest hydraulic structures of any age, ancient or modern. . . . It is close to Reservoir-square that the new Crystal Palace for the New York Exhibition was erected. . . .

"My next visit was to the Academy of Music, the largest and most elegant theatre of New York, where an Italian troupe were performing. . . .

"The University of New York, situated in Washington Square, is one of the finest buildings in the whole city. It is built of marble, in the English collegiate style, and has a frontage 180 feet long, with wings, and flanked at each end with towers; the centre being occupied by the chapel, which, though small, is beautifully decorated somewhat in the style of Kings College. . . .
